On January 16, 1923, there was filed an affidavit by Lapique "that on the ——— day of January, 1923, and while said action was still pending in this court," the Gorthys had assigned, conveyed, and transferred the subject-matter in the complaint mentioned for a valuable consideration to Lapique, "who is now the owner and holder thereof of all their right, title, and interest in and to the real property in controversy in this action." In that affidavit Lapique asked that he be substituted as plaintiff in the action instead of the original plaintiffs Gorthy. The court thereupon, and on the same date, ordered that Lapique be substituted instead of said plaintiffs Gorthy. A written consent by the Gorthys to such order was filed at the same time. On the same date, January 16th, plaintiffs Gorthy filed in said action a notice of motion to strike out certain stated parts of the cross-complaint, and also a notice of motion to quash the summons and to vacate and set aside the order of January 2, 1923, permitting the church to file its cross-complaint and answer.

On February 10, 1923, in accordance with an order setting the case for trial, the attorneys for the church prepared a notice, stating that the action had been set for trial in said superior court on Friday, February 16, 1923. At the same time an order was made by the court shortening time for service of said notice of time and place of trial to three days, and directing that a copy of this order be served on plaintiffs and cross-defendants with the notice of time and place of trial. Attached to the said notice as filed on February 16, 1923, there is an affidavit of that date by Edna Hewitt, a clerk in the office of Bishop & Wellington, attorneys for said church, from which affidavit it appears:

That "Bishop & Wellington reside and have their offices in the city of Santa Ana, county of Orange, and that John Lapique has offices and residence in the city of Los Angeles. That on February 10, 1923, affiant personally served a copy of said notice and order on Lapique, by depositing copies of the same in the United States post office, at Santa Ana, in a sealed envelope with the postage thereon prepaid and addressed as follows: 'Mr. John Lapique, 115 South Broadway, Los Angeles, California.' That said address, above given, is the address which the said John Lapique notified Bishop & Wellington as the address at which papers should be served upon him in said action."

The action was brought to trial on February 16, 1923, the defendants and cross-complainants appearing by their attorneys, the said Gorthy and Gorthy appearing in person and said Lapique not appearing. Evidence having been introduced, the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and thereupon judgment was entered decreeing that appellant Lapique and other named parties have no right, title, or interest in the described premises, and quieting title of said church, as against said cross-defendants Gorthy and as against said John Lapique and sundry other named persons. These findings were both dated and filed March 12, 1923, and judgment was entered on the same date.

On February 27, 1923, appellant Lapique served and filed notice of motion to be made by him on March 9, 1923, to vacate and set aside "the findings of fact and conclusions of law, dated the 16th day of February, 1923," on certain stated grounds. At the time when said notice was given, and on March 9, 1923, there were no findings yet in existence. However, the minutes of the court show that on March 9 the motion came on for hearing and was denied.

On March 22, 1923, Lapique gave notice of intention to move for a new trial (clerk's transcript, p. 85), fixing March 30, 1923, as the date when said motion would be made. On and after March 30th this motion was continued from time to time.

[1] On June 14, 1923, appellant Lapique filed a notice of appeal from the judgment and from the order of the said superior court "denying the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial and entered on the 8th day of June, 1923." The minutes of the court for June 8, 1923, as corrected by order shown on the minutes of August 21, 1923, show that on June 8, 1923, "motion for new trial was not taken up, court not having heard the case"; that is, the judge presiding on June 8th was not the judge before whom the case had been tried. There is nothing in the record to show any direct order of the court either granting or denying the motion for a new trial, and therefore the motion (assuming that it ever was regularly presented) should be deemed to have been denied, because it was not otherwise determined within three months from the time of service of notice upon appellant of the entry of the judgment. (The change made in section 660, Code of Civil Procedure, by Statutes of 1923 [page 233], and reducing said time limit from 3 months to 2 months was not in force until 90 days after May 18, 1923, which was the date of adjournment of the legislative session.) The record shows by an affidavit on file that on March 13, 1923, notice to appellant, of entry of the judgment, was served by the attorneys for respondent church, by depositing of said notice in the post office at Santa Ana, and addressed to appellant Lapique at his Los Angeles address. From these facts, the inference is that the motion for a new trial (assuming again that such motion was made) stands as denied on the 13th day of June, 1923. The service of notice was complete at the time of the deposit thereof in the post office. Code Civ. Proc. § 1013.

[2] In appellant's brief he first presents a list of items of alleged misconduct of the attorneys for defendants on account of which he says that a new trial should be granted. There is an absence of explanation or argument in support of these charges. For that reason we shall assume that they are not sustained by the record.

[3, 4] Appellant next contends that the court erred in overruling plaintiff's demurrer to the cross-complaint and answer. The only point argued is that the pleading was not verified as required by law. This objection could apply only to the answer. Such an objection cannot be raised by demurrer. Appellant also claims that the court erred in refusing to grant his motion to strike out the said cross-complaint and answer, which motion was made on the ground that said pleadings were sham, irrelevant, and redundant. The only reason now urged by appellant in support of his claim that the court erred in overruling said demurrer and denying said motion is that the verification of the answer and cross-complaint of the church was void because it was made by the attorney for the church and purported to be made in part upon information and belief. It does not appear that this objection to the pleading was included in the motion to strike. Therefore, even treating it as a motion made by appellant, he cannot now urge this particular objection. He did answer the cross-complaint, and by such answer raised issues upon which the case was tried.

[5] Appellant next attempts, apparently, to attack an order of January 2, 1923, which permitted the filing of the cross-complaint, and, further, to attack the allegation of the cross-complaint by which it was pleaded that the title to said land, as first acquired by Kelley and afterwards transferred by him to McGuire and held by them as trustee for the church, was conveyed by McGuire to the church by the deed to which we have referred in our statement concerning the pleadings. Upon the facts shown by the cross-complaint, it plainly appeared that the claim of title on the part of the church was of such a nature that a complete determination of the controversy could not well be had without the presence of the said church as a party to the action.

[6-8] Appellant contends that the ex parte order of the court shortening to three days the notice of time of trial was a nullity, and that for that reason the court was without authority to try the case on the 16th day of February, 1923, and that a judgment rendered pursuant to such trial must be reversed. Section 594, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that where the issue to be tried is an issue of fact, "proof must first be made to the satisfaction of the court that the adverse party has had five days' notice of such trial." It has been held, and we assume it to be the rule, that the provision of section 594 requiring a five days' notice of the trial is mandatory, and that the court is not authorized to shorten the time of such notice. Cahill v. Verdier, 54 Cal. App. 465, 202 P. 154. Appellant Lapique did not appear at the trial. It therefore appears to be established that he was entitled to the five days' notice. But it further appears that the notice as actually given was a five days' notice. As we have heretofore shown, the notice was mailed on the 10th day of February. Service by mail may be made where the person making the service and the person on whom it is to be made reside or have their offices in different places between which there is a regular communication by mail. Code Civ. Proc. § 1012. The condition allowing such service by mail existed in this case. Section 1013, Code of Civil Procedure, after describing the manner in which the notice must be addressed and posted, provides that the service is complete at the time of the deposit. The additional provisions, requiring further time for the notice in certain instances are not applicable to a notice of time set for trial of an action. It follows that the service of notice of trial was complete on the 10th day of February, which was fully five days before the set date of trial of the action. It may be that, as appellant claims, he did not receive the notice until the 14th day of February, but that does not alter the fact that the statutory notice was given. If he then chose, as he did, to remain absent from the trial, he has no valid ground of complaint that the court proceeded to try the action without his presence. Brown v. Rouse, 115 Cal. 619, 621, 47 P. 601.

[9, 10] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, conclusions of law, and judgment, and that the court did not find upon the complaint of the plaintiff, or the answer, and therefore that the decision is against law, since the findings do not determine all of the issues. "Inasmuch as a party may not complain of a failure to make findings when, if made, they must necessarily have been adverse to him, the one who has the burden of proof upon an issue, and who offers no evidence relative thereto, is not prejudiced by failure of the court to find upon such issue." 24 Cal. Jur. pp. 945, 946, with citations of many decisions. At the trial no evidence was offered on the part of appellant Lapique, and there is no evidence tending to prove any title or interest of appellant in the land. This being so, the finding of fact concerning his claim of title, if any such finding had been made, necessarily must have been against him. Since, therefore, he has no interest in the subject-matter of the action, it cannot be a matter of interest to him that the court also granted an affirmative decree to the church as cross-complainant, even if it be true, as he contends, that there was not sufficient evidence of cross-complainant's title to have justified such affirmative relief. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

82 Cal. App. 594

HALL et al. v. AUGUR et al. (Civ. 4837.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 28, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 27, 1927.

1. Mines and minerals ☞77—Evidence that lessees admitted inability to perform covenants of oil and gas lease and assigned interest held to show abandonment.

Evidence held to show abandonment of oil and gas lease, where lessees failed to perform any covenants of lease except to erect a derrick, told original agent they were unable to proceed, and assigned their interests.

2. Mines and minerals ☞77—Abandonment of oil and gas leases will be more readily found than in other cases.

Abandonment will be more readily found in the case of oil and gas leases than in most other cases.

3. Mines and minerals ☞78(1)—Title under oil and gas lease is inchoate until oil or gas is found in quantities justifying operation.

The title or interest granted under oil and gas lease for exploration and development is inchoate until oil or gas is found in quantities warranting operation.

4. Mines and minerals ☞78(1)—Oil and gas lessee cannot fail to develop and hold for speculation, except in strict compliance with contract, for consideration other than development.

Courts will not permit the lessee to fail in development and to hold oil and gas lease for speculative purposes, except in strict compliance with contract, for a valuable and sufficient consideration other than such development.

5. Mines and minerals ☞77, 78(1)—Inchoate title under oil lease ends on abandonment, or becomes vested right if oil is found.

The inchoate title of lessee under oil lease ends if unsuccessful search is abandoned, but if oil is found such title becomes a vested right in accordance with the terms of the contract.

6. Mines and minerals ☞78(1)—Lessee's duty to develop under oil is not mere covenant, but condition precedent to vesting of rights under lease.

The lessee's duty under an oil and gas lease to develop the property, upon discovery of oil and gas in paying quantities, is not to be regarded as a mere covenant, but where practically the whole consideration must depend upon the undertaking, it is to be treated as a condition precedent to vesting of rights under lease.

7. Mines and minerals ☞78(2)—Rule against forfeitures does not apply to oil and gas leases.

The rule that forfeitures are not favored in law does not apply to oil and gas leases, when right to declare forfeiture protects a landowner from the laches of a lessee whose lease is of no value until developed.

8. Mines and minerals ☞78(4)—Lessor may re-enter and declare forfeiture, where oil and gas lessee breaches implied condition to drill and develop.

Where there is a breach of the implied condition of an oil and gas lease that the lessee will drill and develop the lands if circumstances warrant, the lessor may re-enter and claim a forfeiture of the lease.

9. Mines and minerals ☞77—Oil and gas lessees could not revive abandoned leases by assigning interests.

Lessees, who abandoned oil and gas leases by indicating inability to finance the undertaking and failing to comply with its terms by not commencing drilling operations, could not revive the leases by assigning them to third parties.

10. Mines and minerals ☞78(2)—Lessees' assignment of abandoned oil leases could not affect lessors' forfeiture rights, though leases did not contain condition subsequent, or forfeiture, re-entry, or penalty clauses.

Lessees' attempted assignment of oil and gas leases, after lessors had become entitled to declare a forfeiture for conditions broken, could not affect the lessors' forfeitures declared by leasing to other parties or their right to declare forfeiture as against any assignee, although the leases did not contain any express condition subsequent, forfeiture, re-entry, or penalty clauses.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Signourney D. Hall and others against Irving V. Augur, Interstate Oil Corporation, and others, with consolidated cases. Judgments for plaintiffs, and second named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Black, Hammack & Black, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kelby & Lawson and Samuel M. Garroway, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. These are consolidated actions for the purpose of quieting title against the various defendants to the property described in certain oil leases. Defendant Interstate Oil Corporation is the holder of said leases and appeals from the judgments rendered for plaintiffs.

Upon trial, it was conceded by counsel for defendants that in each case the plaintiffs were the owners of the respective properties set forth in their respective complaints. The evidence offered and admitted showed an assignment by the defendants Augur, Trebell, and Young to the A. & T. Oil Company of the leases involved in each of the actions, bearing date of December 15, 1921; also, an assignment by the A. & T. Oil Company of the leases involved in the above actions to Interstate Oil Company under date of December 31, 1921; also, an assignment of said leases by the Interstate Oil Company to the Interstate Oil Corporation, dated January 24, 1922; all of which leases, save as to differences in names and properties, and differences not exceeding a period of 2 months in the respective dates of execution, are identical. The lease appearing in the transcript is dated May 5, 1921, and provides that in consideration of $1 and of the other agreements contained in said lease, the lessor lets to the lessee for the term of 20 years a certain lot, together with the exclusive right to explore, drill for, etc., all kinds of crude petroleum, gas, and other hydrocarbon substances. It is covenanted, among other things, that the lessee has already obtained and will obtain other leases similar in form upon other lots situated in the same 5-acre tract; that all such leases shall be deemed to constitute one pool or community lease; that as rent and royalty the lessee shall pay to the lessor such proportion of one-sixth part of the proceeds from the sale, at the market price at the well, of all crude petroleum, oil, gas, and other hydrocarbon substances produced from any lots in said tract, as the number of lots leased by the respective lessors bears to the total number of lots in the community lease; that the lessor shall not allow any other person, firm, or corporation to drill any wells upon said ground as long as the lessee shall continue to produce oil in marketable quantities and pay royalties as agreed upon; that no lease shall be accepted as a portion of this community lease after May 30, 1921, and upon that date the community lease shall be deemed closed. The lease further provides:

"It is further understood and agreed that it shall be the duty of the lessee to commence the erection of a derrick within 30 days from the closing of this community lease and to commence drilling operations within 30 days thereafter, and that drilling operations from the time they are commenced shall be prosecuted with due diligence, until oil is found in paying quantities, or to a depth at which further drilling would, in the judgment of the lessee, be unprofitable."

There is no condition subsequent, no re-entry clause, no forfeiture clause, nor any penalty clause contained in the lease. It appears from the evidence that the defendants did not commence drilling operations within the time prescribed in said lease or at all, nor have the leases ever been canceled or abandoned in writing. Suit was filed on May 22, 1922.

[1] It is urged that appellant owns a leasehold interest which has never been canceled, terminated, or abandoned; that the deed is absolute and contains no condition subsequent, forfeiture, re-entry, or penalty clauses. Before discussing the law of the case it may be well to consider the evidence on the subject of abandonment. It appears that none of the covenants of the lease were ever performed by the lessee, except the erection of a derrick after the period within which such erection was required by the terms of the lease. No attempt was ever made to commence drilling operations. The lease was executed May 5, 1921. It was a community lease and was to be deemed closed on May 30, 1921. The lessees agreed to erect a derrick within 30 days from the closing of the community lease, and to commence drilling operations within 30 days thereafter, and to prosecute such drilling operations with due diligence. Thus it was required that drilling operations be commenced within 60 days after May 30, 1921, and prosecuted diligently thereafter. Upon failure of the lessee to comply with the terms of the lease, the lessors made new leases of the respective parcels to the Texcal Oil & Refining Company; said leases being dated between October 31, 1921, and July 1, 1922. The witness Logsdon, who was the original agent for the lessees, testified that he entered into negotiations with the Texcal Company after one of the lessees, Trebell, told him in September they would not be able to go ahead, and that they would quitclaim the leases back to the original lessors; that before negotiating with the Texcal Company the lessees Augur, Trebell, and Young told him they were unable to render financial assistance in carrying out the drilling operations. All these conversations were held prior to December 15, 1921, the date of the assignment of the original lease to the A. & T. Oil Company. The foregoing is the substance of the testimony in respect to abandonment and is not contradicted by any other witness.

[2-4] Abandonment will be more readily found in the case of oil and gas leases than in most other cases. In Harris v. Riggs, 63 Ind. App. 201, 112 N. E. 36, it is said:

"Such a lease may be abandoned, and when once abandoned by the lessee, he cannot thereafter claim or enforce any right thereunder without first securing the consent of the lessor or a renewal of the lease. Gadbury v. Ohio, etc., Co., 162 Ind. 9, 16, 67 N. E. 259, 62 L. R. A. 895; Island Coal Co. v. Combs, 152 Ind. 379, 387, 53 N. E. 452; Ohio Oil Co. v. Detamore, 165 Ind. 243, 252, 73 N. E. 906; Bartley v. Phillips, 165 Pa. 325, 30 A. 842; Calhoun v. Neely, 201 Pa. 97, 50 A. 967; Lowther Oil Co. v. Miller, etc., Co., 53 W. Va. 501, 44 S. E. 433, 435, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027; Van Meter v. Chicago, etc., Co., 88 Iowa, 92, 55 N. W. 108; 1 Corpus Juris, page 5 et seq.; 1 Cyc. p. 4 et seq.; Thornton, Law Oil and Gas, § 137.

"It has been held and supported by sound reason that abandonment may be more readily found in cases of oil and gas leases than in most other instances. The rights granted under such leases are for exploration and development. The title or interest granted is inchoate until oil or gas is found in quantities warranting operation, and courts will not permit the lessee to fail in development and hold the lease for speculative or other purposes, except in strict compliance with his contract for a valuable and sufficient consideration other than such development. Gadbury v. Ohio, etc., Co., supra, page 14 of 162 Ind., 67 N. E. 259, 26 [62] L. R. A. 895; Lowther v. Miller, etc., Co., supra; Huggins v. Daley, 99 F. 606, 40 C. C. A. 12, 48 L. R. A. 320, 325; Dittman v. Keller, 55 Ind. App. 448, 451, 104 N. E. 40; Risch v. Burch, 175 Ind. 621, 627, 95 N. E. 123; Dill v. Frazee, 169 Ind. 53, 57, 79 N. E. 971; Ramage v. Wilson, 45 Ind. App. 599, 604, 88 N. E. 862."

[5] We believe the evidence was sufficient to support the finding of fact by the trial court that the defendants abandoned whatever right, title, or interest they or either of them, had in and to such lease prior to the assignment of said lease to the Interstate Oil Corporation. It then remains to determine the rights of the plaintiffs, as a matter of law, in a suit to quiet title, where the lease has been abandoned by the lessees and where there is no condition subsequent, forfeiture, re-entry, or penalty clauses contained in the lease. The rights of the parties to ordinary oil leases is well stated in Brookshire Oil Co. v. Casmalia, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 211, at page 215, 103 P. 927, 928, wherein it is said:

"In regard to such agreements it is said: 'The title is inchoate and for purposes of exploration only, until oil is found. If it is not found, no estate vests in the lessee, and his title, whatever it is, ends when the unsuccessful search is abandoned. If oil is found, then the right to produce becomes a vested right, and the lessee will be protected in exercising it in accordance with the terms and conditions of his contract.' Venture Oil Co. v. Fretts, 152 Pa. 451, 460, 25 A. 732; Steelsmith v. Gartlan, 45 W. Va. 27, 34, 29 S. E. 978 [44 L. R. A. 107]; Lowther Oil Co. v. Miller, etc., Co., 53 W. Va. 501, 44 S. E. 433, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1027; Huggins v. Daley, 99 F. 608, 40 C. C. A. 12; Gadbury v. Ohio, etc., Gas Co., 162 Ind. 14, 67 N. E. 261 [62 L. R. A. 895]; Eaton v. Alleghany [Allegheny] Gas Co., 122 N. Y. 417, 25 N. E. 981; Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 242; Union, etc., Co. v. Bliven, etc., Co., 72 Pa. 173; Grubbs v. Grubbs, 74 Pa. 33; Thornton on Oil, § 53."

However, it has been held by the California courts that an oil lease grants a vested interest where the entire consideration has been paid and there are no conditions in the lease requiring development of the property by the lessee. Chandler v. Hart, 161 Cal. 405, 119 P. 516, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1094. In Taylor v. Hamilton, 194 Cal. 768, 230 P. 656, it was held that an oil lease was more than a mere license and was to be considered as a lease of the premises for the purpose of drilling for oil and gas, which was subject to forfeiture under the terms of the lease on sufficient notice being given to the lessees of nonperformance by lessees of conditions contained in the lease. It is well settled that the principal purpose of an oil and gas lease is to procure the exploration of the land for oil and gas, to be followed by the development of it if circumstances warrant. Dill v. Frazee, 169 Ind. 53, 79 N. E. 971. The grantee cannot omit to drill and develop and hold the grant for speculative purposes purely.

[6] The duty to drill and develop the property upon the discovery of oil or gas in paying quantities is not to be regarded as a mere covenant, but in a case like this, where practically the whole consideration must depend upon the undertaking it is to be treated as a condition precedent. Gadbury v. Ohio, etc., Gas Co., 162 Ind. 9, 67 N. E. 259, 62 L. R. A. 895.

[7] The rule that forfeitures are not favored in law does not apply to oil and gas leases. Forfeitures are usually against conscience and without equity, and it is for these reasons that courts of chancery ordinarily refuse relief in such cases, but an exception to the rule must exist where it is against equity to permit the defendant to longer assert his title. The lack of any other remedy and the danger that the oil and gas might be withdrawn through wells on other lands makes a case of this kind appeal to the chancellor and calls upon him to enforce the incurred forfeiture by removing the cloud from the title. In general, equity abhors a forfeiture, but not when it works equity and protects a landowner from the laches of a lessee whose lease is of no value until developed. Gadbury v. Ohio, etc., Gas Co., supra; Huggins v. Daley (C. C. A.) 99 F. 606. In Acme Oil & Mining Co. v. Williams, 140 Cal. 681, 74 P. 296, where, as in the case at bar, the defendant leased a certain tract of land and the right to enter thereon and drill for oil, the sole consideration for the execution of the lease being the payment of royalty, the court held that in leases of this character "there is an implied covenant, not only that the wells will be sunk, but that if oil is produced in paying quantities they will be diligently operated for the best advantage and benefit of the lessee and lessor." The court further said, page 685 (74 P. 297):

"It is not necessary that technical words should be inserted in such a lease in order to raise the condition. If a reasonable and fair interpretation of its terms shows that it was made to depend on doing something essential to its object and purpose, the law implies the condition to attain that end. Petroleum Co. v. Coal & Coke Mfg. Co., 89 Tenn. 391 [18 S. W. 65]; Conrad v. Morehead, 89 N. C. 35."

[8] Where there is a substantial breach of such implied condition, the lessor may re-enter and claim a forfeiture of the lease. In Acme Oil & Mining Co. v. Williams, supra, it is said:

"If the right of forfeiture could not be exercised under such circumstances, a lessor would be at the mercy of his lessee; his land would be burdened by a lease which, while it could, and should, be made profitable through the diligence contemplated, would in fact be profitless through neglect; the lessor could not make other arrangements for the development of his property and his interest in the fee in the oil district might consist of a small holding, surrounding which numerous other operators would be successfully working, drawing off the oil to his irreparable injury. These are some of the peculiar circumstances surrounding leases of this character which favor the right of re-entry for condition broken. Maxwell v. Todd, 112 N. C. 686 [16 S. E. 926]."

To the same effect are Sledge v. Stolz, 41 Cal. App. 209, 182 P. 340, McIntosh v. Robb, 4 Cal. App. 484, 88 P. 517, and Payne v. Neuvial, 155 Cal. 46, 99 P. 476.

[9, 10] Applying the principles discussed to the present case, the main consideration for the execution of these leases was the payment of royalties to the plaintiffs, which could only be obtained through drilling the oil wells. Royalties were never paid because no wells were drilled. The lessees before the assignment of the lease on December 15, 1921, both by word and deed indicated their inability to finance the undertaking and their intention to abandon the lease. For a period of several months the lessees failed to comply with the terms of the lease requiring drilling to commence within 60 days from May 30, 1921. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs executed new leases to the Texcal Oil & Refining Company between October 31, 1921, and July 1, 1922. Defendants could not revive said leases after their abandonment by assigning them to third parties. Besides, the evidence shows that no drilling was ever commenced by the assignees of the lessees. The attempted assignment of the leases did not affect the plaintiffs' declared forfeiture of the leases by their act in leasing to other parties. The plaintiffs had a right to forfeiture for conditions broken not only as against the lessees, but as against any assignee of the lessees who might claim possession of the premises under them.

For the reasons stated, it is ordered that the judgments be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

DIMOCK et ux. v. MILLER. (Civ. 5592.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 27, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 23, 1927.

1. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(8)—Liability of dentist for negligent treatment can be established only by expert testimony.

In action for negligent treatment by dentist, plaintiffs can establish liability only by testimony of experts.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇨14(1)—Dentist need exercise only care and skill ordinarily used under similar circumstances by dentists in good standing in locality.

The degree of care and skill which a dentist must exercise is only that ordinarily possessed and used under similar circumstances by dentists in good standing practicing their profession in the same locality, and evidence of what is good surgery, good practice, or poor surgical technique will not show negligence.

3. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(6)—Burden of showing dentist's negligence was on plaintiffs.

In action for negligent treatment by dentist, plaintiffs had burden of showing that dentist did not exercise the degree of care and skill ordinarily possessed and used under similar circumstances by dentists in good standing in locality.

4. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(8)—Evidence held insufficient to show dentist's negligence in giving hypodermic injection after extracting teeth.

Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding of negligence of dentist in giving hypodermic injection after extracting teeth, from which infection arose.

5. Trial ⇨216—Where husband and wife alleging negligent treatment of wife by dentist plead distinct items of damage, jury should be instructed that allowance for any item cannot exceed amount demanded therefor.

In action by husband and wife for negligent treatment of wife by dentist, where plaintiffs allege distinct items of damage, court should instruct the jury that the amount allowed for any one item cannot exceed amount demanded for that item, even though, where special verdicts are not requested, the jury need not specify amount allowed under each item in general verdict.

6. Damages ⇨216(8)—Instruction affecting husband's right to recover for loss of wife's services in future held erroneous for failure to require finding that future disability was certain (Civ. Code, § 3283).

In action to recover for loss of services of wife caused by negligent treatment by dentist, instruction, if jury believe that wife, before the injuries, performed services for her husband, and shall believe that she has been unable since such injuries, and will be unable in the future, to perform the same services by reason of the injuries, to find for husband, held erroneous, under Civ. Code, § 3283, authorizing recovery for detriment "certain to result in the future," for failure to require finding that a condition of permanent or future disability was certain to result.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Jesse Olney, Judge.

Action for negligent treatment by a dentist, brought by George M. Dimock and wife against Goodman A. Miller. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Earle M. Daniels and Julius V. Patrosso, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued as husband and wife to recover damages alleged to have been caused by the negligent treatment of the wife by the defendant, who was a practicing dentist. The cause was tried before a jury, which rendered a general verdict in the sum of $6,000, and from the judgment following the verdict the defendant has appealed upon a typewritten record.

The charge of negligence is based upon the claim that in giving to his patient a hypodermic injection following the extraction of two of her teeth the defendant failed to sterilize the skin at the point of injection, failed to sterilize the hypodermic needle, and used impure water in the morphine solution. The facts of the case are that Mrs. Dimock had been suffering for a number of years from imperfect teeth, and that on January 23, 1923, defendant at her request performed an operation, extracting two teeth which were imbedded and one of which was badly infected. On the evening of the same day defendant called at the home of his patient and cleansed the cavities, thereafter administering a hypodermic injection to ease the pain from which she was suffering. This was repeated on the following morning and again on the following afternoon. The manner of administering this hypodermic injection on the afternoon of January 24 is the basis of plaintiffs' charge of negligence. It is claimed that the defendant used an ordinary bulb syringe to cleanse the cavities from which the teeth had been extracted, previously having mixed in a glass a solution of warm water and salt; that after he had used the syringe in cleansing one of the cavities he immersed the syringe in the water again and cleansed the other cavity, and thereafter called for a spoon with which he dipped a small portion of the water from the glass, using this to dissolve the morphine tablet. The hypodermic needle was then filled with this solution and injected into the right forearm of the patient. A small red blot soon appeared at the point of injection, and this continued to increase in size until it was found that the patient was suffering from infection throughout the arm and incisions were made and drains inserted for the purpose of eliminating the toxins.

Some evidence was offered that the injection may have been given in this manner. The testimony of the defendant as to what actually occurred at the time complained of is:

"I called for some sterile salt solution, and George Dimock brought this to me, and I took a satchel I had carried in which I carried all my instruments to and from the office to the place I am visiting, and out of the satchel I took a clean, sterile water syringe wrapped in a sterile towel and washed out with one filling of that syringe—the syringe holds two ounces, sufficient to wash small wounds of this character. I took this sterile syringe and inserted it in the glass and washed out the wounds in Mrs. Dimock's mouth, and she expectorated in a receptacle. In doing this she complained of extreme pain, and naturally being anxious to alleviate that pain as quickly as possible—previous to this George had brought a spoon and I went back into this satchel and undone a sterile hypodermic syringe, which had been inclosed in gauze and boiled in that gauze—and by the way, it was boiled long enough to make it sterile—and that it is never opened until I am ready to use it. The needle is attached. This is the packet the nurse prepared. This syringe has not been undone since the boiling. There is the syringe and the condition the syringe is in when used. It has a platinum wire to keep the needle from filling up. I took this needle from the sterile packet in which it had been boiled. * * * I inserted the spoon into this sterile solution, took about 15 minims of the sterile solution into the spoon, dissolved the tablet in it, put the needle into the spoon and drew the solution in the syringe, expelled the air, and took this piece of sterile gauze and wiped the arm and inserted the needle into the right forearm and gave the sterile injection."

Mrs. Dimock suffered severe pain from the infection in her arm, and was unable for a considerable time thereafter to make use of it in the ordinary way in the performance of her household duties, and there was some evidence that she was not able to use the right hand in sewing, the calling from which she had been earning about $50 a month prior to the injury. The plaintiffs sued for $20,000 as personal injuries sustained by the wife, $500 as loss of her earnings as a seamstress, $1,029.95 expenses incurred for medical treatment, and $5,000 for loss of services by the wife in the performance of her household duties.

Aside from the criticism of certain instructions given the jury, the position of the defendant on this appeal is that the evidence wholly fails to sustain any charge of negligence. It is pointed out that though the respondents rely upon the charge that the appellant failed to sterilize the skin and the hypodermic needle and that he used impure water in preparing the injection, there is no proof of any character that at the time of the injection the skin was not sterile, or that the hypodermic needle was not sterilized, or that the water used in preparing the injection was impure. This challenge is not met by the respondents, and an examination of the record fails to disclose any evidence tending to prove any one of these three elements. The respondents in their brief state that all the physicians who were called as expert witnesses without exception testified that the preparation of the hypodermic solution in the manner outlined was "improper and negligent." Citations are made to the printed transcript purporting to bear out this statement, but in each and every case the testimony is not in the record. It is also stated in respondents' brief that all these experts (with two exceptions) testified that the injuries sustained by the respondent were caused by the hypodermic injection. Here again the record does not support the statement made. The testimony of the experts in this respect was that the preparation of the hypodermic solution in the manner claimed by the respondents was not "good surgery"—a matter which does not require medical testimony to prove. When, however, they were asked to testify whether the subsequent infection of the arm came from the hypodermic injection, they all, without exception, testified that it was impossible for them to determine that upon the facts before them. Some of these witnesses testified that from the subsequent history the hypodermic may have caused the infection; other testified that from the entire history of the case it was just as probable that the infection came from germs carried from the infected teeth through the blood as it was that it came from the hypodermic injection. One witness testified that, assuming that either the hypodermic needle or the solution used was not clean, it would be far-fetched to say that the subsequent infection came from any other cause than from the hypodermic injection. All the physicians called as experts conceded that the infection might have come from either the hypodermic injection or the infected teeth, and all refused to say that in this particular case it came from either one or the other cause. One of these witnesses testified that the fact that no pus formed at the place of the hypodermic injection until the seventh day thereafter and that the patient had no fever until the fourth day thereafter was a strong indication that the infection came through the blood from the teeth and not from the local injection.

[1, 2] Cases of this character can be established only by the testimony of experts (Hesler v. California Hospital Co., 178 Cal. 764, 174 P. 654), but even such testimony is insufficient when it fails to prove the essential elements of negligence. The mere fact that a more scientific or more sanitary method may have been employed is not in itself sufficient to prove that the method used was negligent. Thus, evidence of what is not "good surgery" or of what is "bad technic" does not prove negligence on the part of a physician within the rule of the authorities in this state. In cases of this character it is required that the physician or surgeon in the practice of his profession shall possess and use "that degree of care and skill ordinarily possessed and used by physicians and surgeons in good standing practicing in the same locality." Markart v. Zeimer, 67 Cal. App. 363, 368, 227 P. 683, 684; Hesler v. California Hospital Co., 178 Cal. 764, 174 P. 654; Perkins v. Trueblood, 180 Cal. 437, 181 P. 642.

It was said in Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 460, 474 (59 Am. Dec. 388), which is quoted with approval in Hesler v. California Hospital Co., 178 Cal. 764, 766, 174 P. 654, 655:

"It is never enough to show that he has not treated his patient in that mode, nor used those measures, which in the opinion of others, even medical men, the case required; because such evidence tends to prove errors of judgment, for which the defendant is not responsible, as much as the want of reasonable care and skill, for which he may be responsible."

It is true that the rule of the cases just cited is not without conflict. It is, however, the accepted rule in California, New York, and many other jurisdictions, and in Hesler v. California Hospital Co., supra, our Supreme Court said that "the law on the subject of care and skill required of physicians in the treatment of patients is well settled," and then quotes with approval the rule stated in Pike v. Honsinger, 155 N. Y. 201, 209, 49 N. E. 760, 63 Am. St. Rep. 655. We have not found any California case which expressly applied the rule to cases involving professional treatment by a practicing dentist, but in Robbins v. Nathan, 189 App. Div. 827, 179 N. Y. S. 281, and Van Epps v. McKenny (Sup.) 189 N. Y. S. 910, the New York courts have treated dentists the same as physicians and surgeons, and have held that where negligence is claimed as a result of their professional treatment they are governed by the same rule.

[3, 4] With this the rule which must be applied to the case at hand, it was incumbent upon the respondents to prove that the methods used by the appellant in giving the injection did not conform to the degree of care and skill ordinarily possessed and used, under similar circumstances, by dentists in good standing practicing their profession in the locality of the city of San Bernardino. We have searched the typewritten record, but have failed to find any testimony or evidence which even remotely bears on this essential issue. Proof of what, under other circumstances, might be condemned as not "good surgery," "good medical practice," "good practice," or "poor surgical technique," does not tend to prove any of the elements of negligence necessary to be proved in a case of this kind.

[5] As the cause must go back for a new trial, we deem it proper to add that appellants' criticism of instructions numbered 7 and 12 is good, because in an action of this kind, where four distinct items of damage are pleaded, the jury should be told that the amount allowed for any one item could not exceed the amount demanded for that item. Such an instruction should be given even though, where special verdicts are not requested, the amount allowed under each item need not be specified in the general verdict.

[6] Criticism is also made of instruction No. 24, which reads:

"If you shall believe from the evidence that the plaintiff Zula P. Dimock before the injuries sustained * * * performed services for her husband * * * and shall believe that she has been unable, since said injuries, and will be unable in the future, to perform the same services by reason of any disability resulting therefrom, then I instruct you that * * * you should find for the plaintiff George M. Dimock such sum in damages as will reasonably and fairly compensate him for such losses."

The criticism is that because of the provisions of section 3283, Civil Code, authorizing an award of damages for detriment resulting after the commencement of the proceedings "or certain to result in the future," the jury should have been instructed that it was necessary for them to find from the evidence that a condition of permanent or future disability was certain to result and that this matter could not be left purely to conjecture. In Saylor v. Taylor, 42 Cal. App. 474, 183 P. 843, an instruction using the language, "but in case you find from the evidence that plaintiff is liable to continual suffering, and is liable to future mental anguish and bodily pain," was held error as not coming within the rule of section 3283 that damages for future suffering or detriment must be based upon detriment "certain to result." To the same effect are Melone v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 113, 91 P. 522; Pouchan v. Godeau, 167 Cal. 692, 696, 140 P. 952; Richman v. S. F., etc., Ry., 180 Cal. 454, 181 P. 769. In the Melone Case it was pointed out that the true rule was stated in another instruction, but the Supreme Court held that this merely created a conflict and required a reversal. In the same case the court quoted with approval the ruling in Pennsylvania Co. v. Files, 65 Ohio St. 403, 62 N. E. 1047, condemning an instruction advising the jury that they might award such prospective damages "as they believe plaintiff has sustained or will sustain." Judgment reversed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

82 Cal. App. 564

WILLSON v. EDWARDS et al. (Civ. 3200.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 27, 1927.

1. Appeal and error. ⇨907(3)—Defendant's appeal on judgment roll alone will be held to admit that evidence supports findings.

On defendant's appeal on the judgment roll alone, in action to abate a nuisance, it must be taken as admitted that the findings are supported by the evidence.

2. Nuisance ⇨72—Residence owner may maintain private action against person maintaining lunch stand causing offensive odors and noises at night, notwithstanding statute (Civ. Code, § 3493).

Residence owner may maintain private action for a nuisance against persons maintaining, in a residence district, a stand for sale of barbecued meats, coffee, soft drinks, and candy, and causing offensive odors and loud and disturbing noises at night; Civ. Code, § 3493, not requiring in such case that the action be on behalf of the public.

3. Nuisance ⇨72—Residence owner may maintain private action for public nuisance of business interfering by odors and noises with his use of residence.

One has a private right of action against persons causing, in the operation of private enterprises, odors and noises interfering with his private right of property in the use and enjoyment of his residence, even though the nuisance be so extensive as to affect the general public.

4. Nuisance ⇨35—Injunction restraining lunch stand proprietors from causing or permitting noises held not too broad.

In private action by residence owner against lunch stand proprietors, an injunction whose whole intendment was to restrain defendants in causing, permitting, or suffering the creation of noises between 10 p. m. and 3 a. m. constituting portion of the nuisance complained of held not too broad in its terms.

5. Nuisance ⇨35—Injunction restraining lunch stand proprietors from causing noises, should be read as whole, on contention its terms are too sweeping.

Injunction, whose whole intendment is to restrain proprietors of lunch stand in residence district from causing or permitting unusual noises at night should be read as a whole and not in separate extracts in determining contention that its prohibition is too broad.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action to abate a nuisance by J. F. Willson against Walter Edwards and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Louttit, Stewart & Louttit and Levinsky & Jones, all of Stockton, for appellants.

Daniel V. Marceau, of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiff to abate a nuisance. Plaintiff had judgment, from which the defendants appeal.

The record shows that some time during the year 1925 the defendants opened a refreshment stand at the corner of Pacific avenue and Elm street, in the city of Stockton. At this stand the defendants served to the public sandwiches made of barbecued ham and beef, coffee, soft drinks, and candy. The complaint sets forth that in the operation of the business referred to the defendants caused odors, smells, and stenches offensive to the plaintiff to pollute the air in and about the dwelling house of plaintiff, so as to deprive the plaintiff of the comfortable use and enjoyment of his premises. The complaint also charges that the defendants' place of business is patronized by a large number of people, who, in sounding the horns on their automobiles, starting their automobiles, and talking, shouting, and singing, so disturbed the plaintiff that he was unable to enjoy the comfort, use, and occupation of the premises belonging to him. The record shows that the plaintiff's premises are located in close proximity to the premises occupied by the defendants.

[1] The appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone, and two grounds are assigned for reversal herein: (1) That the actions complained of constitute a public and not a private nuisance; and (2) that the injunction is too broad in its scope and not warranted by the findings. The appeal being upon the judgment roll alone, it must be taken as admitted that the findings are supported by the evidence, and, as to the first point assigned for error, it is only a question of whether the plaintiff was so injured as to give a right of action in his private capacity for the abatement of the nuisance.

The findings, among other things, set forth that during certain hours of each day the odors, smells, and stenches have polluted and continue to pollute the air in and about the dwelling house of the plaintiff; that, by reason of said odors, smells, and stenches, the enjoyment by said plaintiff and his family of the said dwelling house has been and is interfered with, and said dwelling house rendered uncomfortable for habitation; that plaintiff has been frequently compelled to close all the doors and windows in his dwelling in order to prevent said odors, stenches, and smells from permeating his said dwelling; that by reason of said odors, stenches, and smells, plaintiff and his family have been and are unable to comfortably occupy said dwelling; that practically all the customers of said defendants arrive at their place of business in automobiles; that said customers drive their automobiles in front of said place of business, either on a driveway adjoining said place of business or upon the streets upon which said place of business fronts; that a large number of said customers so arriving in automobiles between the hours of 10 o'clock p. m. and 3 o'clock a. m. have sounded and still sound the horns of their respective automobiles upon arriving at said defendants' place of business; that numerous customers of said defendants arriving between said hours have driven and still drive their automobiles with the mufflers open; that large numbers of customers of defendants arriving between said hours of 10 o'clock p. m. and 3 o'clock a. m., or on the streets in front thereof, and while awaiting service, have left the motors of their automobiles running, causing loud and unusual noises, and have made and still make loud and unusual noises by starting the motors of their automobiles, racing the engines, and shifting gears, etc.

It is further found that the place of business maintained by the defendants is situated in a locality occupied principally by dwellings; that the actions complained of constituting the nuisance and depriving the plaintiff of the comfort, use and occupancy of his residence have been and are committed between the hours of 10 o'clock p. m. and 3 o'clock a. m. of the following day; that this is the period of time when the plaintiff and his family seek rest and sleep and are so disturbed by the acts complained of as not to be able to comfortably occupy their said dwelling, or to secure the rest and sleep to which they are ordinarily entitled. We have not followed the language of the findings, but have summarized their substance, as the findings are quite lengthy. It is further found that the noises hereinbefore mentioned are necessary incidents in the conduct of defendants' business, and necessarily follow from the use or adaptation by the defendants of their said premises.

[2] Notwithstanding these findings, which we think show that the plaintiff is injured in his private capacity and deprived of the exercise of the private rights to which he is entitled, it is argued that the acts complained of and found by the court constitute a public nuisance only and that the plaintiff suffers therefrom only as the public may be said to be injured, and, therefore, that section 3493 of the Civil Code, which reads, "A private person may maintain an action for a public nuisance, if it is specially injurious to himself, but not otherwise," deprives the plaintiff of a right of action in his private capacity.

This objection appears to be so clearly answered by the following California cases that their citation constitutes all that is necessary: In Lind v. City of San Luis Obispo, 109 Cal. 340, 42 P. 437, the court in distinguishing between a private nuisance and nuisances which permit only of a public prosecution, or of facts warranting a public or private prosecution, thus sets forth the law:

"If a substantial right has been invaded, especially if the wrong be in the nature of a continuing trespass of such a character that its continuance will create a right against the plaintiff's estate, or operate to deprive plaintiff of a substantial right incident to her property, the nuisance will be abated. * * * The substantial right mentioned in the above extract means a substantial private right, as distinguished from a public right enjoyed by plaintiff in common with the public at large. The injury which may entitle a private person to maintain an action to abate a public nuisance must be an injury to plaintiff's private property, or to a private right incidental to such private property; and where the injury is of this nature the injured person may maintain the action, although the private rights of an indefinite number of other persons may be infringed and injured in the same way by the same nuisance."

And, further:

"The real distinction would seem to be this, that when the wrongful act is of itself a disturbance or obstruction only to the exercise of a common and public right, the sole remedy is by public prosecution, unless special damage is caused to individuals. * * * But when the alleged nuisance would constitute a private wrong by injuring property or health, or creating personal inconvenience and annoyance, for which an action might be maintained in favor of a person injured, it is none the less actionable because the wrong is committed in a manner and under circumstances which would render the guilty party liable to indictment for a common nuisance."

The findings in this case show that the private property of the plaintiff is injured. The obstruction or nuisance complained of does not pertain to the exercise of any common and public right, such for instance as the right of the public to propel automobiles along a public highway, upon which the premises occupied for residence purposes may be abutting. Under such circumstances, a common public right is being exercised, and it is a matter of universal knowledge that the propelling of automobiles to and fro creates considerable noise, especially if the premises involved are so situated that the maximum speed limit provided by law is permissible. This illustration shows the difference between a public obstruction or nuisance and a private one created by a defendant upon premises in close proximity to those of another at the unusual hours set forth in the findings and the actions of the defendants and the injuries caused by the manner of conducting their business. It is purely a question of a private business being so conducted that the private rights of the plaintiff are being interfered with.

In the case of Fisher v. Zumwalt, 128 Cal. 493, 61 P. 82, a question involving the right of a private action to abate a nuisance, where it was contended that the section of the Code above referred to barred the right of the plaintiff, the court said (quoting from the syllabus):

"Although a nuisance may be public, that fact does not deprive an individual of an action, if, as to him, the nuisance is private, and obstructs the free use and enjoyment of his private property. A nuisance, the effect of which extends to the dwellings or places of business of other persons to such an extent as to render their occupancy materially uncomfortable, is a private nuisance as to each of them, for which each one thus injured may have a private action, though there are many persons thus affected, and the result will be to promote a multitude of suits."

Likewise, in Johnson v. V. D. Reduction Co., 175 Cal. 63, 164 P. 1119, L. R. A. 1917E, 1007, it is said:

"The fact that a nuisance giving rise to offensive odors and smells is of a public nature does not deprive an individual plaintiff of the right to an action for its abatement, if it interfered with or obstructed the use and enjoyment of his private property."

This case refers to and approved the decision in the case of Fisher v. Zumwalt, supra, where it is held:

"That, conceding the nuisance to be of a public nature, such facts do not deprive the individual plaintiff of the right to an action for its abatement if it interfered with or obstructed the use and enjoyment of his private property," etc.

[3] These cases refer to and cite a number of authorities supporting the rule which we may now consider definitely settled in this state: That if a private right of property is interfered with by the acts of the defendant, if the plaintiff is deprived of the free use and enjoyment of his residence by the smells, odors, and noises caused and created by the defendant in the operation of some private enterprise, the plaintiff has a right of action, even though the nuisance may become so extensive in its proportions as to affect the general public and give rise to a prosecution for the abatement thereof as a public nuisance.

[4] We will next consider the objection that the injunction ordered by the court is too broad and sweeping in its terms. Subdivision (a) of the injunction reads:

"From expressly or impliedly causing, permitting, suffering, consenting to, or acquiescing in, the sounding of the horn of any automobile, for any purpose other than the giving of such warning signals as are, or may be required, by the laws of the state of California, at any time between the hours of 10 o'clock p. m. of any day, and 3 o'clock a. m. of the following day upon the premises hereinabove described, or upon any highway adjacent thereto, while any occupant of said automobile is awaiting service or is being served by defendants, or either of them, or by any servant or employee of said defendants."

Against this provision it is urged that the language thereof would authorize contempt proceedings against the defendants in the event that any patron sounded the horn of his automobile, the sounding of which may not in any way be heard by the plaintiff and might not in any way prevent him from the free use and occupancy of his home. This objection is really more technical than meritorious. When the whole paragraph is read and considered it will be found that it really restrains only unusual and unnecessary noises, and noises made between the hours of 10 o'clock p. m. and 3 o'clock a. m. of the following day; that it does not restrain the giving of such warning signals as may be required by the laws of the state of California.

It is further apparent that it is the establishing and maintaining of the defendants' business in a residence section that has created the nuisance complained of and caused and induced the making of such noises at and during the hours when such noises should not be made in a residential district, or in close proximity to the plaintiff's premises, as found by the court to be caused by the defendants in the instant case. Furthermore, unless it be shown that the defendants expressly or impliedly caused or permitted, or suffered, or consented to, or acquiesced in the making of the unusual noises restrained, the defendants would not be liable for contempt. If the defendants' business is such that it cannot be conducted without creating a nuisance and depriving other people of the enjoyment of their private rights, to which they are reasonably entitled under the law, and that the defendants' business is such that it necessarily induces the creation of loud and unusual noises by patrons coming to the defendants' place of business at the unusual hours mentioned, a condition might be created which would authorize the trial court to entirely restrain the conduct of defendants' business, but, as we read the injunction, the court has not attempted to impose such a penalty upon the defendants, or resorted to such drastic restrictions.

[5] We do not need to set forth the respective paragraphs of the injunction ordered, for the reason that the first two or three lines of the several paragraphs sufficiently show the scope of the order. These lines read in such paragraphs substantially as follows: Enjoin the defendants "from expressly or impliedly causing, permitting, suffering, consenting to, or acquiescing in the operation of the automobiles in the prohibited manner; also, from making the unusual noises sought to be restrained." In other words, the whole intendment of the injunction is to restrain the defendants, in so far as their acts are concerned, in causing, permitting, or suffering the creation of the noises constituting a portion of the nuisance complained of. The fact that in some instances the noises are defined as being made by the racing of motors or the running of motors with the mufflers open does not jeopardize the defendants in any particular, for the reasons which we have herein stated. If no disturbing noise is created in the conduct of defendants' business during the hours mentioned, nothing is restrained. If any loud or unusual noises are made by the defendants' patrons, which are attributable to the consent, acquiescence, or suffrance of the defendants, the defendants are in jeopardy. The findings of the court show that the defendants have seen fit to establish their business in a section of the city principally occupied by residences; that they have seen fit to conduct the business so that it creates unusual noises between the hours of 10 p. m. and 3 a. m. of the following day, and we find nothing in the injunction, when reasonably considered, and considered according to the reasonable intentment of the language used, which trenches upon any of the reasonable rights of the defendants, or limits them in the conduct of their business in any manner sanctioned by law. The injunction permits the defendants to continue in business and to operate the same, provided it can be done in a manner that will not deprive the plaintiff of his legal rights. The whole injunction, so far as it relates to the noises, is based upon the loud, unusual, and disturbing character of the noises, and if the noises hereafter are neither loud nor unusual nor disturbing, such noises are not included within the terms of the injunction. If we take only the separate extracts set forth by the appellant and read them separate from the context of the whole injunction, it might seem that the making of any noise whatever in the conduct of the defendants' business was restrained, and the argument of the appellant well founded, but that is not the manner in which the injunction here should be read, and, in considering the order, it must be read as a whole and as so read it restrains only what we have hereinbefore set forth and a restraining order to which the findings show the plaintiff to be entitled.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

82 Cal. App. 553

CALIFORNIA STEARNS CO. v. TREADWELL et al. (Civ. 4526.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 27, 1927.

1. Principal and agent §171(7)—Automobile company's acceptance of partial payment on contract to buy automobile was adoption of contract made by agent.

Automobile company accepting check to its order as a partial payment on the purchase price of an automobile, with knowledge of the contract to purchase made by its agent, adopted the contract.

2. Principal and agent §23(1)—Automobile salesman, dealing with automobile buyer held agent in fact to receive payment.

Automobile salesman, who alone dealt with buyer of automobile, held under evidence, automobile company's agent in fact to receive payment and not merely its ostensible agent.

3. Principal and agent §105(4)—Buyers of automobile were entitled to assume that they could make valid payment to salesman.

Where employee of automobile company was salesman empowered to close sale, buyers were entitled to assume that he possessed usual powers incident to capacity in which he was permitted to act and that they could make a valid payment into his hands.

4. Principal and agent §105(9)—Rule that agent authorized to collect debts can accept only money applies mainly to acceptance of notes, due bills, merchandise, etc.

An agent authorized to collect debts owing to his principal has no authority to accept anything but money, but rule applies mainly to acceptance of notes, due bills, or merchandise, offsetting of debt against obligation of agent to debtor, special adjustments between agent and debtor, and the like.

5. Principal and agent §105(9)—Agent's authority to accept check instead of cash is determined by whether bank is so located that check is acceptable under usages of trade and agent has reason to believe check will be honored.

Whether an agent has power to accept a check in payment instead of cash is determined by whether the bank on which the check is drawn is so located that the check is acceptable under the usages of trade and the agent has reason to believe that the drawer is in good credit so that the check will be honored in due course.

6. Principal and agent §105(9)—Check drawn by buyer of automobile to order of salesman and delivered to salesman at seller's place of business coincidentally with delivery of automobile held "payment," though salesman absconded (Civ. Code, §§ 2326, 3169).

Check drawn in good faith by buyer of an automobile to the order of salesman who had conducted negotiations and delivered to salesman at the place of business of the automobile company coincidentally with delivery of automobile and paid in due course, under Civ. Code, § 3169, held to constitute payment to the automobile company, in view of section 2326, although the salesman after cashing the check absconded with the money.

7. Evidence §244(2)—Declaration of president of seller of automobile, made in course of an investigation as to salesman absconding with payment made by buyer, held admissible.

In seller's action to recover purchase price of automobile paid to absconding salesman by buyer, declaration of seller's president that he told salesman to take care of buyer when he came, which declaration was made in course of an investigation which president was making in interest of seller, held admissible.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action for money by the California Stearns Company against A. W. Treadwell and another, who filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wright & McKee and Treadwell, Tompkins & Clark, all of San Diego, for respondents.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. The legal question in this case is whether a check of $2,000, drawn in good faith by the purchaser of an automobile to the order of the salesman with whom he dealt and delivered to the salesman at the place of business of his employer, the vendor, coincidentally with the delivery of the car to the purchaser, constitutes payment to the vendor, though the salesman, upon cashing the check, absconded with the money. The defendants were sued here for the sum of $2,000 as the balance of the unpaid purchase price, upon the theory that the check was not payment. There is no substantial dispute as to the facts, and the trial court, holding that the vendor must be deemed to have received payment in full, gave judgment in favor of the purchasers, who are the defendants here. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted by the plaintiff, who was the vendor.

[1] Plaintiff is a corporation, and in 1922 was engaged in business in Los Angeles as the local distributor of the Stearns motor car. On May 15, 1922, the defendant A. W. Treadwell, a practicing attorney residing in San Diego, visited plaintiff's establishment in Los Angeles with a view to purchasing a car. There he met and was waited upon by L. M. T. Romer, who had then been in plaintiff's employ for about two months and who is admitted to have been a salesman authorized to deal as such with customers. After discussing prices and spending some time examining with Romer the particular car which was later purchased, Treadwell mentioned that he had a car of the same make in San Diego which he would like to exchange in part payment; and Romer thereupon suggested that the exchange could probably be effected with the co-operation of the Campbell Machine Company, which had the Stearns agency in San Diego. Romer stated, further, that he himself was to be in San Diego in about ten days, and would then see what arrangement could be made for trading the old car and buying the new one from plaintiff. On May 25th Romer called upon Treadwell in San Diego, in company with George Campbell of the Campbell Machine Company. At this conference Treadwell was specific in declaring that the purchase was to be from the Stearns agency in Los Angeles, and an arrangement was made whereby the price of the new car was fixed at $2,680, with $90 added for extras, and an allowance was to be made by plaintiff of $770 for the old car, which was to be taken by the Campbell Machine Company. In conformity with this understanding, one of plaintiff's order forms was signed by Treadwell for the new car therein described, at a total price of $2,770 of which $770 was to be paid by the allowance on the old car. This form contained a clause reading: "When accepted by the company, this order constitutes the entire agreement between parties." At the foot was also the notation, "No order valid until countersigned." Treadwell signed this form as purchaser, and there appears also, above Treadwell's name, the subscription, "California Stearns Co., by Romer, Salesman." The order was never countersigned in any other way. The absence of a written acceptance by an officer of the plaintiff is, however, unimportant. At the time the order was signed Treadwell delivered to Romer a check for $25, drawn on the United States National Bank of San Diego to the order of California Stearns Company. This was accepted as a partial payment by plaintiff on account of the purchase price; and P. M. Reidy, the president of the California Stearns Company, testified that the contract made was brought to his attention at least two weeks before the delivery of the new car to the defendants, and that he knew of the initial payment and the arrangement about the old car. The acceptance and retention of the initial payment with such knowledge was therefore an adoption of the contract as made through Romer's agency; and this is conceded in appellant's brief.

Treadwell was expecting to be in Los Angeles on June 6th, and it was arranged between him and Romer that the new car should be delivered at that time. At about half past 9 in the morning of the day so fixed Treadwell and his wife called at plaintiff's salesroom in Los Angeles, where they found Romer in attendance. The president, Mr. Reidy, was in San Francisco that day, but defendants were introduced by Romer to the shop foreman, and the car designated in the contract was brought out. After the addition of some small appliances by the foreman, Treadwell spent a couple of hours with Romer in studying the details of operation, and about noontime Romer conducted Treadwell to a small room on the office floor above and there the latter drew his check. After starting to make the check payable to plaintiff, and writing the word "California," Treadwell inquired how the check should be drawn, whereupon Romer directed that it be made payable to himself. Accordingly, the check was drawn to the order of L. M. T. Romer, in the sum of $2,000, on the same bank as before; and immediately thereafter Romer, with the check in hand, stepped into the office of the cashier and in the presence of Treadwell dictated a report of the sale. In response to an inquiry of the cashier as to the name of the person to be registered as owner, Mrs. Treadwell was designated. After Romer and Treadwell had rejoined Mrs. Treadwell on the lower floor and she had signed the application blank, all three went together to the office of the state motor vehicle department, where the car was registered in Mrs. Treadwell's name, the license issued, and number plates obtained. Thereupon, all returning to plaintiff's salesroom, the plates were affixed by one of the employees and Mr. and Mrs. Treadwell drove away in the car. The check to Romer's order was indorsed by him and others, and was duly paid on presentation, but Romer disappeared without accounting to plaintiff for any part of the money. Within a day or two after the completion of the sale plaintiff's president returned from San Francisco, and was informed by the cashier that Romer had concluded the transaction and had received payment from Treadwell, but that no money had come from Romer to the cashier. The president does not seem at the time to have had his confidence impaired by Romer's neglect. Mr. Reidy testified that he was busy with one thing and another, and let the matter rest for about two days before he began an investigation. After investigation and an ineffectual conference with Treadwell, this action was begun.

[2] Much of the argument in the briefs revolves about the theory of ostensible agency. There is, however, no ostensible agency shown by the evidence. It is contended by the appellant in argument that Romer was merely an "order-taker" and had no authority to receive any of the purchase money. But throughout the transaction, which began and ended at plaintiff's salesroom, the defendant dealt with no one but Romer, and the terms Romer arranged were accepted by plaintiff. Furthermore, at the trial plaintiff's attorney made this admission of agency: "We state in our contract that the man Romer was our agent; we do not deny that; he just was a salesman; that is all." Moreover, Treadwell testified that in a conversation between himself and Reidy on June 26th the latter admitted that before he himself left for San Francisco he knew that Treadwell was to call for the car on June 6th, and said to Treadwell, "I told the man to take care of you when you came." This conversation was not denied by Reidy, and, no other person being mentioned, presumably the man indicated was Romer. The contract calls for cash payment on delivery, and it must therefore have been contemplated that payment would be made to plaintiff through the person closing the sale.

[3] The case is thus not one of ostensible agency. It concerns itself with the character bestowed on the agent by the principal. In his character as a salesman, designated and empowered to close the sale, defendants were entitled to assume that Romer possessed the usual powers incident to the capacity in which he was permitted to act. By section 2326 of the Civil Code a special agent to sell has authority to receive the price on delivery of the thing sold, and defendants had a right to assume that Romer could say and do for his principal those things fitting the character in which he was serving his employer. It would require boldness to maintain that one taking delivery of a car in the ordinary course of business at a distributor's salesroom, through an employee with whom the purchaser had openly negotiated, could not make a valid payment into the hands of the employee, but would have to go personally to the cashier's desk to pay the money directly to the cashier.

By the usages of trade, checks operate commercially as a convenient form of money payment, and are ordinarily accepted provisionally in place of money. Comptoir D'Escompte v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 P. 28; South San Francisco Pkg. Co. v. Jacobsen, 183 Cal. 131, 134, 190 P. 628; National Bank of New Zealand v. Finn (Cal. App.) 253 P. 757. And when a check is cashed by a recipient, the payment relates back to the time when the check was delivered. Hooker v. Burr, 137 Cal. 663, 668, 70 P. 778, 99 Am. St. Rep. 17. Plaintiff does not contend that Romer would not have had the power to deliver the car, if the check handed him had been drawn to plaintiff's own order instead of Romer's. There can be no doubt of an agent's power to receive payment in the usual way; and, speaking of an agent for collection, Judge Story, in section 202 of his work on Agency, says:

"So, if payment is received in the usual manner of conducting the like business transactions, as by receiving a check on a bank from a person in good credit, who should become insolvent before the check could be duly presented; or by receiving the common currency of the country, which should afterwards become depreciated; in each of these cases the loss would be the loss of the principal, not that of the agent."

[4, 5] The question reduces itself, then, to the inquiry whether the personal check delivered to Romer under the circumstances detailed was tantamount to cash payment to plaintiff itself. Plaintiff cites cases holding that an agent authorized to collect debts owing to his principal has no authority to accept anything but money. This is a well-established rule, but the application given to it is confined mainly to the inhibition of the acceptance by the agent of notes, due bills, or merchandise, the offsetting of the debt against an obligation of the agent to the debtor, special adjustments between the agent and the debtor, or the like. No case directly in point here has been cited either by appellant or respondent, and we ourselves have been able to find but few possessing a resemblance or analogy to the case under review. One, however, worthy of attention, is almost a brother to this action. In Potter v. Sager, 184 App. Div. 327, 171 N. Y. S. 438 (affirmed in 228 N. Y. 526, 126 N. E. 920), plaintiff, who was the mortgagee under certain mortgages of real property in Rochester county, N. Y., had had her business transacted for several years through a resident agent named Sherwood. He had regularly accounted for collections both of principal and of interest, but a time came when he failed to account for two payments collected from the defendants in separate checks, each made payable to Sherwood personally and cashed by him. The question there, as here, was whether the checks constituted payments to the principal, when actually paid to the holder by the bank on which they were drawn. The court held that the principal was bound by the payments so made to the agent, and its reasoning is as follows:

"Where a person is an agent with authority from his principal to collect principal and interest, the general rule is that a payment by a debtor to such agent, to constitute a good payment, must be made in cash. The reason for this rule is that a payment in any other medium is not as good as cash—is not the exact equivalent of cash. Thus it has been held that the giving of a note, mortgage, postdated check, property, etc., does not constitute a payment because the acceptance of those things by the agent exceeds his authority and constitutes the exercise of a discretion by the agent not vested in him by his principal.

"It would seem, however, that this court should take judicial notice of the fact that checks and drafts are usual and ordinary means of transacting business and transferring money in all business transactions; that, where an agent is given authority to collect money, the authority granted implies that he shall do so in the usual and ordinary way and, where a check is given by the debtor, not postdated and payable at a bank in the same city, the giving of such check payable to the agent constitutes payment from the time that such check is cashed in due course. 'Power to employ all the usual and necessary means to execute the authority with effect is an incident of every contract of agency.' Lawson, Cont. (2d Ed.) 227, § 184.

"Such a check, of course, would not constitute payment if not in fact honored on presentation in the ordinary course of business. The agent could not accept such a check in absolute payment and satisfaction. He can, however, receive a check which he has reason to believe will be honored upon presentation as a convenient and customary way of obtaining the money which he is authorized to collect. Such a payment offers no greater temptation to the agent than the payment of the money would offer. If the check is paid by the bank, then the agent has received what he was authorized to receive, and, if not paid when presented, the creditor has lost nothing. The reason for the rule which does not permit a payment to an agent by note, mortgage, etc., does not apply when payment is made by a check which is actually cashed by the bank upon which it was drawn. The cases where checks were made payable to the principal and wrongfully indorsed and collected by the agent have no application, as in those cases they were not paid in due course."

Here, the check given by the defendant was paid in due course, under section 3169 of our Civil Code, having been paid on presentation to the holder in good faith and without notice of any defect in the title. In the opinion quoted the court was dealing with a check drawn on a bank in the city where the check was delivered; but the rule is not to be so closely circumscribed in its application. In Jessup v. Carey, 61 Ind. 584, a check held to have been equivalent to cash was drawn on a bank in Indianapolis, which is in Marion county, and was delivered at Noblesville in Hamilton county. The criterion is whether the bank is so located as to render the check acceptable under the usages of trade, and there is reason to believe that the drawer is in good credit so that the check will be honored in due course. No point is made by the appellant in this case, because the check was drawn on a San Diego bank, as was the check for the initial payment.

[6] In Stevenson Co. v. Fox, 19 Misc. Rep. 177, 43 N. Y. S. 253, an agent of plaintiffs, named Renner, who among other things had authority to make sales and receive payments, allowed a deduction from a bill of goods previously sold defendant, and then, at his own request, receiving a check for the reduced amount payable to himself personally, Renner misappropriated the proceeds. The court, sustaining the defense of payment, said:

"Against the appellant's first contention appears evidence of express authority in Renner to collect sums due his principal, and therefore, whether in cash or in personal check, the payment, if made to the agent in his capacity as such, was payment to the principal."

A like view was expressed in Cohen v. O'Connor, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 28, where the court declared:

"The objection that this was not a direct payment of money to the agent and as requested is equally untenable as if the money had actually been paid by the bank and lost by the agent."

In Harbach v. Colvin, 72 Iowa, 638, 35 N. W. 663, plaintiff was a junior mortgagee of property on which defendant held a first mortgage in course of foreclosure. To protect his second mortgage plaintiff, through one Creighton, who was defendant's attorney in the foreclosure suit, took an assignment of defendant's mortgage, and in payment therefor delivered to Creighton a check to Creighton's order. This check was deposited by Creighton to his own credit in bank, and the proceeds were later converted to his own use. The foreclosure suit proceeded, and, the property being sold at the sale to defendant, plaintiff instituted action to establish his superior equity. The court held that Creighton, as attorney of record, had authority to receive payment for his client, and that the defendant was therefore chargeable with payment through the medium of the check as fully as if money had actually passed.

A somewhat similar situation is exhibited in Bridges v. Garrett, L. R. 5 C. P. 451. There Craig, an agent representing plaintiff in the sale of a copyhold interest to defendant, received from defendant a check to Craig's order in an amount including the purchase price and certain charges of Craig himself as solicitor. Craig deposited the check in his bank, but the bank applied the amount in its own favor in settlement of an overdraft in Craig's account. In relation to the effect of the payment by check drawn to Craig's order, Cockburn, C. J., delivered himself as follows:

"There is no doubt that, where an agent is authorized to receive money for his principal, he cannot allow it by way of set-off in accounts between the payer and himself; he must receive it in money. If, however, payment is made by cheque, and the cheque is duly honoured, that is a payment in cash. There is nothing in the circumstance of a cheque being given which invalidates the payment. * * * If Craig was authorized to receive the money, I think the payment to him was a payment to the plaintiff, and that there was nothing in the mode of payment to take the case out of the ordinary rule."

Concurring in this view, Justice Blackburn remarked:

"Where the person to whom the money is paid stands in the relation of a clerk or servant, the payment to him, whether in cash or by a cheque which is afterwards paid, is a good payment to the principal."

Likewise in Bardwell v. American Express Company, 35 Minn. 344, 28 N. W. 925, defendant received from plaintiff for collection a draft on a resident of Nebraska, which defendant forwarded to its local agent. The agent received from the drawee a check covering that draft and also certain other demands which the agent had in charge. The check was duly honored, but the agent absconded without accounting for the collection. The defendant was held liable to plaintiff for the amount so collected on plaintiff's draft. And in Pate v. Westacott, L. R. (1898) 1 Q. B. D. 272, 278, it is said:

"If an agent is merely to collect money, taking a check from a person having a bank account is not a departure from his authority."

In Hooker v. Burr, 137 Cal. 663, 70 P. 778, 99 Am. St. Rep. 17, the question arose whether the delivery of a check to a sheriff operated to effectuate a statutory redemption of realty sold under execution sale. The court, citing from other states several cases presenting a similar problem, held that the sheriff, as agent for the execution purchaser, had authority to accept, as a provisional legal payment, a check in a form convenient for the transfer of money; that upon payment of the check the redemption became absolute as of the time of delivery of the check to the sheriff, and that a valid redemption had therefore taken place.

Following this general current of authority, we conclude that the check drawn to the order of plaintiff's salesman, and honored in due course, constituted a payment of cash to plaintiff as of the time of the delivery of the automobile to the defendants, and that the trial court was correct in the judgment which it rendered.

[7] It remains but to note plaintiff's exceptions to the admission by the court of certain evidence over plaintiff's objection. It is urged that the conversation between A. W. Treadwell and Mr. Reidy, plaintiff's president, on June 26, was not admissible, and that prejudicial error resulted from receiving evidence of a declaration made by Reidy on that occasion. At the time of the conversation Reidy was engaged on plaintiff's behalf in seeking to ferret out what had occurred between Treadwell and plaintiff's admitted salesman concerning payment and delivery. Reidy went to Treadwell on that errand in company with George Campbell, and, while drawing from Treadwell an account of the circumstances attending the closing of the sale, Reidy himself, in response to a question as to whether he knew that Treadwell was to be at plaintiff's establishment on June 6th, said, "Yes; I was in San Francisco on the 6th, however, and I told the man to take care of you when you came." Neither Reidy nor Campbell denies that Reidy so spoke. Reidy's statement concerning this fact within his personal knowledge was made in the course of an investigation which he was making in the interest of his company, and was a declaration by him as the chief executive officer while in the performance of duty. There was no error in admitting the declaration made under those circumstances.

Other testimony concerning statements of plaintiff's president was given by Edna M. Moore and John H. Moore, but their testimony related to a different cause of action from that involved in this appeal. The defendants interposed a cross-complaint for damages on the ground of fraud, alleging that the car purchased was represented to be a 1922 model when in fact it was a 1921 model, possessing a value of only $2,150. The finding on that issue was, however, in favor of plaintiff, and no appeal appears to have been taken by defendants. The testimony of the two witnesses mentioned bore only upon the issue arising under the cross-complaint, and can have no effect upon this appeal.

The judgment from which plaintiff appeals is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

82 Cal. App. 696

JONES v. BANK OF SAN JOSE et al.
(Civ. 5740.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 4, 1927.

1. Gifts $\Rightarrow$ 30(1)—There was no valid gift of money deposited in bank, where donor did not divest himself of control of such money (Civ. Code, § 1146).

There was no gift, within Civ. Code, § 1146, of money on deposit in bank by addition of donee's name to pass book, where donor did not divest himself of control of money, and donee never asserted any right or claim to money until after donor's death.

2. Gifts $\Rightarrow$ 49(1)—Clear and satisfactory evidence is required to sustain claim of gift not asserted till after alleged donor dies.

Where claim of gift is not asserted until after alleged donor dies, clear and satisfactory evidence is required on every element for sustaining of such claim.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by James B. Jones, as administrator of the estate of William O. Jones, deceased, against the Bank of San Jose, in which money in dispute was deposited in court, and Maud K. Lowe was substituted as defendant. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Owen D. Richardson, of San Jose, for appellant.

George D. Smith and J. S. McGinnis, both of San Jose, for respondents.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. By this action the respondent, James B. Jones, administrator of the estate of William O. Jones, deceased, seeks a judgment against the respondent, the Bank of San Jose, a corporation, for the sum of $1,629.66, which it is claimed the respondent bank had in its possession as a balance of a deposit made by W. O. Jones with said bank; the inception of the account being a deposit of $2,000 on the 25th of November, 1913, by W. O. Jones and the issuance and delivery to him of a pass book by the bank, No. 10,939, in the name of said W. O. Jones. W. O. Jones died on March 28, 1926. After due proceedings had, the respondent, James B. Jones, a brother of W. O. Jones, was appointed as administrator of the estate of W. O. Jones on April 23, 1926, and thereafter qualified as such administrator on May 19, 1926. The administrator brought action against the bank for the recovery of the moneys in question, and thereafter, on motion of the respondent Bank of San Jose, the money in dispute was deposited in court, and the appellant Maud K. Lowe ordered substituted as defendant in the action in place of the Bank of San Jose.

The substituted defendant, Maud K. Lowe (appellant herein), answering the complaint in the action, averred that the money in question was, at the date of the death of William O. Jones, March 28, 1926, on deposit with the bank in the names of W. O. Jones or Maud K. Lowe, and that said W. O. Jones, at the time of making said deposit and thereafter, gave said deposit to the appellant conditioned upon her surviving said W. O. Jones, and that she is such survivor, and is the owner of the whole of the moneys remaining of the deposit.

The action was tried by the court and judgment in favor of the respondent administrator given for the sum of $1,629.66 on June 28, 1926. From this judgment the substituted defendant, Maud K. Lowe, prosecutes this appeal. The facts of this case, as established by the evidence taken at the trial in the superior court, show that for some 30 years prior to his death W. O. Jones resided at Lawrence Station in Santa Clara county, Cal., having a ranch at that point on which he conducted farming operations; that he was an old-time intimate acquaintance of the appellant and members of her family, and that at the time of his death he was of the age of about 72 years; that appellant's mother lived at his place and took care of him for some 6 or 8 years; that appellant visited her mother at this ranch on frequent occasions; and that at her mother's death in July, 1923, said W. O. Jones told her that he had always intended that her mother should have $2,000, but now that she had passed away that he wanted appellant to have that to make up for all that she had spent on her mother, and for what she had done for him.

When the account with the Bank of San Jose was opened, the person acting on behalf of the bank was Waldo H. Lowe, husband of appellant. The pass book issued was at various times left by the depositor at the bank in the possession of the husband of appellant, and on divers occasions various sums of money were drawn by W. O. Jones from the moneys deposited and the accruing dividends thereon, the last sum drawn being $100, which was paid to the respondent administrator on the written order of deceased, executed two days before his death in January, 1926, at his ranch, he then having the pass book, No. 10,939, in his possession.

At the time W. O. Jones asked the husband of appellant, who was then cashier of the respondent bank, to add the name of appellant Maud K. Lowe to the pass book, and to make the changes thereon so that she could have the money, he gave the cashier the book, who took it to the bank and had the account changed from the name of W. O. Jones to the name of W. O. Jones or Maud K. Lowe; the account then being given the new number of 2095, and that number being written upon the old pass book. This pass book was kept at the bank until about a year later, when appellant took the book from the bank to the ranch and delivered it to W. O. Jones. The book remained thereafter and until the time of the death of W. O. Jones in his possession, and during this time several withdrawals of money from said bank were made by or for the said W. O. Jones.

Appellant claims that the title to the money on deposit in the respondent bank passed from W. O. Jones to her upon the delivery of the pass book to her husband in January, 1924, and that the placing of the money in an alternative account did not affect the validity of the alleged gift. These claims of appellant the respondent administrator controverts, urging in answer to them that they cannot be upheld because appellant did not assert any claims to the moneys on deposit until after the death of W. O. Jones, and that W. O. Jones had dominion over the funds, and exercised dominion over them until the time of his death.

[1, 2] By section 1146 of the Civil Code a gift is defined as "a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration." One of the necessary essentials of a valid gift is a complete divestment of control by the donor. That the donor in the case at bar did not divest himself of control of the property in dispute is clearly shown by the evidence set forth in the transcript. That appellant did not regard the donor as divested of control of the moneys on deposit is evidenced by her delivery of the pass book to him after the alleged gift, for the admitted purpose of allowing him to draw moneys from the account, and she herself never asserting any right or claims to the moneys until after death of W. O. Jones. When a claim of gift is not asserted until after the alleged donor dies, clear and satisfactory evidence is required on every element for the sustaining of such claim. The retention in the donor of the right to withdraw the whole of the bank deposit is inconsistent with the idea of a gift.

The cases relied upon by appellant as supporting her claim that the moneys herein deposited were given to her by W. O. Jones do not support her contention; the facts on which they were decided being widely at variance from those in the case at bar. In Fisher v. Ludwig, 6 Cal. App. 144, 91 P. 658, and Allen v. Smith, 38 Cal. App. 409, 176 P. 365, the donors had irrevocably delivered the bank books in question to the donees, and yielded up all dominion over the funds long before the death of the donors. Here the donor had possession of the bank book after the gift, such possession being voluntarily given him by the donee. He had on many occasions after this delivery of the bank book drawn moneys from the deposit, and the book was in his possession when he died. It is not disputed by appellant that at all times up to his death the donor here had a right to draw all or any of the funds, and no money was drawn from the funds prior to his death except by him or for him.

It cannot be held from the evidence in this case that a gift of the moneys in dispute was made by W. O. Jones to the appellant, and it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

82 Cal. App. 758

ROSS v. ALLEN et al. (Civ. 4530.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 5, 1927.

Cancellation of instruments  59.—On cancellation of deed executed to creditor under agreement for reconveyance on paying debt, purchaser from creditor held entitled to principal and interest paid.

Where owner conveyed property in consideration for legal services rendered under agreement that grantee would reconvey within one year on payment of $1,250, with interest, and grantor did not pay within year, and grantee transferred property on cancellation of deed, purchaser, having constructive notice of condition of title, was entitled to reimbursement for principal of debt and interest therein paid grantee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action for cancellation of deeds by Estelle M. Ross against Lawrence W. Allen and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. S. Darden and LeRoy D. Barnett, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Henry W. Mahan and Allen, Allen & Eagan, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county decreeing that a deed executed by appellant to the defendant Lawrence W. Allen, and a deed executed by said Allen to the defendant Kingsbury be canceled, provided that within 90 days from the date of the judgment being entered the plaintiff pay to the clerk or the above-entitled court $1,370, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from August 13, 1921, to the date of payment, but that, if said sum be not so paid, then said deeds to remain in full force and effect.

It appears that the defendants Lawrence W. Allen, W. S. Allen, and Herbert W. Swender, attorneys at law, performed legal services for the appellant in a certain case in the superior court; that the compensation agreed upon between the parties for such services was $1,250; that, as appellant was unable to pay this sum in money, she executed the deed above mentioned to a certain property, which was then a part of the estate of Sadie B. Boyer, deceased, of which the appellant was the sole legatee. At the time of the execution and delivery of the deed from appellant to Lawrence W. Allen, a written memorandum was made and signed by him, in which he agreed to reconvey the property within one year upon payment by appellant of the $1,250 with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. A period of one year elapsed, and appellant did not offer to pay the sum agreed or make any request for reconveyance. Later Lawrence W. Allen had the property advertised for sale, and sold and executed a deed thereof to the defendant Kingsbury.

The above, among other facts, are found by the trial court. Certain allegations of the complaint charging fraud on the part of the defendants are expressly found to be untrue. In that behalf it was found that at all the times mentioned in the complaint appellant was sane, but that she did not know the nature or effect of the deed which she executed; that she did not understand that such deed together with an agreement for repurchase, would empower Lawrence W. Allen to sell the property so conveyed without his bringing a foreclosure proceeding. As we have said, the court expressly found that no fraud or undue influence was practiced upon the plaintiff by any of the defendants, and in that behalf it is said in the findings that appellant stated to them that she would consult with her husband, and that they believed she had done so before signing the deed. It is found that the reasonable market value of the property when conveyed to Kingsbury would be about $5,200, if title thereto were clear, but that it was then involved in certain litigation commenced by one Edward H. Boyer, in which he sought to establish a trust in his favor upon the whole of the property deeded, and also the court found that the title to the property was affected by the fact that it was still in process of administration in the estate of Sadie B. Boyer. With respect to the knowledge of Kingsbury as to the condition of the title of the property which he purchased, the court found that he did not interview the tenants of the plaintiff and appellant then in actual possession of the property; that he knew of the litigation above mentioned, and of the fact that it was involved in administration, but was not informed of the agreement upon the part of Lawrence W. Allen to reconvey to Estelle M. Ross, the appellant.

Among the conclusions of law the court decided that the purchase price paid by Kingsbury was so incommensurate with the intrinsic value of the property as to constitute constructive notice that there was some question as to the title and right of the plaintiff to have the deed executed by her to Lawrence W. Allen canceled, as well as that Kingsbury had constructive notice of the rights of appellant by having failed to make inquiry of her tenants in actual possession of the property before purchasing, and also because of having been informed that Lawrence W. Allen obtained the deed to the premises as payment of a legal fee. The amount required by the court to be paid to secure a cancellation of the deeds was established by the addition of interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum to the principal of $1,250, which is conceded was due for legal services from the appellant to Lawrence W. Allen and his firm, as attorneys. The findings of the court are amply sustained by the evidence, as it appears in the transcript.

The alleged ground of appeal is that the findings of fact and conclusions of law are inconsistent. If respondents were appealing, a serious question might be presented as to whether or not upon such findings of fact a decree would be warranted directing the cancellation of the deeds even upon the terms specified by the judgment of the court. But since no appeal has been taken by the defendants and respondents, we assume, for the purposes of this opinion, that in that regard the decree was equitably authorized. Since the findings are not challenged as being unsupported by the evidence, the only question is whether the conclusions of law follow from such findings and are consistent.

Treating the transaction between appellant and Lawrence W. Allen, in the execution of the deed to the latter and the agreement to reconvey by him as having taken place under such circumstances as to give the appellant the right to a cancellation of the deed executed by her, it is obvious that on the plainest principles of equity such a right would be subject to the requirement that she repay to him the consideration for which the instrument was executed, to wit, the $1,250, the agreed value of the services; and the least that can be said of Kingsbury's rights is that, although having constructive notice of the condition of the title to the property which he had purchased, he nevertheless acquired whatever title his grantor possessed, and stands in the shoes of the latter. Having paid, as the court found, $1,370 principal and interest on the obligation of the appellant to Allen, he is entitled to reimbursement before the deed from Allen to Kingsbury is annulled.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; MURPHEY, Justice pro tem.

82 Cal. App. 719

Ex parte JACKSON. (Cr. 1496.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 5, 1927.

1. Extradition — 34—Extradition may be had against one accused of felony in Alabama, though warrant of arrest was issued by probate judge.

Extradition proceeding may be had against one accused of felony in Alabama, though warrant of arrest was issued by probate judge in such state.

2. Extradition — 32—In extradition proceeding, verified complaint before magistrate in Alabama held prima facie evidence that accused was in Alabama at time of offense.

In extradition proceeding, verified complaint against defendant, made before a magistrate in Alabama, held prima facie evidence that accused was in Alabama at time of alleged offense, subject to his right to prove he was not, and that therefore he could not have fled therefrom, and could not be fugitive from justice.

3. Extradition — 32—Accused held not entitled to resist extradition for felony in Alabama on ground that complaints were by accomplice (Code Ala. 1923, § 5635).

Accused cannot resist extradition for felony in Alabama under Code Ala. 1923, § 5635, on ground that complaints were by accomplice, where there was no evidence showing that such person was shown to be accomplice in proceeding before Alabama magistrate, since such question was fact issue to be determined at trial.

Application by John M. Jackson for a writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the sheriff of Los Angeles County to secure the release of petitioner from custody under warrants for extradition. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

C. M. Rickert, of San Francisco, and F. H. Bowers, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., and Willis I. Morrison, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. In response to petition of John M. Jackson, now in custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county, a writ of habeas corpus was issued, to which return was duly made by the sheriff, and a traverse thereto by petitioner. Evidence was presented, and the matter was then argued and submitted for decision.

The subject-matter hereof rests upon an extradition proceeding. Petitioner has been arrested and is in custody pursuant to four certain warrants of arrest issued by the Governor of California, in accordance with representations and requisitions proceeding from the Governor of Alabama.

The petition herein alleged that said executive warrants and extradition papers are insufficient, and that the Governor of California was without jurisdiction to issue said warrants for arrest of petitioner as a fugitive from justice, in this, that there was no evidence presented to the Governor of California or to the Governor of Alabama showing, or tending to show, that petitioner was a fugitive from justice; and in this, that no legal criminal proceedings have been instituted against petitioner in the state of Alabama as required by law, and that the judge of probate court in Alabama, by whom the original warrant of arrest was issued in that state, had no jurisdiction to issue a warrant in a felony case, and that the judge of said probate court has no criminal jurisdiction.

The requisitions presented to the Governor of California were accompanied by copies of the several affidavits, complaints, and warrants, all of which were by the Governor of Alabama certified to be authentic in accordance with the laws of that state. In each case the affidavit of the complaining witness charged against said John M. Jackson the commission of a felony in the county of Baldwin, state of Alabama, on the 7th day of July, 1926, and that said John M. Jackson on said date, and at the time of the commission by him of said offense, was physically present in said county of Baldwin. On the basis of that complaint, sworn to and subscribed before the judge of probate of the county of Baldwin, that judge issued his warrant of arrest. On the basis of those proceedings the Governor of Alabama issued his requisition, and on the same foundation, through said authenticated copies of the affidavits, complaints, and warrants, the Governor of California ordered the arrest of petitioner as a fugitive from justice.

[1, 2] It is true, as contended by petitioner, that under the Constitution of Alabama the offense charged against petitioner being in each case an indictable offense, he could not be proceeded against criminally by information, but could be prosecuted only by indictment. While it follows as a consequence that a magistrate would have no authority to order that a defendant be held in custody to be prosecuted by information for the felony charged against him, this does not prevent a magistrate from examining into a complaint and holding a defendant to await the action of a grand jury. In accordance with the statutes of Alabama which have been submitted for our consideration in connection with this matter, judges of probate are magistrates, authorized to act within their respective counties. Provisions are made by the statutes for complaints in criminal cases; for examinations and depositions to be taken before magistrates; and for warrants of arrest to be issued by such magistrates when reasonably satisfied from the depositions "that the offense complained of has been committed, and that there is reasonable ground to believe that the defendant is guilty thereof." The purpose of the preliminary examination and arrest is to secure the presence of the defendant to answer the charges brought against him if indicted by the grand jury. The complaint before the magistrate and warrant of arrest issued by him relate only to preliminary proceedings, and are not violative of the constitutional provision against prosecutions by information, of indictable offenses. We think that the direct evidence to which we have referred was sufficient to authorize the Governor of Alabama, and in turn to authorize the Governor of California, to find that petitioner was within the county of Baldwin, in the state of Alabama, at the time of the alleged commission of crime by him. This fact, and the fact that he is found within the state of California, and the further fact that the preliminary proceedings before the probate judge of Baldwin county and the warrant issued by the judge appear to have been in accordance with law, taken together, are sufficient to constitute a sufficient answer to the petitioner's attack herein on the extradition proceedings. While the verified complaint before the magistrate would not be accepted in this proceedings as conclusive proof that petitioner was in Baldwin county, Ala., at the date of the alleged offense, it is prima facie evidence of the fact, sufficient to authorize the action of the respective Governors, and likewise sufficient here; subject only to the right of petitioner in this proceeding to prove by satisfactory evidence that in fact he was not within the state of Alabama at the stated time, and that therefore he could not have fled therefrom and could not be a fugitive from justice. But he has made no effort to produce such evidence here. Therefore we are satisfied that for the purposes of this proceeding he should be considered as having been a fugitive from justice. In re Thurber, 37 Cal. App. 571, 174 P. 112; Bassing v. Cady, 208 U. S. 386, 28 S. Ct. 392, 52 L. Ed. 540, 13 Ann. Cas. 905.

[3] By his traverse to the return and by evidence produced at the hearing in this proceeding, petitioner has attempted to establish the fact that James M. Smith, who made the sworn complaints before the probate judge, was an accomplice in the commission of the alleged offenses, if any were committed, and that therefore his arrest on any complaint verified solely by such accomplice is contrary to law. Section 5635 of the Penal Code of Alabama provides that a conviction of felony cannot be had on testimony of an accomplice, unless corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and that such corroborative evidence, if it merely shows the commission of the offense, or the circumstances thereof, is not sufficient. It has been held by the Supreme Court of Alabama that the effect of such statute is to stamp a policy upon the administration of the law to such effect that a magistrate may not lawfully require a citizen to be held to the grand jury on testimony solely of an accomplice, since that is testimony upon which, without corroboration, no petit jury could possibly convict him. State v. Smith, 138 Ala. 111, 35 So. 42, 100 Am. St. Rep. 26.

Assuming, without so deciding, that under the above-cited decision of the Supreme Court of Alabama petitioner would not be subject to extradition under proceedings founded solely upon the complaint and testimony of an accomplice, we have considered his affidavit and the testimony which identifies J. M. Smith as the person signing certain exhibits of date July 15, 1926. Giving to this evidence full credit, it does not establish the claim of petitioner that Smith was an accomplice in the alleged crimes. As to three of the charges there is no evidence at all tending to connect Smith with them; and as to the fourth offense (the transactions with one Mooror) the evidence does not satisfactorily prove that Smith was an accomplice in the crime charged. Moreover, there is no evidence tending to show that in the proceedings before the magistrate in Alabama there was any evidence which would establish that Smith was an accomplice. This issue of fact is so related to the merits of the principal case that it should be determined in the court where that case is to be tried, and not in this proceeding.

The writ is discharged, and the prisoner is remanded to custody.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

82 Cal. App. 778

PEOPLE v. SANDERS. (Cr. 970.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 6, 1927.

1. Forgery $\S$ 26—Indictment charging defendant with forging name of one Curry as maker of check held to allege facts constituting offense (Pen. Code, $\S$ 470).

Indictment charging defendant with forging name of D. B. Curry as maker of check held to allege facts which constitute an offense, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 470, as against contention that it was not charged that such name was fraudulently or otherwise forged.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 683(1)—Rebuttal testimony that accused in forging check was not coerced held admissible, where testimony in chief thereon was not stricken out.

In prosecution for forgery, where defendant claimed she acted under coercion and testified that codefendant told her he would break her neck if she did not sign checks, and added, "I know that it was a mistake on my part to do it," and court ordered last part stricken out, court's order struck out only quoted statement, and objection to court's action in thereafter admitting testimony to show that accused was not acting in fear was without merit.

3. Criminal law ⚖️347—Where defendant claimed she was coerced in forging check, evidence that after signing check codefendant struck her held properly excluded.

Where defendant in forgery prosecution claimed that she acted under coercion of codefendant, evidence that some time after signing check codefendant struck her heavy blow on face, breaking her jaw, held properly excluded, since coercion, to be defense, must be present, active, and imminent peril.

4. Criminal law ⚖️1186(4)—Admission of forged checks, in addition to one for which defendant was being prosecuted, held not prejudicial where forgery was admitted (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In forgery prosecution, admitting in evidence two forged checks in addition to one on which defendant was being prosecuted, where court limited testimony to question of intent, did not result in miscarriage of justice, within Const. art. 6, § 4½, where forgery was admitted but defendant relied on other defenses.

5. Criminal law ⚖️38—Act must have been done under threats showing that defendant's life was in present danger, to make "duress" excuse for crime.

Instruction that, in order for "duress" or fear produced by threats to be valid, legal excuse for doing something otherwise criminal, act must have been done under such threats as showed that life of person threatened or menaced was in danger, or that there was reasonable cause to believe and actual belief that there was danger of present and immediate violence at time of commission of forbidden act, held correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Duress.]

6. Criminal law ⚖️811(1)—Giving several correct instructions on insanity held not reversible error.

Mere giving of several instructions on subject of insanity in case where defendant claimed insanity as defense, all instructions being correct, did not constitute reversible error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Mamie Evelyn Sanders was convicted of forgery, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur M. Bundy and Ray Manwell, both of Marysville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of forgery upon an indictment charging that jointly with James Cosgrove and Charles Lovett, on or about the 22d day of November, 1926, she willfully, unlawfully, etc., with intent to defraud one D. B. Curry, did make and execute as true and genuine a certain check and instrument of writing, in the following words and figures, to wit:

"Marysville, Cal., Nov. 22, 1926. No. 15.

"Decker-Jewett Bank 90-231:

"Pay to the order of W. D. Lovett, $17.50, seventeen fifty dollars. D. B. Curry."

Her motion for a new trial being denied, the defendant appeals therefrom and from the judgment of conviction.

Three grounds for reversal are alleged: (1) That the indictment does not set forth facts sufficient to constitute a public offense; (2) that the court erred in ruling upon the admission of testimony; and (3) that the court erred in its instructions to the jury.

[1] The first allegation of error is based upon the fact that the indictment does not charge that the name of W. D. Lovett was fraudulently or otherwise forged or indorsed upon said check, and that, therefore, it fails to allege facts sufficient to constitute an offense. In support of this contention two cases are relied upon by the appellant: People v. Cole, 130 Cal. 13, 62 P. 274, and People v. Thornburgh, 4 Cal. App. 38, 87 P. 234. These cases, however, are readily distinguishable from the case at bar. In the Cole Case it was held that, in order to constitute the crime of forgery, it is essential that there should be the making of a writing which falsely purports to be the writing of another, and therefore that a check in the following form:

"Sacramento, Cal., Aug. 31, 1899.

"National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co.:

"Pay to E. J. Cole, or order, ten ($10.00) dollars. [Signed] E. J. Cole."

Indorsed on back: "S. B. Smith,"

—did not set forth sufficient facts to constitute the crime of forgery, in that the check was drawn payable to the person who purported to be the maker of the check, and who actually was the maker of the check. Upon the trial it was claimed that the indorsement of S. B. Smith was forged, but the information in that case did not charge the forgery of the indorsement, and, consequently, the information was not supported by any allegation showing such forgery. The check did not purport to be the writing of any other person than E. J. Cole; that is, it was the check of the person who wrote and signed the same.

In the case of People v. Thornburgh, supra, following the Cole Case, it was held that a check payable to the order of the maker, without charging the forgery of the indorsement thereon, failed to set forth sufficient to establish the crime of forgery. These cases differ in their facts from the case at bar, in that the defendant in the instant case is charged with forging the name of D. B. Curry as the maker of the check, thus bringing the offense clearly within the terms of section 470 of the Penal Code, which reads:

"Every person who, with intent to defraud, signs the name of another person, or of a fictitious person, knowing that he has no authority so to do, to, or falsely makes, alters, forges, or counterfeits, any charter, * * * bank bill or note, postnote, check," etc., "* * * is guilty of forgery."

The name of D. B. Curry is alleged to have been forged and signed to the check as the maker, which sufficiently constitutes the offense of forgery.

The making of the fraudulent check and the forging of the name of D. B. Curry by the defendant appear to have been admitted. The defense was insanity and coercion, insanity induced by prolonged state of inebriety or drunkenness, and coercion exercised by a codefendant. The facts of the case are substantially as follows:

The defendant, Mamie Evelyn Sanders, obtained permission of W. D. Lovett to take his automobile on or about Saturday evening, November 21, 1926, at the town of Roseville, for the purpose of taking a drive to Marysville, and had her codefendant, Charles Lovett, a boy of 16, a son of W. D. Lovett, to accompany her for the purpose of driving the machine. The defendant Sanders and the boy Lovett then drove to a place in Roseville, not indicated in the testimony and there found the defendant Cosgrove. After picking up Cosgrove, the three left Roseville, proceeding in the direction of Marysville. It appears that they spent the entire night in the automobile; that during the night, the defendants Sanders and Cosgrove indulged in the use of intoxicating liquor; that shortly before daylight on Sunday morning of November 22d, they reached the residence of D. B. Curry, near Pleasant Grove, in the county of Sutter, where they stopped for a short period of time. The defendant Sanders alighted from the automobile, leaving the defendants Cosgrove and Lovett in the machine, and went into the residence occupied by D. B. Curry, and while there obtained three blank checks and also the signature of D. B. Curry from a canceled check, theretofore executed and signed by the defendant Curry. The defendant also obtained from D. B. Curry the sum of $20. After obtaining the money, she returned to the automobile occupied by the other defendants, and, according to the testimony of the defendant Charles Lovett, James Cosgrove and the defendant Sanders proceeded to fill out the three blank checks which the defendant Sanders had obtained from the residence of D. B. Curry, and the defendant Sanders signed the name of D. B. Curry to said checks, one of the checks being the check heretofore referred to and copied in this opinion. After leaving the residence of D. B. Curry, the three proceeded to an oil station near Pleasant Grove, where the defendant

Lovett attempted to pass the check involved in this case, but failed to obtain any money thereon. The three then went to a village called Trowbridge, in Sutter county, where the defendant Lovett succeeded in passing the check involved in this case and obtained from Starkweather and Pritchard, storekeepers, the sum of $17.50. The other checks referred to were made out and passed upon other people, and were admitted in evidence for the purpose of showing guilty intent, etc. The drinking orgy appears to have continued until some time late Sunday evening, November 22d, when the party reached Sacramento on the return trip from Marysville, where they remained overnight.

[2] Admitting the signing of the checks, the defendant, Mamie Evelyn Sanders, urged as a defense as hereinabove stated insanity and coercion, that the coercion consisted in force and threats exercised by the defendant Cosgrove. In this particular the testimony of the defendant was to the effect that she had signed the checks through fear. After so testifying, the defendant was asked the following question:

"Q. At the time that you signed those checks what did Jimmy Cosgrove say to you? A. Jimmie Cosgrove was abusing me and calling me a chippy, and he said that he ought to break my God damn neck, and he would if I didn't sign the checks. I know that it was a mistake on my part to do it.

"Mr. Coats: I ask that the last part be stricken out.

"The Court: That last part will be stricken out."

Appellant assigns this ruling of the court as error, and in so doing makes the mistake of assuming that the order of the court struck out the entire answer, but, as we read it, the last part relates only to the last sentence, which is:

"I know that it was a mistake on my part to do it."

That is the only portion which we think was stricken out by the order. It left the defendant the full benefit of whatever her testimony was worth, so that the objection to the action of the court in thereafter admitting testimony to show that the appellant Sanders was not acting in fear of Cosgrove is without any merit.

[3] The appellant then sought to introduce testimony to the effect that some time after the signing of the forged check, upon which this prosecution is had, the defendant Cosgrove struck the appellant a heavy blow upon the face, breaking her jaw. This testimony was not admitted, and the ruling of the court thereon is assigned as error. Coercion to be a defense must be a present, active, and imminent peril. Whatever takes place after the commission of the offense is wholly immaterial. Hence, any abuse which the appellant may have suffered at the hands of her codefendant Cosgrove, after the commission of the offense for which she was convicted, would not in any wise lessen or excuse the commission of the crime with which she stands charged. The rule is thus succinctly set forth in 16 C. J. 91, § 59:

"The compulsion which will excuse a criminal act, however, must be present, imminent, and impending, and of such a nature as to induce a well-grounded apprehension of death or serious bodily harm if the act is not done. A threat of future injury is not enough. Such compulsion must have arisen without the negligence or fault of the person who insists upon it as a defense."

To this statement of the law is appended a long list of authorities.

The facts which we have recited, taken from the transcript, show that the appellant obtained the checks, three in number, signed all of them, and that the one upon which prosecution is had was passed before any acts indicating bodily harm appeared to have taken place. All these matters were circumstances to be taken into consideration by the jury: The obtaining of the automobile, the planning of the trip, the securing of the checks, the forging of the name of D. B. Curry, and their subsequent passage to obtain money; from which we do not very well see how a jury could have come to any conclusion that the defendant participated in the forging of check upon which she is being prosecuted without any negligence on her part. The facts set forth certainly indicate that the jury might very well conclude that the appellant was the prime mover in the drunken, criminal carousal terminating in forging checks, as claimed by the prosecution.

[4] It is also argued by the appellant that the court erred in admitting in evidence two forged checks, in addition to the one on which the appellant was being prosecuted. We do not need to consider this allegation of error further than to state that, while the offer of the district attorney was not a proper one, the court, in its ruling, limited the testimony to the question of intent, but, whether this was or was not correct, there has been no miscarriage of justice, and section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution applies. The forgery being admitted, there was nothing left for the jury to pass upon except the alleged defense of coercion and insanity, and everything that the defendant did at that time was admissible, in order that the jury might determine the merit or want of merit in either of the alleged defenses.

[5] The court instructed the jury upon the subject of coercion as follows:

"The court instructs you that a person, who commits an act under threats or menaces sufficient to show that he had reasonable cause to believe and did believe that his life would be endangered if he refused, is incapable of committing a crime.

"In order for duress or fear produced by threats or menace to be a valid, legal excuse for doing anything, which otherwise would be criminal, the act must have been done under such threats or menaces as show that the life of the person threatened or menaced was in danger, or that there was reasonable cause to believe and actual belief that there was such danger. The danger must not be one of future violence, but of present and immediate violence at the time of the commission of the forbidden act. The danger of death at some future time in the absence of danger of death at the time of the commission of the offense will not excuse. A person who aids and assists in the commission of the crime, or who commits a crime, is not relieved from criminality on account of fears excited by threats or menaces unless the danger be to life, nor unless that danger be present and immediate."

This instruction, we think, clearly sets forth the law.

[6] It is finally argued that the court erred in its instructions to the jury on the subject of insanity. We find no assignment of error specifically directed against the instructions given by the trial court on the subject of insanity. However, in appellant's brief upon this subject occurs the following paragraph:

"While we think that any one of these instructions, if taken alone, properly states the law, yet, we also think that the court in its numerous instructions on this plea laid too much stress upon it, and that its repeated cautions to the jury could not but have the effect of instilling in the minds of the jurors a suspicion that the court thought the plea was spurious, and that they would not be justified in bringing in a verdict of 'not guilty' upon the defense of insanity. It will be noted that the court's instructions on this defense requires seven pages for transcription."

We have read all the instructions given by the trial court on the subject of insanity, and we agree with appellant's counsel that not one of them, taken alone, is erroneous, but we cannot agree with counsel for appellant that the mere giving of several instructions, all of which are correct, constitutes reversible error. If all of the instructions taken singly are correct, it cannot logically follow that they are erroneous when taken as a whole. Instructions on the subject of insanity are necessarily somewhat longer than those usually given upon other subjects, but this lays no predicate for assignment of error. It would serve no useful purpose to set forth the instructions on the subject of insanity given in this case, and we will content ourselves with simply stating that a careful reading thereof shows that they are only the instructions which have been approved time without number, where the defense of insanity has been interposed.

Upon the hearing of this cause on appeal, it was suggested by the Attorney General that this court has no jurisdiction by reason of a failure of the appellant to comply with the provisions of section 1247 of the Penal Code. There appears to be considerable merit in this contention, but as there appears to be no merit in the appeal, it does not seem necessary to prolong this opinion by a consideration thereof. A judgment of dismissal or affirmance will accomplish the same results. It is therefore ordered that the judgment and order appealed from be and the same are hereby affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

82 Cal. App. 382

FELTON WATER CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SANTA CRUZ COUNTY
et al. (Civ. 5840.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 18, 1927.

1. Eminent domain ⇨187—Right of water company to possess easement sought in condemnation proceedings follows entry of judgment (Const. art. 1, § 14; Code Civ. Proc. § 1254).

Water company, seeking to condemn an easement, namely, the right to divert water from a brook, not being corporation within class mentioned in Const. art. 1, § 14, has no right to possess easement sought until after entry of judgment in the condemnation proceeding, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1254.

2. Eminent domain ⇨274(4)—Taking private property before amount of compensation is ascertained will be enjoined.

Taking private property in condemnation proceedings before the amount of the compensation has been determined will be enjoined.

3. Dedication ⇨20(1) — Eminent domain ⇨270—Property owner's allowing property to be devoted to public use is considered "dedication," and his only remedy is action for compensation.

Where property owner has with knowledge and without protest permitted the property to be devoted to a public use, his conduct will be regarded as a "dedication" of the property to such use, and his only remedy will be an action for compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Dedication.]

4. Eminent domain ⇨187—Superior court, in condemnation proceeding, can prevent plaintiff from taking possession of property until authorizing order is made (Code Civ. Proc. § 1256).

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1256, the superior court, in proceeding to condemn property for a public use, has jurisdiction, on motion, to prevent plaintiff from taking possession of the property sought to be condemned until an order is made authorizing it.

5. Eminent domain ⇨172—Where court has jurisdiction of subject and parties in condemnation proceedings, its decision, though erroneous, is an exercise of such jurisdiction.

Where court has jurisdiction in condemnation proceedings both of the parties and of the subject of the litigation, its conclusion as to whether the facts alleged or the pleadings in form are sufficient to warrant the relief sought, though erroneous, will nevertheless be an exercise of such jurisdiction.

6. Eminent domain ⇨172—That all relief prayed for in condemnation proceedings is not legally allowable does not deprive superior court of jurisdiction.

Fact that relief cannot be granted defendants in condemnation proceedings to the extent prayed for will not deprive the court of jurisdiction to determine and grant the relief to which they may be entitled.

7. Prohibition ⇨5(1), 11—Writ of prohibition will not lie to prevent subordinate court from deciding erroneously or to prescribe what court shall consider in case within its jurisdiction.

A writ of prohibition will not lie to prevent a subordinate court from deciding erroneously, and the writ cannot be used to prescribe what a court shall or shall not consider in a matter before it and within its jurisdiction.

Application for writ of prohibition by the Felton Water Company against the Superior Court in and for the County of Santa Cruz and others to arrest further proceedings on an order to show cause why petitioner should not be restrained from obstructing the flow and diverting the waters of a stream. Writ denied.

Peck, Bunker & Peck, of Oakland, for petitioner.

Ralph Smith, of Santa Cruz, and R. T. Harding, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. An application for a writ of prohibition to arrest further proceedings in respondent court on an order requiring petitioner to show cause why it should not be restrained pending the trial of an action filed therein from further obstructing the flow and diverting the waters of a stream.

Petitioner, a corporation, was organized in 1889 for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the town of Felton and its vicinity with water for domestic and other uses. An action was filed in August, 1926, by petitioner in respondent court against Forest Lakes Mutual Water Company, Seminary Avenue Land Company, Santa Cruz Land Title Company, corporations, George H. Fetherston, and others to condemn an easement, to wit, the right to take, divert, and carry away as against the lands of defendants 150,000 gallons of water per day from Limestone brook, which is a branch of a stream called Gold gulch in Santa Cruz county, with the right to sell the same to the general public and to the inhabitants of the town of Felton for domestic and other uses at such rentals and charges as are fixed by the railroad commission of the state of California. The complaint alleges that at all the times since the month of June, 1925, plaintiff has diverted from the stream, when there was that quantity flowing therein, approximately 86,000 gallons of water per day; that the diversion was made by means of a dam constructed on the property of defendant Santa Cruz Land Title Company, and that the water has been taken for sale, rental, and distribution to the inhabitants of the town of Felton and its vicinity and to the inhabitants of the lands owned by the defendant last named, to be used for domestic and irrigation purposes; that the dam, pipe lines, and other instrumentalities used for that purpose have been devoted by plaintiff to a public use, namely, for the diversion and storage of the waters of the stream for sale and distribution to the inhabitants mentioned; that the right sought to be acquired is necessary to the public use referred to, in that the water which plaintiff has heretofore diverted is insufficient to supply the demands made upon plaintiff for the above purposes.

The foregoing averments, except those of a previous diversion of a portion of the stream and the quantity so diverted, were traversed by an answer filed by Forest Lakes Mutual Water Company, Seminary Avenue Land Company, and others of the defendants, not including Santa Cruz Land Title Company or George H. Fetherston. The answer alleges that none of the water was diverted by plaintiff prior to October, 1925, and that none has been diverted since, except as the agent and instrumentality of defendant Fetherston; that the latter is the owner of all the stock of petitioner except the qualifying shares thereof held by certain of its directors; and that all the water diverted by petitioner since the last-mentioned date has been diverted for the purpose of aiding Fetherston in the development and sale of his private lands and not for a public use nor for the benefit of the public; that the town of Felton is no longer a municipal corporation; and that the purpose of the proceeding is to acquire water, not for a public use, but for the purpose of maintaining swimming tanks, fish ponds, and otherwise beautifying the private property of Fetherston. The answer also contains allegations by way of special defense to the action which in substance are realleged in the pleading denominated a cross-complaint made a part thereof, in which latter pleading defendants Seminary Avenue Land Company and Forest Lakes Mutual Water Company, as against petitioner and defendant George H. Fetherston, aver the ownership in Seminary Avenue Land Company of certain lands described in the complaint, with the water and water rights appurtenant thereto which are sought to be condemned; that a portion of these lands are riparian to the stream, and have been subdivided into lots and blocks, and large sums invested in the construction of a water system for supplying the present owners and prospective purchasers thereof with water from the stream for domestic and other purposes; that Forest Lakes Mutual Company was organized for the more convenient handling of the water rights owned by Seminary Avenue Land Company, which were conveyed to the former for the purpose of distributing the waters of the stream as a public use to the lot owners mentioned; that, in an action brought in respondent court by these defendants against Santa Cruz Land Title Company, George Fetherston, and others, not including petitioner, it was found and adjudged that the lands owned by Seminary Avenue Land Company were, and that the lands owned by Fetherston described in the complaint were not, riparian to the stream; that Fetherston was the owner of substantially the whole of the capital stock of petitioner, and that the latter was the agent and instrumentality of Fetherston in diverting and receiving from Fetherston the waters diverted by him from the stream; that Santa Cruz Land Company, Fetherston, and their agents particularly the petitioner, were therein enjoined from obstructing or diverting the flow of the stream at any point above the lands owned by Seminary Avenue Land Company or within the boundaries of the lands owned by Fetherston; that Fetherston and petitioner, since the entry of said judgment, and in violation of the injunction, and without the consent of defendants named, have continuously diverted large quantities of said water, and that petitioner intends and threatens to divert in addition thereto the 150,000 gallons thereof per day sought to be condemned without any judgment of condemnation having been given or any compensation awarded or paid.

This pleading concludes with a prayer for damages and that petitioner be restrained pending the trial of the action from taking any part of the property owned by these defendants and sought to be condemned.

A motion to strike out portions of the pleading filed by defendants was denied, and a demurrer thereto was overruled. The motion, following the filing of which the order to show cause was issued, was based on the answer and cross-complaint mentioned, and an affidavit served and filed.

Petitioner contends that respondent court is without jurisdiction to grant affirmative relief to a defendant in a condemnation proceeding or to entertain an application therefor.

[1-4] It is provided by section 14 of article 1 of the Constitution that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation being first made to or paid into court for the owner, further provision being made therein for the immediate taking and use of property sought to be condemned by the state, a county, or certain enumerated corporations following the commencement of the action upon giving security for the payment of damages. Petitioner is not a corporation of the class mentioned in the section, and its right to the possession of the easement sought to be condemned will, as provided by section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure, depend upon and follow the entry of a judgment in the pending proceeding. The taking of private property before the amount of the compensation is ascertained will be enjoined (Grigsby v. Burtnett, 31 Cal. 406; Myers v. Daubenbiss, 84 Cal. 1, 23 P. 1027; Haynes v. Indio Levee Dist., 46 Cal. App. 436, 189 P. 475; Marblehead Land Co. v. Superior Court, 60 Cal. App. 644, 213 P. 718; Stone v. Cordua Irr. Dist., 72 Cal. App. 331, 237 P. 554), unless the owner with knowledge has suffered without protest the property to be devoted to a public use by one engaged in administering such use, in which case his conduct will be regarded as a dedication of the property to such use, and his only remedy will be an action for compensation (Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 136, 70 p. 663, 74 P. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35; Gurnsey v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 160 Cal. 701, 117 P. 906, 36 L. R. A. [N. S.] 185; Miller & Lux v. Enterprise C. & L. Co., 169 Cal. 415, 147 P. 567). A proceeding to condemn property for a public use is a special proceeding in the superior court; and, except as otherwise provided, the provisions of part 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure are applicable to and constitute the rules of practice in such proceedings. Section 1256, Code Civ. Proc. The court in such a proceeding has jurisdiction on motion to prevent the plaintiff from taking possession of the property sought to be condemned until an order is made authorizing it. In re Bryann, 65 Cal. 375, 4 P. 304; Neale v. Superior Court, 77 Cal. 28, 18 P. 790. Moreover, it is invested with jurisdiction of all special proceedings not otherwise provided for, and in conducting such proceedings exercises the usual and ordinary powers in disposing of the issues necessarily involved, and may exercise the implied power to do all which is necessarily incident to the authorized proceeding. City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroi, 124 Cal. 597, 57 P. 585.

[5] In the pending proceeding the court has jurisdiction both of the parties and of the subject of the litigation; and in the exercise of its power to hear and determine the issues necessarily involved has the incidental power to prevent the plaintiff from taking possession prior to the entry of judgment. In re Bryann, supra; Neale v. Superior Court, supra. Having this power in a proper case, its conclusion as to whether the facts alleged or the pleadings in form are sufficient to warrant the relief sought, though erroneous, will nevertheless be an exercise of jurisdiction. Amos v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 677, 239 P. 317; Cassidy v. Cannon, 18 Cal. App. 426, 123 P. 358, 359; Kelsey v. Superior Court, 40 Cal. App. 229, 180 P. 662; McMorriy v. Superior Court, 54 Cal. App. 76, 201 P. 797.

[6, 7] The motion and order require petitioner to show cause why it should not be restrained from diverting the waters of the stream so as to interfere with or obstruct the flow thereof within the boundaries of certain described land. Petitioner alleges that before the filing of the action it commenced to divert, and is now diverting, certain of these waters, which have been impressed with a public use; but whether this portion is a part of that sought to be condemned does not appear. In San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 80, 20 P. 372, 3 L. R. A. 83, an order made in a proceeding to condemn, requiring the plaintiff to restore property the subject of the litigation, possession of which had been taken by the plaintiff during the pendency of the proceedings without paying into court the compensation awarded the defendant, was reversed on appeal; it being held that relief must be sought in an independent proceeding. Should it appear on the hearing of the motion and order to show cause that as to a portion of the flow now being diverted defendants are entitled only to compensatory relief, or as to such portion the facts shown bring the case within the decision last cited, the fact that defendants have sought relief which to the extent prayed for cannot legally be granted will not deprive the court of the power to determine and grant the relief to which they may be entitled. A writ of prohibition will not lie to prevent a subordinate court from deciding erroneously, and the writ cannot be used to prescribe what a court shall or shall not consider in a matter before it and within its jurisdiction. Wreden v. Superior Court, 55 Cal. 504; Van Hoosear v. Railroad Commission, 189 Cal. 228, 207 P. 903.

For the foregoing reasons, the writ is denied.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

82 Cal. App. 691

BIRD v. MURPHY et al. (Civ. 3218.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 3, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 30, 1927.

1. Fraudulent conveyances §298(3)—Evidence warranted finding that conveyances to wife and from wife to plaintiff were not made to defraud judgment creditor.

In action to quiet title, evidence held to warrant finding that conveyance of lots from grantor to wife, in consideration of advances made to grantor, and from wife to plaintiff, were not made to defraud grantor's daughter having judgment against grantor for maintenance.

2. Judgment §762—Allowance payable in installments during indefinite period under judgment for maintenance does not become lien on real property, in absence of provision to that effect (Code Civ. Proc. § 671).

In absence of provision in judgment for maintenance to that effect, an allowance payable in monthly installments during an indefinite period of time does not become a lien on real property, Code Civ. Proc. § 671, having no application to such judgments.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by Eugenie R. Bird, executrix of the estate of Dan W. Bird, deceased, against Lulu Mignon Murphy, in which S. S. Murphy and another were made cross-defendants. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. P. Hayne and B. M. Bainbridge, both of Stockton, for appellants.

J. R. Cronin, of Stockton, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. Judgment was entered herein quieting plaintiff's title to two lots in the town of Lodi. The defendant has appealed from the judgment. A prior judgment in the action in favor of the plaintiff was reversed on the ground that the court failed to find upon the defendant's allegation that the conveyance of the lots to plaintiff was fraudulent. Bird v. Murphy, 72 Cal. App. 39, 236 P. 154. On the retrial of the case the parties stipulated that the case be submitted upon the transcript of the evidence given at the former trial. The facts and circumstances out of which the controversy arose are stated in the opinion filed herein on the former appeal. It is there said: "These circumstances furnish at least some evidence of a fraudulent conveyance." The evidence given to the contrary was not stated, the only question for determination being whether there was sufficient evidence of fraud to require a finding thereon.

[1] As stated in the former opinion, the defendant, in an action for maintenance, was given judgment against her father, S. S. Murphy, July 2, 1914. Thereafter, and before the judgment was docketed, Murphy conveyed the lots in question to his wife, who, after the judgment was docketed, conveyed the lots to Bird. Murphy testified that he was a retired minister, a veteran of the Civil War, and that at the time of the conveyance of the lots to his wife he had no other property and no income except a small pension; that he did not make the conveyance to defeat the judgment for maintenance, but that he conveyed the property to his wife in consideration of advances of money which she had made to him at different times; that some of "these advances were as much as $1,200"; that the advances were "a good deal more than those lots were worth." A witness for defendant testified that at the time of the conveyance the lots were each worth $200 or $250. Mrs. Murphy testified that the conveyance to her was made in consideration of advances made by her of money which she had prior to her marriage to Murphy; that "what we had when we were married belonged to me, not to my husband." Bird testified that he bought the lots from Mrs. Murphy for $500, for which he gave his promissory note; that he knew nothing about the judgment for maintenance in favor of defendant against her father at the time of the purchase; and that if he had then known "about that trouble" between them he would not have made the purchase. The court found that neither the conveyance from Murphy to his wife nor the latter's conveyance to Bird was fraudulent. It cannot be held that the evidence does not warrant the finding. The most that can be said is that a finding either way upon the issue of fraud would be conclusive on appeal. Even if the conveyance from Murphy to his wife were held to be fraudulent, the defendant could not succeed in this action without showing that the transfer to Bird was fraudulent and that he was a party to the fraud.

[2] Appellant contends that, assuming the conveyance from Murphy to his wife to be fraudulent, the judgment for maintenance was a lien on the lots at the time of Bird's purchase thereof, under the provisions of section 671 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That judgment required Murphy to pay his daughter $15 a month for her maintenance, and provided that "the court reserves the right to modify this judgment at any time upon application of either party." The payments were not made a lien or charge upon any property. While there are statements in some of the decisions to the effect that such a judgment constitutes a lien upon the real property of the judgment debtor, no case has been cited in which it is so decided. Appellant relies on Goff v. Goff, 60 W. Va. 9, 53 S. E. 769, 9 Ann. Cas. 1083. But the judgment involved therein expressly made the installment payments a lien "on all the real estate owned by defendant, Goff." The same is true of Isaacs v. Isaacs, 115 Va. 562, 79 S. E.

1072, Id., 117 Va. 730, 86 S. E. 105, L. R. A. 1916B, 648. The statutes of some states expressly make judgments for alimony liens upon the real estate of judgment debtors. Decisions under such statutes are of no value in determining the question under consideration. It has been decided in a number of states that judgments for alimony, payable in installments and continuing indefinitely, do not constitute liens upon real estate. Enoch v. Walter, 209 Ill. App. 619; Scott v. Scott, 80 Kan. 489, 103 P. 1005, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132, 133 Am. St. Rep. 217, 18 Ann. Cas. 564; McGill v. McGill, 101 Kan. 324, 166 P. 501; Fey v. Johns, 112 Kan. 385, 210 P. 1107; Campbell v. Trosper, 108 Ky. 602, 57 S. W. 245; Olin v. Hungerford, 10 Ohio, 268; Mansfield v. Hill, 56 Or. 400, 107 P. 471, 108 P. 1007; Kerr v. Kerr, 216 Pa. 641, 66 A. 107, 9 Ann. Cas. 89; Beesley v. Badger (Utah) 240 P. 458. It has always been held in this state that a decree in favor of a wife for maintenance or alimony may, by the terms of the decree itself, make the allowance a charge or lien on the husband's real property, or any part thereof. In Gaston v. Gaston, 114 Cal. 542, 546, 46 P. 609, 55 Am. St. Rep. 86, it is said that such a lien "does not derive its force" from section 671 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In Robinson v. Robinson, 79 Cal. 511, 515, 21 P. 1095, 1096, it is said that in case of an allowance payable in installments, "it would be possible, where no security had been required, for the husband to dispose of all his property, and then go away or die, and thus defeat the allowance altogether." It may be said of the decisions in this state generally that, while they do not decide the question here under consideration, it is to be implied therefrom that, in the absence of a provision in a judgment to that effect, an allowance payable in installments during an indefinite period of time does not become a lien on real property, and that section 671 has no application to such judgments. That section provides that:

"From the time the judgment is docketed it becomes a lien upon all the real property of the judgment debtor not exempt from execution in the county, owned by him at the time, or which he may afterwards acquire, until the lien ceases."

If appellant's contention be sound, then a judgment such as that involved herein, however small, becomes a lien on the judgment debtor's real estate, however extensive; and it is not apparent in what manner or by what procedure the lien can be released or discharged except by the voluntary act of the judgment creditor. The amount of such a judgment "for purposes of payment and discharge could not be ascertained because of the uncertain and indefinite period of the installments." Beesley v. Badger, supra. The case is altogether different where the decree itself creates a lien, because it is then within the power of the court to limit the lien to specific property, and, where jurisdiction is reserved, to release such property from the lien and require other security in lieu thereof.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

MERCANTILE ACCEPTANCE CO. v. FRANK et al. (Civ. 4276.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 2, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 30, 1927.

Chattel mortgages — § 89—Mortgage lien on automobile created in another state follows car, when brought into California without notice to mortgagee (Civ. Code, § 2957.)

Mortgage lien on automobile, created in Minnesota, follows car into California, where it was brought without notice to mortgagee, notwithstanding failure to comply with Civ. Code, § 2957, and to record mortgage in California.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by the Mercantile Acceptance Company against Albert L. Frank and others to enforce a chattel mortgage. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Lewinson & Barnhill, of Los Angeles, C. W. Mullins, of Seattle, Wash., and E. E. Morris, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

L. G. Shelton, of Glendora, for respondents Caulfield and Kling.

Charles L. Evans and Arthur Wright, both of Los Angeles, for respondents Trobert, Herberger and Myers.

THOMPSON, J. This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment for defendants and respondents, after the general demurrer of the appearing defendants, who are the respondents here, had been sustained without leave to amend.

The complaint alleges the execution by the defendant Albert L. Frank, who was not served with process and did not appear, of a chattel mortgage to plaintiff's assignor, upon the Studebaker automobile sought to be repossessed in the action from defendants, who it is alleged assert ownership by purchase, claiming to have purchased without notice of the mortgage. The complaint further alleges the execution and filing of the mortgage in accordance with the laws of Minnesota, which are set out in detail, and the removal of the automobile to California by Frank without the knowledge of the mortgagee. It also alleges the breach of the provisions of the mortgage entitling the mortgagee to possession, and sets out the mortgage in hæc verba. It does not appear that the mortgage was recorded in California. The instrument discloses that it was not supported by the affidavits of the mortgagor and mortgagee, as required by the laws of California.

The sole question argued by counsel is whether the mortgage lien created in Minnesota follows the automobile into California, when it is brought here without notice to the mortgagee, and without compliance with the statutes of California. It was recently held in the case of Motor Investment Company v. Breslau, 64 Cal. App. 230, 221 P. 700, that the lien of a chattel mortgage, valid by the laws of the state where executed, and where the personalty is situated at the time of its execution, is sufficient against incumbrances in good faith. The decision is based upon the rule of comity, and although the mortgage in question there was recorded in California, after discovery of the surreptitious removal of the mortgaged property into California, the mortgage was fatally defective according to the laws of California, because of not being accompanied by the affidavits of good faith required by section 2957 of the Civil Code. This authority is squarely in point and is supported by the weight of authority.

We are mindful of the fact that originally chattel mortgages were not sufficient unless attended by a change in possession (Ruggles v. Cannedy, 127 Cal. 290, 53 P. 911, 59 P. 827, 46 L. R. A. 371), and of the statute which requires recordation of a chattel mortgage in the county to which mortgaged property may be removed from another county of this state within 30 days, providing that for failure thereof the lien shall not be valid against creditors or purchasers in good faith (Hopper v. Keys, 152 Cal. 488, 92 P. 1017). Yet these items are not necessarily inconsistent with the result reached in the case of Motor Investment Co. v. Breslau, supra. We are satisfied with the rule there announced.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

DRAPER v. HELLMAN COMMERCIAL TRUST & SAVINGS BANK.★
(Civ. 4662.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 29, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 27, 1927.

1. Libel and slander §123(2)—In libel action, letter and telegram connected as parts of one transaction may be construed by jury as one publication.

Where bank wrote letter to plaintiff's employer suggesting that plaintiff was fugitive from justice, plaintiff's employer made inquiry, and bank directed telegram to be sent charging plaintiff with taking money while in its employ as bank teller, held that in libel action letter and telegram might be construed as one publication.

2. Libel and slander §7(1)—Publication imputing commission of crime not openly charged is "libel" if untrue and unprivileged.

Where publication and surrounding circumstances show that writer intended that it should be understood that person spoken of had committed crime, and such publication was made only to collect money, it is libelous if untrue and unprivileged though a direct charge is not made.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Libel.]

3. Libel and slander §44(3)—Where publication insinuating that bank teller was fugitive from justice incited inquiry, answer charging dishonesty held not privileged.

Where bank wrote a letter to plaintiff's employer suggesting that plaintiff was a fugitive from justice and incited inquiry from plaintiff's employer, answer charging that plaintiff, while employed as bank teller had taken money held not privileged communication.

4. Libel and slander §6(2)—Publication implying dishonesty though not charging punishable offense is libelous if falsely and maliciously tending to subject person to public distrust.

A written publication which implies or may be generally understood to imply dishonesty, even though not charging a punishable offense, is libelous if it falsely and maliciously tends to subject the party to whom it refers to public distrust.

5. Libel and slander §123(1)—Whether allegations of innuendo in libel action are true held for jury.

Whether the evidence in a libel action supported the allegations of the innuendo held for jury; especially in view of defendant's requested instruction that the jury were to determine whether the publication was in fact libelous.

6. Libel and slander §4—Words written need not be written with malice to constitute "libel" (Civ. Code, § 45).

Under Civ. Code, § 45, malice is not necessary to the proof of libel if the words written are false and unprivileged, and if they expose a person to hatred or obloquy, or have a tendency to injure him in his occupation.

7. Libel and slander §4—Malice may be established by showing libelous publication to be without just cause.

Although actual ill will against plaintiff is not established, malice in libel action may be shown by proving a publication to be without just cause or reason.

8. Evidence §168—Admission of secondary evidence to prove telegram in libel action held not prejudicial error, where defendant's answer admitted sending telegram as alleged.

There was no prejudicial error in admitting secondary evidence to prove the contents of a telegram in a libel suit, where defendant's answer admitted sending the telegram as alleged in plaintiff's complaint, and further alleged that it had reasonable cause to believe the charges therein contained were true.

9. Libel and slander ⚖️19—In libel action, publication should be construed in light of surrounding circumstances.

Where publication is alleged to be libelous, it should be construed in the light of the circumstances of the situation to which it relates.

10. Libel and slander ⚖️19—Publication alleged to be libelous must be construed as a whole.

To determine whether an article is libelous, it must be construed as a whole.

11. Libel and slander ⚖️86(2)—Pleading by innuendo is necessary where publication is not libelous per se.

If a publication is not libelous per se, plaintiff in libel action must plead by innuendo.

12. Libel and slander ⚖️100(6)—Where defendant in libel action denied plaintiff's good reputation, admission of evidence of plaintiff's reputation held not prejudicial error, though denial was on alleged lack of information and belief.

Where defendant in libel action denied plaintiff's allegation that prior to the libel plaintiff had a good reputation, though such denial was on alleged lack of information and belief, plaintiff's reputation was thereby put in issue, and admission of evidence of his reputation was not prejudicial error.

13. Libel and slander ⚖️100(2)—Where defendant in libel action denied damage to plaintiff's business as bank teller, admission of evidence of damage held not prejudicial error, though denial was on alleged lack of information and belief.

Where plaintiff in libel action alleged that publication had a tendency to or did injure his business, and that defendant denied this, though denial was on alleged lack of information and belief, damage to plaintiff's business was put in issue and admission of evidence of such damage was not prejudicial error.

14. Libel and slander ⚖️120(2)—Punitive damages in libel action held not allowable, where complaint did not allege actual malice.

Where complaint in libel action did not allege actual malice as to letters and telegram upon which jury's verdict was based, punitive damages held not allowable.

Houser, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by C. M. Draper against the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Page & Hurt, Eugene D. Williams, and Albert M. Cross, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. I. Gilbert, Raymond L. Haight, and Allen W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. This is an action for damages for libel. A trial was had before a jury and verdict was rendered for plaintiff for $15,000 actual and $5,000 punitive damages, and judgment was entered in accordance with such verdict. Defendant moved for a new trial, and after hearing such motion the court decided to grant same unless plaintiff would agree to remit $10,000 of such judgment. Upon plaintiff complying therewith, from the judgment so reduced defendant appealed.

Among the facts of the case which the jury impliedly found from the evidence were: That plaintiff, a man about 27 years of age, came to Los Angeles from Brantford, Canada, and on the 20th day of April, 1921, entered into the employment of defendant, who was conducting a banking business in Los Angeles. He became a teller in defendant's bank and worked for defendant until the 15th day of October, 1921, when he resigned. He notified defendant that he intended to do so about two weeks prior to that date. On the last day of such service plaintiff worked until nearly 12 o'clock midnight adjusting his accounts. He was assisted by defendant's night teller, one Fulkerson. During the last day of plaintiff's service for defendant he received for deposit from two depositors $100 each, one of which he entered in the proper deposit book of such depositor, and to the other he gave a duplicate deposit slip evidencing such deposit. The balance in his hands at the close of the day, together with his deposit slips, were turned over to Fulkerson for the defendant bank in the usual course of business, but neither the money nor the deposit slips for these two $100 deposits were ever received by the bank, or at least placed with its deposits. The jury evidently believed that plaintiff did not retain any of the money or the deposit slips. The missing money has never been otherwise accounted for. Plaintiff after discontinuing his services to the bank remained in Los Angeles about two weeks and called at the bank to see some of his co-employees and informed them he was going back to his old home in Canada. He returned to Brantford and wrote from there to some of the employees at the defendant's bank. A few days after plaintiff's departure from Los Angeles, defendant discovered that said $200 had not been accounted for, and found the entries showing the receipt thereof, one being in the handwriting of plaintiff and the teller's sheet bearing the handwriting of Fulkerson, the night teller. Mr. Cohen, a vice president of the defendant bank, acting for the bank and with full authority to do all that he did, then wrote and caused to be signed and transmitted the letter herein set forth. It was his intention to induce plaintiff to pay the bank $200, which he believed plaintiff had stolen. That letter was as follows:

"Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank.

"Los Angeles, November 16, 1921.

"Manager Staff Department, Head Office, Bank of Montreal, Montreal, Quebec, Canada. Dear Sir: We had in our employ for several months C. M. Draper, who left us on October 31st, and whose references show that he was in the employ of your branch at Brantford, Toronto, for a long time. We have information to the effect that he left to return to your city. We are anxious to learn his present whereabouts and have requested Pinkerton's National Detective Agency to locate him for us. Should he present himself to you we will much appreciate it if you will send us a wire at our expense, telling us where he can be reached. Your attention will oblige,

"Yours very truly, Emanuel B. Lee,
"EC:EM. Vice President."

Cohen employed the Pinkerton Detective Agency ostensibly to assist in locating plaintiff, but the jury was justified in believing that the sole object of Cohen in employing such detective agency was to impress upon plaintiff that the defendant was intending to make a criminal charge against plaintiff if he did not voluntarily yield up $200 to cover said shortage. Mr. Cohen testified that his purpose in writing the letter to the Bank of Montreal was that he thought Draper would admit that he took the money and would pay it back, and that when he employed the Pinkerton Detective Agency he had the same purpose, and any communication he made to such agency was for the same purpose. In view of all of the evidence, the jury were justified in finding that the letter to the Bank of Montreal was intended to incite inquiry by the Montreal bank as to what the inquiry about plaintiff was for and cause embarrassment to the plaintiff and regardless as to whether it would cause the dismissal of plaintiff from service with the Bank of Montreal or cause him embarrassment, distress, or loss. On receiving the foregoing letter, the Bank of Montreal telegraphed to the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, asking whether that bank could give reason for requesting Pinkertons to locate plaintiff. Thereafter the bank, through Cohen, caused the Pinkerton Detective Agency to reply to the telegram of the Bank of Montreal, which that agency did in a telegram reading as follows (Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 8):

"San Francisco, Cal., Wed., Nov. 22nd, 1921.

"San Francisco office reports: At 1:40 p. m. the following telegram was received from Los Angeles: 'Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank had teller named C. M. Draper quit there October 15th went to Montreal stop On last day employment received several deposits destroyed deposit slips kept money stop Hellman's wired Bank of Montreal, Montreal, Canada, asking if Draper in their employ advising we looking for him and received reply from San Francisco branch Bank of Montreal asking for explanation stop You call personally Bank of Montreal immediately explain why inquiry being made regarding Draper Secure present address finis.'"

The bank, in its answer as amended, admits that it caused this telegram to be sent to the Bank of Montreal.

Plaintiff was at once suspended from employment by the said Bank of Montreal, and thereupon plaintiff commenced a telegraphic correspondence with the defendant, sending telegrams as follows:

"Brantford, Ont. 11:45 a 30 1921 Nov. 30 a. m. 9:26 Emanuel Cohen Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, Sixth and Main Sts. Los Angeles, Calif. Do you or do you not intend replying to my telegrams you know the alternative Draper."

"A 233 A. 15 1921 Nov. 25 a. m. 10:23 Brantford, Ont. 12 42 p. 25. Emanuel Cohen Hellman Commercial Trust and Savings Bank Sixth and Main Sts. Los Angeles, Calif. Unless matter is cleared immediately with Bank of Montreal, Montreal, will enter action against you. C. M. Draper."

Defendant made no reply to either of the communications from plaintiff.

It is claimed by appellant that the court erred in submitting to the jury the question of actual malice as a basis for punitive damages. But the defendant, as well as the plaintiff, asked for instructions on that subject. Among those instructions given at defendant's request, the jury were instructed:

"You are instructed that mere negligence or carelessness is not evidence of actual malice or malice in fact, and does not justify an award of exemplary damages in an action for libel." Instruction X.

"You are instructed that actual malice, or malice in fact, as defined in these instructions, does not arise as a legal presumption from the fact that you may consider the writings in question false and libelous. While it may be inferred from the intrinsic characteristics of an alleged libelous writing, still it is left for you to determine as a fact whether or not the publication complained of was made with such actual malice." Instruction XI.

"You are instructed that the defendant pleaded in this action his privilege by which it is claimed that the writings alleged to have been published by the defendant were privileged. A privileged publication is one made in a communication without malice to a person interested therein by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information." Instruction XXVIII.

A libel is a false and unprivileged publication by writing, which exposes any person to hatred, ridicule or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation.

[1] The letter first written by Cohen, together with the subsequent proceedings and the telegram of the Pinkerton Detective Agency, are so obviously connected together as parts of one transaction that they could, by the jury, have been construed together as constituting substantially one publication. The letter by Cohen to the Montreal bank contained no false statement, but did contain a statement intended to convey suspicions to the prejudice of the plaintiff to inform the Montreal bank that the Hellman bank did not know the address of Draper; that the Hellman bank had deemed it necessary to employ a detective agency to locate him; that finding his address immediately was a matter of so urgent importance that the Hellman bank would pay for a telegram giving the information of Draper's whereabouts. This letter was clearly an implication that Draper, who might have re-entered the employment of the Montreal bank, had become an important object of search and inquiry. The jury could very well find that it was intended to incite an inquiry as to why the Hellman bank was making such an investigation and as to why and in what manner a detective agency had been employed to locate Draper, and why a telegram giving Draper's address was wanted, and such inquiry was forthwith made by said Montreal bank. Then follows the reply, not from the Hellman bank, but from the detective agency, whom the Hellman bank had employed and had directed that it make the reply to such inquiry. It resulted that Draper was informed of the charge of embezzlement or larceny that the Hellman bank was making against him as implied in the letter of inquiry. Draper, who was in the employ of the Bank of Montreal, was suspended and put out of employment. Then Draper sent to defendant bank the foregoing telegrams, to which defendant made no reply.

[2] Whenever it can be collected from the publication and the circumstances connected with its publication that the writer intended that it should be understood that the person spoken of had committed a crime, the publication is libelous if untrue and unprivileged.

[3] Whenever a person by a publication ambiguously insinuates that another person has committed a crime and purposely incites an inquiry as to the meaning of the publication by the person addressed, and in pursuance to such inquiry the person addressed does make the inquiry, the answer to such inquiry so caused which states in plain terms that the person spoken of had committed a crime, is not a privileged communication. Newell on Slander and Libel (3d Ed.) p. 621. If all the statements of the published communication taken together are sufficient to convey the meaning to a reader that a person is suspected of having committed a crime and that a detective has been employed to locate him, and the communication is made only to collect money, the insinuation is sufficient to establish the charge of libelous communication, if the charge is untrue and unprivileged, and it is a libel. Such a publication imputing the commission of a crime not openly charged is actionable.

[4, 5] A written publication which implies or may be generally understood to imply dishonesty, even though not charging a punishable offense, is libelous if it falsely and maliciously tends to subject the party to whom it refers to public distrust. If such a publication is not a libel per se, but is supported by innuendo, it is for the jury to say whether the evidence supports the allegations of innuendo.

In this case, not relying on the assumption that the letter was libelous per se, it was alleged in the complaint "that the words and printing in said letter were intended to mean that the plaintiff had committed some act of a felonious character, and that said plaintiff had concealed his whereabouts from the defendant herein and that said plaintiff was a fugitive from justice." At the request of the defendant, the court instructed the jury that they were to determine whether the publication was in fact libelous. And at the request of plaintiff the court instructed the jury that they were to determine whether the publication was in fact libelous. And at the request of plaintiff, the court instructed the jury that it was for them to determine from all the evidence whether the letter of the defendant to the Bank of Montreal was understood by readers of the letter to mean that the plaintiff had committed some act of felonious character, or that plaintiff had concealed his residence from the defendant, or that plaintiff was a fugitive from justice. Under the instructions given at the request of defendant, the jury could have found from the evidence that the innuendo was true.

[6] It was not necessary to the proof of the libel that the words written should be uttered with malice, if they are false and unprivileged and if they expose a person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or cause him to be shunned or avoided, or have a tendency to injure him in his occupation. Civ. Code, § 45. Defendant in an action for damages for libel may plead and prove the truth of the matter charged as defamatory, and any mitigating circumstances to reduce the amount of damages whether he proves justification or not. Code Civ. Proc. § 461. A defendant is liable for what is insinuated, as well as for what is stated explicitly. Morgan v. Republican Pub. Co., 249 Mass. 388, 144 N. E. 221. "It is only when the court can say that the publication is not reasonably capable of any defamatory meaning, and cannot reasonably be understood in any defamatory sense, that the court can rule, as a matter of law, that the publication is not libelous, and withdraw the case from the jury, or order a verdict for the defendant."

Twombly v. Monroe, 136 Mass. 464, 469. This quoted portion being also quoted by the court in Morgan v. Republican Pub. Co., supra.

[7, 8] Malice may be established by proving a republication to be without just cause or excuse, although actual ill will against plaintiff is not established. Butler v. Freyman (Mo. App.) 260 S. W. 523. There was surely no prejudicial error in admitting the evidence concerning the telegram, for in an amendment to defendant's answer it admits as its own act the sending of the telegram as alleged in plaintiff's complaint and alleges that it "had reasonable cause to believe and did believe the said charges to be true." The jury impliedly found, as under the evidence it might do, that the telegram was false, and that in the sending thereof was a careless disregard of the consequences to plaintiff, and that the act was done for the purpose of forcing the payment of money. In such cases, though there may have been no ill will, malice is presumed because of the reckless and wanton disregard of the rights of another. Words may be libelous if they are reasonably susceptible of a defamatory meaning as well as an innocent one. Oklahoma Pub. Co. v. Kendall, 96 Okl. 194, 221 P. 762; Brown v. Tregoe, 236 N. Y. 497, 142 N. E. 159.

[9, 10] Each publication should be construed in the light of the circumstances of the situation to which it relates. Malice imputed to the publisher of a libel is not necessarily personal ill will, but merely legal malice implied from willfully and wantonly doing an unlawful act which results in injury. Vicknair v. Daily States Pub. Co., 153 La. 677, 96 So. 529. To determine whether an article is libelous, it must be construed as a whole. Lyon v. Fairweather, 63 Cal. App. 194, 218 P. 477; Flaks v. Clarke, 143 Md. 377, 122 A. 383.

"It is further said that actual malice may be inferred from the publication of a defamatory charge that is false in fact and not within the realm of absolute privilege defined in subdivisions 1 and 2 of section 47 [Civ. Code]. Actual malice may be inferred by the court or jury where the charge is false and is libelous per se and the defendant publishes it without having probable cause for believing it to be true, and such inference is sufficient to defeat the defense of qualified privilege. Smedley v. Soule, 125 Mich. 192, 84 N. W. 63; Quinn v. Scott, 22 Minn. 456; Carpenter v. Bailey, 53 N. H. 590." Snively v. Record Publishing Co., 185 Cal. 565, 577, 198 P. 1, 6.

[11] If the publication was not libelous per se, then the pleading by innuendo was necessary.

[12, 13] In the second paragraph of defendant's answer was set out a denial, it is true, upon alleged lack of information or belief, but nevertheless a denial that prior "to the committing of the several or any of the acts alleged to have been committed by the defendant, or at any time or at all, was always or at all reputed, estimated or accepted by or among all or any of his neighbors, or others to whom he was known, to be a person of good name, fame, honesty or credit. * * * Defendant also in its answer denies that the publication had a tendency to or did or does injure his "good name, reputation, or business." Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 178 Cal. 691, 174 P. 312. Therefore plaintiff's reputation and the damage to his reputation and business were put in issue by the pleadings, and therefore there was no prejudicial error in the rulings of the court in the admission of evidence to establish good reputation before the publication of the libel and injury to that reputation by the publication, with its incidental injury to his business, he having always been engaged in the banking business as a teller handling money, a business possibly more susceptible than the average business to the effects of a good or bad reputation. It was said in Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 178 Cal. 688, 691, 692, 174 P. 312, 313:

"In other words, it is an action by plaintiff for damage for that form of libel which, according to the definition found in section 45 of the Civil Code, tends 'to injure him in his occupation.' It is and has always been true that every suitor or party to an action or proceeding in a court of justice comes into court with the presumption of a good reputation as an individual, upon which presumption he is entitled, and in some cases is bound to rely, until his said reputation as such has been assailed. This rule is well stated and its application to libel cases clearly defined, with the authorities supporting it fully collated, in the case of Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143 (116 P. 530). While this is, therefore, the undoubted rule in respect to the reputation of the litigant as an individual, we know of no such rule nor of any such presumption with respect to the reputation of a litigant in his capacity as an attorney at law or in any other business or professional capacity, and we are cited to no cases which pretend to assert the existence of such a presumption. On the contrary, our attention is directed to the case of Aston v. Examiner Printing Co. [D. C.] 226 F. 496, which was an action for a libel uttered against the plaintiff in his profession as an engineer. The plaintiff offered evidence of his good reputation in that capacity, which was admitted over the defendant's objection. In passing upon the question thus presented, Judge Van Fleet said: 'It is at once apparent, I think, not only from the form of the questions themselves, although somewhat inartificial, but from the general nature of the subject about which the witness was being examined, that the inquiry was not addressed to the personal character or reputation of the plaintiff, of which complaint was made in Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 185 (116 P. 530), relied on by plaintiff, but was solely with reference to his standing as an engineer, his professional character, as to the propriety of which there can be no question.'

"It would seem to be obvious that such a presumption as the appellant contends for could not exist, since an individual may have a perfectly good reputation as such and yet may have no reputation at all as a lawyer or doctor or engineer, though he may also be such, for the simple reason that he has not practiced his profession to the extent or with the degree of success necessary to acquire such a reputation. It would also seem to be obvious that the plaintiff would not have been entitled to claim and recover damages for an injury to his professional reputation as an attorney at law without alleging in his complaint that he was such attorney at law and that he had acquired a reputation as such. If this be true, it would follow that the rule of pleading in ordinary libel cases to the effect that it is not necessary for the plaintiff in the first instance to allege his possession of a good reputation could have no application to a complaint in which the pleader seeks to recover damages for injuries to his reputation in respect to a particular trade, occupation, or profession. In the latter case the averment would be essential and its denial would raise a material issue so as to require affirmative proof on the part of the plaintiff as to his possession of the particular kind of business or professional reputation which he asserted had been injured by the publication. In the instant case the plaintiff did allege his possession of a professional reputation as an attorney at law. The defendant denied specifically the plaintiff's averments in that regard. A material issue was thus presented, upon which the plaintiff had the affirmative and was bound to offer evidence. He did so and the trial court properly admitted the evidence thus offered. * * *

In the case at bar, if defendant had not desired to controvert or meet the allegation of the complaint as to the good reputation and business standing of the plaintiff, it could have moved to strike out that portion of the complaint as to general reputation, or could have ignored that allegation and then objected to evidence of general reputation on the ground the same was admitted, but it elected to put it in issue by making a denial.

The verdict of the jury was reviewed by the trial court, and the award by it was modified in accordance with the opinion of the trial court. It is settled law that passion or prejudice of a jury cannot be established by the action of the trial court in requiring a reduction of the judgment to correspond with the court's opinion as to what the verdict should have been. Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 254, 116 P. 513; Lynch v. Southern Pacific Co., 24 Cal. App. 112, 140 P. 298. The actual damage to a plaintiff by the publication of a libel cannot be accurately estimated, and punitive damages are therefore largely in the discretion of the jury or the court.

We find no improper ruling or instruction which adversely affects the substantial rights of the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

CONREY, P. J. [14] I concur in the judgment. It is necessary to say, however, that in my opinion the plaintiff is not entitled to any judgment awarding exemplary or punitive damages. The complaint, although drawn in one count, sets out three instruments, all alleged to be libelous. The letter of November 16 did not contain anything at all susceptible of a libelous interpretation. But it was framed in words which invited inquiry. When that inquiry came, the questions were answered, through the detective agency, by the telegram of November 22. The argument of appellant, in support of its contention that the court erred in allowing the contents of the telegram to be proved by secondary evidence, is quite convincing. But in view of the defendant's answer, as amended by it on the first day of the trial, I think that there could have been no prejudicial error. For by that amendment the defendant admitted, in effect, that said telegram was by it, or by its authority, communicated to the Bank of Montreal. The amendment admits that, the Bank of Montreal having made its inquiry, "thereafter, if at all, and in response to said inquiry, and not otherwise, and without malice or intent to injure the plaintiff, there was, as defendant is informed and believes and therefore alleges the fact to be, stated to the Bank of Montreal and to no other person, the matter set forth in paragraphs V and VI of the complaint." The telegram was set out in said paragraph V. The amendment then says that the defendant "had reasonable cause to believe and did believe the said charge to be true, and did not in any other way publish the same." While this was not a direct and frank admission of the essential fact of the sending of the telegram, it does in substance amount to the same thing. And as for the telegram itself, it contains charges against the plaintiff which, if false and unprivileged, are libelous on their face. I agree with Mr. Justice YORK in his conclusion that under the circumstances which led up to the telegram, that communication was unprivileged. That it was false the verdict implies, and there is sufficient evidence to justify the jury in so finding.

It follows that the plaintiff was entitled to recover compensatory damages at least. There remains for consideration the award of punitive damages. "The plaintiff cannot recover punitive damages without pleading and proof of actual malice." (By the Supreme Court, in denying rehearing, in Longsworth v. Curson, 56 Cal. App. 489, 498, 206 P. 779.) This actual malice is the malice of evil intention. The complaint in this action did not allege actual malice in relation to the letter of November 16 nor in relation to the telegram of November 22d. As to those documents the complaint did allege that the defendant "willfully and maliciously" wrote the letter, and that thereafter the defendant, through its agent, sent the telegram. This is not an allegation of intent or design to injure the plaintiff. In contrast with this language, we have in the complaint an allegation of actual malice in sending a letter or telegram (the third document set out in the complaint) on the 15th of December, 1921. Of this "letter or telegram" the plaintiff alleged that it was printed, published, etc., "with express * * * malice and * * * with design or intent to injure," etc. Manifestly, the pleader here intended to allege actual malice with reference to this third document only. But the case appears to have been submitted to the jury without reference to said third document, as well as without any evidence thereof, and respondent is not claiming that the verdict rests at all upon the said "letter or telegram." This being so, I am of the opinion that the award of punitive damages was erroneous.

But I do not think that in the judgment as it now stands after reduction from $20,000 to $10,000, there are included any punitive damages. That reduction was made by consent of the plaintiff pursuant to the court's order on the motion for a new trial, whereby the court denied a new trial upon condition that the plaintiff remit the sum of $10,000 from the judgment and ordered that if the plaintiff did not consent to such reduction the motion for a new trial would be granted. I must assume that the court's order was made on the theory that the only valid reason for granting a new trial was some reason applying directly to the amount of the verdict, which had awarded $15,000 as actual damages and $5,000 as penal damages. The motion had been presented on various grounds, including that of excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice, and including also the specification that there was no evidence to justify the jury in awarding the plaintiff $5,000, or any sum, as punitive damages, and a like specification in relation to $20,000 or any sum, against defendant." In view of the fact that, as I think, the primary and most obvious error in the award was the allowance of punitive damages, I assume that the trial judge intended, as he should have intended, to entirely erase those damages when he made the order which led to the reduction of the judgment. This left the sum of $15,000, which the judge appears to have thought excessive as compensatory damages, and for that reason there was a further reduction of the judgment. I think that the judgment, as it now stands, should be affirmed.

HOUSER, J. I dissent. While I am in accord with the greater part of the opinion expressed by Mr. Presiding Justice CONREY, nevertheless I am unable to agree with his conclusion that the action by the trial court in reducing the verdict from the sum of $20,000 to the sum of $10,000 had the effect of curing the error which was included in the allowance in the verdict of the sum of $5,000 as punitive damages.

The reduction of the damages by the judge of the trial court was the sum of $10,000 from the gross amount of $20,000 allowed by the jury, which included $15,000 compensatory damages and $5,000 punitive damages. So far as the record discloses, no attempt was made by the judge of the trial court to segregate the $10,000 reduction so as to show the amount deducted from the compensatory damages and the amount (if any) deducted from the punitive damages. For aught that appears, the judge may have concluded that any sum over $5,000 awarded by the jury as compensatory damages was excessive, and accordingly deducted the entire amount of $10,000 from the item of $15,000 allowed as compensatory damages, leaving the $5,000 item awarded by the jury as punitive damages to stand; or, the trial judge may have had it in his mind that the two items making up the total reduction of $10,000 from the verdict should be produced by deducting from each of the original items of the verdict in the proportion that one bore to the other. Again, he may have assumed wholly independent figures as to each item of damages; or yet, the question of the relationship between the two items may have received no consideration whatsoever, so far as the trial judge was concerned. For this court to say that he did the only thing which he might have done, and thus, so far as punitive damages are concerned, the legality of the verdict as reduced was preserved, to my mind amounts to a conjecture, for the exercise of which I have been unable to discover any authority.

82 Cal. App. 739

PEOPLE v. MOORE et al. (Cr. 1447.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 5, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 30, 1927.

1. False pretenses §30—Indictment, averring defendants did not own and could not deliver property, substantially charged that they did not do so, as agreed.

Indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, averring that defendants were not owners of and were unable to turn over, convey, or deliver house and lot, sufficiently charged, by necessary inference at least, that they did not do so.

2. False pretenses §12—Money was obtained by false pretenses, when owner was induced to part with it by defendants' false representations of property ownership; "obtaining money by false pretenses."

Crime of "obtaining money by false pretenses" is complete when fraud intended is consummated by obtaining possession of property sought, and hence was consummated when complaining witness was induced to part with money by defendants' false representations that they were owners of property they agreed to convey.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, False Pretense.]

3. False pretenses $\S$ 7(5)—To constitute crime of "obtaining money by false pretenses," representations must be of present or past fact, though accompanied by promise.

To constitute crime of "obtaining money under false pretenses," representations must be of present or past fact, not mere expression of opinion or representation of act to be performed in future or mere promise to pay or perform some act, but representation of present or past fact is within the statute, though accompanied by promise.

4. False pretenses $\S$ 7(5)—Indictment charging false representation that defendants owned lot held sufficient, though accompanied by promise to convey and deliver.

Indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, charging false representation of existing fact that defendants owned lot agreed to be conveyed by them, was sufficient, though accompanied by promise to convey and deliver lot in future.

5. False pretenses $\S$ 26—Indictment, alleging false representation that defendants would convey lot when complaining witness paid stated sum, sufficiently alleged when promises were to be performed.

Indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, alleging representation that if complaining witness would pay defendants stated sum, by reason of their ownership of tract free of incumbrances, they were "then and there in a position to and would turn over, convey, and deliver" certain lot in such tract, sufficiently alleged when promises were to be performed.

6. False pretenses $\S$ 29—Indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, averring agreement to convey lot free of incumbrances, held sufficient, though alleging money was to be delivered as part payment.

Indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, averring that defendants agreed to convey house and lot free of incumbrances, held sufficient as against objection that, since it alleged that money was to be delivered as part payment, it cannot be inferred that title was to be conveyed immediately, as property could be conveyed free of incumbrances, subject to mortgage securing payment of balance.

7. False pretenses $\S$ 30—Indictment, alleging that defendants' representations were false and known to them to be false when made, sufficiently alleged falsity at such time.

Allegation of indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, that "said pretenses and representations * * * were in all respects utterly false, fraudulent, and untrue," and that defendants "then and there well knew" them "to be utterly false * * * at the time of making the same," held sufficient allegation that representations were false and untrue when made.

8. False pretenses $\S$ 49(3)—Evidence held to justify finding, in trial for obtaining money by false pretenses, that false representations were made, consented to, and authorized by defendants.

In trial for obtaining money by false pretenses, evidence held sufficient to justify finding that some representations were consented to and authorized by defendants and many directly made by them.

9. False pretenses $\S$ 5—Good-faith attempt to clear title and offer of other lots held not absolute defenses to charge of obtaining money by false pretenses.

Good faith in attempting to clear title to lot agreed to be conveyed and offering other lots to complaining witness is not absolute defense to charge of obtaining money therefor by false pretenses; crime consisting in false statements that defendants owned property and would convey it free of incumbrances, thereby obtaining complaining witness' money.

10. False pretenses $\S$ 51—Fraudulent intent is for jury, in trial for obtaining money by false pretenses.

Question of fraudulent intent is for jury to determine from all circumstances, in trial for obtaining money by false pretenses.

11. False pretenses $\S$ 14—One induced to part with property by false pretenses is defrauded thereof, though eventually compensated in mode not then contemplated.

One induced to part with property by false pretenses and misrepresentations is defrauded thereof within statute denouncing crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, though he eventually makes himself whole in mode not then contemplated.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

L. M. Moore and F. M. Lynch were convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Warren L. Williams, Seymour S. Silverton, and I. Henry Harris, all of Los Angeles, for appellant Moore.

R. P. Congdon, of Los Angeles, for appellant Lynch.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. The defendants were convicted under six counts of the indictment, each count charging the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. They prosecute this appeal from the judgments and from orders denying motions for new trials.

It is claimed by the appellants that their general and special demurrers to each count should have been sustained. Count 1 of the indictment is similar to the other counts, differing only as to dates, names of the complaining witnesses, amounts received, and other minor details. The indictment was presented and filed on the 2d day of February, 1926. In count 1 it is charged that on or about the 22d day of May, 1924, the defendants falsely represented to the complaining witness, Mrs. H. L. Dunning, that they were the owners of a company known as Economy Home Builders; that the defendants were the owners of a tract known and described as tract No. 4901, and owned said tract free and clear of incumbrance; that they owned forests and sawmills, a furniture factory, and a furniture warehouse; that if Mrs. Dunning would pay to the defendants the sum of $1,366.67, "that the defendants were in a position to and would turn over, convey, and deliver to the said Mrs. H. L. Dunning a certain lot in said tract, together with a house completely furnished thereon, free and clear of all incumbrances"; that, in truth and in fact, neither the defendants nor Economy Home Builders owned said tract No. 4901, nor any tract of land at all, free and clear of incumbrances, nor any forests, nor sawmills, nor any furniture factories, nor a furniture warehouse; that "defendants were not then and there or at any other time able to turn over, convey, or deliver any lot, together with a house completely furnished or furnished at all, or any lot or house in said tract, or at any other place, or at all"; that the said Mrs. Dunning believed said false representations to be true and relied thereon and was deceived thereby, and by reason thereof did pay over to the defendants the sum of $1,366.67, as part payment on lot No. 95, tract No. 4901, and a house to be built thereon and completely furnished, to be conveyed and delivered to her; that, in truth and in fact, the said representations so made were false and untrue and defendants well knew said representations to be false and untrue; that defendants by the means aforesaid did cheat and defraud the said Mrs. H. L. Dunning, and did make said false pretenses for the purpose of inducing Mrs. Dunning to pay over to the defendants the said money as part payment on said lot and said house to be built thereon and completely furnished.

[1] In support of the general demurrer, appellants contend that the indictment does not aver facts sufficient to constitute actual fraud, and that the indictment contains no averment as to whether the complaining witnesses in the respective counts received just what it was agreed they were to receive. The indictment charges, in count 1:

"That the said Mrs. H. L. Dunning had no other or different information, and then and there believed the said false and fraudulent pretenses and representations, and each of them, so made as aforesaid by the said L. M. Moore and F. M. Lynch, to be true, and relied thereon, and was deceived thereby, and because of said representations and their falsity, and of her, the said Mrs. H. L. Dunning's belief in their truth, and each of them, she, the said Mrs. H. L. Dunning, was then and there deceived and misled, and caused to pay over and deliver, and did then and there pay over and deliver to the said L. M. Moore and F. M. Lynch, the sum of $1,366.67, lawful money of the United States, as part payment on lot No. 95, tract No. 4901, contracted to be conveyed and delivered to her, the said Mrs. H. L. Dunning, by the said defendants, and as part payment on a house to be built and completely furnished on said lot by said defendants, and to be conveyed and delivered to her, the said Mrs. H. L. Dunning, by said defendants."

The indictment further charged:

"That, in truth and in fact, neither the said L. M. Moore and F. M. Lynch, or Economy Home Builders, or either of them, owned said Lilliandale tract, more particularly described as tract No. 4901, located in the said county of Los Angeles, or any tract of land at all, free and clear of incumbrances; that, in truth and in fact, neither the said L. M. Moore or F. M. Lynch, or the Economy Home Builders owned any forest or sawmills in the north, or at any other place; that, in truth and in fact, neither L. M. Moore or F. M. Lynch, or the Economy Home Builders owned any furniture factory in the city of Los Angeles, or at any other place; and that, in truth and in fact, neither the said L. M. Moore or F. M. Lynch or the Economy Home Builders owned a furniture warehouse in the city of Los Angeles, or at any other place; and that, in truth and in fact, the said defendants were not then and there or at any other time, able to turn over, convey, or deliver any lot, together with a house completely furnished, or furnished at all, or any lot or house in said tract, or at any other place, or at all."

There is no direct averment in the indictment that defendants did not turn over, convey, or deliver any lot, together with a house completely furnished thereon, free and clear of all incumbrances; but the indictment does aver that defendants were not the owners of said tract and were not at any time able to turn over, convey, or deliver any lot, together with a house completely furnished. It may be conceded that a direct allegation to this effect would have been more in accord with technical requirements, but what was intended to be charged in this connection is perfectly plain from the language in fact used, and no person of common understanding could fail to understand that it was substantially charged, by necessary inference at least, that defendants did not turn over, convey, or deliver any lot, together with a house completely furnished thereon, free and clear of all incumbrances. People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 P. 521. In People v. Flowers, 54 Cal. App. 214, 216, 201 P. 468, where the allegations in the information were similar to those contained in the indictment in the instant case, and counsel for defendant had urged that no causal connection was shown between the alleged false pretenses and the effect attributed to them, the court said:

"The information presented in this case is not deficient in the respect suggested. It is plain enough in its charging part to enable a person of ordinary understanding to comprehend that the defendant, by pretending to be the owner of property, procured another to deliver to him money and merchandise in exchange for an interest therein. It is clearer in its statement of the facts constituting the alleged offense than was the information considered in the case of People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 P. 521, which the Supreme Court sustained as against the precise contention that is now advanced."

[2] The crime of obtaining money by false pretenses is complete when, by means of such false pretenses, the fraud thereby intended is consummated by obtaining possession of the property sought. In the case at bar the crime was consummated when the money of the complaining witness was obtained, when she was induced to part with it by reason of the false representations of defendants that they were the owners of the property. In People v. Bryant, 119 Cal. 595, it is said, at page 597, 51 P. 960, 961:

"Section 532 of the Penal Code provides: 'Every person who knowingly and designedly, by false or fraudulent representations or pretenses, defrauds any other person of money or property * * * is punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as for larceny of the money or property so obtained.' It is contended in support of the demurrer to the indictment that an offense against this provision of the section is not committed unless it appears that the person to whom the representations were made has been deprived of his property by reason of the fraud committed against him; that as the fraudulent representations charged in this indictment related solely to the property described in the mortgage, and as the mortgage is only a security for the payment of the promissory note, and as it is not charged that the maker of the note is unable to pay the same, or that it has not been paid, the indictment fails to show that she has been defrauded of any of her property. We cannot concur in this construction of the statute. If a person is induced to part with his property by reason of fraudulent pretenses and misrepresentations, he is thereby defrauded of the property so parted with, even though he may eventually make himself whole in some mode not then contemplated. It is not necessary to show that the property has been absolutely lost to him in order to sustain the charge. He is defrauded of his property when he is induced to part with it by reason of the false and fraudulent pretenses and representations, and the offense is complete when by means of such false pretenses the fraud thereby intended is consummated by obtaining possession of the property sought."

In support of their contention that the demurrers should have been sustained for the reason that the indictment fails to allege facts showing the complaining witnesses were defrauded in that they did not receive just what it was agreed they were to receive, appellants cite the case of People v. Bliss, 47 Cal. App. 503, 190 P. 1046. That case is to be distinguished from the instant case in that in that case it was not alleged that the defendants' representations as to ownership were false.

[3, 4] Appellants further urge in support of the demurrers that the indictment sets forth the performance of an act in the future by the defendants, to wit, the conveyance and the building of a house. It is settled that the representations must be of a present or past fact, not the mere expression of opinion or a representation of an act to be performed in the future, or a mere promise to pay or perform some act. A representation of a present or past fact is within the statute, however, even though it may be accompanied by a promise, as a concurrent promise does not overcome the force of the pretense. 12 Cal. Jur. 453; People v. Bowman, 24 Cal. App. 781, 142 P. 495; People v. Green, 22 Cal. App. 45, 133 P. 334. In the present case, the indictment charges a false representation of an existing fact, to wit, ownership of the lot, accompanied by a promise, to wit, to convey and deliver a furnished house and the lot.

[5] Appellants further assert that the indictment does not state when the promises were to be performed. The indictment contains the following allegation:

"That, if the said Mrs. H. L. Dunning would pay to the said defendants L. M. Moore and F. M. Lynch the sum of $1,366.67, by reason of said defendants' ownership of said tract, free and clear of all incumbrances, and of said forests and sawmills and of said furniture factory and of said warehouse, the said defendants L. M. Moore and F. M. Lynch were then and there in a position to and would turn over, convey, and deliver to the said Mrs. H. L. Dunning a certain lot in said tract, together with a house completely furnished thereon, all free and clear of all incumbrances."

[6, 7] The only meaning to be gathered from the above allegation is that defendants, upon the payment of the sum of $1,366.67, would then and there convey and deliver said lot, together with a house completely furnished thereon, free and clear of all incumbrances. Appellants further insist that, since the indictment alleged that the money was to be delivered as part payment, it cannot be inferred that the title was to be immediately conveyed. We see no difficulty in this objection. The indictment avers that the defendants agreed to convey, free and clear of all incumbrances. If there was any balance remaining on the purchase price, the property could be conveyed free and clear of all incumbrances, subject to a purchase-money mortgage to secure the payment of the balance of the purchase price when due. Appellants state that there is no averment in the indictment that the representations were false or untrue at the time they were made. The indictment contains this allegation:

"That, in truth and in fact, the said pretenses and representations so made as aforesaid by the said defendants L. M. Moore and F. M. Lynch, and each of them, were in all respects utterly false, fraudulent, and untrue, and, in truth and in fact, the said defendants L. M. Moore and F. M. Lynch then and there well knew said pretenses and representations, and each of them so made by them, as aforesaid, to the said Mrs.

H. L. Dunning, to be utterly false, fraudulent, and untrue at the time of making the same."

We believe the foregoing to be a sufficient allegation that the representations were false and untrue at the time they were made. We conclude that the demurrers were properly overruled.

[8] Appellants contend that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdicts and judgments thereupon. It appears from an examination of the record that many representations were made by agents. In People v. Green, 22 Cal. App. 45, 50, 133 P. 334, 336, it is said:

"Before one can be convicted of a crime by reason of the acts of his agent a clear case must be shown. The civil doctrine that a principal is bound by the acts of his agent within the scope of the agent's authority has no application to criminal law. 1 McLain on Criminal Law, § 188. While false pretenses may be made to an agent of the person defrauded, yet when made by an agent they must be directly authorized or consented to in order to hold the principal, for authority to do a criminal act will not be presumed. 1 McLain on Criminal Law, § 683."

The record discloses the fact that in some instances the false representations were made directly by the defendants, while in many other cases the jury were justified in finding that the false representations were directly authorized or consented to by the defendants. Appellant Moore testified that some of the sales agents were Rust, Fullerton, Walt, and McAlpine. Several of the witnesses testified that Moore told them that he and Lynch owned the property, that the title was good and the property clear. Many similar statements were made by the aforementioned agents in Moore's presence. Green, the complaining witness of count 8 of the indictment, testified that he told Moore that McAlpine had told him the tract was absolutely free of all debts, and that he asked Moore if that was right, and Moore said:

"I verify everything that they say; they are my right-hand men; they are special men; they are right on the ground; I can't do business without them."

Some of the complaining witnesses testified that defendant Lynch stated that he owned the property and that the title was clear. Other witnesses and purchasers testified to the same effect. Rust, a salesman, testified that Lynch told him he bought the property and that it was free and clear. We believe the evidence to be amply sufficient to justify the jury in finding not only that the false representations were consented to and authorized by both defendants, but that in many cases such representations were directly made by the defendants.

[9-11] Appellant Lynch attempts to justify the defendants by arguing as to their good faith in attempting to clear the title and in offering lots in another tract to the complaining witnesses. These are not matters of absolute defense to a charge of obtaining money by false pretenses. The crime consisted in the false statements that defendants owned the property and would convey the same free and clear of all incumbrances, thereby obtaining the money of the complaining witnesses. People v. Wieger, 100 Cal. 352, 34 P. 826. The question of fraudulent intent is with the jury and is to be determined from all the circumstances of the case. People v. Bowman, 24 Cal. App. 781, 142 P. 495. If a person is induced to part with his property by reason of false pretenses and misrepresentations, he is thereby defrauded of the property so parted with, even though he may eventually make himself whole in some mode not then contemplated. People v. Bryant, supra.

There being no prejudicial error, it is ordered that the judgments and the orders denying motions for new trials be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

82 Cal. App. 618

PEOPLE v. MOCK MING FAT et al.★
(Cr. 1459.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 30, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 27, 1927.

1. Assault and battery §96(8)—In prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, defendants were entitled to instruction on assault with deadly weapon, notwithstanding jury resolved issue of self-defense against defendants (Pen. Code, § 1159; Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 1).

In prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, defendants held entitled to requested instruction on assault with deadly weapon under Pen. Code, § 1159, where there was evidence upon which conviction of lesser offense might be based, notwithstanding fact that jury resolved issue of self-defense against defendants, and notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 1, providing that deliberate commission of unlawful act for purpose of injuring another raises conclusive presumption that act was done with malicious and guilty intent.

2. Criminal law §24—Law presumes that act, if knowingly done, was done with criminal intent only when intent is not made affirmative element of crime (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 1).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 1, providing that deliberate commission of unlawful act for purpose of injuring another raises conclusive presumption that such act was done with malicious and guilty intent, it is only when intent is not made affirmative element of crime that law presumes that act, if knowingly done, was done with criminal intent.

3. Criminal law § 830—Court was not justified in refusing requested instruction on account of form (Pen. Code, §§ 1093, 1127).

In prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, court was not justified, under Pen. Code, §§ 1093, 1127, in refusing instruction requested on assault with deadly weapon, to which defendants were entitled under evidence, because requested instruction referred to complaining witness by mistake instead of defendants, but it was trial court's duty to modify requested instruction.

4. Criminal law § 1186(4)—Refusal of instruction on assault with deadly weapon, in prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, held not harmless (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, where court refused instruction on assault with deadly weapon, to which defendants were entitled under evidence, Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting setting aside judgment unless error has resulted in miscarriage of justice, did not justify affirmance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Mock Ming Fat and others were convicted of assault with intent to commit murder, and they appeal. Reversed and remanded.

W. P. Butcher, Jr., of Santa Barbara, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Appellants were found guilty of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder.

This case presents but a single question on appeal. Appellants assign as error the refusal of the trial court to give the following instruction:

"If you believe from the evidence that defendants, or any of them, did not commit an assault upon the person of Yee Moon with a deadly weapon, with intent to commit murder, and if you believe from the evidence that defendants, or any of them, did commit an assault upon Yee Moon with a deadly weapon without the intent to commit murder, then it is your duty to find the said Yee Moon guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon."

It appears from the evidence that on the 19th day of August, 1926, a "state of war" existed between certain Chinese tongs, the Hop Sing Tong and Bing Kong Tong; that Yee Moon, the complaining witness, knowing that the defendants were driving an automobile through Santa Barbara, armed himself with a revolver, left the headquarters of the Hop Sing Tong in said city, and proceeded in his automobile to a point in the streets of Santa Barbara, where shooting commenced between the defendants and the prosecuting witness. The testimony is in conflict as to whether the defendants or the prosecuting witness first started shooting. The defense was that the defendants fired in self-defense and to protect themselves. One of the defendants, Quang Shick, testified that in firing at the complaining witness he did not intend to kill him. The jury resolved the issue of self-defense in favor of the prosecution. Defendants contend that the trial court erred prejudicially in refusing to give the requested instruction, in that the evidence of the defendants, if believed by the jury, would justify a verdict of an assault with a deadly weapon, that being an offense necessarily included within the charge of an assault with intent to commit murder.

[1, 2] We believe the position of defendants to be correct. Defendants were entitled to the requested instruction where there was evidence upon which a conviction of the lesser offense might be based. Section 1159 of the Penal Code provides:

"The jury may find the defendant guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged, or of an attempt to commit the offense."

The charge of assault with a deadly weapon is necessarily included within the charge of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. The suggestion of the respondent that the refusal of the court to give the requested instruction was proper, because the crime was the greater one or none at all, is without merit, since here an assault with a deadly weapon is directly charged, and, if no assault with a deadly weapon was made, the higher offense could not be committed. People v. Demasters, 105 Cal. 670, 39 P. 35. And this is true, notwithstanding the fact that the jury resolved the issue of self-defense against the defendants. It was possible for the jury not to accept the plea of self-defense, and yet to believe the testimony of Quang Shick that he fired without intent to hit the complaining witness. Under such circumstances the jury had no opportunity to bring in a verdict of assault with a deadly weapon, as it might have done had the case been submitted under proper instructions. People v. Maciel, 71 Cal. App. 213, 234 P. 877. In People v. Griffith, 146 Cal. 339, 80 P. 68, it was held that an instruction such as requested in the instant case was properly given. Neither are these views overcome by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the effect that the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another raises a conclusive presumption that such act was done with a malicious and guilty intent. In Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 116 P. 530, it was held that, before this presumption arises, the jury has to find as to facts (1) the commission of an unlawful act; (2) that its commission was deliberate; and (3) that it was committed with the deliberate purpose of injuring another. In People v. Maciel, supra, the trial court instructed the jury that—"When the act committed by the accused is of itself an unlawful act, the law, in the first instance, presumes the criminal intent, and the burden of proof falls upon the defendant to show the absence of criminal intent."

But it was held that the giving of this instruction was prejudicial, for the reason that the instruction was broad enough to include the presumption that defendant not only intended to discharge his pistol, but that he discharged it with the specific intent to commit murder, and that the burden was on him to show the absence of such specific intent. It is only when the intent is not made an affirmative element of the crime that the law presumes that the act, if knowingly done, was done with criminal intent. When specific intent is an element of the offense, it presents a question of fact which must be proved like any other fact in the case. People v. Maciel, supra.

[3] At the time of oral argument, our attention was called to a clerical error in the above instruction, in that the instruction charges the jury under the circumstances given "to find the said Yee Moon guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon." Yee Moon was the prosecuting witness, and the name of Mock Ming Fat, the defendant, should have been used instead of Yee Moon. As already stated, it is evident that this error was purely clerical. If the instruction had been given as requested, we do not see how the jury could have failed to understand that the instruction applied only to the defendant Mock Ming Fat, who was on trial, and not to Yee Moon, the prosecuting witness. In fact, the error was not discovered by counsel for respondent at the time of the filing of the original briefs, and was first mentioned at the time of oral argument. Respondent cites the case of People v. Smith (Cal. App.) 251 P. 958, as authority for the rule that, if any part of a single instruction should not have been given, the action of the court in refusing the whole will be affirmed. In that case there was no testimony to support the requested instruction. In the case at bar there was testimony that the shots were fired without intent to kill. Moreover, in the instant case the attention of the trial court was called to the issue of a lesser or included offense by the subject-matter of the requested instruction and by the voir dire examination of jurors. Under such circumstances it was the duty of the trial court to modify the requested instruction. When a man's liberty is at stake, and with such a condition of evidence as is here exhibited, the court is not justified in refusing to instruct at all upon the paramount and vital question in the case simply because a particular form of instruction asked by counsel may be refused. People v. Tapia, 131 Cal.

653, 63 P. 1001; People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 P. 127. Sections 1093 and 1127 of the Penal Code provide that the court, in charging a jury, must state to them "all matters of law necessary for their information," and must charge "on any points pertinent to the issue, if requested by either party." In the present case the defendants certainly requested an instruction on a point clearly and paramountly "pertinent to the issue"; and, considering the peculiar circumstances of the case, we do not think the court was justified in ignoring the point entirely on account of the form in which the requested instruction was made. People v. Tapia, supra. In People v. Demasters, supra, an instruction was requested orally after the argument had been concluded, yet it was held error to refuse the instruction; it being one usually given by courts of their own motion. In the present case the requested instruction was submitted in writing before the argument of counsel, and the nature of the instruction was one usually given by the courts of their own motion. In State v. Hyams, 64 Utah, 285, 230 P. 349, it is said:

"* * * Courts, we think, without exception, have held that, where the accused is charged with a greater offense, he is nevertheless entitled to an instruction that the jury may convict him of a lesser offense if included within the greater; that is, he may be found guilty of simple assault, or assault and battery, unless the evidence is of such character as will necessarily require a finding that the greater offense was committed by him. * * *"

In Watkins v. State (Okl. Cr. App.) 218 P. 895, where the charge was assault with intent to kill, it was held that an instruction as to assault with a deadly weapon without intent to kill should have been given; the court saying:

"Where the evidence raises an issue as to different degrees of a crime or of an included offense, all of the issues so raised should be submitted to the jury."

To the same effect is Windle v. State, 102 Ohio St. 439, 132 N. E. 22.

Respondent claims that the instruction as requested would eliminate from the jury the question as to whether the assault was justified or excusable. We cannot agree with this contention, as the court otherwise instructed the jury fully on self-defense. Had the requested instruction been given, the jury could not have been misled by the instructions taken as a whole.

[4] For the reasons stated, we cannot say, after a consideration of the entire evidence, that, if the instruction had been given as requested, the jury would have returned a verdict that the defendants were guilty of an assault with intent to commit murder rather than an assault with a deadly weapon. Therefore the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution do not justify an affirmance in this case.

It is ordered that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

32 Cal. App. 411

PEOPLE v. JOHNSON. (Cr. 962.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 18, 1927.

1. Indictment and information $\S$ 144—Jury cannot pass upon motion, unsupported by evidence, to dismiss for former jeopardy.

Even though motion to dismiss on ground defendant had been once in jeopardy be treated as a plea of former jeopardy, the jury cannot pass upon issues raised thereby without evidence to support plea.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 199—Offense of practicing medicine without license is not included in charge of abortion as regards plea of former jeopardy (Pen. Code, $\S$ 654).

As regards plea of former jeopardy, offense of practicing medicine without a license is not included in a charge of crime of abortion; Pen. Code, $\S$ 654, being unavailable.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 196—That evidence is same in both cases, and that proof in former case may warrant conviction of latter, does not establish plea of jeopardy.

That evidence may have been same in prosecution for procuring an abortion and for practicing medicine without a license, and that proof in former case may have been sufficient to warrant a conviction in the latter, does not necessarily establish the claim that defendant has been once in jeopardy or had been acquitted of the second charge.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 196—Former prosecution is not bar to conviction on another charge, if evidence to warrant conviction upon latter charge is insufficient without additional proof.

An acquittal or a conviction upon one charge is not a bar to a conviction upon another, if the evidence required to support the former is not sufficient to warrant a conviction upon the latter without proof of any additional fact.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 196—As regards plea of former jeopardy, proof of practicing without license does not tend to prove crime of abortion.

As regards plea of former jeopardy, alleged fact that defendant committed offense of practicing medicine without license does not tend to prove that he committed crime of abortion.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

G. D. Johnson was convicted of practicing medicine without a license, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Eicke & Warren, of Stockton, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the offense of practicing medicine without a license. This appeal is from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

But one ground is urged for a reversal. It is stated by counsel for appellant as follows:

"Two indictments were found against appellant by the same grand jury, upon the same date, based upon the testimony of the same witnesses, and upon identically the same facts and circumstances. In other words, the prosecution carved out of the same facts, acts, and circumstances two offenses; the first charge being that of abortion, and the second, practicing medicine without a license. The appellant was tried upon the charge of abortion and acquitted, and was thereby placed once in jeopardy of the charge of practicing medicine without a license; said charge being based upon the same alleged facts, acts and circumstances."

The defendant did not plead a former acquittal or that he had been once in jeopardy. After the jury had been selected, and after the first witness for the prosecution had been sworn, counsel for defendant requested the court to excuse the jury temporarily in order that he might present a motion during their absence. Upon the retirement of the jury, and during their absence, counsel for defendant moved the court "for a dismissal of this action against the defendant on the ground he has been once in jeopardy, and in that matter we ask leave to present the indictment in the former trial of People v. Johnson, number 4325, wherein the defendant herein was charged with the crime of abortion." Counsel thereupon introduced in evidence the record in the case referred to, including the evidence taken at the trial thereof. The court denied the motion. Thereupon the jury returned into court, and the trial of this case proceeded.

[1, 2] The record of the trial in case No. 4325 was not introduced in evidence at any time during the trial before the jury herein. Even if the motion to dismiss be treated as a plea of a former acquittal or that the defendant had been once in jeopardy, it is clear that the jury could not pass upon the issue raised thereby without evidence to support the plea. It is also perfectly clear that the offense of practicing medicine without a license is not included in a charge of the crime of abortion, but the two offenses are unrelated to each other. Appellant relies on section 654 of the Penal Code, which provides:

"An act or omission which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of this code may be punished under either of such provisions, but in no case can it be punished under more than one."

[3-5] Appellant has confused the criminal act referred to in the section cited with the evidentiary facts tending to prove such act. The fact that the evidence may have been the same in both cases and that the proof in the former case may have been sufficient to warrant a conviction in the latter does not necessarily establish the claim that the defendant had been once in jeopardy or had been acquitted of the second charge. An acquittal or a conviction upon one charge is not a bar to a conviction upon another, if the evidence required to support the former is not sufficient to warrant a conviction upon the latter without proof of any additional fact. Ebeling v. Morgan, 237 U. S. 625, 35 S. Ct. 710, 59 L. Ed. 1151. "The true test is: * * * Could the defendant have been convicted upon the first indictment upon proof of the facts, not as brought forward in evidence, but as alleged in the record of the second." State v. Nash, 86 N. C. 650, 41 Am. Rep. 472; People v. Brannon, 70 Cal. App. 225, 233 P. 88; People v. Mehra, 73 Cal. App. 162, 238 P. 802. The alleged fact that the defendant committed the offense of practicing medicine without a license does not even tend to show that he committed the crime of abortion.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

83 Cal. App. 16

UNG v. STEIN et al. (Civ. 4335.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 10, 1927.

Landlord and tenant §139(2)—Lessee can give against lessor no right of removal of crop beyond time limited in agreement terminating tenancy.

Tenancy from month to month having been terminated by agreement of the parties as of the middle of a month, with right given to lessee till the 1st of the following month to remove the crop, any subsequent attempt of lessee in selling the crop to give the buyer right of removal beyond the time so limited was ineffectual against the lessor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action for injunction and conversion by William Ung against M. H. Stein and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant E. S. Flansberg appeals. Reversed.

Frank R. Carrell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant M. H. Stein had a lease upon 9 or 9½ acres of land near Los Angeles, belonging to the defendant and appellant E. S. Flansberg, which lease expired by limitation of time on December 1, 1921. Upon the acreage so leased the lessee, prior to the last-named date, had raised a crop of lettuce which is the subject-matter of the present action. Stein made arrangements with Flansberg to continue the lease from month to month until the lettuce was harvested upon payment of a monthly rental of $50. About the middle of January, 1922, a severe frost occurred and a considerable portion of the lettuce was frozen. On the 20th of that month Stein, being apparently of the opinion that the lettuce was worthless and having paid no rental for December, 1921, or January, 1922, went to the appellant Flansberg and told him that the lettuce was worthless, that he wanted "to throw it back onto" Flansberg, and that he would pay no more rent for the property. He and the appellant had a settlement by which he paid Flansberg $75 rental or up to January 15, 1922, and appellant then told Stein that if he could realize anything out of the lettuce he could have a few days or until February 1, 1922, to remove it from the property; that after February 1, 1922, he (the appellant) wanted to seed the land to alfalfa. On January 23 Stein sold the lettuce on this particular piece of property, together with lettuce growing on additional property, amounting in all to 27 acres, for the sum of $50, to the plaintiff, and executed a memorandum which read: "I hereby agree to sell 27 acres of Lett to Wm. Ung and aloud 30 days to take crope off the land." Stein and another witness for him testified that at the time Stein signed the memorandum the words, "and aloud 30 days to take crope off the land," were not written thereon. Stein also testified that he told plaintiff that he must remove the lettuce by February 1, 1922, or make arrangements with the owner of the property for the payment of additional rental. Ung harvested for two or three days in the latter part of January, and then, on account of rain, according to his testimony, which is denied by other witnesses, ceased cutting. On February 15 Flansberg sold what lettuce was left on his property to the defendant Caramelli for the sum of $30, and about February 17 refused to permit the plaintiff to proceed further with the harvesting or to take any of the lettuce. Whereupon plaintiff brought the present action for injunction and for conversion, resulting in a judgment in plaintiff's favor in the sum of $500, interest, and costs. From this judgment the defendant Flansberg prosecutes this appeal and argues that the testimony is insufficient to support the finding of conversion by Flansberg.

The respondent has filed no brief. From a reading of the transcript we add the additional statement that it appears that after Caramelli purchased the lettuce on the land he rented the teams of the defendant Stein and secured the assistance of the driver to assist him in harvesting, which gives rise to the suspicion that Stein's action and perhaps Flansberg's sale of the crop to Caramelli was not in good faith. But it can only amount to a suspicion. There is nothing to justify the inference that so far as the tenancy is concerned between Stein and Flansberg it was not just exactly as testified to by these witnesses, except the clause, "and aloud 30 days to take crops off the land," but this construction is absolutely at variance with the undisputed testimony that the sale was made at a price equal to the monthly rental which would be entailed by a 30 days' delay, and does not fit in with the undisputed fact that the tenancy had been terminated by agreement as of January 15, 1922, with the right to remove the crop limited to February 1, 1922. It must also be borne in mind that the appellant here was not a party to the agreement or memorandum and could not be bound thereby. So far as he was concerned, final settlement had been made with Stein on January 20, and no agreement made by Stein could alter or affect that agreement. It is not necessary to discuss the law relative to the right of a tenant to remove growing crops or when that right terminates, for the reason that the rights here were fixed and determined by the agreement of January 20, and the tenant could sell to the plaintiff nothing more than he had.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; MURPHEY, Justice pro tem.

BRUNSKI v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.*
(Civ. 5753.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 7, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court July 5, 1927.

1. Master and servant $\S$ 417(1)—Law requiring petition for rehearing to authorize review of compensation proceedings held inapplicable to decisions on rehearing (Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, $\S$ 64 [a] [b]).

Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 873) $\S$ 64 (a) (b), to effect that appellate court may not review proceedings or order of Industrial Accident Commission in absence of petition for rehearing, has no application to decisions on rehearing.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 416—Attack for fraud on Industrial Accident Commission's order approving settlement held unauthorized, in absence of application for rehearing within 20 days (St. 1917, pp. 850, 874, 875, $\S$ 20 [d], $\S$ 65 [a], subd. 2, $\S$ 66 [a], subd. 2, St. 1913, p. 293, $\S$ 25 [d]).

Under St. 1917, pp. 874, 875, $\S$ 65 (a), subd. 2, $\S$ 66 (a), subd. 2, attack on ground of fraud on order of Industrial Accident Commission approving compromise held unauthorized, where application for rehearing was not filed within 20 days after service of such order; St. 1917, p. 850, $\S$ 20 (d), and St. 1913, p. 293, $\S$ 25 (d), relating to continuing jurisdiction of Industrial Commission over its awards, being dependent on occurrence of new facts and inapplicable.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Anton Brunski against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission setting aside an order approving a compromise settlement, claimant brings certiorari. Order annulled.

Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

John J. Briare, of San Francisco, for respondent Pacific Gas & Electric Co.

STURTEVANT, J. [1] The petitioner applied to the Industrial Accident Commission to adjust his claim for damages sustained through an injury arising during his employment by, and growing out of his employment by, the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. After a hearing had the Commission rendered a decision on October 22, 1925. The Gas Company applied for and was granted a rehearing on December 4, 1925. Thereafter further evidence was taken. Thereafter the employee and the employer entered into a written agreement of settlement and release compromising the petitioner's claim in the sum of $1,500. That compromise "was approved by the Industrial Accident Commission on December 16, 1925. Both parties concede it became final upon the expiration of 20 days, to wit, on January 5, 1926, no petition for rehearing having been filed in the meantime. On January 16, 1926, defendant filed a purported petition for rehearing asking for a rehearing of the proceeding and claiming that the original award of October 22, 1925, and the order approving the settlement agreement were procured by the fraud of Brunski. On January 28, 1926, the Commission entered an order (designating defendant's petition as a petition to set aside the order approving settlement) suspending the order of December 16, 1925, and setting the case for further hearing." On April 19, 1926, the Commission filed a decision against the petitioner, but made no finding on the issue of fraud. Thereafter the petitioner applied for a rehearing, which was granted May, 25, 1926. Thereafter, on October 20, 1926, the Commission filed a decision "setting aside and annulling the order approving the settlement agreement, finding that said order was procured by extrinsic fraud and providing that the case should be submitted on rehearing on the record unless good cause be shown to the contrary in writing within 20 days." It should be noted that the Commission merely entered an order of approval of the compromise agreement. It did not adopt the agreement and, using it as a basis, make an award thereon. Section 27, subd. (c), c. 586, Stats. 1917. The petitioner did not apply for a rehearing, but filed in this court an application for a writ of review. The respondent makes a preliminary objection, saying:

"No petition for rehearing was ever filed by petitioner following the issuance of this final order of October 20, 1926, and under the provisions of section 64(a) and 64(b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act this court has no power to review the proceedings or the order of October 20, 1926, made by the Commission."

The petitioner concedes the general scope of that rule, but contends that the rule does not apply to decisions on rehearing. Harlan v. Industrial Acc. Com., 194 Cal. 352, 228 P. 654; Compensation Act, § 67a. The authorities so cited by the petitioner certainly sustain his contention.

When the order was made by the Commission December 16, 1925, approving the compromise, and no petition for a rehearing was filed, this petitioner contends that the Commission lost jurisdiction to hear the application which was made on January 16, 1926, and which was the attack alleging fraud on the part of Brunski. The respondents contend that their jurisdiction was continuing, and they cite and rely on Statutes of 1917, p. 831, § 20, subd. (d). The power vested in the Commission by that portion of the statute, it has been held, is the power to make an examination into "the occurrence of new facts arising after the date of its original decision." Georgia C. Co. v. Industrial Accident Com., 177 Cal. 289, 293, 294, 170 P. 625. But the respondents reply that case was based on the statute as it formerly stood. Stats. 1913, p. 279, § 25d. That is a distinction without a difference so far as the point under discussion is concerned. The section of the statute as amended is:

"(d) The Commission shall have continuing jurisdiction over all its orders, decisions and awards made and entered under the provisions of sections six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act and may at any time, upon notice, and after opportunity to be heard is given to the parties in interest, rescind, alter or amend any such order, decision or award made by it upon good cause appearing therefor, such power including the right to review, grant or regrant, diminish, increase or terminate, within the limits prescribed by this act, any compensation awarded, upon the grounds that the disability of the person in whose favor such award was made has either recurred, increased, diminished or terminated; provided, that no award of compensation shall be rescinded, altered or amended after two hundred forty-five weeks from the date of the injury. Any order, decision or award rescinding, altering or amending a prior order, decision or award shall have the same effect as is herein provided for original orders, decisions or awards."

The insertions and italicized portions included and constituted all of the amendments. The effect of "fraud" is dealt with in sections 82, 83, and 84 of the act of 1913 and in sections 65, 66, and 67 of the act of 1917. It is not mentioned in any of the earlier sections. As stated above, before the amendment, and in the absence of the italicized portion, it was held that the exercise of the continuing jurisdiction depended on "the occurrence of new facts." Now, when we look at the amendments of the statute we see that the amendments deal solely with "the occurrence of new facts"; that is, that the disability has "recurred, increased, diminished, or terminated." It is patent, therefore, that the amendment is not helpful to the respondents in the instant case. The respondents cite many cases from other jurisdictions. They are not helpful. They are based on statutes not identical with our statutes, and in some instances not similar.

[2] It is not controverted but what the Commission may, under certain circumstances, entertain attacks on orders and awards which were procured by fraud. Section 65 (a), subd. 2, and section 66 (a), subd. 2, c. 586, Stats. 1917. But according to the wording of those sections the attacks should be in the form of applications for rehearing and such applications should be filed within 20 days after the service of the order or decision which is being attacked. As the employer did not file its application within 20 days it did not bring itself within the provisions of either of the sections cited. It is unnecessary, therefore, for this court at this time to go into the subject of whether the fraud mentioned in section 65 or section 66 is limited to extrinsic fraud.

For the reasons stated, the order of October 20, 1926, is annulled.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

82 Cal. App. 762

BAKER v. JACKSON et al. JENNINGS v. SAME. BLANCHARD v. SAME.
(Civ. 5644.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 6, 1927.

Venue ⇐66—Affidavit of merits for change of venue need not allege that affiant believes counsel's advice that he has good defense to merits.

Where party has alleged, in affidavit of merits for change of venue, that he has stated all facts to his counsel and has been advised by him that he has a good and substantial defense on merits, affidavit is not defective because it fails to allege that affiant believes advice of his counsel.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Actions by Henry Baker, by James J. Jennings, and by John N. Blanchard and others against J. M. Jackson, doing business under the name of J. M. Jackson & Co., and another to recover money paid for corporate stock. From orders denying motions for change of venue, defendant named appeals. Reversed.

John E. Bennett, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John F. Davis, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued in San Mateo county to recover $650 alleged to have been paid the defendant Jackson for corporate stock. The grounds of the action were that the stock was purchased from Jackson, who was a licensed stockbroker, through fraudulent representations of the assets and liabilities of the corporation by which the stock had been issued. The defendant National Surety Company was joined as the surety on Jackson's bond as a stockbroker.

In due time the defendant Jackson, with the consent of his codefendant, moved for a change of the place of trial to San Francisco, the county of his residence and the county where the surety company maintained its principal place of business in this state. An affidavit of merits was served and filed with the notice of motion, but no counter affidavits were presented by the plaintiff. The motion was denied, and from this order the defendant has appealed on the printed record.

The respondent has not appeared on this appeal other than to stipulate that the cause may be submitted on the transcript, but we are informed that the only ground of opposition to the motion made below was that the affidavit failed to state that the affiant believed the advice of his counsel that he had a good and valid defense to the merits of the action. On this point, the rule is settled that when a party has alleged that he has stated all the facts to his counsel and has been advised by him that he has a good and substantial defense on the merits, the affidavit is not defective because it fails to allege that the affiant believes the advice of his counsel. Watt v. Bradley, 95 Cal. 415, 117, 30 P. 557; 25 Cal. Jur. p. 801, § 32.

In accordance with the stipulation of the parties an order of this court was duly entered on December 8, 1925, consolidating this appeal with the appeals in two similar cases designated by the superior court Nos. 10807 and 10808, and directing that the judgment herein should include an order including each of the other two cases.

In accordance with the foregoing order of this court, the orders appealed from in each of the three cases are reversed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

83 Cal. App. 8

COVINGTON v. LEWIS et al. (Civ. 4236.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 9, 1927.

Sales ⇐479(2)—Conditional seller's demand and action for conversion held election to retake, precluding action for price.

Where conditional seller on buyer's default demanded redelivery, to which buyer assented, and thereupon another converted property and seller sued him and recovered judgment for conversion, there was election to retake, preventing action for the price or that part of it in excess of the judgment for conversion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; T. N. Harvey, Judge.

Action by H. L. Covington against J. D. Lewis and another to foreclose a crop mortgage. From adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Earl D. Finch, of Redlands, for appellant.

W. A. McGinn and Thomas Scott, Jr., both of Bakersfield, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. On July 17, 1920, plaintiff sold to defendant Lewis an automobile for the agreed price of $1,400 on a conditional sales contract containing the following language:

"Should the second party make default in the payment of any of the said several amounts when due, or in the event of the second party's failure to perform any of the conditions and covenants herein contained, or in the event that the second party shall become financially involved or insolvent, or in the event the second party shall fail to pay the cost of said insurance, without notice or demand, all payments herein provided for shall be due and payable at once, or the first party may immediately take possession of said property, whenever and wherever found, without process of law using all necessary force to do so, and all payments previously made by the second party shall be construed to be and applied as compensation for depreciation in value and for the use of said property, and the second party hereby waives and relinquishes all rights to the moneys so paid and all rights against the first party for taking possession of said property."

Contemporaneously therewith defendant Lewis executed a chattel mortgage on certain cotton to secure his note for $1,400, the price of the automobile. The two instruments, of course, must be construed together as constituting one agreement. About March 22, 1921, the defendant Lewis being in default under the contract, which provided that the entire purchase price should be payable December 15, 1920, the plaintiff met Lewis on the road and demanded redelivery of the automobile, to which demand Lewis assented. Thereupon the plaintiff asked the defendant Lewis, who, according to the testimony, had alighted from the machine during the conversation, to drive the car into town. Mrs. Lewis testified that after they reached town Covington told her to take it to some little garage, the name of which she could not remember. Mrs. Lewis told plaintiff that she had some eggs to deliver to Nugent and that they would have to go there first, to which plaintiff replied that it was all right. Lewis drove the automobile in front of Nugent's garage. Nugent thereupon asserted a lien for repairs, and, according to some of the testimony, had one of his helpers drive the car into his garage. Shortly thereafter plaintiff filed action against Nugent and Lewis to recover possession of the automobile or its value, the exact nature of the action being uncertain, and at the same time commenced this action to foreclose the crop mortgage. However, the uncertainty of the exact nature of the action is not important, because the maintenance of either action involved as a prerequisite the right of immediate possession. In the last-named action the respondent bank was made a party because of a lien claimed by it on the cotton. The action against Nugent and the defendant Lewis was first tried, in which it was found that Lewis had no interest in the automobile; that Nugent had converted the automobile to his own use; and judgment was rendered for plaintiff against Nugent in the sum of $500, the value of the automobile as found by the court. In the present action, in which the findings in the former action were introduced, the court found that the plaintiff had exercised the option given to him by the contract on March 22, 1921, and ordered judgment to be entered for defendants. From this judgment plaintiff has appealed.

The question presented is whether or not the assent of the defendant Lewis to the demand for redelivery and his subsequent action with respect thereto, plus the action against Nugent, amounts to an election under the contract such as to defeat the present action. We think it does. The law is well established in this state, where we have followed the Massachusetts rule, that in those cases in which the seller under a conditional sales contract is given the option to retake possession or sue for the entire purchase price, he must elect which of the remedies he will pursue. Parke, etc., Co. v. White River L. Co., 101 Cal. 41, 35 P. 442; Silverstin v. Kohler and Chase, 181 Cal. 53, 183 P. 451, 9 A. L. R. 1177; Holt Mfg. Co. v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 356, 42 P. 435; and Muncy v. Brain, 158 Cal. 300, 110 P. 945. Assuming that the finding of the court that Covington took possession of the automobile from Lewis is without support, yet if the judgment is otherwise supported and appellant's action amounted to an election, the error is not fatal.

Plaintiff recognizes this rule and argues that by reason of the fact that he did not actually recover possession from Nugent that he is entitled to the difference between the amount of the judgment against Nugent and the selling price. There seems to be equity in this assertion, but the court has found from sufficient evidence that plaintiff exercised his option on March 22, 1921; that on March 23, 1921, Nugent converted the automobile, which was of the value of $500. Presumably the value fixed by the court was its actual value. If so, plaintiff's loss is not as great as would first appear. And, of course, plaintiff could not have maintained his action against Nugent unless he were entitled to possession (Hilmer v. Hills, 138 Cal. 134, 70 P. 1080; Suttori v. Peckham, 48 Cal. App. 88, 191 P. 960; and Carvell v. Weaver, 54 Cal. App. 734, 202 P. 897), and while he was entitled to possession upon default, an action founded upon that right was tantamount to an election. There are instances where the rule is not applicable, such, for example, as where an action is commenced for the installments as they fall due, which does not preclude the seller from subsequent repossession for default occurring thereafter (Silverstin v. Kohler and Chase, supra), or in those cases where the contract constitutes a lease and provides for redelivery to the seller on a day certain, with option thereafter to the lessee to purchase (Muncy v. Brain, supra; Adams v. Anthony, 178 Cal. 158, 172 P. 593), or in a case where the vendor retains a lien under section 3049 of the Civil Code with the contractual right to retake possession and enforce the lien (Matteson v. Equitable Min. & Mill. Co., 143 Cal. 436, 77 P. 144). None of these cases assist the plaintiff in this action. He is governed by his contract and cannot bring himself outside the application of the rule.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

82 Cal. App. 710

MAHANA et al. v. LOS ANGELES ENGINEERING & MFG. CO. (Civ. 4469.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 4, 1927.

Rehearing Denied June 3, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 30, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1169(1)—That testimony and exhibits made it impossible for judge to properly decide case after 10 months' delay is not ground of appeal or reversal.

Where case was taken under advisement March 21, 1922, and findings were signed January 5, 1923, that the mass of testimony, pleadings, and exhibits made it impossible for the judge to properly decide the case and give it deserved consideration after such delay is not ground of appeal or reversal.

2. Evidence $\S$ 415—Where contracts for flashers pertained to single transaction, admitting evidence to prove, but not vary, them held not error (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427).

Where contracts for constructing model of sign flasher, for manufacturing 1,000 flashers, and for making tools therefor, pertained to a single transaction, and where defendants' liability for moneys paid on contract for manufacture of flashers was pleaded under separate counts, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 427, admitting evidence to sustain allegations and provisions of contracts for manufacturing the model and for making the tools, but not varying them, held not error.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1071(6)—Where evidence did not sustain cross-complaint, alleging modification of contract, failure to find on issue thereof held not reversible error.

In action for moneys paid on contract for manufacture of electric flashers, consideration of which had failed, where there was no evidence to sustain defendants' cross-complaint that the original contract was modified, and if finding had been made it would have been adverse to defendant, failure of trial court to find on issue thereof held not ground for reversal.

4. Sales $\S$ 417—Loss of profits on flashers to be furnished for plaintiffs' trade held not proved by evidence showing plaintiffs had filled contracts.

In action for breach of contract to manufacture electric sign flashers, plaintiffs' alleged loss of profit of $20 each on 300 flashers which they had, with defendant's knowledge, contracted to furnish their trade, held not proved, where evidence showed they had not lost their contracts with the trade, but had filled them by supplying another type of flasher.

5. Sales $\S$ 415—Plaintiffs had burden to prove loss of profits on flashers contracted with defendant's knowledge to be furnished their trade, and amount thereof.

In action for breach of contract to manufacture sign flashers, plaintiffs had burden to prove allegations of loss of profits on flashers which they had, with defendant's knowledge, contracted to furnish their trade, and also amount thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas O. Toland, Judge.

Action by George T. Mahana and others against the Los Angeles Engineering & Manufacturing Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Judgment modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Fred Horowitz, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Duke Stone and Perry F. Backus, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for moneys alleged to have been paid by the latter upon a contract for the manufacture of electric lighting mechanism, the consideration for which the court below found to have wholly failed.

It appears that the defendant corporation undertook to do certain experimental work upon a proposed electric sign flasher, to construct a model, and thereafter make 1,000 flashers in accordance therewith; by the use of certain specified tools and dies, also to be made by defendant. The negotiations and experiments continued from the month of June, 1920, until November 22, 1920, when the parties reduced to writing their final agreement for the manufacture of the instruments in quantities. The testimony tended to show that the plaintiffs contemplated purchasing the state rights of a machine known as the McCash type, but that an officer of the defendant suggested that a better instrument could be developed, which would operate successfully, whereas the original sample under consideration had not been perfected.

On August 16, 1920, the defendant executed a contract to design and construct the sample sign flasher for patent "with improvements on magnetic sign flasher, McCash type, and to furnish model of the same and to apply for patents covering improvements; to make necessary dies and equipment for manufacture of same." On November 22, 1920, the parties made and executed an instrument in writing whereby the defendant agreed to manufacture 1,000 flashers, and in which it was recited that they had on the same date made and executed an agreement that the defendant should manufacture all necessary dies, jigs, and special tools therefor; and at the same time the parties executed an instrument whereby the defendant agreed to manufacture such implements, and in which it was recited that they had on that date made and executed an agreement that the defendant should manufacture for the plaintiffs the 1,000 electric sign flashers. Said instruments when completed were to be delivered in certain specified lots, and at stated intervals, and the plaintiffs agreed to pay therefor at various stipulated periods, at the rate of $12 each.

In the contract providing for the manufacture of the flashers it was agreed that the manufacturer might "use any material or materials suitable for the purpose, the parties of the second part [plaintiffs herein] being interested in securing a flasher as serviceable as, and that will perform as well as, the model"; and "the party of the first part [defendant] guarantees each flasher to be in perfect working order when delivered, * * * and to function properly when operated on proper voltage, current, cycle, and condition as designated on each flasher," and to replace without charge any faulty or defective parts upon 90 days' demand. The manufacturer also agreed to furnish bond for the faithful performance of the contract, which it did, in the sum of $6,000.

Many of the machines were manufactured and delivered, but plaintiffs' witnesses testified that it was impossible to use them, owing to poor materials, imperfect construction, and faulty electrical contact as constructed by the defendant. The parties experimented with various processes and materials without avail. An expert witness for the plaintiffs testified that the flashers were worthless; that representatives of the defendant sought his advice as to what could be done to render the machines serviceable, but that he informed them that he did not know. The plaintiffs ultimately declined to receive further deliveries, and instituted this action by a complaint consisting of two counts, for the sum of $10,405, alleged to have been paid to the defendant, for which they received no consideration, and for $6,000, representing an alleged loss of profit of $20 on each of 300 flashers which the plaintiffs claimed that they had, with full knowledge of the defendant, contracted to furnish to their trade. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and was taken under advisement on March 21, 1922. On January 5, 1923, the trial court signed its findings and judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $16,405, with interest from June 1, 1921, and for costs.

[1] It is persistently argued throughout the appellant's briefs that the "mass of testimony, pleadings, and exhibits made it impossible for the learned judge to properly decide the case, and to give it the consideration and attention that it deserved after such delay." This is not a ground of appeal, nor can we say as a matter of law that such delay was not for the purpose of, or that it failed to facilitate, an exhaustive and careful consideration of the mass of pleadings and evidence with which the trial judge was burdened, in addition to the performance of the regular duties of trial work known to continually occupy our superior courts, and which followed the conclusion of the contest in question. Appellant does not attempt to infer that its case was neglected, nor is our attention called to any theory upon which it might be assumed that an extended consideration of the case could have prejudiced a judicious determination of the issues before the court.

[2] The principal point urged by appellant arises from the fact that the parties provided for the manufacture of the first model, the dies, jigs, and tools, and of the flashers in quantities, by three separate instruments. It is insisted that, while the complaint was based only upon the main contract for the production and delivery of flashers, the court below received in evidence, over the defendant's objection, oral and documentary evidence as to the contract for the manufacture of the model, and of the dies and implements, and awarded judgment accordingly, as though each constituted a component part of a single transaction. It is asserted that this was error, and many of appellant's assignments must stand or fall by the determination of this issue.

The line of demarkation between entire and severable contracts has been definitely drawn in this state, and the case before us differs little from those heretofore reported, which hold that it is a question of interpretation to be determined according to the intention of the parties, upon consideration of all of the circumstances. Los Angeles Gas, etc., Co. v. Amalgamated Oil Co., 156 Cal. 776, 106 P. 55; Goorberg v. Western Assurance Co., 150 Cal. 510, 89 P. 130, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876, 119 Am. St. Rep. 246, 11 Ann. Cas. 801; Sterling v. Gregory, 149 Cal. 117, 85 P. 305; Mitchell v. Samuels, 39 Cal. App. 134, 178 P. 336. While it is true that the written contract of August 16th only provided for the furnishing by defendant of a model flasher, and contained no express guaranty, nevertheless, from the oral testimony which was given and properly received to explain the contract, and from the subsequent written agreements between the parties, it is apparent that the stipulation of the subsequent agreements were within the contemplation of the parties at and prior to August 16th. It must be conceded, therefore, that the experiments, formulation of plans, construction of a model, and manufacture of special dies, jigs, and tools, were all intended to be initiatory steps toward the production of electric sign flashers, and that the manufacture and delivery of the machines received by the respondents was but a direct result of such preliminary preparations for a prospective profitable undertaking. Without the latter the model and the tools would have been worthless, and without them the final product would have been impossible. If, acting upon the suggestion of the defendant corporation, the plaintiffs expended sums of money for experiments, materials, model, and tools to be employed in the production of an appliance which ultimately proved to be inoperative and unmerchantable, though the manufacturer had guaranteed the same "to be in perfect working order when delivered, * * * and to function properly," all moneys so expended toward the contemplated end were a loss, and the consideration failed.

It is not contended that the amount of damages alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiffs embraced other than the amounts actually paid, and profits which they would have earned had the consideration not failed. Hence, since, as we have shown, there was but one transaction, and the alleged liability was pleaded in accordance with the facts, in separate counts, as provided by section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the complaint was not in this respect insufficient, and rulings of the trial court admitting evidence which tended to sustain the terms of such allegations and the provisions of each instrument, but not to vary them, were proper.

[3] By its cross-complaint the defendant alleged that the original contract was modified, and that materials different from those at first deemed most serviceable were substituted by others, but that the trial court erred in failing to find upon that fact. As we have just indicated, the contract provided that the defendant might "use any material or materials suitable for the purpose." It appears that representatives of the defendant consulted with the plaintiffs and their agents regarding ways and means of attempting to produce an instrument that would operate in accordance with the agreement of the parties, and it appears that different materials were used at various times, but it is obvious that this did not constitute a modification of the terms of the contract. We find no evidence to sustain the allegation of the cross-complaint. While it is true that an issue was thereby presented upon which there should have been a finding, in this instance it appears that, if a finding had been made, it would have been adverse to the appellant. Under such circumstances the judgment will not be reversed upon the ground of a lack of such a finding.

[4, 5] It is contended that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs admit that they filled their forfeited contracts with the trade with other and different instruments, the judgment for $6,000 upon the second count of the complaint is not sustained by the evidence. The evidence showed that they did not lose their contracts with the trade, but that they filled them by manufacturing and supplying another type of electric flasher. To make even a prima facie case on this count it would have been necessary for the plaintiffs, not only to have shown the amount of profit which they would have made, had they been able to furnish the article contracted for, but, since another article was substituted and accepted by the plaintiffs' customers, to have further shown what profit, if any, was received therefrom, was requisite, and should obviously have been deducted from the loss otherwise sustained. It may well have been that the plaintiffs gained by the change. The burden of proof was on the plaintiffs to establish their loss and the amount thereof. It was no part of the defendant's duty to produce evidence as to the profit or loss sustained by the plaintiffs upon the sale of the substituted article, any more than upon the same element involved in a failure of the plaintiffs to furnish to their customers the article contracted to be sold. It is the loss sustained on the entire transaction which may be recovered, if a recovery is to be had, and not what would have been the loss had the plaintiffs' customers refused to accept a substitute flasher. The proof as to the damage sustained in this behalf was incomplete. The amount awarded on this count must be deducted from the judgment.

As so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

82 Cal. App. 700

PEOPLE v. BAILEY et al. (Cr. 1417.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 4, 1927.

Rehearing Denied May 27, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 30, 1927.

1. Conspiracy $\S$ 43(6)—Indictment charging conspiracy to steal whisky held not subject to objection that proposed larceny covered whisky in which no property right existed (National Prohibition Act tit. 2, $\S$ 25 [U. S. Comp. St. $\S$ 10138½m]).

Indictment charging defendants with unlawfully conspiring to take, steal, and carry away from one John Shepek whisky worth \$10,000, and that it was personal property of John Shepek, held not subject to objection that proposed larceny covered illegally possessed whisky, and that it consequently had no value, and that no property right existed in it, under National Prohibition Act, tit. 2, $\S$ 25 (U. S. Comp. St. $\S$ 10138½m), and indictment was sufficient.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 422(1)—Where evidence showed conspiracy and that witness was coconspirator, evidence regarding statements made by alleged coconspirator to witness held admissible.

Where evidence had shown existence of conspiracy charged in indictment and that M. was coconspirator with defendants on trial, testimony by M. in regard to statements made over telephone by an alleged coconspirator held admissible.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 423(1)—After conspiracy has been formed and before its consummation, acts or declarations of conspirators in furtherance of conspiracy are admissible.

After a conspiracy has been formed and before its consummation, any act or declaration of either of conspirators in furtherance of conspiracy is admissible.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 419, 420(11)—Where evidence had shown existence of conspiracy charged, evidence of conversation between witness and conspirator's secretary, delegated to hold conversation, held admissible.

Where evidence had shown existence of conspiracy charged in indictment, evidence of alleged conversation, which took place between witness and conspirator's secretary, delegated to hold such conversation, held admissible.

5. Criminal law ⚡810—Instruction covering law affecting general conspiracy and instruction limiting conspiracy to definite object held not conflicting.

Instruction covering law affecting general conspiracy and instruction to effect that intoxicating liquor illegally possessed did not constitute property and was not subject to larceny and that it was not criminal to specifically agree with others to take illegally possessed liquors held not conflicting.

6. Criminal law ⚡742(2)—Where each of witnesses had testified to participation in crime, instruction that witnesses were accomplices held not error.

Instruction, "You are instructed that the witness Calvin Warren and the witness Frank Bailey are accomplices," held not error, where each of said witnesses freely testified to his participation in commission of offense, and there was no conflict in evidence on that point.

7. Criminal law ⚡784(2)—Instruction on distinction between circumstantial and direct evidence held correct.

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of grand larceny, instruction that law makes no distinction between circumstantial evidence and direct evidence in degree of proof required for conviction held not error.

8. Criminal law ⚡511(2)—Evidence as to details connected with overt acts of defendants, with identification of defendant as participator in crime, held sufficient to corroborate accomplice (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit grand larceny, testimony and corroboration of accomplice as to many details connected with overt acts of defendants in connection with commission of offense, together with satisfactory identification of defendant as participator in crime, held to meet requirement of Pen. Code, § 1111, relating to corroborating testimony.

9. Conspiracy ⚡44½—Burden of proving that liquor defendants conspired to take was lawfully acquired, possessed, and used by possessor rested on prosecution (National Prohibition Act, tit. 2, § 33 [U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½t]).

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit grand larceny by taking whisky, burden of proving that liquor was lawfully acquired, possessed, and used by possessor rested on prosecution, under National Prohibition Act, tit. 2, § 33 (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½t).

10. Conspiracy ⚡47—Evidence held to establish lawful ownership of whisky, in prosecution for conspiracy to steal such whisky (National Prohibition Act, tit. 2, § 33 [U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½t]).

Testimony of owner and wife that whisky, which was subject of alleged conspiracy, was owned and possessed as part of stock of liquor owned before National Prohibition Act (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138¼ et seq.) went into effect, and that at all times thereafter whisky was kept and possessed in his own home for his own use and that of his family and for bona fide guests, held to establish lawful ownership of whisky in question, under title 2, § 33 (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½t).

11. Conspiracy ⚡25—"Conspiracy" exists when two or more persons conspire to commit unlawful act or to commit lawful act by unlawful means.

A criminal "conspiracy" exists when two or more persons conspire to commit an unlawful act or to commit a lawful act by unlawful means.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Conspiracy.]

12. Conspiracy ⚡47—Evidence held to warrant conviction of conspiracy to commit grand larceny by taking whisky.

Testimony by owners of whisky that defendants proposed to take whisky by virtue of forged search warrant, and that, after being informed that whisky was prewar, defendants stated that they would have to take it, corroborating accomplice's testimony, held to warrant conviction of conspiracy to commit grand larceny.

13. Criminal law ⚡741(5)—Testimony to effect that witness identified defendant by his walk as one who participated in crime sufficiently corroborated accomplice's testimony to warrant submission of guilt to jury.

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit grand larceny, testimony to effect that three days after offense was committed S. identified defendant by his walk as being one of men who were present at S.'s home at time in question, and who participated in commission of crime, held to sufficiently corroborate accomplice's testimony to warrant submission of defendant's guilt to jury, since man may be identified by his walk, and also because statement, "That is the man," was made in defendant's presence and he made no reply.

14. Criminal law ⚡511(7)—Accomplice's testimony may be corroborated by admission of defendant.

Testimony of accomplice may be corroborated by admission of defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Frank Bailey, Frank J. Warren, and others were convicted of conspiracy to commit grand larceny, and defendants named appeal. Affirmed.

MacDonald & Thompson, of Los Angeles, for appellant Warren.

James E. Fenton, of Los Angeles, for appellant Bailey.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of conspiracy to commit the crime of grand larceny, and from an order denying them and each of them a new trial.

Briefly, the facts appear to be that the defendants with two others agreed among themselves that they would go to a certain place where a considerable quantity of whisky was stored, and, by pretending to the owner of the premises that they were officers engaged in the enforcement of the National Prohibition Act (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½ et seq.), and by virtue of a forged search warrant, take the whisky and convert it to their own use.

The gist of the accusation against the defendants, as set forth in the indictment, is that they did unlawfully conspire " * * * to take, steal, and carry away from one John Shepek, whisky of the value of $10,000, lawful money of the United States. * * * "

The first specification of error, in effect, is that the indictment fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense in that the whisky which was the subject of the proposed larceny in law did not constitute property or anything of value in which the person from whom it was proposed to be taken had any property right.

[1] While it is true that as to whisky illegally possessed the statute (section 8352, Barnes' Fed. Code, 1921 Supp. [U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½m]) provides, in effect, that no property right shall exist therein, and which statute in the case of People v. Spencer, 54 Cal. App. 54, 201 P. 130, has been construed in accordance with the general contention of appellants, nevertheless we think that the language of the indictment herein, to which attention has been directed, sufficiently covers whisky legally possessed. It will be noted that the words of the indictment, in effect, are that the whisky was of the value of $10,000 and the personal property of John Shepek. According to the language of the statute, if the whisky had been illegally possessed by Shepek, it would have had no value, nor would Shepek have had any property right therein. The words of the indictment that the whisky was worth $10,000 and that it was the personal property of John Shepek in effect constituted a contradiction that it was illegally possessed whisky, and that consequently it had no value. It therefore follows that the indictment was sufficient.

[2] It is next specified as error that certain testimony, given by one McDonald on behalf of the people regarding statements made over the telephone by an alleged coconspirator of the defendants, was hearsay and improperly admitted on the trial of the action. The evidence having shown the existence of the conspiracy charged in the indictment and that McDonald was a coconspirator with the defendants on trial, it is well settled that such evidence was admissible. People v. Tomlinson, 102 Cal. 19, 36 P. 506; People v. Bunkers, 2 Cal. App. 197, 84 P. 364, 370.

[3-5] A somewhat similar objection to testimony given by a witness regarding an alleged conversation which took place between the witness and a man delegated by one of the alleged conspirators to hold such conversation is subject to the same rule. Specifically, the only material part of the conversation was as to the location of the place where the whisky was stored.

That after a conspiracy has been formed, and before its consummation, any act or declaration of either of the conspirators in furtherance of the conspiracy is admissible in evidence is so well established as to require no citation of authority therefor. All that occurred, in substance, was that one of the conspirators, in the presence of two of his coconspirators, directed his secretary to inquire of the witness the location of John Shepek's home. The evidence shows that the secretary performed the duty assigned to him and immediately thereafter and within the presence and hearing of the said alleged conspirators reported the desired information thus acquired to his employer. In reason, we can see no valid objection to the evidence.

Appellants complain of alleged prejudicial error in the giving by the court to the jury of two instructions, of which it is contended that each of them is in conflict with the other. The first of such instructions was to the effect that if at all events and regardless of whether the whisky was either legally or illegally possessed by Shepek, or, if without any agreement or understanding among the conspirators regarding the legality or illegality of the possession of the whisky by Shepek, the defendants conspired to steal the whisky, they should be found guilty as charged. The effect of the second instruction was that intoxicating liquor, which was illegally possessed, did not constitute property and was not the subject of larceny, and consequently that it was "not criminal to specifically agree with others to take such illegally possessed liquors." The first instruction covered the law affecting a general conspiracy, and the second limited the conspiracy to a definite object. If the jury found a general conspiracy to have existed among the defendants, it was authorized to find the defendants guilty, but if the jury found that the defendants conspired to steal a certain kind of whisky only, to wit, illegally possessed whisky, the jury was informed that its duty was to acquit the defendants. Appellants fail to point out in what respect either of such instructions conflicts with the other, nor is this court, independent of advice of counsel representing appellants, able to discern the conflict of which general complaint is made.

[6] By appellant Bailey, error is also predicated on the giving by the court of the following instruction to the jury:

"You are instructed that the witness Calvin Warren and the witness Frank Bailey are accomplices."

In the case of People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 436, 119 P. 901, 902 (39 L. R. A. [N. S.] 704) it is said:

"* * * But where the facts are not in dispute, where the acts and conduct of the witness are admitted, it becomes a question of law for the court to say whether or not those acts and facts make the witness an accomplice.
* * *

To the same effect are People v. Truax, 30 Cal. App. 471, 158 P. 510; People v. Howell, 69 Cal. App. 239, 230 P. 991; People v. McDermott (Cal. App.) 243 P. 485.

In view of the fact that each of said witnesses freely testified to his participation in the commission of the offense, and that there is no conflict in the evidence on that point, the court was justified in giving to the jury the instruction of which complaint is made.

[7] Further complaint is made by appellants that the trial court erred in giving to the jury the following instruction:

"* * * There is nothing in the nature of circumstantial evidence that renders it less reliable than the other class of evidence. A man may as well swear falsely to an absolute knowledge of the facts as to a number of facts from which, if true, the facts on which the guilt or innocence depends must inevitably follow.
* * * The law makes no distinction between circumstantial evidence and direct evidence in the degree of proof required for conviction.
* * *

An instruction of practically the same import has been passed upon by the appellate tribunals in each of the following cases: People v. Morrow, 60 Cal. 142; People v. Urquidias, 96 Cal. 239, 31 P. 52; People v. Wilder, 134 Cal. 182, 66 P. 228; People v. Howard, 135 Cal. 266, 67 P. 148; People v. Ung Sing, 171 Cal. 83, 151 P. 1145; People v. Watts, 198 Cal. 797, 247 P. 884; People v. Watts, 198 Cal. 776, 247 P. 884; People v. Simmons, 7 Cal. App. 559, 95 P. 48; People v. Lim Foon, 29 Cal. App. 270, 155 P. 477.

As in none of such cases was it held that the giving of such an instruction was ground for reversal of the judgment, we are constrained to follow the rule therein indicated and to declare that the trial court committed no error in giving to the jury the instruction to which exception is taken herein.

[8] It is next urged by appellant Bailey that the court erred in denying his motion to advise the jury to find him not guilty on the ground that no offense against the laws of the state of California had been made out by the proof presented by the prosecution, and on the further ground that the indictment failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense against the laws of the state of California.

As hereinbefore stated, we are of the opinion that the indictment was sufficient. However, appellant discusses the sufficiency of the corroboration of one of the accomplices to warrant the verdict. All that apparently is required by the provisions of section 1111 of the Penal Code is that the corroborative evidence tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, provided that it must do more than merely show the commission of the offense and the circumstances thereof. But it appears that both Mr. and Mrs. Shepek gave testimony in corroboration of one of the accomplices as to many of the details connected with the overt acts of the defendants in connection with the commission of the offense, together with a very satisfactory identification of defendant Bailey as a participator in the crime. The general rule as to the sufficiency of corroborative evidence is discussed and authorities cited in the case of People v. Kelly, 69 Cal. App. 558, 570, 231 P. 767, and the principle laid down that all that is required is that, standing alone, such corroborative evidence tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and that such evidence may be slight and of itself entitled to but little consideration. Measured by such rule, in the instant case we entertain no doubt but that the requirements of the statute were fully met.

Appellant Bailey also advances the point that the corpus delicti was not established in that the evidence failed to establish the fact that Shepek was the lawful owner of the whisky which was the subject of the alleged conspiracy.

[9, 10] The burden of proving that the liquor was lawfully acquired, possessed, and used by Shepek rested on the prosecution. Section 8352h, Barnes' Fed. Code, 1921 Supp. (U. S. Comp. St. § 10138½t). With reference thereto, the record herein shows that both Mr. and Mrs. Shepek testified that the whisky in question was owned and possessed by Shepek as a part of a stock of liquor which he had owned before the National Prohibition Act went into effect, and that at all times thereafter the whisky was kept and possessed by Shepek in his home for his own use, that of his family and their bona fide guests. It is therefore clear that the position of appellant cannot be sustained.

Appellant Warren contends that no sufficient corroboration of the testimony given by one of the accomplices to establish the conspiracy alleged in the indictment was shown in evidence, and that no evidence was introduced which tended to prove that the alleged conspiracy had for its object anything other than the taking of whisky illegally possessed, and hence that the evidence failed to show that any crime was committed. The record herein shows that Mrs. Shepek testified that after defendant Bailey had been informed by her that the whisky was "prewar," Bailey stated that "they would have to take it"—which fact, at least, has a tendency to corroborate the testimony given by the accomplice to the effect that he told Bailey that the whisky was legally possessed by Shepek. But, even assuming the fact (which cannot be conceded) that the testimony of the accomplice to the effect that he told his coconspirators that the whisky was "prewar," or legally possessed whisky, was not sufficiently corroborated, nevertheless it appears that the proposed means of taking the whisky (legally or illegally possessed) was by virtue of a forged search warrant; which fact, although testified to by an accomplice, was sufficiently corroborated by both Mr. and Mrs. Shepek.

[11, 12] As stated in 5 California Jurisprudence, page 495, where in support thereof several cases are cited:

"The authorities declare that a criminal conspiracy exists when 'two or more persons conspire to commit an unlawful act, or to commit a lawful act by unlawful means.'"

It must have been either lawful or unlawful to conspire to take the whisky. If it was unlawful, the statute covers the act of the conspirators; and if lawful, the means by which the whisky was proposed to be taken was unlawful, which would also bring the act within the terms of the statute. The agreement among the conspirators to obtain possession of the whisky through the pretended authority of a search warrant, which in fact was forged and of no validity, was an effort to take the whisky from the possession of the owner thereof by unlawful means; from which it follows that the conspiracy was established by the evidence, and consequently that the contention of appellant in this regard cannot be sustained.

Finally, it is contended by appellant Warren that the testimony of two of the accomplices in the commission of the offense was not corroborated as to said appellant.

The evidence shows that the corroboration was to the effect that three days after the offense was committed John Shepek identified Warren by his walk as being one of the men who were present at Shepek's home at the time in question, and who participated in the commission of the crime. At the time of the trial Shepek testified that at the time he identified defendant Warren the peculiarity of Warren's walk was fresh in his memory; that the particular and peculiar walk of the man that he noticed coming up out of the cellar in Shepek's home at the time the offense was committed was similar to the walk of the man whom he later identified; and that at the time he made the identification he was positive that the man he then identified was the man he saw at his home at the time in question. On the trial of the action Shepek declined to state positively that defendant Warren was the man whom he had formerly identified, or that he was one of the men who were at his home at the time the offense was committed. Although defendant Warren did not take the witness stand in his own behalf, it appears from the evidence that at the time when Shepek identified Warren he did so by stating, in the presence and hearing of Warren, "That is the man," to which statement Warren made no reply. The arresting officer testified that Warren was the man whom Shepek identified two or three days after the offense was committed.

[13, 14] Having in mind the rule hereinbefore stated to the effect that the corroboration of the accomplice may be slight and of itself entitled to but little consideration, and that a man may be identified by his walk (People v. Wilson [Cal. App.] 245 P. 781), together with the further rule that the testimony of the accomplice may be corroborated by the admission of the defendant (People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 120 P. 20; People v. Henson, 32 Cal. App. 600, 163 P. 685; People v. Kelly, 69 Cal. App. 558, 231 P. 767), we are constrained to hold that the corroboration was of sufficient strength to warrant the submission of the question of the guilt of defendant Warren to the jury.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, it is ordered that the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial be and they are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

82 Cal. App. 723

BRUSH v. APARTMENT & HOTEL FINANCING CORPORATION. (Civ. 4848.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 5, 1927.

1. Mortgages $\S$ 469—Order appointing receiver pending foreclosure of leasehold mortgage held proper on allegation that security was deteriorating, without specific allegation that property was insufficient (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 564, subd. 2).

Order appointing receiver pending foreclosure of mortgage of leasehold of apartment house held proper, though motion therefor did not allege in language of statute that property was insufficient to discharge the mortgage debt as provided by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 564, subd. 2, where it alleged that security was deteriorating and by time matter came to trial would be deteriorated and wholly worthless.

2. Mortgages $\S$ 469—To authorize receivership pending foreclosure, specific facts sufficient to confer jurisdiction must be alleged (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 564, subd. 2).

To authorize appointment of a receiver under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 564, subd. 2, pending foreclosure of a mortgage, facts must be alleged in complaint or affidavit sufficiently specific to confer jurisdiction on court to appoint; bare statement that the property is insufficient to discharge the mortgage debt being insufficient.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 955—Determination of appointment of receiver pending foreclosure rests with trial court (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 564, subd. 2).

Determination of question whether showing is sufficient to authorize appointment of a receiver under Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 2, pending foreclosure, rests with trial court.

4. Appeal and error ⚡955—Trial Judge's discretion in appointing receiver pending foreclosure can be challenged on appeal only on showing that it was abused (Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 2).

Discretion of trial judge in appointment of a receiver pending foreclosure of a mortgage under Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 2, may be challenged and overturned on appeal only where it unmistakably appears, not merely that discretion may not have been wisely exercised, but that it was actually abused.

5. Appeal and error ⚡762—That order erroneously appointed one of defendants receiver pending foreclosure cannot be considered where first mentioned in closing brief.

That because person appointed receiver pending foreclosure of mortgage was one of parties defendant the order of appointment should be reversed cannot be considered, where first mention thereof was in appellant's closing brief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by Renno Brush against the Apartment & Hotel Financing Corporation to foreclose a mortgage on a leasehold of an apartment house. From an order appointing a receiver, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. O. Leake, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harry Lyons, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. [1] This is an appeal from an order appointing a receiver in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage of a leasehold on an apartment house, together with the furniture and furnishings therein contained. It is contended by appellant that the court abused its discretion in making the appointment and that the court was without jurisdiction in the premises.

By subdivision 2 of section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is provided in effect that a receiver may be appointed by the court in an action by a mortgagee for the foreclosure of his mortgage " * * * where it appears * * * that the property is probably insufficient to discharge the mortgage debt." It is urged by appellant that the court was without jurisdiction in the premises because in the motion for appointment of the receiver plaintiff failed to make an allegation in the language of the statute that the value of the mortgaged property was "insufficient to discharge the mortgage debt." In that connection, it appears that by allegations contained in the complaint and in affidavits presented by plaintiff in his motion for the appointment of a receiver it was shown "that plaintiff's security is deteriorating and will so continue to deteriorate," and

"will by the time the within matter comes to trial be deteriorated and be practically worthless." However, the facts as stated in the affidavits presented by plaintiff in support of such allegation in substance were that the amount of the mortgage debt was the sum of $6,044; that the value of the furniture and furnishings covered by the mortgage was $3,500; "that if defendants are permitted to continue in possession of the premises for another 12 months, that the furniture, furnishings, and equipment will not bring in over the sum of $2,000"; also, the fact of the pendency of an action for the condemnation of real property, in which action the cancellation of the leasehold here in question was sought, and that by reason of such condemnation action plaintiff's security "will be greatly if not totally extinguished and impaired."

[2] It is clear that a bare statement in the language of the statute would be insufficient to confer jurisdiction. What is necessary, and to which the court must look for its authority, is that there be not mere conclusions, but specific facts as alleged either in the complaint or in the affidavits supporting the motion. If such facts bring the case of the applicant within the language of the statute, it is just as immaterial that the plaintiff failed to correctly label them as it would have been impotent that with the greatest of care he used the exact wording of the statute, but failed to set up the facts which established such conclusion. In other words, it is substance, rather than form, that is required and upon which the conclusion of the court must rest.

[3] While it is true that counter affidavits were presented by the defendants to the court by which it was alleged that the value of the leasehold and the furniture and furnishings of the apartment house was largely in excess of the amount stated in the affidavits and pleading of the plaintiff as being the value of such property, it is well settled that the determination of the question rested with the trial court.

In the case of Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 19, 91 P. 1001, 1002, it is said:

"In the consideration of an appeal from an order made upon affidavits, involving the decision of a question of fact, this court is bound by the same rule that controls it where oral testimony is presented for review. If there is any conflict in the affidavits, those in favor of the prevailing party must be taken as true, and the facts stated therein must be considered as established. [Citing cases.] And as error is not presumed, and all intendments are in favor of the action of the lower court, it follows that the affidavits in behalf of the successful party are to be deemed to establish not only the facts directly stated therein, but also all facts which may reasonably be inferred or presumed from the direct and positive statements."

The case of Fox v. Flood, 44 Cal. App. 786, 187 P. 68, like the instant case, was one in which an appeal was taken from an order appointing a receiver in an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage. Touching the point here under consideration, the court said:

"The power to appoint a receiver is very largely within the discretion of the trial court, and an appellate court will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion except in cases of palpable abuse. Whitley v. Bradley, 13 Cal. App. 720, 724, 725, 110 P. 596. In reviewing an appeal from an order made upon affidavits, in which the determination of a question of fact is involved, the court is governed by the same rules applicable to oral testimony. If the affidavits are conflicting, the facts stated in the affidavits favorable to the prevailing party must be considered as established"—citing cases.

See, also, McCarthy v. Kurkjian, 69 Cal. App. 682, 232 P. 161.

[4] From a consideration of the foregoing authorities it is apparent that in the instant case the determination of the issue presented by the affidavits of the respective parties lay within the discretion of the judge of the trial court. He had a right to adopt as true the facts stated in the affidavits presented by plaintiff, together with all inferences and presumptions reasonably deducible therefrom, and to reject in toto the facts contained within the affidavits presented in behalf of the defendant. With such rule in mind, if it be assumed that the judge of the trial court believed from the evidence before him that the amount owed on account of the mortgage was the sum of $6,044; that the value of the furniture and furnishings covered by the mortgage in question was either $2,000 or $3,500; and that by reason of the pendency of the condemnation proceeding, to which reference herein has been had, the security of the leasehold held by plaintiff for the payment of the debt secured by the mortgage would be "totally extinguished" so that by the time the action would come on for trial the entire mortgaged property would "be deteriorated and be practically worthless" and therefore probably would be "insufficient to discharge the mortgage debt" (subdivision 2, § 564, Code Civ. Proc.), it is manifest that the conclusion of whether a receiver should be appointed, resting, as it did, wholly within the discretion of the judge of the trial court, may be challenged and overturned on appeal only if it clearly and unmistakably appears, not merely that the discretion may not have been wisely exercised, but that it was actually abused. In the order here in question we are unable to perceive that the powers of the judge of the trial court were in any manner overstepped, or that a jurisdiction not possessed by the trial court was exercised in the premises.

[5] In appellant's closing brief it is contended that because the person appointed receiver was one of the parties defendant in the action, the order appointing the receiver should be reversed. In connection with such alleged error, it may be said that neither in the specifications of errors contained within the bill of exceptions, nor in appellant's opening brief, is any mention made of the point to which reference has been had; in other words, the point is first mentioned in appellant's closing brief. Whatever merits might ordinarily be attachable to appellant's contention, it is clear that in the premises the practice of appellate tribunals forbids its consideration. For aught that appears, the appointment of one of the defendants in the action may have been altogether regular and fully authorized in all respects. In fact, the record fails to show that the receiver ever was a party to the action.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

82 Cal. App. 641

ALFALFA GROWERS OF CALIFORNIA,
Inc., v. ICARDO et al. (Civ. 4227.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 2, 1927.

1. Agriculture ☞6—Nonprofit association to distribute products of members, having no capital stock, cannot levy assessments (Civ. Code, §§ 331, 653m-653sc).

Nonprofit association or corporation, having no capital stock, organized under Civ. Code, §§ 653m-653sc, for purpose of distributing product of its members, who are alfalfa growers, held to have no statutory power to levy assessments under sections under which it was organized, nor under section 331, relating to assessments by corporations.

2. Evidence ☞6—Court takes judicial notice that quantity of alfalfa produced per acre of land is widely divergent.

Court will take judicial notice that quantity of alfalfa produced per acre of land is widely divergent, even that amount produced upon two acres lying side by side is often greatly different.

3. Agriculture ☞6—Articles of incorporation of nonprofit association for distribution of product of members must be construed in light of statute (Civ. Code, §§ 653m-653sc).

Articles of incorporation of nonprofit association organized under Civ. Code, §§ 653m-653sc, for purpose of distributing product of its members, who are alfalfa growers, must be construed in light of statute under which it was organized.

4. Agriculture ☞6—Nonprofit association, to distribute product of members could not enforce contract for assessments, where exactions would result in unjust discrimination (Civ. Code, §§ 653m-653sc).

Nonprofit association or corporation, having no capital stock, organized under Civ. Code, §§ 653m-653sc, to distribute product of its members, who are alfalfa growers, could not enforce alleged contract for assessments, provided for by its articles of incorporation and by-laws, where exactions would result in unjust discrimination between its members, since exactions must be equal and uniform.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County;
T. N. Harvey, Judge.

Action by the Alfalfa Growers of California, Inc., against A. Icardo and others to enforce collection of unpaid assessment. Verdict was rendered for plaintiff. From an order granting a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Johnson & Lemmon, of Sacramento, and Emmons & Aldrich, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Dorsey & Campbell and Kaye & Siemon, all of Bakersfield, for respondents.

WORKS, P. J. Plaintiff is a nonprofit association or corporation, organized under the provisions of the Civil Code for the purpose of distributing the product of its members, who are alfalfa growers. The defendants, as copartners, owned a membership in the organization. This action was commenced for the purpose of enforcing the collection of an unpaid assessment against the membership held by them. The cause was tried by a jury and a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff, but the trial court later made its order granting a new trial. From this order plaintiff appeals.

It is contended by respondents that appellant was without authority to levy assessments against its members, and we think the contention must be upheld. The statute is searched in vain for such authority. There are no provisions whatever directly relating to assessments in the sections of the Civil Code (sections 653m to 653sc) under which appellant was organized and pursued its existence. It is provided, however, in section 653m that the associations contemplated by it shall have all the "powers granted to private corporations by the laws of this state, except such powers as are inconsistent with those granted by this title."

Section 653q reads, in part:

"Each association incorporated under this title shall have the powers granted by the provisions of this Code and other laws of California relating to private corporations. * * *

Section 653sb provides:

"Nothing in this title shall be deemed to prohibit any co-operative association formed or existing hereunder from having and exercising the same powers in carrying out its purposes as are enjoyed or exercised by corporations which issue capital stock."

[1] We think these three provisions are not sufficient to clothe appellant with statutory power to levy assessments. The enactments which provide for the levy of assessments by corporations relate exclusively to assessments upon capital stock. To begin with, the article of the Civil Code upon the subject (article 2 of chapter 2 of title 1 of part 4 of Div. First) is headed "Assessment of Stock," and section 331, which confers the power, reads in part, with our italics:

"The directors of any corporation formed or existing under the laws of this state, after one-fourth of its capital stock has been subscribed, may * * * levy and collect assessments upon the subscribed capital stock thereof. * * *

Appellant has no capital stock, and it would seem, therefore, whatever is the force to be attributed to those portions of sections 653m, 653q, 653sb which are above quoted, that the language employed is not of sufficient potency to import the provisions of the Code relating to assessments of capital stock. In corporations like appellant, the basis upon which the right to assess rests is simply nonexistent. And there are particular reasons for the inapplicability of provisions of law relating to assessments to such corporations as appellant. That corporation was organized under a "Title" of the Code (sections 653m to 653sc), which provides for the organization of associations by "persons engaged in the production, preserving, drying, packing, shipping, manufacturing, preparing for market, or marketing of agricultural, viticultural, or horticultural products, or all of them" (section 653m). It is feasible to provide for assessments of capital stock, for each share of the stock of a given corporation is like all the other shares and an equitable basis exists upon which to make a levy; but what similarity exists, as a foundation for a just and equal assessment, between those members of a corporation like appellant who, respectively, produce, or preserve, or dry, or pack, or ship, or manufacture, or prepare for market, or market either an agricultural, or a viticultural, or a horticultural product? We can see none, and, on the whole, we are convinced that appellant is possessed of no statutory authority to levy assessments upon its memberships.

There are many decided cases to the effect that the power to levy assessments may be created by contract between a corporation and its members. It is insisted by appellant that it enjoys a power so created, as both its articles of incorporation and by-laws contain provisions attempting to confer the authority.

The difficulties pointed out during our consideration of the question whether appellant enjoyed statutory authority to levy assessments are illustrated and intensified when we come to examine the contention that the right existed by virtue of contract. Appellant's articles of incorporation provided that the purposes of the organization, in part, were "to promote, foster and encourage the business of growing alfalfa and other hay and straw," and to aid "in the marketing, processing, warehousing, storing, and distribution thereof and of alfalfa products, and by-products, and of other hay products and straw and its products and by-products"; that each member should "be entitled to one vote and to one unit of interest in the property of the association, and to one additional vote, and one additional unit of interest, for each and every ton of alfalfa, or major portion thereof, produced by him or upon his ranch or in affiliated activities owned, operated, and controlled by him and sold or listed for sale by the association for him in each year"; that "any person, firm, or corporation or manager, or officer of any corporation or member of any firm engaged in the business of producing alfalfa or controlling the production thereof or having any interest in such production * * * may be admitted to membership in the association, and shall have voting power and property rights therein on the same basis as all other members"; that every member should pay "an entrance or membership fee based upon a specified amount per acre for each and every acre of lands planted to alfalfa and represented by him"; and that the directors should have the right to levy assessments and that notices of assessment "shall be mailed to all of the members and such assessment shall become valid and binding upon all of the members" unless within a certain time "members owning a majority of the property rights herein shall file * * * written dissents or objections thereto."

It was provided in the by-laws of appellant, in addition to some matters which are practically repeated from the articles of incorporation, that members of the association were of two classes, active members, "to include all members who have any interest, direct or indirect, in the production of alfalfa," and associate members, "including all other members," and that the active members were divided into two subclasses, marketing members, "to include all active members whose alfalfa acreage is to be marketed, in whole or in part," and nonmarketing members, "to include all other active members"; and that the board of directors should have the right to levy assessments "to carry out any of the legitimate purposes of the association, each member to be liable prorata in accord with the alfalfa acreage owned, controlled, or represented." Particularly it is to be noticed that the by-laws repeated the clause of the articles of incorporation to the effect that notices of assessment were to be mailed to all members and that assessments were to be enforceable against all.

[2] It will be observed that the articles of incorporation and the by-laws provided a scheme for the levying of assessments which could operate neither justly nor equitably between the members. The memberships in the association were not like memberships in the ordinary social club, under which each member enjoys privileges exactly like those enjoyed by all the others, and under which, therefore, all are equal. Appellant was organized for the purpose of fostering and advancing the financial welfare of its members, and each membership was valuable to the holder of it to an extent which depended upon the value and importance of the enterprise or interest, which, through his membership, he placed under appellant's care. It was unavoidable, therefore, that some memberships should be of a value different from that attaching to all the others. Under the articles of incorporation all memberships were treated as alike upon the score of liability to assessment, even if members were allowed a number of votes and a number of unities of interest proportioned to the tonnage of alfalfa produced by each. If we concede for the sake of argument that the provisions of the by-laws in a respect about to be mentioned were not an illegal and unwarranted departure from the articles, we may observe that the by-laws provide for the prorating among the members of the amount of assessments upon the basis of the "alfalfa acreage owned, controlled, or represented." But this arrangement could not make assessments equal even as between those who were strictly of one class upon the score of the protection afforded them by their memberships, those, for instance, who were all growers of alfalfa. It is a notorious fact, and one of which we will take judicial notice (Ex parte Kohler, 74 Cal. 38, 15 P. 436; Wingard v. Industrial Acc. Com., 57 Cal. App. 674, 207 P. 1030), that the quantity of alfalfa produced per acre of land is widely divergent, even that the amount produced from two acres lying side by side is often greatly different.

[3] If we drop consideration of those who are similarly situated to the extent of being growers, we are confronted with greater inequalities and uncertainties. The prorating of the amount of assessments between the members is made to depend, as we have already noticed, upon "the alfalfa acreage owned, controlled, or represented," but those who become members need neither own, control, nor represent acreage. The statute (Civ. Code, § 653m) provides for a membership composed of "persons * * * preserving, drying, packing, shipping, manufacturing, preparing for market, or marketing" alfalfa, in so far as the substantives employed in the enactment may be applied to the alfalfa industry. The articles of incorporation of appellant, which must be construed in the light of the statute, provide that those "engaged in the business of producing alfalfa or controlling the production thereof or having any interest in such production" may become members of the association. One section of the by-laws provides, it is true, that membership in appellant shall be limited to the state market director "and any and all alfalfa growers in the state of California, or the owner or lessor or lessee of any land in California whereon alfalfa is grown." This language, it is obvious, furnishes some considerable possibility, if not the certainty, of an inequality of assessments as between owners, lessors and lessees. Owners may not be growers of alfalfa, and lessors will not be, except where leases provide for a growing by lessees upon shares. Further, however, the clause just quoted from the by-laws, in its attempt to limit memberships to those interested in growing, is not in accord with the statute, it is a departure from the articles of incorporation, and it is out of harmony with a later section of the by-laws themselves. As we have observed, the by-laws provide for active members, "to include all members who have any interest, direct or indirect, in the production of alfalfa," these being subdivided into, first, those "whose alfalfa acreage is to be marketed, either in whole or in part," and, second, "all other active members." Associate members are also provided for, to include all who are not active members.

If for a moment we pay regard to these classifications of memberships, it seems obvious that they, taking statute, articles of incorporation, and by-laws together, are based upon the idea that different members have differing degrees of interest in the welfare of appellant, and that, therefore, their memberships are different in value. And yet, it is not possible, even forgetting the difference in quantity of production from different acres of alfalfa land, equitably to prorate assessments among the various classes of members, as it necessarily appears that they cannot all be graded upon the score of comparative acreage in production.

Another peculiar condition arises from the provisions of the articles of incorporation and by-laws. Suppose we limit ourselves now to a consideration of those who are growers or who are "directly or indirectly" interested in growing. Suppose we view a copartnership like that of which the four respondents are members. Suppose the copartnership has ten acres of alfalfa lands in production. The articles provide that "any * * * firm * * * or member of any firm engaged in the business of producing alfalfa," etc., is eligible to membership in appellant. Undoubtedly, under this provision, the copartnership and each of its four members might "join" appellant. Suppose they did so. Here, then, arise five memberships. Each of them must be assessed alike, if an assessment be attempted, for the by-laws provide (italics ours) that upon assessments "each member to [shall] be liable prorate in accord with the alfalfa acreage owned, controlled, or represented." Here are five separate assessments upon one ten acres, while a second ten acres, "owned, controlled, or represented" by one member, say the owner, is burdened with but one assessment.

[4] The paper organization of appellant is subject to further dissection upon the subject here under inquiry, but we refrain from a further prosecution of the task. We are convinced that any attempt upon the part of appellant to levy an assessment upon its members, under the machinery which it has attempted to provide for the purpose, could not but result in an unjust discrimination between them. It is of the very essence of the law of assessments of the capital stock of corporations that the exactions shall be equal and uniform (6 Cal. Jur. 957), and the rule must of necessity apply to corporations which have no capital stock, even when the power is claimed to exist by contract. We determine that such a corporation cannot enforce by action alleged contract for assessments, where the exactions will result in unjust discrimination between its members.

Order affirmed.

I concur: THOMPSON, J.

CRAIG, J. I concur in the conclusion reached in the foregoing opinion upon the ground that the corporate structure of the Alfalfa Growers of California, Incorporated, is not such as to permit of the assessment upon which suit in the instant case was based, and for the reasons set forth by Presiding Justice WORKS. Concerning the other ground upon which his decision is founded, I prefer to express no opinion. It is unnecessary to do so, since, if the assessment in question is void, it is unimportant whether under section 653m to 653sc of the Civil Code a co-operative association might be so organized as to assess its members.

82 Cal. App. 786

HANSEN v. HANSEN.

SAME v. HANSEN et al.

(Civ. 5455.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 9, 1927.

1. Deeds $\Leftarrow$ 208(3)—Finding that deeds were delivered to grantor's mother, with intent to divest him of title, held sustained by evidence.

In action by widow to quiet title to land alleged to have been owned by husband at time of his death, finding of trial judge that husband had delivered deeds to land, with intent to divest himself of title thereto, and vest same in his mother, held sustained by evidence.

2. Deeds ⚡54—Generally, it is essential to validity of deed that there be a delivery.

Generally, it is essential to the validity of a deed that there should be a delivery of the instrument.

3. Deeds ⚡56(2)—Anything manifesting grantor's intention that deed become operative and effective, and that grantee becomes possessed of estate, constitutes sufficient "delivery."

Anything which manifests intention of grantor that his deed shall presently become operative and effective, and that he loses control of it, and that grantee becomes possessed of estate, constitutes sufficient "delivery"; question thereof being determined on facts of each case.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Deliver—Delivery.]

4. Deeds ⚡56(2)—Valid delivery depends on act or declaration from which intention to deliver may be inferred.

It is essential to valid delivery of deed that there must be act or declaration from which intention to deliver may be inferred.

5. Deeds ⚡56(2)—Formal or manual delivery is not required, if grantor's intention to treat deed as his and to make delivery is apparent.

Neither formal delivery, express words, nor manual delivery of instrument to grantee is necessary if it is apparent either from words or acts of grantor that it was his intention to treat deed as his and to make delivery thereof.

6. Deeds ⚡56(2)—Test under which delivery is determined is to ascertain whether in parting with possession grantor intended to divest himself of title.

True test under which delivery of deed is to be determined is in ascertaining whether in parting with possession of conveyance grantor intended to divest himself of title; if he did, there being effective delivery, and, if not, there is no delivery.

7. Deeds ⚡56(2)—Delivery is sufficient, if grantor makes known intention irrevocably to part with control over instrument to presently vest title in another.

No set form of delivery of a deed is necessary; it being sufficient if from circumstances grantor has made known his intention to part with his dominion and control of the instrument to the end that it may presently vest title in another.

8. Appeal and error ⚡842(8)—Whether requisite intent of grantor in parting with control of instrument is to pass title is question of fact.

Whether requisite intent of grantor in parting with dominion and control of instrument to end that it vest title in another is to pass title is purely question of fact for trial court or jury.

9. Deeds ⚡56(2)—If grantor indicates will that instrument pass into possession of grantee, conveyance inures as grant, although it never comes into grantee's hands (Civ. Code, § 1059).

In view of Civ. Code § 1059, if grantor indicates will that instrument pass into possession of grantee, then conveyance inures as grant, although it never comes into grantee's hands.

10. Deeds ⚡208(3)—Evidence held to show grantor's intention to treat deed in grantee's possession as his act, and to make delivery thereof.

Where son had previously executed and acknowledged conveyance of property to his mother, and deed was in her possession with his knowledge, evidence held to show his intention to treat the deed as his act, and to make delivery thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Separate actions by Anna Hansen against Marie N. Hansen and against Albert M. Hansen and another. Actions tried together. From judgments for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Judgments affirmed.

Harry I. Stafford and Wm. F. Stafford, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gillogley, Crofton & Payne, of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. [1] Action to quiet title to certain real property. Appellant Anna Hansen commenced independent actions affecting two distinct parcels of land, claiming that the deeds thereto made by one Charles J. Hansen to his mother, Marie N. Hansen, were void for want of sufficient delivery, and praying that plaintiff be adjudged to have an interest as an heir at law in the real property described therein. The actions were tried together and submitted on the same testimony. The trial court found in each case that the deeds had been delivered to the grantee named therein, and that plaintiff had no interest in the property. The sole question upon which a reversal is sought is that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of delivery. It was stipulated between counsel that both appeals should be heard on one bill of exceptions, and that the record in both cases might be printed in one transcript, and both appeals considered thereon. It appears in evidence that one Charles J. Hansen intermarried with plaintiff in the year 1917. Prior thereto he had made his home with his mother, and during this time he was the owner of the real property here involved. One of the parcels of land, described in the record as the "Church street" property, was improved with four flats, and the mother and son resided in one of them. The other parcel was situated on Carolina street, and it was improved with a small dwelling which deceased rented out to tenants. During his lifetime, and prior to his marriage, Hansen conveyed the Church street property to his mother. This deed was dated June 24, 1911, and it was recorded on the 8th day of January, 1919. The Carolina street property was also conveyed to her prior to his marriage. This deed was dated August 23, 1913, and it was recorded May 6, 1919. Hansen and his mother had a joint safe deposit box in the Anglo California Bank, and the deed to the Church street property was kept therein. The deed to the Carolina street property was kept in a safe at the home of the parties. It may be stated in passing that no claim is here made that any title passed to respondent by reason of either of these conveyances. On July 2, 1919, about a year and a half after his marriage, Hansen was taken seriously ill, and shortly thereafter his condition became such that he believed he was about to die. He sent for his mother on January 4th, and instructed her to go to their joint box and bring to him its contents. The mother did as directed. She placed the contents in a small satchel and returned with the same to her son. The satchel contained the deed to the Church street property, Liberty bonds, shares of stock, and insurance policies. She was told by Hansen to return in a couple of hours. This she did, whereupon Hansen handed her the satchel into which he had replaced the deed to the Church street lot and the other property, saying, "Mama, I give you the deeds to all my income property. The Carolina property is back to me again, and the same man that collects from the other will collect for that too. I want you go to the safe deposit box and get a box in your name and take all the papers from the box we have got and put them in your box, except my will and the papers from the shop. You shall leave them there, as they are to be probated." About this time Hansen had executed his will, and this, together with certain bonds and other property he desired his mother, wife, brothers, and nephew to receive, he had replaced in the satchel in separate envelopes, with the name of each person written on a piece of paper and pinned to each envelope. These documents were deposited by the mother in the joint safe deposit box. By the terms of the will his brother Albert M. Hansen was appointed without bonds to act as trustee of the estate. To his wife Anna he gave one-half of a described estate, the other half to his mother, Mrs. M. N. Hansen, his brothers Louis F. and Albert M. Hansen, and his nephew W. J. Davenport, share and share alike. The will provided that an automobile owned by him should go to his wife and mother jointly, and the furnishings of the home to his wife, the wish being expressed in the will that she be permitted to remain in their home rent free as long as she desired, and until such time as she might remarry. On the same day

Albert M. Hansen visited his sick brother, and during a conversation had between them Charles informed Albert that he was going to die; that he had made his will, and there would be nothing to probate except the stock in the business and the automobile, as he had fixed up his real estate; that he knew a delivery was necessary in order to pass title to his real property, and to accomplish this result he had required their mother to get a new box and to place therein the papers he gave her, and to keep in their joint box the will and stock certificates only; that, while the deed to the Carolina street property was not there, their mother had it in her safe at home, and it was all right. It appeared in evidence that Charles Hansen had studied law for about two years, and knew that delivery of a deed was necessary to pass title to real property. On January 6, 1919, the mother again visited her son, and while there plaintiff, who evidently had become aware of her husband's disposition of his property, complained to the defendant Marie Hansen that the latter had received more from her son than he had given to her. She complained of the fact that Charles had given to his mother all of his real estate and a $2,000 life insurance policy. Defendant knew nothing about this policy. She spoke to her son concerning the same, and informed him of what his wife had told her. He responded that he had given his wife $3,000 in cash, one-half interest in his business, and certain government bonds. The mother requested that she be permitted to give the wife the life insurance, as she feared trouble. The son responded, "You had better give her the flat," but the mother objected to this plan. The life insurance was however, transferred to plaintiff after the death of Hansen. On January 7th the mother again visited her son, who was then unconscious. She was of the opinion he was about to die, and in conformity with his wishes she proceeded to the bank and procured a box in her own name and transferred to it all of the papers with which she had been intrusted, except the will and the stock representing her son's share in his business, which she left in their joint box. That evening Charles Hansen died, and on the following day the mother took the deed to the Church street property from the box and recorded it. On January 10th, following the funeral, the mother called the members of the family together for the purpose of delivering to them the contents of the satchel. It was found to contain a deed to Marie N. Hansen of the Church street property, together with a bond for $200; a deed to Louis Hansen of a lot in Berkeley, and a bond worth $200; bonds of the value of $200 to Albert Hansen; and a sealed package for Anna Hansen, the contents of which was not disclosed. Respondent, on May 10th, recorded the deed to the Carolina street property, which she subsequently conveyed to her son Albert M. Hansen, a party to the action. Probate proceedings were had in the estate, and none of the property included in the papers delivered by the deceased to his mother was inventoried in the estate, nor was the real property. Plaintiff accepted distribution as provided in the will without objection, and she retained the proceeds of the $2,000 life insurance policy which the deceased had given to his mother, and which she had transferred to plaintiff after her son's death. Four years thereafter these actions were instituted.

[2-5] Under all these facts the trial court found that the deceased had delivered the deeds to the property in question with intent to divest himself of all title thereto, and vest the same in his mother. We are of the opinion that the findings are fully supported by the evidence. It is a general rule that it is essential to the validity of a deed that there should be a delivery of the instrument. Anything, however, which clearly manifests the intention of the grantor that his deed shall presently become operative and effectual, that he loses control over it, and that the grantee is to become possessed of the estate, constitutes a sufficient delivery. It is obvious that this rule rests upon the intention of the grantor, as manifested by the circumstances surrounding the transaction. The question of whether or not there has been a delivery must therefore be determined upon the facts of each particular case. It is essential to a valid delivery that there must be some act or declaration from which an intention to deliver may be inferred. A formal delivery is not required, nor are express words necessary. Nor is a manual delivery of the instrument to the grantee required, it being sufficient if it is apparent either from the words or the acts of the grantor that it was his intention to treat the deed as his, and to make a delivery of the same. 18 Cor. Jur. p. 198.

[6-10] The true test under which delivery is to be determined is in ascertaining whether in parting with the possession of the conveyance the grantor intended thereby to divest himself of title. If he did, there is an effective delivery. If not, there is no delivery. The solution of this question is grounded entirely on the intention of the grantor to be determined by the trial court from a consideration of all the evidence in a given case bearing on the question. Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703. Nor is any set form of delivery necessary, it being sufficient if from any or all of the circumstances the grantor has made known his intention irrevocably to part with his dominion and control over the instrument to the end that it may presently vest title in another. McCully v. McArthur, 187 Cal. 194, 201 P. 323; Wilcox v. Hardisty, 60 Cal. App. 206, 212 P. 633; McCarthy v. Security Trust, etc., Bank, 188 Cal. 229, 204 P. 818. Whether or not the requisite intent shall pass title is purely a question of fact for the trial court or jury. Hefner v. Sealey, 175 Cal. 18, 164 P. 898. Here it clearly appears that it was the intention of the grantor that his mother should have all his real property, which produced an income which included the parcels in question, and all the facts and circumstances as above recited show beyond question that a complete delivery was made which effectuated such intention. Counsel for appellant specially urges his contention of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of delivery as to the Carolina street property, and our attention is particularly drawn to the evidence to the effect that the deed to this property was not in the satchel when it was delivered to the mother. Actual manual tradition or change of possession of the deed, however, was not necessary. As above indicated, delivery is a question of intent, and to complete it no precise form of words and no particular character of act is necessary. A deed may be good by constructive as well as by actual delivery. The main thing which the law looks at is whether the grantor indicates his will that the instrument should pass into the possession of the grantee, and, if that will is manifest, then the conveyance inures as a valid grant, although the deed never comes into the hands of the grantee. Moore v. Trott, 162 Cal. 268, 122 P. 462; Black v. Sharkey, 104 Cal. 279, 37 P. 939; 9 Cal. Jur. p. 160. And this general principle is enunciated by our Code. Civ. Code, § 1059. Here the grantor had executed and acknowledged a conveyance of the property to his mother and it was in her possession, a fact with which he was familiar as evidenced by his statements to his mother and brother. It is clearly apparent from the words and acts of the grantor that it was his intention to treat the deed as his act and to make a delivery of the same. 18 Cor. Jur. 199.

We conclude that the evidence fully supports the findings, and the judgments should therefore be, and they are hereby, affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

83 Cal. App. 1

ANDERSON et al. v. NELSON et al.*
(Civ. 4680.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 9, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 7, 1927.

1. Executors and administrators $\S$ 129(3)—Rights of personal representative to recover property for estate are coextensive with those of deceased (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1582).

In suit by personal representative under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1582, to recover property of estate, personal representative's rights are coextensive with rights which could have been asserted by deceased.

2. Deeds $\S$ 196(2)—Conveyance without consideration to son from father aged, infirm, and enfeebled in mind, who placed confidence in son, is presumed fraudulent.

Though age and physical condition alone are insufficient to set aside conveyance, fraud will be presumed on deed from father to son, where father was aged, infirm, and enfeebled in mind, and placed confidence in son, and conveyance was without consideration.

3. Deeds $\S$ 196(2, 3)—Son has burden to prove conveyance without consideration from aged and mentally enfeebled father was not procured by fraud or undue influence.

Where aged, infirm father, enfeebled in mind, makes conveyance to son without consideration, son has burden to show transaction was free from fraud or undue influence.

4. Fraudulent conveyances $\S$ 172(3)—Court will give relief from deed procured through fraud, though given for improper purpose, where parties are not in pari delicto.

Where parties are not in pari delicto, and deed, though made for improper purpose, was procured through undue influence, abuse of confidence, fraud, or violation of fiduciary relationship, court will grant relief.

5. Fraudulent conveyances $\S$ 172(3)—Aged father's conveyance to son, procured through fraud, could be set aside by personal representative, though given to avoid lien of judgment in anticipated litigation against father (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1582).

Personal representative of father's estate could recover as against son, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1582, property which deceased conveyed without consideration and under son's undue influence, though purpose of conveyance was to prevent lien under possible judgment in anticipated litigation against father; father and son not being in pari delicto.

6. Executors and administrators $\S$ 129(3)—Complaint of personal representative, alleging decedent's son had procured aged father's property to avoid possible judgment lien, under promise of reconveyance on settlement of litigation, held to state cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1582, 1589).

Complaint of personal representative, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1582, alleging son had procured from aged and enfeebled father conveyance without consideration, on representation that such transaction would prevent judgment in threatened litigation from becoming lien, and on promise to reconvey, and further alleging death of father without reconveyance, held to state cause of action; section 1589 being applicable to conveyances fraudulent as against creditors.

7. Executors and administrators $\S$ 129(3)—Demand for reconveyance need not be alleged in suit to recover property conveyed by decedent under undue influence.

In action by personal representative to recover property conveyed by decedent on ground that undue influence was exercised, it is unnecessary to allege demand for reconveyance.

8. Trusts $\S$ 35(4)—Son, holding father's property under conveyance until threatened litigation should be settled, was "trustee" required to make reconveyance on father's death (Civ. Code, $\S$ 2224).

Son, who took conveyance of father's property without consideration, under agreement to reconvey if threatened litigation against father should be settled, avoided, or dismissed, held "trustee" under Civ. Code, $\S$ 2224, required to make reconveyance on father's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Trustee.]

9. Executors and administrators $\S$ 129(3)—Complaint to recover property conveyed by deceased was not rendered demurrable by allegation that property was needed to pay debts.

In action by personal representative to recover property conveyed by deceased under exercise of undue influence, allegation that property was necessary to pay debts, though surplusage, did not render complaint demurrable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Suit by Ruth Anderson, as administratrix of the estate of Richard C. Nelson, deceased, and another against Roy N. Nelson and another. Judgment for defendants pursuant to an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

George G. Bechtel and Tanner, Odell & Taft, all of Santa Monica, for appellants.

Robert M. Clarke and Henry L. Knopp, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered pursuant to an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint; the plaintiffs having declined to amend.

Concisely stated, the material allegations of the questioned pleading, assuming them, for the purposes of the demurrer, to be true, were substantially as follows: The defendant Roy M. Nelson was the son of Richard C. Nelson, who in his lifetime, and especially on or about March 15, 1922, was the owner of certain real and personal property. He was 65 years of age, and was suffering from kidney complaint and paralysis which partially disabled him, and rendered him bedfast and so enfeeble in mind that he was not competent to transact business. At that time he was informed that one Martha L. Hixon threatened to institute an action against him for damages upon the ground that he had failed to fulfill a promise of marriage. Although Nelson contended that he had not promised to marry Martha L. Hixon, and that she had no cause of action against him, such threats made him nervous, distressed and fearful, and increased his disability to transact business. Prior thereto Nelson had married and was then living with the plaintiff Jennie Pierce Nelson, his wife.

The plaintiffs then alleged that said defendant Roy M. Nelson learning of the threatened litigation, and knowing of his father's feeble health, and designing and intending to deprive the plaintiff Jennie Pierce Nelson of any interest in said property should his father not survive such illness, represented to his father that the best method of defeating the threatened suit for damages would be for the latter to convey to the defendant all of said property, in order that Martha L. Hixon should not obtain a judgment lien against it, and that the anticipated litigation could then easily be settled. It was alleged that said defendant promised and agreed that, as soon as any such litigation was settled, avoided, or dismissed, he would reconvey the property, should his father demand a reconveyance; that the father, though declaring that Martha L. Hixon had no legal, equitable, or just claim against him, was influenced and persuaded by his son's representations and promises, and, without intending to defeat or avoid any just claim of any creditor, or one having a just claim against him, and relying upon such promise to reconvey, did in March, April, and May, 1922, convey all of his property to the defendant Roy M. Nelson without consideration and without the consent of the plaintiff Jennie Pierce Nelson; that on or about June 30, 1922, Richard C. Nelson died intestate without having received a reconveyance, though owing various creditors. It was further alleged that the plaintiff Ruth Anderson was the duly appointed, qualified, and acting administratrix of the estate of said deceased, that demand had been made by her for a reconveyance and surrender of the property so acquired by the defendant son, and that it was necessary that the property be recovered and reduced to the possession of the administratrix in order to pay debts of the decedent and to provide a suitable widow's allowance.

The defendants demurred specially to the complaint, and argued in their briefs before us that the complaint did not contain facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and was uncertain, unintelligible, and ambiguous. Their contention is that by their pleading the plaintiffs attempted to combine two causes of action in one, but that it was not sufficient to bring the case within the provisions of section 1582 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for the recovery of property and for an action upon contract by an administrator, or of section 1589, which directs the prosecution of an action by an administrator for the recovery of property fraudulently conveyed by one since deceased for the purpose of defeating the rights of creditors.

The section first mentioned reads as follows:

"Sec. 1582. Actions for the recovery of any property, real or personal, or for the possession thereof, or to quiet title thereto, or to determine any adverse claim thereon, and all actions founded upon contracts, may be maintained by and against executors and administrators in all cases in which the same might have been maintained by or against their respective testators or intestates."

[1] It is at once apparent from the language of this section that the administratrix stands in the shoes of, and, for the purposes of such litigation, possesses the same but no greater rights than, the intestate. Bath v. Valdez, 70 Cal. 350, 11 P. 724. Any conveyance by Richard C. Nelson, if valid as to him, is equally binding upon his estate. Peck v. Brummagim, 31 Cal. 440, 89 Am. Dec. 195; Cunningham v. Ashley, 45 Cal. 485; Jones v. Tallant, 90 Cal. 386, 27 P. 305. If, therefore, Nelson could not have maintained this suit, his administratrix would not be entitled to recover upon a like state of facts, and of course the converse is also true.

It appears from the allegations of the complaint that the decedent in his lifetime knew of the threatened litigation, and that, relying upon the advice of his son that it was "the best method of defeating the threatened litigation," and to prevent a judgment lien against his property, conveyed all of his assets to Roy M. Nelson, upon the promise of the latter to reconvey them when the storm subsided.

[2, 3] The complaint alleged that Nelson was 65 years of age and was infirm, enfeebled in mind, and not capable of transacting business, and that he relied upon his son's advice in such matters. As a general rule age, physical condition, and suffering of pain furnish no basis for setting aside a conveyance if the vendor exercised a free and untrammelled mind. Carty v. Connolly, 91 Cal. 15, 27 P. 599.

On the other hand, fraud will be presumed in the making of a deed by father to son, where it appears that, in addition to the existence of the relation between them, the father was aged, infirm, and enfeebled in mind, and placed confidence in the son, and that the conveyance was without consideration. Under such circumstances the burden is on the grantee to show absence of fraud or undue influence in the transaction. Fowler v. En- riquez, 56 Cal. App. 107, 204 P. 854; Nobles v. Hutton, 7 Cal. App. 14, 93 P. 289, and cases there cited. We think upon this theory the complaint before us would unquestionably be sufficient to state a cause of action if it were not for further allegations contained in it showing that the purpose of the transfer was to injure another. Where such is the case, equity will refuse a remedy to the grantor or those claiming under him. Allstead v. Laumeister, 16 Cal. App. 59, 116 P. 296. Nor will equity retreat from its position in thus upholding the maxim, in pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis et defendantis, and other equitable principles equally applicable, because the claim of the person which is sought to be avoided was in fact without foundation. Carson v. Beliles, 121 Ky. 294, 89 S. W. 208, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007; Kihlken v. Kihlken, 59 Ohio St. 106, 51 N. E. 969.

[4] A number of authorities are cited in the decision last mentioned sustaining it, but in none of them did it appear that the grantor and the grantee occupied a close confidential relation, or that the former was taken undue advantage of by the latter. Where the parties are not in in pari delicto, and the deed, though made for an improper purpose, was unfairly procured through the undue influence of the grantee, the violation of a fiduciary relationship, abuse of confidence, oppression, or fraud, the court will grant relief. Donnelly v. Rees, 141 Cal. 56, 74 P. 433; Pride v. Andrew, 51 Ohio St. 405, 38 N. E. 84; Harper v. Harper, 85 Ky. 161, 3 S. W. 5, 7 Am. St. Rep. 583; Rozell v. Vansyckle, 11 Wash. 79, 39 P. 270; Hollaway v. Hollaway, 77 Mo. 392; Ingersoll v. Weld, 103 App. Div. 554, 93 N. Y. S. 291; Barnes v. Brown, 32 Mich. 146. Many of these cases proceed upon the theory stated in the one last cited, that "relief will not be denied to the party least in fault against one who has led her into the act by a violation of confidence. They are not in equal wrong."

[5, 6] Applying these well-recognized principles to the allegations in the appellants' complaint, we have no hesitation in concluding that a cause of action is stated, even though Richard C. Nelson allowed himself to become a party to a transaction tainted with fraud. While the facts do not show him to have been of unsound mind so as to have been legally incapacitated, it does appear that he was clearly not in in pari delicto with the defendant. The situation is strikingly similar to that presented in Rozell v. Vansyckle, supra. His act, though intentionally dishonest and induced by the representations and promises of the defendant Roy M. Nelson, in whom the deceased reposed great trust, the relationship of the parties, the advanced age of the father, the representations and promises made by the son, the confidence placed in the latter's advice, especially in business matters—all of these considerations make it apparent that the father and son were related in the transaction as an inferior to a superior, though both were in delicto. Richard C. Nelson during his lifetime might have secured a reconveyance, and therefore we hold that, under section 1582 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the administratrix of his estate may do so.

[7-9] The special grounds of demurrer require but brief comment. It was unnecessary to allege a demand upon the defendant by the decedent for the reconveyance. Roy C. Nelson received the property as a trustee (Civ. Code, § 2224), and holds it in that capacity, and the event upon which he was to reconvey, to wit, the arrival of the time when the threatened litigation should be settled, avoided, or dismissed, occurred when Richard C. Nelson passed away. The allegation in the complaint that it is necessary that the property be recovered by the administratrix to pay the debts of the deceased may be regarded as surplusage. It should have been stricken out on motion, but its presence does not render the complaint demurrable on any ground interposed.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.; THOMPSON, J.

82 Cal. App. 793

RATHBUN et al. v. SECURITY MFG. CO.
(Civ. 4838.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 9, 1927.

1. Evidence ⇨441(11)—Evidence of contemporaneous, unexecuted oral agreement to extend time of payment on note held inadmissible in buyer's action for nondelivery of motor valves (Civ. Code, § 1698).

In action for nondelivery of motor valves for which plaintiffs had given note, which remained unpaid, testimony as to contemporaneous oral agreement by which defendant was to extend time for payment held inadmissible under Civ. Code, § 1698, as unexecuted oral agreement altering written contract.

2. Evidence ⇨441(1)—Payment under written contract may not be extended by unexecuted oral agreement.

Time of payment as fixed by written contract may not be suspended or extended by subsequent unexecuted oral agreement.

3. Estoppel ⇨78(1)—Seller was not estopped to claim nonpayment of note by alleged contemporaneous oral agreement extending due date.

In buyer's suit for nondelivery, seller was not estopped to claim nonpayment of buyer's note when due by fact of alleged contemporaneous oral agreement extending time for payment.

4. Contracts $\S$ 278(1)—Party in default cannot compel other's performance of contract.

Party who is himself in default under contract cannot compel other contracting party to perform.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge pro tem.

Action by W. N. Rathbun and W. H. Huyler, copartners under the firm name and style of the Motor Valve Manufacturing Company, against the Security Manufacturing Company, in which the defendant sought to recover affirmatively. Judgment that plaintiffs and defendant take nothing, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. S. Hupp and Ben F. Gray, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Clark, Law & Clay and Clark & Law, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Action is brought to recover $34,800 as damages for nondelivery of certain motor valves which it is alleged defendant contracted to manufacture and deliver to plaintiffs and which plaintiffs had in turn contracted to sell and deliver to their customers. Defendant alleges that it did manufacture all of said valves that had been ordered, and offered to deliver the same, and that plaintiffs failed and refused to pay a promissory note of $300 given under the terms of the contract, and asks judgment for said amount, with attorney's fees, together with judgment in the sum of $1,792.12 for valves manufactured. The trial court adjudged that plaintiffs and defendant take nothing. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment.

Under date of April 16, 1921, plaintiffs and defendant entered into a written contract whereby, in consideration of plaintiffs' order for 5,000 motor valves, plaintiffs' check for $200 and plaintiffs' 30-day note for $300, in payment of special dies required for the production of the work, defendant agreed to manufacture, at certain prices, such motor valves as plaintiffs might order from time to time during the period of one year. Defendant agreed to deliver the goods within 30 days after receipt of order from plaintiffs, with the exception of new specifications. Plaintiffs agreed to inaugurate and maintain an active sales campaign for the sale of the motor valves, and, after the initial order was completed, to purchase not less than 2,000 per month for six months, and 3,000 per month thereafter. A promissory note in the usual form, due 30 days from the date of the contract, for the sum of $300, was delivered by plaintiffs to defendant. This note has never been paid. There is no provision in the written contract requiring completion of the dies before the payment of the note, or at any other definite time. Testimony was introduced and received in reference to conversations between the plaintiffs and defendant, to the effect that the dies would not be completed within 30 days from the date of the contract, and that defendant would take care of the note until the dies were completed. On defendant's motion, all testimony as to the contemporaneous oral agreement was stricken.

[1-3] It is asserted by appellants that the trial court erred in granting the motion to strike, for the reason that this testimony was introduced, not for the purpose of varying the terms of a written contract, but simply to explain and excuse nonperformance, and that respondent is estopped to take advantage of the nonpayment of the note when due. This assertion is without merit. A contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise. Civ. Code, $\S$ 1698. There is no evidence of an executed oral agreement in the case at bar. In Rottman v. Hevener, 54 Cal. App. 474, it is said at page 479, 202 P. 329, 331:

"* * * It is the established rule in this state that the time of payment as fixed by the written contract may not be suspended or extended by a subsequent unexecuted oral agreement. Henehan v. Hart, 127 Cal. 656, 60 P. 426; Harloe v. Lambie, 132 Cal. 133, 64 P. 88. See, also, Foster v. Furlong, 8 N. D. 282, 78 N. W. 986."

Neither can the doctrine of estoppel in pais be invoked under the circumstances of this case to excuse the nonpayment of a promissory note due on a certain date. Rottman v. Hevener, supra; Lindemann v. Coryell, 59 Cal. App. 788, 212 P. 47.

In conclusion, it may be remarked that there is sufficient testimony in the record to support the finding of the court that defendant manufactured approximately 5,000 valves, but that defendant refused to deliver said valves to plaintiffs until the note mentioned in the agreement was paid, and so notified the plaintiffs, and that said note was never paid.

[4] It is elementary that one party cannot compel another to perform while he himself is in default under the contract. Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Seurich, 5 Cal. App. 252, 90 P. 88; San Francisco Commercial Agency v. Widemann, 19 Cal. App. 209, 124 P. 1056; Karales v. Los Angeles Creamery Co., 36 Cal. App. 171, 171 P. 821.

For the reasons stated, it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 18

CHOWCHILLA NAT. BANK v. NILMEIER.
(Civ. 3153.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 10, 1927.

1. Husband and wife ⇨129(5)—Wife held not estopped from claiming cows mortgaged by husband because of signing former mortgage and joint affidavit that mortgagor had title.

In action to replevin cows mortgaged by husband, wife was not estopped from claiming ownership therein because of having signed former mortgage jointly with her husband and by making joint affidavit that mortgagor owned absolute title to cows, affidavit being at most an assertion or admission of joint ownership of the property.

2. Estoppel ⇨107, 110—Estoppel, to be relied on, must be pleaded.

Where the cause of action or defense depends upon estoppel, it must be pleaded.

3. Husband and wife ⇨129(5)—Wife's statements as to ownership of cows mortgaged relied on as estoppel must have been intended to induce subsequent mortgagee to act.

Statement in affidavit of wife jointly with her husband that mortgagor owned absolute title to cows to estop her from claiming ownership must have been intended to induce subsequent mortgagee to act thereon or have led it to believe that she so intended.

4. Husband and wife ⇨129(5)—Unless wife's conduct in signing former mortgage and affidavit influenced subsequent mortgagee to make loan on cows, no estoppel arose.

Where husband and wife joined in chattel mortgage on wife's cows and thereafter husband borrowed money from bank and gave chattel mortgage on cows previously mortgaged, unless wife's conduct in signing mortgage to first mortgagee jointly and by making joint affidavit that mortgagor owned the absolute title to mortgaged property influenced subsequent mortgagee in making loan and accepting mortgage, no estoppel against her claim of absolute ownership of cows arose.

5. Appeal and error ⇨854(2)—If case was correctly decided, statements or reasons for decisions even if erroneous will be disregarded.

If case was correctly decided, statements by trial judge or reasons given for his decision, even if erroneous, will be disregarded.

6. Chattel mortgages ⇨173(5)—In absence of evidence as to amount of damages for wrongful detention of milking cows, nominal sum only may be allowed.

In mortgagee's action in replevin to recover possession of cows, where defendant by cross-complaint claimed recovery of animals and damages for their detention, while after judgment for recovery of animals by defendant damage resulting from detention of milking cows will be presumed, in absence of evidence of amount thereof only nominal damages can be allowed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action in replevin by the Chowchilla National Bank against Katie Nilmeier. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Barcroft & Barcroft, of Madera, for appellant.

J. M. Emmert and Walter C. Maloy, both of Madera, for respondent.

SHIELDS, Justice pro tem. This is an action in replevin to recover possession of eight cows and three heifers, the increase of these cows, which plaintiff claims were mortgaged to it as hereinafter stated. It appears to be undisputed that the cows in question were purchased by the defendant, Katie Nilmeier, with her separate funds during the lifetime of her husband, C. H. Nilmeier, while they were living together as husband and wife, and that the animals became the separate property of Katie Nilmeier. On January 30, 1924, and in the circumstances above stated, C. H. Nilmeier and Katie Nilmeier joined in a chattel mortgage of these cows to the Bank of Italy to secure the payment of a promissory note of that date. Attached to this mortgage was the usual affidavit of ownership and good faith. This affidavit begins, "Said mortgagor being duly sworn, individually, disposes and says," etc., and continues in the singular throughout, including the statement that "said mortgagor owns the absolute title" to said mortgaged property. This affidavit is signed by both C. H. Nilmeier and Katie Nilmeier. On April 14, 1924, C. H. Nilmeier borrowed a sum of money from the plaintiff bank and as security for its payment gave a chattel mortgage on, among other things, the eight cows, previously mortgaged as above stated, the mortgage to the Bank of Italy being thereafter released. Katie Nilmeier did not sign nor join in this latter mortgage.

C. H. Nilmeier died on July 1, 1925, while in default upon such later note and mortgage. Plaintiff made demand upon Katie Nilmeier for the sum due on the note and mortgage of her husband, and upon her statement that she would not make such payment, and that she owned the cows as her separate property, this action was begun. At the trial judgment was given defendant upon her cross-complaint for the recovery of the animals or their value assessed at $675 and for $100 damages for the detention of the animals by the plaintiff.

Plaintiff's appeal from this judgment presents very few questions for decision.

Practically the only matter to have been determined at the trial, as counsel agreed at the time, was as to who owned the mortgaged cows. This fact was determined against the plaintiff by the trial court, and, as this finding is well supported by the evidence, it should end the matter.

[1, 2] But appellant contends that by signing the mortgage to the Bank of Italy, jointly with her husband, and by making the affidavit jointly with him, that the "said mortgagor owns the absolute title" to the mortgaged property, Katie Nilmeier is now estopped to deny that her husband owned the cows, or to deny that he was authorized to later mortgage them to plaintiff. This contention is unwarranted. In the first place, the issue of estoppel is not raised by the pleadings. Where the cause of action or defense of a party depends upon estoppel he must plead it. 10 Cal. Jur. 653. The facts set up in paragraph 5 of plaintiff's answer to defendant's cross-complaint are not sufficient to raise this issue. But disregarding this omission in the pleadings and taking the evidence broadly as it is disclosed by the record, no facts creating an estoppel are shown.

The only fact that occurred before the loaning of the money by the plaintiff and its acceptance of C. H. Nilmeier's mortgage of the cattle to secure it was the joining of defendant with C. H. Nilmeier in the affidavit to the chattel mortgage to the Bank of Italy. This affidavit was a part of a transaction between plaintiff and her husband and the Bank of Italy. The statement in the affidavit that "said mortgagor owns the absolute title" to the cows was made to the Bank of Italy and was for the purposes of that loan. The affidavit does not say that C. H. Nilmeier owned the property. If we invoke the rule that the singular includes the plural and hold that where two persons sign an affidavit, as in this case, the word "mortgagor" must be read "mortgagors," if the public are to deduce any conclusion from it, it must be held at most to be an assertion or admission of joint ownership. There is nothing to show or even tending to show that when Katie Nilmeier joined in making this affidavit she intended that the plaintiff should act upon any statement in it, nor was there anything in it that should have led plaintiffs to believe that she so intended.

[3, 4] Such an element is an essential quantity in any estoppel. 10 Cal. Jur. p. 627, § 14. The alleged failure of Katie Nilmeier to assert title to the cows following their attempted mortgage to plaintiff, or to move to have the mortgage set aside, occurred after the date of the mortgage, as did the alleged statement of Katie Nilmeier to the assessor; as a consequence these circumstances could not have influenced the plaintiff in making the loan and accepting the mortgage, and it could not have relied upon them to its injury. Unless conduct is so influenced, no estoppel arises. 10 Cal. Jur. p. 627.

[5] Another contention of appellant is that during the trial the court stated to counsel for plaintiff that the burden was upon plaintiff to show that the title to the cows, the mortgaged property, was in C. H. Nilmeier, the mortgagor. Aside from the apparently obvious correctness of this statement, it presents no question for review. Thereafter and in due course the court decided the case. The question here is as to the correctness of that decision. If it was correctly decided, mere statements by the trial judge or reasons given for the decision, even if they were erroneous, will be disregarded. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 809; 24 Cal. Jur. p. 924; 33 C. J. p. 1104, § 59.

[6] The judgment in this case included $100 as damages for the detention of the cows, from the period when they were taken until the trial of the action. This seems to have been unwarranted. No evidence of any kind seems to have been offered as to the damage suffered. All that appears is that eight cows, two of them milking, were taken from defendant on the 10th day of July, 1925, and kept until the 10th day of November following. That damage resulted from such detention will be presumed, but in the absence of any evidence of its amount only a nominal sum may properly be allowed. Parke v. Frank, 75 Cal. 364, 17 P. 427; Johnson v. Levy, 3 Cal. App. 591, 86 P. 810; 17 C. J. p. 720, § 59.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the sum of $100 allowed as damages, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed, the appellant to recover cost of appeal.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

PEOPLE v. GIACOBBI. (Cr. 1351.)

83 Cal. App. 12

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 10, 1927.

1. Criminal law §159(5)—Finding of identity of one convicted of assault with deadly weapon held conclusive on appeal, in view of evidence.

Finding of jury that one convicted of assault with a deadly weapon was sufficiently identified as the one making the assault held binding on appeal, in view of positive identification by two officers, notwithstanding defense of alibi.

2. Assault and battery §67—Possession by apparent vagrant of club and loaded pistol held sufficient to warrant arrest of his companion (Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 6, and § 836, subds. 1, 5).

Possession by one who was an apparent vagrant as defined by Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 6, of a club and loaded pistol held sufficient to warrant arrest of his companion, also a vagrant, under section 836, subds. 1 and 5.

3. Assault and battery §67—One resisting arrest held not justified in shooting at officer, regardless of legality of arrest, where there was no reason to fear physical injury.

Where there was no reason for one resisting an arrest to believe that the officer intended to injure him physically, held that he was not justified in shooting at the officer, whether or not such officer was warranted in making the arrest.

4. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 775(3)—Instruction that alibi defense should raise reasonable doubt to authorize acquittal held not to reduce prosecution's burden of showing accused's presence.

In trial for assault with deadly weapon, an instruction that the accused was not required to prove an alibi beyond a reasonable doubt, but if the evidence on that point raised a reasonable doubt of his presence, it would justify an acquittal, held not to have the effect of reducing the prosecution's burden of proving the presence of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Angelo Giacobbi was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KOFORD, P. J. Defendant appeals from an order denying a new trial and from a judgment of conviction of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon. The defense at the trial was an alibi, but upon this appeal it is contended that the evidence shows justification or self-defense.

The evidence showed the following facts: Two police officers of San Francisco, after 11 o'clock at nighttime, noticed the defendant and a companion named Hale standing together at the corner of Montgomery and Broadway streets. As the officers approached the two men separated, the defendant stepping back a few paces from the curb to the building line. The officers came to Hale first, announced themselves as police officers and asked him where he lived. He did not answer. One of the officers, Gallatin, then searched him and found a large club under the waistband of his trousers. Subsequently Hale was taken to police headquarters and a further search disclosed a pistol and a piece of wire arranged with a slip knot upon his person. Upon a plea of guilty he was sent to San Quentin for violating the Firearms Act (Stats. 1923, c. 339). After Officer Gallatin took from Hale the club he put Hale in charge of Officer Lillis and approached the defendant. As he did so defendant drew a pistol and commanded Gallatin to put up his hands. The officer, instead of doing so, reached for his own pistol, whereupon defendant fired three shots at him, which did not take effect, and then turned and ran. By that time Gallatin had drawn his pistol and started to fire, but the defendant escaped. Gallatin stated that he thought one of his bullets struck, as he saw the fugitive throw up his arm.

[1] Subsequently the two officers identified the defendant in a "line up" at police headquarters, and this prosecution followed. Defendant had peculiar scars upon his chest which the city physician testified in his opinion marked the entrance and exit of a bullet. Other witnesses and the defendant testified contrary. The jury found the defendant guilty despite his defense of alibi. The determination by the jury of this issue is binding upon this appeal, in view of the positive identification of the defendant by the two officers.

[2, 3] The appellant urges on this appeal that the evidence shows justification or self-defense. This defense was not put forward at the trial either by evidence or instructions requested. The evidence shows the appellant drew and pointed his pistol in anticipation of what he thought the officer approaching him intended to do. The officers had the right to question these men under the circumstances. The two men apparently were vagrants as defined in the Penal Code, § 647, subd. 6. Hale, as it turned out, was in the act of committing a felony when questioned, not only by the possession of the club, but of the loaded pistol found afterwards. These circumstances furnished sufficient cause to arrest his companion, under subdivision 1 or 5 of Penal Code, § 836. But, even assuming that the defendant was justified in believing he was about to be arrested and that the officer was not warranted in making an arrest, the defendant's conduct in either drawing, pointing, or discharging his pistol at the officer was unjustified, there being no reason for him to believe the officer intended to injure him physically. People v. Dallen, 21 Cal. App. 770, 775, 132 P. 1064; 5 Cor. Jur. 750, § 237.

[4] The court committed no error in instructing the jury on the subject of alibi as follows:

"All the evidence should be carefully considered by you, and if the evidence on this subject, considered with all other evidence, is sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant, you should acquit him. The accused is not required to prove an alibi beyond a reasonable doubt, or even by a preponderance of evidence. It is sufficient to justify an acquittal if the evidence on that point raises a reasonable doubt of his presence at the time and place of the commission of the crime charged, if you find that a crime was committed. And you will understand also, that the attempt of the accused to prove an alibi does not shift the burden of proof from the prosecution, but that the prosecution is bound to prove his presence beyond a reasonable doubt."

In claiming that it is not necessary that the defense of alibi should be sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, appellant does not suggest any less onerous degree of proof necessary, but, as we understand his contention, it is that this instruction had the effect of reducing in some way the burden of proof resting upon the prosecution of proving the presence of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. We see no merit in this contention, and, furthermore, it will be noticed that the last sentence in the instruction expressly states that the attempt to prove an alibi does not shift the burden of proof from the prosecution.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

82 Cal. App. 675

FORD v. COTTON. (Civ. 4525.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 3, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 30, 1927.

1. Brokers ⇨62—Owner, refusing to close sale, could not deprive broker of commission because he did not own acreage he told purchaser he had.

Where owner gave agent authority to sell land for $170,000, and owner represented to purchaser that he had enough land to produce $170,000 or more at price purchaser offered per acre, and, after agreeing to sell, owner refused to close sale, he could not deprive broker of commission on ground that engineer's description showed less acreage, and therefore that purchaser had not agreed to pay owner's price of $170,000.

2. Brokers ⇨88(14)—Finding that broker brought owner into touch with qualified purchaser held sufficient, in action by broker for commission.

Court's finding that broker, acting under brokerage agreement, brought owner into immediate touch with ready and willing purchaser, able to buy at owner's price and on terms acceptable to owner, held sufficient in action by broker for commission.

3. Trial ⇨404(3)—Finding in suit for broker's commission that suitable terms were agreed on between owner and purchaser was finding of ultimate fact.

In suit by broker for commission on real estate under contract authorizing broker to sell property at certain price on terms of $25,000 cash and balance to be suitably arranged, court's finding to effect that terms of sale were agreed on between owner and purchaser, and were suitable, was finding of an ultimate fact.

4. Trial ⇨404(3)—Court, finding ultimate fact in plaintiff's favor, in effect concluded that contradictory probative declarations relied on by defendant were untrue.

Where court found ultimate fact in favor of plaintiff, it in effect found and concluded that contradictory probative declarations relied on by defendant were untrue.

5. Brokers ⇨63(1)—Broker held entitled to commission, where he produced purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase on seller's terms, and seller refused to close sale.

Broker held entitled to commission under contract with owner, where he produced purchaser who was ready, willing, and able, and who verbally agreed, to purchase on terms proposed by seller, and offered to enter into binding written contract, and owner refused to close sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thos. O. Toland, Judge.

Action by L. M. Ford against H. H. Cotton for broker's commission on sale of real property. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. G. Van Pelt and Loren O. Crenshaw, both of Los Angeles (Victor E. Shaw and Hewlings Mumper, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an action, tried without a jury, to recover brokerage claimed by plaintiff under a contract with defendant reading as follows:

"Los Angeles, California, April 3, 1922.

"Mr. L. M. Ford, 1023 Chapman Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.—Dear Sir: In the event of your being able to negotiate a sale of 73 acres of land, more or less, belonging to H. H. Cotton, et al., located immediately north of Wilshire boulevard, beginning at a point on Wilshire boulevard and Preuss road, running in an easterly direction to a point on Wilshire boulevard to the beginning of the property sold to Barman and others, being a part of subdivision of a portion of Rancho Rodeo de Las Aguas, in the city of Beverly Hills, for the sum of one hundred seventy thousand ($170,000.00) dollars, on terms of $25,000.00 cash and the balance to be suitably arranged, I hereby agree to pay you the sum of 5 per cent. commission on the sale price of $170,000.00, payable out of the first payment. Subject to any arrangement Ford may have had with C. C. C. Tatum.

"Yours very truly, H. H. Cotton."

Plaintiff had agreed that C. C. C. Tatum should have one-third of the commission, to be paid directly by the defendant to Tatum, and this is the arrangement to which the contract alludes. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for $5,666.66, being two-thirds of the agreed brokerage, and from that judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Before he obtained the brokerage contract, plaintiff had presented the property to a real estate operator named Allen Ratteree, and after the brokerage agreement was signed, plaintiff on the same day brought defendant and Ratteree together at the latter's office, in order that they might conduct their own negotiations. No written agreement of sale was ever made; but plaintiff relies upon his production of a purchaser whom he brought directly to defendant, and who in personal negotiations came to an oral agreement with defendant which, notwithstanding conflicting evidence, the court has found was made on the day of that meeting, and on the following day repudiated by defendant. All parties agree that, as a result of that meeting at Ratteree's office, instructions were given to have a written contract prepared and submitted as soon as possible by Ratteree's attorney, F. Walton Brown, who was present at the conference and made notes of the details to be incorporated in a formal agreement. Before such agreement could be submitted, however, defendant gave notice next day that he had sold to other parties, and hence could proceed no further with Ratteree. Thereafter defendant denied plaintiff's right to any commission, and in consequence this action was instituted.

The attack of appellant is upon certain of the court's findings, which in general are based on evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff. The court found that plaintiff procured a purchaser at the price and on the terms and conditions stated in the brokerage agreement. It found also that the broker brought defendant and Ratteree together, and that Ratteree thereupon offered to defendant to purchase at a price and on the terms and conditions specified in defendant's agreement with plaintiff, and that it was agreed between defendant and Ratteree that the balance of the purchase price over the cash payment of $25,000 should be paid in five equal annual installments, payable respectively in one, two, three, four, and five years from the time of the cash payment, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually. The court found further that the arrangement made was "suitable," within the meaning of the brokerage contract, and that defendant agreed to enter into a formal written agreement of sale, to be prepared by Ratteree's attorney in accordance with the terms of the understanding reached, but that, before such written agreement was completed, defendant refused to deal further with Ratteree upon any terms or conditions.

It is contended that there is no evidence to support a finding that there was any offer or agreement on Ratteree's part to buy at the price or on the terms and conditions named in the brokerage contract, but that, on the contrary, the price and terms discussed varied from the price, terms, and conditions originally prescribed, and that the conference was concluded without reaching any definite arrangement, though with an understanding that discussion might be resumed when the parties had before them the draft to be prepared by Ratteree's attorney. In other words, the defendant insists that the negotiations never went far enough to assume a concrete form. It is, of course, true that such was the testimony of defendant and his witness Tatum, who appears to have been interested in the syndicate which bought the property from defendant; but the findings show that the court gave credence to the testimony of plaintiff and his witnesses. The sole question is, then, whether or not there is evidence justifying the finding that the minds of the negotiators met upon a sale at the price and on the terms and conditions stated in the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, with "suitable" arrangement as to deferred payments.

There were present, at the conference at Ratteree's office, not only the plaintiff, the defendant, and Ratteree, but also Ratteree's attorney, F. Walton Brown, Thomas A. Hazelton, one of Ratteree's salesmen, and C. C. C. Tatum, all of whom, except defendant and Tatum, were called as witnesses for plaintiff. The brokerage agreement described a tract of land said to contain 73 acres, more or less, and the price named was $170,000, $25,000 payable in cash and the balance as might be agreed. Ratteree was proposing to buy for purposes of subdivision and sale in lots; and according to the testimony of plaintiff and his witnesses the discussion at the meeting in reference to price turned upon the question of the clear acreage left after excluding land subject to rights of way or dedicated for streets, reference being made to a map or blueprint produced at the time and now annexed to the transcript as part of the record on this appeal. The 73 acres, more or less, belonging to the defendant Cotton, are represented in the brokerage contract as comprising a tract "immediately north of Wilshire boulevard, beginning at a point on Wilshire boulevard and Preuss road," from which point the first call runs easterly to the Barman property. This language would imply that the tract lay to the north of the northerly property line of Wilshire boulevard, with the point of beginning at the intersection of such northerly property line with the easterly property line of Preuss road, and that the land traversed by Wilshire boulevard and Preuss road was excluded in computing the acreage. The tract had not been actually surveyed, and, when the defendant and Ratteree met, Ratteree testified that he stated to the defendant that he was willing to pay $170,000 if the tract itself had approximately 70 acres, but that he would not pay for land dedicated for streets or subject to rights of way.

Accordingly he proposed to take the property at its net acreage, and pay $2,250 an acre for the easterly portion, marked off on the map before them, and comprising about two-thirds of the tract, and $2,500 an acre for the residue. Ratteree testified, further, that defendant said the price would perhaps run $1,500 or $2,000 over $170,000, because of a somewhat greater acreage than was being reckoned upon, and that in fact the total price would come to $171,500, or $172,000. Ratteree also said that, in response to that statement of defendant, he himself answered: "All right, if you have got that amount of acreage in there, that is satisfactory to me." Mr. Brown corroborated Ratteree, stating that defendant declared that on the basis proposed by Ratteree there would be something over 73 acres, and that the total price would therefore be a little over $171,000; and that Ratteree thereupon expressed willingness to pay that price. Further corroboration is found in evidence given by plaintiff in his direct examination, where he testified as follows:

"The subject of price was discussed at the conference. The price mentioned was $170,000 at first, and Mr. Ratteree said it was all right. Mr. Cotton said, 'Well, if that is what it figures out,' he said, 'No; it figures a little bit more, doesn't it?' We added up the acreage that was shown on the map and multiplied them out, and it came to $171,250. We had some little argument about it, and I was prepared, if it came to a showdown, to give them that out of my commission to let the deal go through. Mr. Ratteree said, 'Well, I am buying this by the acre, and if there is two or three more acres there it don't make any difference,' he said, 'if it is there.'"

Again, upon cross-examination, plaintiff reiterated this testimony, saying:

"We figured the price at \$170,000, based upon Mr. Cotton's representation that there were so many acres there. When we got to Mr. Ratteree's office and had the map before us, we took down the number of acres in each individual block to the point where the line was drawn. I added that up in a little book; * * * figured it out to what was supposed to be $\frac{1}{1000}$ of an inch, according to the survey there made, and it came to \$170,200. They said, 'How about the prices?' Mr. Cotton says, 'Don't it go a little more than that?' And I figured it definitely at \$171,250. There was \$1,250 difference. Mr. Ratteree said, 'A few more acres, more or less, don't make any difference to me. If the land is there, I will pay for it.'"

It is thus manifest that the court based its finding upon evidence before it, which in substance showed that the defendant represented that he had approximately 73 acres net, or at any rate sufficient land to produce at the rate designated something in excess of $170,000.

As to terms and conditions, there is evidence that the parties agreed upon a cash payment of $25,000, to be made on delivery of deed, and deferred payments in equal annual interest-bearing installments, as found by the court. While the court has not made a further finding in reference to deferred payments, the evidence on behalf of plaintiff is to the effect that an agreement was reached that the deferred payments were to be evidenced by Ratteree's promissory notes secured by a deed of trust, which was to contain certain provisions for release of lots of the contemplated subdivision upon payment of certain fixed amounts. The record contains evidence also that Ratteree offered to pay a deposit on the spot, and to deposit the balance of the cash payment in escrow, with instructions to pay the amount to defendant when title should pass, but that defendant stated that that matter could wait until the contract was signed. According to Ratteree, defendant said in reference to the formal contract, "You gentlemen go and draw up your papers and get them ready by tomorrow, if you can," and promised to close then or the following day, as soon as the papers could be gotten ready, and in the meantime to send Mr. Brown an exact legal description of the property. Brown states also that, as defendant was leaving the conference, he remarked:

"Well, we have made a deal—submit your contract to me as soon as it is drawn up and close it up."

Before the parties separated, instructions had been given to Brown to prepare a formal agreement embodying the terms arrived at in his presence, and Brown testified that he had his notes taken during the conference, and that on the following day there was sent to his office a description of the property by courses and distances, which defendant had promised to procure from his engineer. Brown started to draw the formal agreement, but had not finished it when he learned that defendant had disabled himself from the performance of any agreement with Ratteree.

[1] The description of the engineer places the point of commencement at the intersection of the center line of Preuss road (60 feet wide) and Wilshire boulevard (100 feet wide), and gives the area of the tract as 73.2733 acres, less portions of Preuss road and Wilshire boulevard, amounting to 3.5355 acres dedicated to Los Angeles county for road purposes. Using these figures in connection with the map in evidence, appellant argues that the price at the rate offered by Ratteree would fall below $170,000, and that consequently plaintiff's purchaser did not agree to buy at defendant's price. There is no evidence, however, that there had been any actual survey by the engineer, or that the tract did not in fact contain approximately 73 acres net; and it must be remembered that at the conference, according to testimony relied upon by the court, defendant was representing himself as owner of enough land to produce $170,000 or somewhat more, and that Ratteree expressed his willingness to pay that gross amount, or even $1,500 or $2,000 more, for the net quantity of land which defendant declared he would be able to convey.

Under the circumstances, it may not be said that the alleged discrepancy in net acreage resulted in failure of the broker to produce a purchaser at the price fixed for the tract of approximately 73 acres. If the net acreage was as represented by defendant, he could have had at least $170,000 from Ratteree; and defendant's refusal to close the sale with Ratteree cannot deprive the broker of his commission upon the ground, here urged, that the purchaser had not agreed to pay defendant's price of $170,000. In Cohen v. Farley, 28 Misc. Rep. 168, 58 N. Y. S. 1102, the broker was held entitled to his commission, where the owner of the lot, desiring to sell, gave the broker a card describing the lot as 23 feet wide, and the broker in good faith found a person who, in reliance upon the statement on the card, was able, ready, and willing to purchase at the price demanded, but who withdrew when it was afterwards discovered that the lot was only 22 feet and 7 inches wide. See, also, Schweid v. Storandt, 157 App. Div. 855, 143 N. Y. S. 161, affirmed 217 N. Y. 637, 112 N. E. 1075, and Sokolski v. Bleistift (Sup.) 129 N. Y. S. 26.

[2] While the court did not make a specific finding as to each one of the details agreed to be embodied in the contract which Ratteree's attorney was to prepare, yet there is the essential finding that plaintiff, acting under his brokerage agreement, brought defendant into immediate touch with a ready and willing purchaser, able to buy at defendant's price and on terms acceptable to defendant, and did thus procure for defendant a bona fide purchaser at the price and on the terms and conditions prescribed in the brokerage contract, and that the arrangement made was "suitable" within the contemplation of the contract. These findings, under the record before us, are sufficient to support the judgment.

[3, 4] The defendant in his answer averred that the only terms and conditions on which he and Ratteree had agreed were as to the initial payment of $25,000, and that the terms as to the balance of the payments were never suitably arranged between himself and Ratteree. Upon conflicting evidence the court finds specifically, however, that:

"It is not true that the only terms and conditions relative to said sale upon which the minds of the defendant and said Allen Ratteree met was upon the initial payment; it is not true that the terms as to the balance of the payments were never suitably arranged between plaintiff and said Allen Ratteree."

In view of the language of the brokerage contract and the issues tendered by plaintiff's answer, the finding to the effect that the terms were agreed upon and were suitable is to be treated as a finding of an ultimate fact. Since the court found the ultimate fact in favor of plaintiff, it in effect found and concluded that contradictory probative declarations relied on by the defendant were untrue. Tower v. Wilson, 45 Cal. App. 123, 134, 188 P. 87.

[5] The law governing a broker's right to his commission, where he brings buyer and seller together and leaves them to make their own engagement, has been frequently expounded by our courts, and is thus stated in the late case of Twogood v. Monnette, 191 Cal. 103, 107, 215 P. 542, 543:

"It is also established law in this state that a written contract between the seller and the purchaser is not essential to the recovery of the broker's commission, if he has produced to the seller a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to purchase upon the terms proposed by the seller, and who has agreed to those terms and is willing and offers to enter into a binding written contract. The broker has performed his duty and has earned his commission, regardless of whether a written contract is actually entered into, or whether the sale is ever consummated by the delivery of the property and the payment of the purchase price. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 P. 1105; Merwin v. Shaffner, 31 Cal. App. 374, 160 P. 684."

The same rule has been applied still more recently in Contant v. Wallace, 62 Cal. App. 768, 217 P. 1081; Umphray v. Hufschmidt, 73 Cal. App. 140, 238 P. 749; Frank Meline Co. v. Kleinberger (Cal. App.) 246 P. 136, and Ball v. Glantz (Cal. App.) 248 P. 258.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

201 Cal. 219

P. A. SMITH CO. v. MULLER. (S. F. 11413.)

Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1927.

1. Evidence ⚡428—Evidence that written contract for purchase of glass was merely sham, to enable plaintiff to secure shipments from manufacturers, held admissible (Civ. Code, § 1658).

In action for purchase price of glass alleged to have been sold by written contract, evidence to effect that writings constituting contract were sham, and were executed only for purpose of enabling plaintiff to secure shipments of glass from manufacturers, pursuant to oral understanding between parties that plaintiff would furnish bids on each contract secured by defendant for construction of buildings, held admissible, within Civ. Code, § 1698, on theory that it did not vary terms of written instrument, but established that such contract had no force.

2. Evidence ⚡428—Evidence that parties never intended writing to constitute contract, but that another parol contract was entered into, is not objectionable.

Evidence that parties never intended writing to constitute contract, but that in lieu thereof another parol contract was entered into between them, is not objectionable, under the parol evidence rule, since it does not change a written contract by parol, but serves to establish that such contract had no force.

3. Principal and agent ⚡137 (1)—Defense that writing was not intended as contract held not to require proof of authority to orally contract of plaintiff's agent, authorized to execute writing.

In action on written contract for purchase price of plate glass, plaintiff's contention that defendant's special defense that writings were not intended to constitute a contract, but that in lieu thereof another oral contract was entered into, was not supported by evidence, because of failure to show plaintiff's agent had authority to enter into oral agreement, held without merit, in that to accept contention would be to sanction a fraud, because perpetrated through an agent.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by the P. A. Smith Company against F. A. Muller. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. L. Hatch, Jackson Hatch, and Harry G. McKannay, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harrison S. Robinson, Harry L. Price, and R. W. Macdonald, all of Oakland, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for the purchase price of plate glass alleged to have been sold to defendant, but which defendant refused to accept. The trial court found that certain writings signed by the parties, and on which the plaintiff relied, were not intended to be contracts, but were signed, and duplicates thereof exchanged, pursuant to an oral understanding and agreement that the writings should not, and did not, constitute a contract between the parties, and that they were not delivered as a contract. Judgment was therefore entered for the defendant, and plaintiff has appealed.

The plaintiff corporation is engaged in the selling and furnishing of glass and plate glass. The defendant is engaged in the building business. Plaintiff's causes of action were based upon writings, similar in form, one of which reads as follows:

"P. A. Smith Co., Glass.

"Oakland, Cal., April 27, 1923.

"No. 97.

"Mr. F. A. Muller: We will perform the labor and furnish the glass necessary to glaze the building at W.-sie 23rd Ave. bet. E. 14th & E. 12th St., owner Mr. McElhinney, architect, East Bay Planners, in accordance with plans & Specification—we will furnish and set plate for the sum of 65 off list; net cash. Disclaiming all liability for delay occasioned by strikes, labor troubles, or other causes beyond our control. This bid does not include the cleaning of glass or replacing glass broken by others.

"Exceptions: If any cement corners, they will be extra at 1.00 per lin. ft.

"P. A. Smith Co., per S. H. Sorrell.

"Accepted: F. A. Muller.

"This quotation subject to ——— days acceptance from date."

The defendant denied that any contract for the purchase of glass was, in fact, entered into. He further pleaded, as a special defense, and the court found, that in the spring of 1923 it was common knowledge among those engaged in the building business, and was represented by the plaintiff to the defendant, that there was a shortage of plate glass available for building purposes, and that on account of the shortage plaintiff would not be able to get a sufficient supply of glass to do an active business in Alameda county, unless it were able to show a considerable number of accepted orders. Plaintiff orally proposed to defendant that, whenever defendant had the prospect of securing a building contract, plaintiff would make out a bid for the furnishing of the plate glass therefor at current list prices less a discount of 65 per cent.; that, in order to enable plaintiff to secure glass from the manufacturers, the defendant should thereupon sign an acceptance of the bid; that the writing should not in fact constitute an accepted bid, but, in case the defendant became the builder on the job referred to in the bid, and had the letting of the subcontract for glass or plate glass, plaintiff would make a competitive bid therefor, the defendant to award the subcontract to the lowest bidder. Pursuant to such oral understanding between the parties, a number of purported bids were offered by plaintiff, and signed as accepted by the defendant; but the buildings with reference to which the bids were made were never built, or the defendant was not awarded the contract for their construction. On April 12, and again on April 27, 1923, in anticipation of the defendant being a successful bidder on contracts about to be awarded, the plaintiff tendered purported bids to the defendant for performing the labor and furnishing the glass required for two buildings. The procedure theretofore orally agreed upon by the parties was carried out, but in neither instance was the plaintiff the lowest bidder, and the contract for glass on each job was awarded to another. Based on these findings, the trial court concluded that no contracts for the sale and purchase of glass had, in fact, been entered into between the parties.

[1,2] The appellant objected to the introduction of any evidence in the court below in support of the special defense, and is here contending that the action of the court was in violation of section 1698 of the Civil Code, which provides that a contract in writing can only be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise. The objection was overruled, and the evidence received by the trial court, upon the theory that such evidence was admissible, not to vary the terms of a written instrument, but in support of the contention of the defendant that the writings sued upon were sham, and executed for the purpose of influencing third persons, and that the oral agreement set out in the special defense was the only contract entered into between the parties. It is well settled by the decisions in many jurisdictions that evidence that parties never intended a writing to constitute a contract, but that in lieu thereof another contract was entered into between them, is not objectionable under the parol evidence rule. Such evidence does not change a written contract by parol, but serves to establish that such contract had no force, efficacy, or effect. Grierson v. Mason, 60 N. Y. 394; Woodard v. Walker, 192 Mich. 188, 158 N. W. 846; Humphrey v. Timken Carriage Co., 12 Okl. 413, 75 P. 528; Oak Ridge Co. v. Toole, 82 N. J. Eq. 541, 88 A. 827; Birely & Sons v. Dodson (a case much like the case at bar) 107 Md. 229, 68 A. 488; Robinson v. Nessel, 86 Ill. App. 212; Deierling v. Wabash R. Co., 163 Mo. App. 292, 146 S. W. 814. "The rule that excludes parol evidence in contradiction of a written agreement presupposes the existence in fact of such agreement at the time suit is brought. But the rule has no application if the writing was not delivered as a present contract. The authorities supporting these views are numerous. * * * [Citing cases,]” Burke v. Dulaney, 153 U. S. 228, 14 S. Ct. 816, 38

L. Ed. 698. In Coffman v. Malone, 98 Neb. 819, 154 N. W. 726, L. R. A. 1917B, 258, the court held parol evidence to be admissible to show the parties to the action had mutually agreed that the purported written contract which the plaintiff was seeking to enforce was never to be performed, but was a mere sham, executed for the purpose of influencing the conduct of a third person.

Other decisions which support the rule followed by the trial court in this case are collected and referred to in the concurring opinion to Coffman v. Malone, supra, and in the note to that case found in L. R. A. 1917B, page 263. The principle seems to be so well established that we deem further citation unnecessary. The decisions relied on by the appellant (Graham v. Savage, 110 Minn. 510, 126 N. W. 394, 136 Am. St. Rep. 527, 19 Ann. Cas. 1022; Hendrickson v. Evans, 25 Pa. 441; Grand Isle v. Kinney, 70 Vt. 381, 41 A. 130) do not overcome the weight of authority of the cases above referred to. The effect of Graham v. Savage on the point we are here considering appears to have been nullified by a subsequent decision in the same state. Summit Mercantile Co. v. Daigle, 146 Minn. 218, 178 N. W. 588. Hendrickson v. Evans, decided in 1855, has but little significance, for the courts in Pennsylvania hold it to be "settled beyond all dispute," in that state, "that where at the execution of a writing a stipulation has been entered into, a condition annexed, or a promise made by word of mouth, upon the faith of which the writing has been executed, parol evidence is admissible, though it may vary and materially change the terms of the contract." Croyle v. Cambria Land & Imp. Co., 233 Pa. 310, 82 A. 360. See, also, the cases collected in the note to 20 A. L. R. 483. In the recent case, Kinnear & Gager Mfg. Co. v. Miner, 88 Vt. 324, 92 A. 459, the Chief Justice and one of the associate justices vigorously dissent from the minority rule announced in Grand Isle v. Kinney, supra, and advocate the application of the rule that parol evidence should be admissible to show that a writing never had any force as a valid contract.

[3] Appellant contends the special defense interposed by the respondent is not supported by the evidence. Its argument is that the writings upon which it relies were executed in its behalf by an agent who had authority to make such a contract for it, but it is not shown that such agent had authority to enter into the oral agreement upon which the respondent relies. We are not impressed with the argument. To accept the contention would be to sanction a fraud in the interest of the appellant, because the principal perpetrated it through an agent. Humphrey v. Timken Carriage Co., supra.

The conclusion we have reached, that the trial court was correct in holding that the writings relied on by the appellant did not amount to contracts entitling it to recover on either count, renders it unnecessary to consider the contention of the respondent that the appellant did not make a legal offer of performance, for the reason that such offer was not followed by segregation and storage of the glass called for. For the same reason, we are not required to pass upon the contention of the appellant that the findings do not support respondent's position.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

201 Cal. 169

HOGEBERG et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.
(S. F. 12006.)

Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⇨419—Industrial Accident Commission cannot increase award by amended finding after original award becomes final, without new facts or change in condition (Workmen's Compensation Act, §§ 11c, 20d).

Industrial Accident Commission has no power to increase original award by amended findings, if original findings and award have become final, without new facts or change in condition of applicant to support it, notwithstanding continuing jurisdiction, under Workmen's Compensation Act §§ 11c, 20d (St. 1917, p. 831).

2. Master and servant ⇨416—Commission's order giving notice of intention to amend finding and award held not final adjudication of right to permanent disability compensation.

Order of Industrial Accident Commission, giving notice of intention to amend findings and award based on 50 per cent. loss of earning power, was not final adjudication of claimant's right to permanent disability compensation, where such amendment was never made.

3. Master and servant ⇨416—Referee's order, not approved by Industrial Accident Commission, held not final adjudication of right to permanent disability compensation (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, § 4).

Order by referee, not approved or confirmed by Industrial Accident Commission, was not final adjudication of claimant's right to permanent disability compensation, not being order of commission, in view of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, § 4 (St. 1913, p. 280).

4. Master and servant ⇨416—Denial of application for permanent disability compensation on ground commission was without jurisdiction held not bar to second proceeding of same character.

Industrial Accident Commission's order, denying claimant's application for compensation for permanent disability on ground that it was without jurisdiction to entertain it, held not bar to second proceeding of same character.

5. Master and servant ⇨401—Workmen's petition for back compensation and award based on present condition held not insufficient as petition for permanent disability.

Petition of injured workman asking for back compensation and also for award "finding petitioner's rights based on his present condition" held not insufficient as petition for permanent disability.

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Nickolaus Meiers, opposed by Amiel Hogeberg, employer, and the New Amsterdam Casualty Company, insurer. The Industrial Accident Commission by supplemental order awarded permanent disability compensation, and the employer and insurer bring certiorari. Award affirmed.

Barry J. Colding, Theodore Hale, and H. C. Kelsey, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Warren H. Pillsbury and G. C. Faulkner, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. The facts upon which this proceeding is based are stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Tyler, Presiding Justice of the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 1. We adopt that opinion, in part, as follows:

"Certiorari to review a supplemental award made by the Industrial Accident Commission under which an injured employee was given a permanent disability compensation allowance for 88 weeks, amounting to the sum of $1,833.04.

"Petitioner New Amsterdam Casualty Company is the insurance carrier of its copetitioner Hogeberg. Respondent Nickolaus Meiers was employed by Hogeberg as a hodcarrier and on June 27, 1922, he injured his left knee through slipping and falling upon a concrete floor. Meiers was compensated thereafter by the insurance carrier and given medical treatment, but being dissatisfied therewith he filed in the office of the commission an application for adjustment of claim by him against petitioners herein arising out of the accident. Petitioners filed an answer, and thereafter said matter came on for hearing, and evidence was taken by a referee appointed by the commission. On the 14th day of April, 1923, the commission filed its findings and award in favor of Meiers and against petitioners. It found that the injury complained of proximately caused temporary total disability, continuing from the date thereof to and including the 20th day of November, 1922, for which compensation had been paid for in full at the rate of \$20.83 per week, beginning with the eighth day after said injury. It found in addition thereto that the injury also proximately caused temporary partial disability, beginning with the 21st day of November, 1922, continuing indefinitely, entitling the employee to \$10.41 per week, based upon a 50 per cent. loss of earning power, and that the amount accrued to April 4, 1923, a period of 19 $\frac{1}{2}$ weeks, was \$200.76. In accordance with these findings an award was made in favor of the applicant and against the defendant New Amsterdam Casualty Company for the sum of \$200.76, and the further sum of \$10.41 per week, beginning with the 5th day of April, 1923, until the termination of the disability or the further order of the commission. It was further ordered that the defendant company furnish to the applicant suitable surgical and hospital treatment necessary for the cure of the condition from which he was suffering as a result of the injury, and that during any period of disability occasioned by such treatment that defendant pay to the employee the sum of \$20.83 per week. The insurance carrier complied with this award. It placed the applicant in a hospital, where he was operated upon, and thereafter it compensated him in accordance with the terms of the orders.

"Despite the award so made in his favor the applicant became dissatisfied and on April 23, 1923, he filed an application for a rehearing. Petitioners filed an answer thereto and at the same time they, too, filed an application for a rehearing and a request for termination of liability. Thereafter, on the 20th day of June, 1923, the commission made its order denying applicant's petition for a rehearing. It also denied defendants' petition for rehearing and made a finding of fact that the medical and surgical treatment furnished by defendants under the commission's findings and award of April 14th disclosed no condition that should have caused disability to the applicant, and that, therefore, temporary partial disability due to injury did not extend beyond April 5, 1923. In the same order, however, the commission made a finding that the applicant was 'temporarily totally disabled by reason of the above-mentioned treatment beginning April 25, 1923, indefinitely,' and the commission gave notice of its intention to amend the findings and award accordingly, unless good cause to the contrary be shown in writing within ten days from the date of this order. The order proposed in this notice of intention to amend the findings and award it seems was never made.

"On the 2d day of July, 1923, petitioners herein filed their petition for an order terminating their liability for compensation. In this petition it is set forth that the applicant should have been able to return to work on or about May 23, 1923, as he had fully recovered from the results of the surgical treatment given him on April 25, 1923. This petition was supported by reports of attending surgeons. Thereafter, on July 9, 1923, the applicant filed a petition for a rehearing. On the 28th day of July, following, the commission made its order denying petition for rehearing. On August 20th of the same year the applicant filed a petition for an increase of compensation, and following this petition hearings were had before a referee, and thereafter, on September 7, 1923, such referee made an order terminating indemnity. This order concludes with the referee's signature and the statement that it will be approved by the commission after 5 days, notice of approval to be mailed to the parties. This confirmation, so far as the record shows, was never made, and no petition for a rehearing therefrom was filed by the applicant.

"A few days following this order of the referee a protest was sent to the commission by the attorney for the applicant, criticizing this order of the referee, and requesting that the commission go into the matter personally. Pursuant to this request the matter was sent to Dr. Leonard Ely for special examination. This physician and one Dr. Chamberlain made an examination of the applicant's injury. Dr. Ely filed his report on October 12, 1923, in which he stated that in his opinion the applicant's then disability was not referable to the accident, but rather to an infectious arthritis attributable entirely to systematic or local disease. Nothing further appears in the record concerning the confirmation of the order of the referee. The following year, and on the 30th day of June, 1924, the applicant filed a petition for a modification of the award made on the 14th day of April, 1923. This petition was accompanied by a report of the applicant's attending physician. In this petition the applicant represented that his disability had become established to such a degree and such a character that the same had become a permanent injury.

"Following the filing of this petition, which prayed for a permanent disability rating to applicant, a hearing was held before a referee of the commission, at which hearing the applicant produced evidence of his condition. Thereafter, on August 12, 1924, the commission made its order denying the petition for further compensation. The commission found that applicant's claim for additional relief had been previously determined adversely to him and had become res adjudicata, and that the commission was without jurisdiction to entertain the petition. An order was accordingly made that the applicant take nothing further by reason of his petition. On the 26th day of September, following, and more than 20 days after the making of the last order referred to, applicant filed a petition for a rehearing. To this petition defendants filed an answer, in which they set forth a history of the proceedings had before the commission and claimed that such proceedings clearly showed that the entire matter was res adjudicata and that the commission had no jurisdiction to render any further award. The answer set forth that the petition for rehearing merely presented evidence which had been previously fully and carefully considered and determined by the commission; that no new evidence was presented by the petition; and that its decision of August 12, 1924, was final upon the subject. On the 24th day of November, 1924, the commission denied the applicant's petition for a rehearing.

"The following year, and on the 6th day of January, 1925, applicant again filed a petition 'for further order and allowance for further surgical operation.' In this petition it was claimed that the original allowance of half compensation had never been terminated, but was still in force and effect. A finding and award was asked for covering the alleged claim and also that petitioner's rights be based upon his present condition. Accompanying this petition was a report of certain physicians. Petitioners herein filed their answer to this application, in which they again reviewed the history of the proceedings had before the commission and claimed that no showing was made by the medical reports that would justify the commission in reopening the case under section 20(d) of the act (St. 1917, p. 850) and that the matter had been fully and finally determined and was res adjudicata.

"Following the filing of this petition and the answer thereto, the commission set the cause for further hearing, and the testimony of the physicians who had filed the reports accompanying applicant's petition was received and considered. The commission then referred applicant to a medical referee for further examination and for this purpose the commission appointed a physician to examine applicant.

"Thereafter, on July 15, 1925, the commission made its 'supplemental findings and award,' by which it determined the applicant to be suffering from a 'permanent disability' proximately caused by the original injury, and allowed a 22 per cent. permanent disability rating thereon. The commission made a further finding that the disability of the applicant 'determined, became permanent and reached a stage at which the extent of permanent disability could first be definitely ascertained within six months, and such permanent disability, therefore, constituted a new and further disability under the provisions of section 11(c) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and this application was therefore filed in time.'

"Within 20 days after the making of this order and award petitioners herein filed their application for a rehearing. Accompanying this petition was filed a memorandum which again reviewed the various previous petitions and orders of the commission thereon and where it was again pointed out and claimed that the whole matter had become res adjudicata and the commission was therefore without jurisdiction to grant the relief given. On the 10th day of August, 1925, the commission made its order denying a rehearing whereupon the present proceeding was instituted.

"It is here claimed in support of the relief prayed for that the commission acted without and in excess of its powers and that the evidence does not justify the findings of fact. In support of these grounds petitioners rely upon the evidence, the various orders, decisions, and awards made herein prior to the filing of the petition of January 6, 1925, and upon the reports and other medical data on file before the commission.

"Petitioners insist that the order denying the petition for further compensation made by the commission on the 12th day of August, 1924, and the order denying rehearing made on November 24th, following, not having been appealed from in the manner prescribed by the act, are final and conclusive against all claims of the applicant for matters occurring prior to the date of said orders. They further contend that, while under section 20(d) of the act the commission has continuing jurisdiction for 245 weeks from the date of the injury and has the right to review, grant or re-grant, diminish, increase, or terminate compensation, such right is dependent solely upon the grounds 'that the disability of the person in whose favor such award was made has either recurred, increased, diminished or terminated.'

"It is claimed that in the applicant's petition of January 7, 1925, filed long after the previous order of November 24, 1924, had become final, and in the subsequent hearings and the medical evidence submitted, there is no evidence to indicate that applicant's disability has either recurred, increased, diminished, or terminated. Petitioners, therefore, contend that there is no evidence whatever to support the supplemental findings of the commission to the effect that the applicant was suffering from a permanent disability or that his condition is in any way different to what it was prior to November 24, 1924, the date of the last final order of the commission.

[1] "There can be no question that the commission has no power to increase the original award by amended findings after its original findings and award have become final without new facts or a change in the condition of the applicant to support it. In Georgia Casualty Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 177 Cal. 289, 170 P. 625, it appeared that the commission attempted to make a second award not based upon any new facts since its original one, but predicated solely upon a reconsideration of the facts upon which its former award was made, and it was held that the continuing jurisdiction given to the commission to rescind, amend, or alter its own orders, decisions, and awards, is limited under the terms of the act for the sole purpose of making such change as may be required by the occurrence of new facts arising after the date of the original decision; and where the commission, after a denial of an application for a rehearing, makes a second award based solely upon a reconsideration of the facts upon which an award was made, and without any evidence having been presented as a basis for the second award, such action is in excess of the jurisdiction of the commission. See, also, Northern Redwood Lumber Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 44 Cal. App. 61, 185 P. 991.

"* * * The same question involved in the Georgia Casualty Case has recently been considered and passed upon by this court since the amendment. In Benton v. Ind. Acc. Com. (Cal. App.) 240 P. 1021, it is held in conformity with the decisions above cited that the continuing jurisdiction given to the commission under sections 11 (c) and 20 (d) of the act to take cognizance of applications for additional compensation within 245 weeks after the date of injury upon the ground that the original injury has caused new and further disability does not authorize the commission to entertain supplementary applications for the identical complaint where relief has once been denied. The determination of that issue is final in the same manner as the original decision where there has been no change in the disability or injury.

"It is not here claimed that there has been any such change and the evidence shows that on the hearing had upon the last application of January 7, 1925, no statement or even suggestion was made that petitioner's condition had recurred or increased, or that he had a new and further disability, nor that any change had taken place in his condition, and it is conceded that the only question before us is whether the commission has, by reason of any intermediate adjudication, precluded itself from allowing the applicant compensation for his alleged permanent disability by the order here complained of.

"It would be a matter of supererogation to again review the many petitions filed with the commission and the orders made in reference thereto. That there is a confusion in the record there is no question. It does definitely appear therefrom, however, that on June 30, 1924, nearly a year following a prior order, the applicant filed a petition for a permanent disability rating, which petition was accompanied by a report of his physician. It is conceded that the applicant had the right so to do and was entitled to the remedy sought provided he was able to show a change in his condition to justify the commission in reopening his case. The applicant was given a hearing and an opportunity to present all his evidence. After the close of this hearing the commission on August 12, 1924, made its order denying the petition for further compensation, and found that the evidence introduced in support thereof involved matters which had theretofore been decided adversely to the applicant and which had become res adjudicata, and ordered that the applicant take nothing further from the petition or the claim asserted by him. Applicant had 20 days within which to file a petition for a rehearing. He did not do so until September 26th, following, but it was nevertheless considered and denied. It is claimed that this order did not decide whether or not the applicant was suffering from any permanent disability, but only determined that the commission was without jurisdiction to go into the question upon its merits for want of jurisdiction. * * *

While the commission granted a full hearing upon the petition filed June 30, 1924, and heard and received evidence upon its merits on behalf of all the parties thereto, it is apparent from the record before us that the order of August 12, 1924, and the order of November 24, 1924, denying a rehearing of the same, were not based upon the evidence adduced at said hearing, but were made upon the belief and finding on the part of the commission that it had previously decided the issues then before it adversely to the applicant. This is made apparent beyond any question by reference to said orders. The order of August 12, 1924, after certain recitals, contains the following as the sole finding of facts:

"The petition for additional relief filed herein on the 30th day of June, 1924, and the evidence introduced in support thereof, involved matters which have been heretofore decided adversely to the applicant, and which now have become res adjudicata, and this commission is therefore without jurisdiction to entertain said petition or grant the relief prayed for."

Upon this finding the commission made its order as follows:

"In accordance with the foregoing findings, it is hereby ordered that applicant take nothing further by reason of the aforesaid petition or the claim herein asserted."

The order of November 24, 1924, denying a petition for a rehearing, simply recites that:

"Good cause appearing therefor, It is ordered that applicant's petition for rehearing filed herein on the 27th day of September, 1924, be, and the same is hereby, denied."

This was not a hearing upon its merits. When, therefore, the petition on January 6, 1925, came before said commission for hearing, it examined the record of the proceedings of this matter and determined that the claim of applicant for permanent disability had never been finally adjudicated by said commission and that, as said application had been made within 245 weeks from the date of the injury, the commission still had jurisdiction of said matter. It thereupon proceeded to hear said application upon its merits and after said hearing and on July 15, 1925, made its supplemental findings and award. As before noted, a petition for a rehearing thereof was denied August 10, 1925. As we view the case as it now stands, there are presented two questions upon the correct answers to which rests the validity of said award of July 15, 1925. The first of these questions is as to the correctness of the finding or conclusion of the commission that the order before it was not res adjudicata, and the second is as to whether the commission was bound by its order of August 12, 1924, in which it declared that it had previously adjudicated the claim of applicant for permanent injury.

[2, 3] As to the first of these questions, the respondents claim that by two separate orders of the commission it had decided that applicant had suffered no permanent injury. One of these is the order of date June 20, 1923, and the other was the order of September 7, 1923. In the first place it will be observed from the above recital of the facts herein that the commission, on April 14, 1923, found that the injury "caused temporary partial disability, beginning with the 21st day of November, 1922, continuing indefinitely, entitling the employee to $10.41 per week, based upon a 50 per cent. loss of earning power." An award based upon and in accordance with said finding was made by the commission. Each party to these proceedings applied for a rehearing, and on June 20, 1923, the commission denied said applications. Said order was in the following words:

"It further appearing from the reports above mentioned that the medical and surgical treatment furnished by said defendant under the commission's order of April 14, 1923, disclosed no condition that could have caused disability to said applicant, and that, therefore, temporary partial disability due to injury did not extend beyond April 5, 1923, and it further appearing that said applicant was temporarily totally disabled by reason of the above-mentioned treatment beginning April 25, 1923, indefinitely: Now, therefore, it is ordered that the petitions for rehearing by both applicant and defendant be and they are hereby denied.

"Notice is hereby given that, unless good cause to the contrary be shown in writing within 10 days from the date of this order, this commission will amend the findings and award heretofore entered in accordance with the findings set out above."

No further action was taken by the commission under this order and said findings and award of April 14, 1923, were never amended or modified in any manner whatever. Just why the commission failed to cause amended findings and award to be made and filed does not appear from the record, but it is perfectly clear that, as the findings and award of April 14, 1923, were left intact, the order of June 20, 1923, can have but slight, if any, bearing in the determination of the rights of the applicant. We are fully convinced that it was not a final adjudication of applicant's claim to either temporary or permanent disability. The other order relied upon by said respondents as a final determination by the commission of applicant's claim for disability is the order of September 7, 1923. This order was not made by the commission or by any members thereof, but by a referee of said commission. Following the signature of the referee to the document were the following words:

"Notice: The foregoing order will be approved by the Industrial Commission after 5 days. Notice of approval will be mailed to parties."

This "notice" was unsigned and the record fails to disclose that any further action was taken in pursuance thereof or under said order of the referee. There is an entire absence in the record of any evidence of any order of the commission approving or confirming the referee's order of September 7, 1923. By section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1913, p. 280) an order made by a referee shall be deemed an order of the commission only when approved and confirmed by the commission. It must be clearly apparent, therefore, that this order of September 7, 1923, was not in any sense a final adjudication of any right of applicant, nor was it any order of the commission whatever. There is, therefore, nothing in the record to support or justify the finding and order of the commission of date August 12, 1924, holding that "the petition for additional relief filed herein on the 30th day of June, 1924, and the evidence introduced in support thereof, involved matters which have been heretofore decided adversely to the applicant and which now have become res adjudicata." Accordingly, it was the duty of the commission, upon the filing of applicant's petition of June 30, 1924, to proceed and hold a hearing thereon on its merits. This it refused to do for the reason, as set forth in said order of August 12, 1924, that "this commission is therefore without jurisdiction to entertain said petition or grant the relief prayed for."

[4] This brings us to our second question and that is the binding effect of this order of August 12, 1924, upon the future acts of the commission. Applicant filed a petition for a rehearing, which was denied. The order thereupon became final. Did this final order of the commission denying applicant's petition of June 30, 1924, upon the ground that it was without jurisdiction to entertain the same, preclude it from thereafter entertaining a subsequent petition for the same relief based upon the same state of facts set forth in said prior petition? In other words, is the dismissal of a proceeding for want of jurisdiction to hear the same a bar to a second proceeding of the same character?

This question has frequently arisen in cases pending before the courts of this state and we see no reason why the same rule prevailing in the courts is not applicable to proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission. In 15 California Jurisprudence, p. 129, the rule is stated as follows:

"Where a proceeding is dismissed for want of jurisdiction, the judgment or order is not a bar or estoppel in another court or proceeding wherein jurisdiction is obtained."

In Slaker v. McCormick-Saeltzer Co., 179 Cal. 387, 389, 177 P. 155, 156, this court, in considering this same question, held as follows:

"But to operate as a bar or estoppel, the judgment in a former action must have been on the merits. 15 R. C. L. 955; 23 Cyc. 1131; Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266; Hughes v. United States, 4 Wall. 232, 18 L. Ed. 303; Swift v. McPherson, 232 U. S. 51, 34 S. Ct. 239, 58 L. Ed. 499. See, also, Rose's U. S. Notes. To determine the character and scope of an adjudication, the entire record of the prior action is to be examined. Watson v. Lawson, 166 Cal. 235, 241, 135 P. 961; Smith v. Auld, 31 Kan. 262, 266, 1 P. 626. Looking merely to the judgment in the foreclosure suit, it is very plain that the court did not therein undertake to pass upon the merits of the controversy between Slaker and the McCormick-Saeltzer Company. What it did was to decline to determine that controversy, for the reason that it was without jurisdiction, in that action, so to do. Whether the holding that it had no jurisdiction was sound or erroneous is not a question for consideration here. The essential point is that there was no adjudication of the merits. Having reached the conclusion that it lacked jurisdiction, the court might more appropriately, perhaps, have ordered a dismissal as to the McCormick-Saeltzer Company, instead of adjudging that the plaintiff 'have and recover nothing of or from' said defendant. But the mere form of words found in this part of the judgment is not controlling (Dixon v. Sinclear, 4 Vt. 354, 24 Am. Dec. 610), since, upon a reading of the entire decree, it is apparent that the court had no thought of deciding the question now in dispute (see Smith v. Auld, supra). In effect, the former judgment amounted to a dismissal as to the McCormick-Saeltzer Company."

In the more recent case of Heine Piano Co. v. Bloomer, 183 Cal. 398, 404, 191 P. 900, 903, this court again said:

"In Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 P. 277, it was held that, where a suit was dismissed for want of jurisdiction or was disposed of on any ground not going to the merits of the action, the judgment rendered was not a bar to another suit. This rule finds support in 7 Encyclopedia of Evidence, 811: 'If it appears that a suit has been dismissed for want of jurisdiction, the judgment of dismissal will be no bar to another action brought in a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.' See, also, Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 183, 9 P. 176, 12 P. 449; 23 Cyc. 1150; Laguna Drainage District v. Charles Martin Co., 5 Cal. App. 166, 172, 89 P. 993; Shively v. Eureka Tellurium, etc., Co., 5 Cal. App. 236, 243, 89 P. 1073. As already shown, the order of April 3d stated that the plaintiff's motion to vacate the satisfaction of judgment was denied by reason of want of jurisdiction. Inasmuch as this order—and not the order of April 5th—represented the court's ruling on the motion to vacate, we think it clear that the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to have the satisfaction of judgment in action 76831 vacated is not res judicata."

From these authorities it would appear that the order of August 12, 1924, dismissing applicant's petition upon the ground that the commission had no jurisdiction was not a bar to the proceeding instituted by applicant on January 6, 1925. The commission, therefore, was authorized to hear said petition upon its merits. By this petition applicant sought an award for permanent disability. In effect he claimed in this petition that he was then suffering from a permanent disability as a result of the injury received by him on June 27, 1922. The only final order made by the commission relative to his right to receive compensation for this injury was the order of April 14, 1923, awarding him compensation for temporary injury to continue until terminated. We have already seen that no legal order of the commission had ever been made terminating this compensation. Applicant was therefore authorized to show under his last petition any change in his condition subsequent to April 14, 1923, and if the evidence introduced upon the hearing of said petition showed that his disability from said injury had since said last-named date become permanent, he was entitled to an award accordingly. The commission found from the evidence produced at said hearing that he was then suffering a permanent disability as a result of said injury and made the award which petitioners seek to set aside by these proceedings. It is not seriously contended that the evidence before the commission was not sufficient to support the findings upon which said award was based if the commission was authorized to receive evidence of applicant's condition prior to the several orders which we have considered above. In other words, if the commission was authorized to disregard the orders of June 20th and September 7, 1923, and August 12, 1924, and receive evidence, as it did, regarding applicant's condition at all times since the date of its order of April 14, 1923, then respondents, as we understand their position, do not seriously contend that such evidence was insufficient to sustain the findings and award of July 15, 1925. As we have already shown, the commission was within its legal rights in disregarding these three orders. In our opinion the evidence, irrespective of any contention which might be made to the contrary, was sufficient to sustain said findings and award.

[5] In the course of these proceedings the respondents have contended that the petition of January 6, 1925, was not one for permanent disability, but was for back compensation on a partial disability basis claimed to be due applicant under a prior order of the commission and for a surgical operation. It is true that said petition asks for such compensation and for such an operation. It further sets forth that applicant is still disabled and unable to work and asks that the commission enter its findings and award "finding petitioner's rights based upon his present condition." The petition was filed over three years after the date of the receipt of the injury. It might be assumed that any disability from which the applicant was then suffering as a result of said injury was permanent, or, at least, that applicant claimed it to be permanent. The petition of January 6, 1925, appears to have been considered by the commission, at least, as one for permanent disability compensation. The hearing thereon was conducted with a view of ascertaining the condition of applicant at the date of the filing of said petition, the only purpose of which was to fix the compensation to which applicant was entitled, based upon the condition in which he might then be found. Under these circumstances we are not prepared to hold that the petition was insufficient as a petition for permanent disability.

For the reasons hereinbefore stated, the petition to review said amended findings and award of July 15, 1925, is denied, and said award is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.

201 Cal. 127

SMITH v. SMITH. (L. A. 9691.)

Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1927.

Appeal and error ⇐479(1)—Supreme Court would order superior court not to enforce order granting temporary alimony pending appeal therefrom, where appeal undertaking was filed.

The Supreme Court would order the superior court to refrain from enforcing by contempt proceedings or otherwise an order against a divorced husband granting temporary alimony and counsel fees, pending appeal therefrom, where the husband filed undertaking on appeal to stay execution.

In Bank.

Action by Martha A. Smith against Llewellyn J. Smith. From an order granting temporary alimony and counsel fees, the defendant appealed. On application for writ of supersedeas to stay the enforcement of the order by contempt proceedings pending determination of his appeal therefrom. Writ granted.

W. W. Kaye, and Ralph E. Wallace, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hewitt, Ford & Crump, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This matter comes before us upon a petition for a writ of supersedeas.

Plaintiff was awarded a decree of divorce from the defendant in 1918, by the terms of which defendant was ordered to pay plaintiff $10 a week for the care and maintenance of herself and her minor child until said child reached the age of 18 years. On August 4, 1926, the child reached the age of 18 years. Within a few days plaintiff made a motion in the superior court to modify said final decree of divorce, which motion was granted, and defendant was ordered to pay $150 a month to plaintiff. This order was modified later so as to require the payment by defendant of $100 a month for three years and then $50 a month for three years. From this order defendant has appealed and has stayed the execution thereof by filing an undertaking on appeal. Pending the appeal plaintiff moved for an order granting her $100 a month temporary alimony and $250 attorney's fees and $50 for the cost of printing incident to the defense of the maintenance order upon appeal. This motion was granted, and from this order defendant also appealed, filing an undertaking upon appeal to stay execution.

The petition for the writ of supersedeas alleges that, notwithstanding the appeal from the order for temporary allowance to the wife and the undertaking on file staying its execution, the trial court is attempting to enforce such order by contempt proceedings. In opposition to the petition for the writ respondent urges that defendant is not entitled to a stay of execution upon the second order of the trial court while he is prosecuting his appeal from the first order, because to permit execution to be stayed upon the second order would leave plaintiff without means to defend the first appeal. This argument has been considered by this court in similar controversies, as will appear from the decisions of the cases herein cited. The defendant's right to stay execution of an order such as we are considering here, pending the determination of the appeal involving the main issue, has been settled in this state since the elaborate consideration given to the subject in the case of Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 199, 7 P. 456, 635, 8 P. 709. McAneny v. Sup. Court, 150 Cal. 6, 87 P. 1020, is to the same effect, as are the text and authorities noted in 1 Cal. Jur. 952, § 8.

It is ordered that the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, desist and refrain from enforcing or attempting to enforce the order of said court made on the 8th day of November, 1926, requiring the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $50 per month for the care and maintenance of plaintiff and $50 per month for the care, maintenance, and support of the minor child of plaintiff and defendant, as temporary alimony, and also requiring the said defendant to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $250 for attorney's fees and $50 for costs on appeal, and that all proceedings of the said superior court on said order be and the same are hereby stayed until the further order of this court.

We concur: WASTE, C. J., RICHARDS, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

201 Cal. 225

BRUSSEAU v. HILL et al. (S. F. 11463.)

Supreme Court of California. May 17, 1927.

1. Deeds ⇐3—Instrument described as "gift of deed" held to transfer present interest; "deed;" "deed of gift."

Statement in instrument that it is "gift of deed" held equivalent of statement that it is "deed of gift," which alone suffices to constitute it a transfer of present interest in property, if otherwise sufficient; "deed" in its usual and ordinary signification meaning a written instrument conveying title to real property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Deed.]

2. Evidence ⇐450(3)—Purported "gift of deed," containing later expression "after my death," held ambiguous as to when title was to be transferred, so as to authorize explanatory evidence (Civ. Code § 1647; Code Civ. Proc. § 1860).

Instrument stating that it was "gift of deed" held ambiguous as to whether it was limited to purported transfer to take effect after maker's death by later expression "after my death," or imported present transfer of title to property, possession of which was to await grantor's death, so as to authorize admission of evidence of circumstances under which instrument was made, under Civ. Code § 1647, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1860.

3. Deeds ⚡206—Findings for plaintiff in quiet-title suit held supported by evidence and sufficient to support judgment that deed conveyed present title.

Trial court's findings for plaintiff in action to quiet title held supported by evidence, objected to only on erroneous theory that deed was unambiguous, and sufficient to support judgment that maker intended to convey present title to plaintiff.

4. Appeal and error ⚡1010(1)—Trial court's findings, supported by evidence, held conclusive against contention that claim of title through deed of gift was negated by attempt to procure probate.

Trial court's findings, supported by evidence and supporting judgment that maker of instrument intended to convey present title to plaintiff, held conclusive against defendants' claim that plaintiff's claim of title through deed of gift was negated by his abortive attempt to procure probate of instrument on theory that it was testamentary.

5. Deeds ⚡38(1)—Description of property in general terms, as "all in my possession," is sufficient to uphold transfer, when identified by extraneous evidence.

Property described in general terms, such as "all in my possession," is susceptible of identification by extraneous evidence, and sufficient, when so identified, to uphold attempted transfer.

6. Deeds ⚡38(1)—Instrument stating "This is my gift of deed all is in my possession," held sufficiently to describe property, in view of extraneous evidence.

Instrument stating, "This is my gift of deed all is in my possession" held to sufficiently describe property, in view of extraneous evidence, in action to quiet title, that realty described in complaint was only property grantor owned in city wherein instrument was executed, and that it was property intended to be conveyed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by George W. Brusseau against Albert E. Hill, administrator of the estate of Charles Kruse, deceased, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Hill appeals. Affirmed.

Edward R. Eliassen and Walter H. Eliassen, both of Oakland (Markell C. Baer, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellant.

W. A. Sloane, of San Diego, and Paul E. Sloane, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action to quiet title to a tract of land in the city of Oakland. The complaint is in the usual brief form of pleading in such actions. The answer consists in equally brief denials of the plaintiff's ownership and averments to the effect that the title to the premises in question was in Charles Kruse, deceased, at the time of his death, and that the right of possession thereto is in his estate, of which the defendant is the administrator. The findings of fact of the trial court reveal specifically the source and foundation of the plaintiff's title to the property, and upon the basis thereof finds that all of the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint are true and that he is the present owner and entitled to the possession of the premises in dispute. The specific findings of the court rest upon uncontradicted evidence as to the transaction and the circumstances surrounding the same, through which the plaintiff acquired whatever rights he asserts in the property. These findings are in substance as follows: That on and before the 4th day of March, 1923, Charles Kruse was the owner and in possession of the premises, specifically describing the same. That on said March 4, 1923, he executed and delivered to the plaintiff, George W. Brusseau, an instrument in writing in words and figures as follows:

"Oakland, March 1st.

"This is my gift of deed all is in my possession to Mr. G. W. Brusseau after my death.

"Chas. Kruse."

That at the same time and accompanying the delivery of said instrument Charles Kruse delivered to the plaintiff the key to the house on said premises theretofore occupied by Charles Kruse as his residence, and declared to the plaintiff, "They are for you," and directed him to take care of said paper and that he "would never need them again." He also stated that he never expected to return from the hospital to which he was then preparing to go, and hence directed plaintiff to take possession and control of said premises, which the latter immediately proceeded to do. That Kruse was then suffering from an illness which proved to be fatal and from which he shortly thereafter died at said hospital. That while an inmate thereof and a day or two before his death he confirmed his previous statements to the plaintiff in conversations, in which he stated that he had transferred his said property and effects to the plaintiff in part at least in payment of a considerable indebtedness which he owed plaintiff for labor and services which the latter had rendered during previous years, and that plaintiff need not worry about his pay, as "I have given you all my property, for you have been kind to me." The trial court found from the evidence before it that such indebtedness in fact existed and formed of itself a sufficient consideration for such transfer. The court further found that Charles Kruse at the time of the execution and delivery of such instrument was of the age of about 65 years, that he had an imperfect knowledge and use of the English language, that he lived alone, was unmarried, had no family nor any relations in the United States, and that such relations as he had elsewhere he was not on friendly terms with; while on the other hand, the plaintiff had been his friend, companion, and associate for many years and was particularly solicitous for his comfort and welfare during his last illness. As conclusions of law from the foregoing facts the trial court found:

"That the written instrument executed and delivered by Chas. Kruse to said plaintiff, G. W. Brusseau, on the 4th day of March, 1923, was written and signed by said Chas. Kruse on the date it bears date, with the intention to give and convey to said G. W. Brusseau, an immediate estate in fee of all his property, subject only to a subsequent contingent life estate in him, the said Chas. Kruse."

As a result of the foregoing conclusion the court found the plaintiff to be the owner in fee simple of the property in question, and that neither the estate of Kruse nor the defendant as the administrator of said estate had any interest therein. Judgment was entered accordingly in plaintiff's favor, and from such judgment the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] The first point urged by the appellant is that the instrument upon which the plaintiff relies as the foundation of his claim of ownership of the premises in question shows upon its face that it is not a deed for the reason that it lacks certain elements required by law to constitute it a deed. These are: (a) It was not a transfer of a present interest in property; (b) It contains no operative words of conveyance; (c) It contains no description of the property intended to be affected thereby." The question as to whether or not the instrument under review is to be held operative or inoperative as a transfer of a present interest in property is one which, in our opinion, cannot be resolved from the face of the instrument itself. It states upon its face that it is a "gift of deed," which is to our minds the equivalent of stating that it is "a deed of gift." Such words, if they stood alone in such an instrument, would suffice to constitute it, if otherwise sufficient, a transfer of a present interest in property. This much would be implied from the use of the term "deed," which in its usual and ordinary signification is understood to mean a written instrument conveying title to real property. Hellman v. Howard, 44 Cal. 100; 9 Cal. Jur. p. 94, § 2. The ambiguity in the instrument in question does not arise from the use of the foregoing phrase, which in itself would be sufficiently certain as to its intent, but rather out of the use of the expression "after my death" in the same instrument. The word "death" as used therein is conceded to mean "death" by the parties hereto, and the question which the use of the phrase in which it occurs presents is as to what the maker of the instrument intended it to mean; that is to say, whether the instrument wherein the earlier expression "gift of deed" occurs was to be by said later expression limited to a purported transfer to take effect as such after the maker's death, in which case it would amount to no more than an attempted but abortive testamentary disposition of his properties, or whether the instrument, when considered as a whole, was to import a present transfer of title to the property affected thereby, the possession of which by the grantee was to await the death of the grantor. We are of the opinion that the instrument is ambiguous in the foregoing regard, and, that being so, it was the function and duty of the trial court to permit such ambiguity to be explained away if possible by proof of the circumstances under which the instrument was made. Civ. Code, § 1647; Code Civ. Proc. § 1860. The trial court was therefore not in error in the admission of that particular portion of the evidence in the case upon which its specific findings above referred to were predicated.

[3, 4] The reporter's transcript herein discloses that the objections of the defendant to the admission of such evidence went to its general admissibility based upon his theory that the instrument in question was unambiguous and could not therefore be aided as to its interpretation thereby, but that no objections were made to any specific portions of such evidence upon any other ground and no claim of error is now urged to the admission of such evidence in detail if the same was admissible at all under the aforesaid general objection. We therefore conclude that the findings of the trial court were supported by the evidence properly admissible upon the trial of the case, and that they in turn support the judgment in so far as it decided therein that the maker of the instrument in question intended to convey and did convey a present title to whatever of his properties the conveyance shall be found adequate to transfer. This disposes of certain other of the appellant's contentions, such as, for example, his contention that the plaintiff's claim of title to said property through such conveyance must be held to have been negated by his abortive attempt to procure the probate of said instrument on the theory that it was testamentary in character. The trial court, with such evidence before it, must have concluded that the plaintiff's effort in that direction did not operate to estop him from claiming under the instrument as a present transfer of title. The findings of the trial court are conclusive upon that phase of the case. They are also conclusive upon the claim of the appellant that the instrument in question was testamentary in character.

[5, 6] The only remaining contention of the appellant is that the instrument under review is void for the reason that it contains no adequate description of the property intended to be affected thereby. The language of the instrument in that regard is: "This is my gift of deed all is in my possession to Mr. G. W. Brusseau." According to the modern current of authority both in this and other jurisdictions, descriptions of property similar in general terms to that embraced in the foregoing language of the instrument under review have been held susceptible of identification by extraneous evidence, and when so identified sufficient to uphold the attempted transfer. In the case of Lick v. O'Donnell, 3 Cal. 59, 58 Am. Dec. 383, a conveyance of "one-half of my lot" was upheld upon proof that the grantor owned but one lot in San Francisco, and the instrument was held to convey title to an undivided one-half of such lot. In the case of Pettigrew v. Dobbelaar, 63 Cal. 396, the description was "all lands [of grantor] * * * wherever the same may be situated," and the instrument, though executed in Illinois, was held to cover and convey land owned by the grantor in California. In the case of Staples v. May, 3 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 250, 23 P. 710, the description was "all the lands, * * * and personal property * * * belonging to the said party * * * in Santa Clara county," and it was held that extraneous proof might be offered to locate the lands conveyed within said county. In 9 Cal. Juris. p. 306, these and certain other cases are reviewed as upholding the view that "descriptions of land, general in character, such as 'all land and real estate' of the grantor 'wherever the same may be situated,' or 'the land owned by the grantor' in a certain county, or all the grantor's 'right, title and interest' in a certain city, etc., are good and pass the grantor's interest in all his real property coming within the description." In Ruling Case Law, vol. 8, p. 1076, the rule is thus stated:

"Usually general descriptions, such as 'all the estate both real and personal of the grantor,' 'all my land' in a certain town, county or state, 'and my land wherever situated,' 'all my right, title and interest in and to my father's estate at law,' and the like, are held good. And a deed is not void merely because it conveys all one's property in general terms."

The evidence in the instant case fully showed that the piece of real estate described in the complaint herein was the only property which Charles Kruse owned in the city of Oakland, and also fully identified it as the property intended to be covered by the instrument in question. We are therefore of the opinion that said instrument was thus shown to be sufficient in the matter of description to convey to the plaintiff title to the said property.

No other questions being presented for our consideration upon this appeal, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

82 Cal. App. 764

BOTTOMS v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR MADERA COUNTY et al. ★
(Civ. 3316.)

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 5, 1927.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 6, 1927.

1. Continuance ⇨20(2)—Act permitting extension of time on application to parties whose attorneys are attending session of Legislature held mandatory (Code Civ. Proc. § 1054).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, providing for extension of time where attorney for party seeking extension is actually engaged in attendance on session of Legislature, held mandatory, not matter of discretion.

2. Continuance ⇨20(2)—Statute permitting extension of time on application for parties whose attorneys are attending legislative session applies in eminent domain proceedings (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1054, 1237-1264).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, permitting extension of time in proceedings until after final adjournment of Legislature where attorney of record of party applying for extension is engaged in attendance at legislative session, applies in special eminent domain proceedings, under sections 1237-1263, especially sections 1244, 1262, notwithstanding requirement of section 1264 that such actions shall be quickly heard and determined.

3. Continuance ⇨20(2)—That legislator became party's attorney of record after beginning of legislative session did not impair client's right to have time for answer extended until after adjournment (Code Civ. Proc. § 1054).

Where sole attorney of record of defendant in eminent domain proceedings was member of Legislature attending session, court was required, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, on application, to extend time for answer until 30 days after Legislature's adjournment, notwithstanding member became attorney of record after beginning of legislative session.

4. Certiorari ⇨5(1)—Order vacating order which extended time to file answer held reviewable by certiorari (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 963, 1054).

Order of court vacating order extending time to answer under Code Civ. Proc. § 1054, was reviewable by certiorari; section 963 not being applicable.

Application by Prentice H. Bottoms for certiorari to be directed to the Superior Court of Madera County and Stanley Murray, judge thereof, to review an order of the Superior Court vacating an order extending time to file answer in an action wherein the Southern California Edison Company was plaintiff and the petitioner defendant, and on motion of the Southern California Edison Company to intervene. Motion denied, and vacating order annulled.

Hearing denied by the Supreme Court, on the ground, and for the sole reason, that the question therein has become moot.

Robert L. McWilliams, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an application for a writ of certiorari. From the petition for the writ it appears that an action was commenced in the respondent court on the 30th of December, 1926, by the Southern California Edison Company, against the petitioner and others for the purpose of condemning certain water rights of the latter; that Hon. Raymond W. Williamson, an attorney at law in the city of San Francisco, was retained by petitioner to appear in and defend said action for petitioner: that said Williamson, at the general election held throughout the state on the 5th day of November, 1926, was duly elected as a member of the assembly of the Legislature of the state of California, to be convened and which did convene at the city of Sacramento in its regular biennial session on the first Monday after the 1st day of January, 1927; that, on March 14, 1927, while the Legislature was in session, and said Williamson was then in attendance at said session and then actually engaged in the performance of his duties as a member thereof and still was the regularly retained attorney for the petitioner in the action above named, the latter applied to the respondent court for an extension of time within which to file his answer in said action and to take any other proceeding which might be necessary therein; that said application was in writing and supported by the affidavit of the petitioner; that, on said 14th day of March, after a consideration of the application, the court made an order finding that said Williamson was then a member of the Legislature and in attendance thereon and actually engaged in performing his duties as such, and extending the time within which the petitioner might file an answer in the action or take any other steps which the exigencies of the case might require on the part of petitioner, until the Legislature adjourned sine die and for 30 days thereafter. Code Civ. Proc. § 1054. It further appears from the petition for the writ that, on the 28th day of March, 1927, and while the Legislature was yet in session and the petitioner still actually engaged in the performance of his duties as a member thereof, the respondent court, on motion of the plaintiff in said action, made an order vacating and setting aside the order extending petitioner's time to answer the complaint, etc., in said action until the final adjournment of the Legislature and for 30 days after such adjournment.

The affidavit filed by the petitioner in support of his application for an extension of the time to take any steps or proceeding with reference to the complaint in said action, as above explained, until after the adjournment of the Legislature sine die, stated that said Williamson "is, and ever since the filing of the complaint herein (the action above named) has been, the only attorney for the defendant, Prentice H. Bottoms (petitioner herein), in said above action"; that said Williamson, on the 2d day of February, 1927, as attorney for petitioner, filed in said action a motion to strike out parts of the complaint filed therein, and also a demurrer, upon both general and special grounds, to said complaint; that thereafter, and in the month of February, 1927, said Williamson argued said motion and said demurrer, and thereafter filed points and authorities in support of the motion and the demurrer; that on the 26th day of February, 1927, respondent made orders denying the motion to strike out parts of the complaint and overruling said demurrer, and gave defendant (petitioner) ten days in which to answer said complaint; that plaintiff in said action, on the 26th day of February, 1927, served said Williamson with notice of the action of respondent court on said motion and said demurrer; that thereafter the said court allowed petitioner ten days' additional time in which to answer said complaint or prepare a bill of exceptions to the orders denying the motion to strike and overruling the demurrer. The affidavit proceeds with a statement of the fact that the Legislature was then in session and the further fact that Williamson was a member thereof, representing the Twenty-Sixth assembly district in San Francisco, and then actually performing his duties as assemblyman; that the answer necessary to be prepared and filed in said action will involve "many intricate questions of law and fact," and will require, in its preparation, the undivided attention of said Williamson "for a considerable time," and that the time so required "cannot be given thereto by said * * * Williamson while he is attending to and giving necessary attention to his duties as said assemblyman." The affidavit further stated that petitioner had related the facts of said cause to said Williamson, "and affiant has been by said Williamson advised that he has a good and meritorious defense to said action on the merits," and that affiant "verily" so believes.

The plaintiff made no countershowning by affidavit or otherwise, except in so far as any arguments which might have been made in resistance to the application may be so considered.

The submission here is on the petition for the writ and the return by the respondents, certifying the record and all the pertinent proceedings in the action out of which the present controversy arises. As hereinabove intimated, the petitioner claims the right to an extension of the time in which to answer the complaint or to take further proceedings until 30 days after the final adjournment of the Legislature by virtue of the provisions of section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and this because, as is made to appear by the record before us, he is the only attorney he has employed or at any time retained or employed since the filing of the complaint in condemnation in the action referred to and is and has been, ever since said action was instituted, a duly elected and acting member of the Legislature of the state of California. That section reads as follows:

"When an act to be done, as provided in this Code, relates to the pleadings in the action, or the undertakings to be filed, or the justifications of sureties, or the preparation of bills of exceptions, or of amendments thereto, or to the service of notices other than of appeal, the time allowed by this Code, unless otherwise expressly provided, may be extended, upon good cause shown, by the judge of the superior court in and for the county in which the action is pending, or by the judge who presided at the trial of said action; but such extension shall not exceed thirty days, without the consent of the adverse party; except that when it appears to the judge to whom said application is made, that the attorney of record for the party applying for said extension is actually engaged in attendance upon a session of the Legislature of this state, as a member thereof; in which case it shall be the duty of said judge to extend said time until said session of the Legislature adjourns, and thirty days thereafter."

[1] The petitioner contends: That the above section, in so far as it applies to attorneys at law that are members of the Legislature and are in attendance upon its sessions, is clearly mandatory, and therefore, where it is made to appear that in a particular action that the only attorney a party thereto has retained and employed to represent him in the litigation involved in said action is a duly elected, qualified, and acting member of the Legislature, and, while the action is still pending, is in attendance at the session thereof and actually engaged in the performance of his duties as such, there is but one course which is open to the court before which such action is pending, and that is to grant an application, if one be made, for a postponement of further proceedings therein for the period of time prescribed in said section. We agree to that view of the section, and that, under the provision thereof, it is not a matter of discretion with the court, where the facts support such application, or where in a particular case considerations do not exist or are not satisfactorily shown which would justify a denial of the application as to whether it will order a postponement of further proceedings in the action until after the expiration of the full time so prescribed, but that it is the mandatory duty of the court to grant such postponement. It follows that points 1, 2, 5, and 6 urged here by the respondents have no application to the instant case. These points, stating them in the order in which they are presented in the briefs of respondents, are: 1 and 2. That section 1054 (Code Civ. Proc.) has no application to a case where the time (for answering after a demurrer is overruled) is not fixed by law, but rests in the discretion of the court, citing Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 715, 82 P. 381, and other cases. 5. "This statutory provision should be strictly construed." 6. That the superior court has jurisdiction to set aside an order made by it. The other points advanced by respondents are: (1) That the provision of section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to members of the Legislature does not apply to a special proceeding such as an eminent domain proceeding, citing section 1264 of the Code of Civil Procedure; Santa Rosa v. Fountain Water Co., 138 Cal. 581, 71 P. 1123, 1136; Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 26 P. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451, and Kubach Co. v. McGuire, 199 Cal. 215, 248 P. 676; (2) "That section 1054 regarding members of the Legislature has no application to a case where the member became attorney of record after the beginning of the legislative session," citing People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 342, 19 P. 161, and Stockley v. Goodwin, 78 Ill. 127. (3) That "the setting aside of the order is at most error and not necessarily even reversible error, and error cannot be corrected by a writ of review," citing Chicago Public Stock Exchange v. McLaughry, 148 Ill. 372, 36 N. E. 88. These propositions will be considered in the order in which they are thus stated.

1. The purpose of the provision of section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure is obvious. It will readily be conceded that there is no activity connected with and essential to the preservation and maintenance of the social fabric of greater importance than that of the functioning of the legislative department of a state. In exercising and administering that branch of the sovereign powers of a state that is appropriated to it by the people, in a government such as ours, in which the sovereign powers are divided into and assigned to three different, distinct, and independent departments, the Legislature is required to deal with the most sacred of human rights—rights which directly affect the life, the liberty and the property of the citizen. The members of that body, therefore, must give constant and uninterrupted attention to their duties as such while it is in session lest there be either advertently or inadvertently bad legislation put over or good laws repealed, the effect of which would necessarily be to work, for the time, irreparable damage to the state. But these propositions are well understood and their soundness will be conceded, since it cannot possibly be doubted that the members of the Legislature, particularly such members as may belong to the legal profession and engaged actively in the practice thereof, should be relieved by the law from concerning themselves with extraneous matters or interests not pertaining to their legislative duties while they are in attendance on sessions of the Legislature and actually prosecuting their duties as such. On the other hand, the suggestion may be ventured, significant in the present connection, that a practicing lawyer deals with a science involving the most abstruse learning, in its remedial and procedural as well as its substantive branch, and in conserving or preserving, or protecting or defending the rights of his clients when such rights are questioned in the judicial tribunals, the demand for his undivided attention to those causes is as necessary or imperative as is the demand upon him for like attention while he is engaged in performing the duties of a member of the Legislature. It must be plainly apparent to every person of common intelligence that in any attempt upon his part to attend to his duties as a legislator and at the same time attend to his professional engagements, he could give neither to the people whom he represents, nor to his clients, while the legislative body of which he is a member is in session, the capable service which he owes to both and which they have the right to expect from him. These considerations plainly disclose the motives of and also exhibit the wisdom displayed by the Legislature in inserting in section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure the provision the effect of which is to relieve lawyers serving as members of that body from attending to certain of their professional duties during its session, so that they may not be diverted from the proper performance of the solemn duties they owe to the people as legislators, and, at the same time, that the cause of their clients pending in the courts contemporaneously with the sessions of the Legislature may be given the benefit of the scientific attention and supervision which they require and which only a lawyer learned in the principles of the law can properly give to legal problems.

[2] These considerations are suggested as one of the answers to the proposition of counsel for the respondents that the provision of section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure regarding lawyers that are members of the Legislature does not apply to proceedings authorized and prescribed by sections 1237 to 1263, inclusive, of the same Code for invoking and applying in any appropriate case the right of eminent domain. But section 1054, considered in connection with certain other sections, clearly shows that it was intended to apply in any case, whether the proceeding involved is technically an action at law or a suit in equity or a "special proceeding," where "pleadings" are essential to the institution and maintenance thereof. Obviously, a proceeding in eminent domain could acquire no standing in a court where the grounds upon which it was sought to exercise that right were not stated in some formal manner. Section 1244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, though, clearly settles that matter. That section specifically points out what the "complaint" in a proceeding in eminent domain shall contain to state a cause of action in such cases. And section 1262 of said Code, which relates to eminent domain proceedings, declares that, "except as otherwise provided in this title, the rules of pleading and practice in civil actions now in force in this state are applicable to the proceedings mentioned in this title, and constitute the rules of pleading and practice therein." Lastly, in this immediate connection, it may be observed that no logical argument can be advanced supporting the proposition that the reason for the rule declared in section 1054 regarding attorneys that are members of the Legislature is less pertinent or applicable to proceedings or actions looking to the exercise of the right, under the doctrine of eminent domain, to take private property for a public use, than to any of the common or usual actions at law or suits in equity.

There is absolutely nothing in the language of section 1264 of the Code of Civil Procedure (cited by respondents) which lends support to the position of counsel for respondents that section 1054 has no application to actions or proceedings in eminent domain. That section merely provides that in all actions brought to enforce the right of eminent domain, the same shall, by any court in which they are instituted, be given preference over all other civil actions therein, in the matter of setting such actions for hearing or trial, and in hearing the same, "to the end that all such actions shall be quickly heard and determined." Of course, it is eminently proper that the Legislature should require that actions in such cases, which involve the proposition of taking private property for a public use against the consent of the owner, should be brought to trial and determined with a greater degree of alacrity than is the case in the common run of civil actions, for the obvious reason that, so long as such actions are pending and undisposed of, the owner of the property sought thus to be condemned or taken from its owner is himself practically deprived of the right to use or utilize it. What section 1264 really means is, not that the defendant in such case shall be forced to such haste in the preparation of his defense as would preclude him from making full and proper preparation therefor, both as to his pleading and proof, or that he shall be deprived of the right to take any step in its preparation which under the law is common in its application to all actions or any proceeding in courts which call for the determination of an ultimate issue, but that, after issue has been joined therein, such action shall be brought to trial with such promptitude as will facilitate the earliest final disposition thereof consistent with a due regard to all the rights of all the parties thereto, and to that end it shall in the matter of setting the same for trial and in the trial thereof, be given preference over any other civil action pending at the same time.

The cases cited by the respondents on the point now under review are the following: Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 26 P. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451; Santa Rosa v. Fountain Water Co., 138 Cal. 579, 71 P. 1123, 1136; Kubach Co. v. McGuire, 199 Cal. 215, 248 P. 676. These cases are not in point. The first named case was one for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien on a public schoolhouse. The respondent (board of education) rested its case upon the proposition that public buildings were not subject to the liens of materialmen and mechanics for material used therein and labor bestowed thereon. The appellant argued that public buildings were "included both in the word 'property,' used in the Constitution, and in the phrase 'any building,' used in the section of the Code, allowing such liens on privately owned buildings." The Supreme Court, referring to appellant's contention, said:

"But this ignores the rule of statutory construction, that the state is not bound by general words in a statute, which would operate to trench upon its sovereign rights, injuriously affect its capacity to perform its functions, or establish a right of action against it."

Santa Rosa v. Fountain involved an action to condemn for a public use certain property. A motion for a change of the place of trial from Sonoma county to the city and county of San Francisco was made and denied, and an appeal from the order denying the motion taken. The ground of the motion was that the residence of the defendant being in the city of San Francisco, section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure entitled it as of right to a change of the place of the trial to that city and county, said section providing that in certain actions, the place of trial shall be in the county "in which the defendants, or some of them, reside." The Supreme Court, holding that the denial of the motion was proper, said that section 1243 of the Code of Civil Procedure establishing the territorial jurisdiction in eminent domain actions laid down the only and exclusive rule as to the venue of such actions, and that section 395, therefore, had no application thereto.

The case of Kubach Co. v. McGuire, etc., involved the question whether the authorization by a vote of the voters of the city of Los Angeles for a bond issue to secure money to finance the erection of a new city hall of 28 stories, or 400 feet in height, in that city, was in conflict with a provision of the city charter of that municipality prohibiting the erection of a building within the zone within which the towering structure was proposed to be constructed exceeding 150 feet in height. In holding the proposal was in no way offensive to the charter provision referred to, the court, through Mr. Justice Shenk, speaking of said charter, among other things, said:

"Under the Constitution, the charter of the city is not only the organic law of the city, but it is also a law of the state within the constitutional limitations. Ex parte Sparks, 120 Cal. 395, 399, 52 P. 715; Dalton v. Leland, 22 Cal. App. 481, 487, 135 P. 54; Stern v. City Council of Berkeley, 25 Cal. App. 685, 688, 145 P. 167. Being an enactment in the exercise of the lawmaking power of the state, it is subject to the recognized rules of statutory construction. In the interpretation of a legislative enactment it is the general rule that the state and its agencies are not bound by general words limiting the rights and interests of its citizens unless such public authorities be included within the limitation expressly or by necessary implication. Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. Chenu, 188 Cal. 734, 207 P. 251; Balthasar v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 187 Cal. 302, 202 P. 37, 19 A. L. R. 452; Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 26 P. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451; Wittaker v. County of Tuolumne, 96 Cal. 100, 30 P. 1016."

It is readily to be noted that the principles discussed in the above cases and as applied therein afford no support to the position of the respondents here. We will not take the trouble of explaining wherein, according to our view, the doctrines of those cases have no relevancy to the point we are discussing further than to say that, while the right of eminent domain is an attribute of sovereignty and solely under the control of the state, and while, furthermore, those persons upon whom the state has deemed it proper to confer the exercise of that power for certain designated purposes, when exercising the power, are, at least theoretically, agents of the state, the people through their Constitution, in view of the fact that, to invoke that power, there must be a judicial adjudication of the question of use, necessity, and compensation, have clothed the Legislature with a broad discretion in determining the procedure to be followed in such cases. In exercising this power, the Legislature has, as we have seen, provided that "except as otherwise provided in this title [title dealing with the right of eminent domain], the rules of pleading and practice in civil actions now in force in this state are applicable to the proceedings mentioned in this title, and constitute the rules of pleading and practice therein." This provision is broad enough to include, as applicable to cases of this character, the provisions of section 1054, and there is not, under the title relative to "eminent domain," any provision establishing a different rule from that established by the section just named. Obviously, the case here is not of that class of cases involving the state or any of its mandatories to which the administration of certain of the state sovereign powers is committed and as to which, to bring them within the ordinary rules regulating the reciprocal obligations and duties owing from one to another, there must be definitely expressed authority therefor by the state itself. In other words, the case here does not fall within the rule that the state or its agencies in such matters are not "bound by general words limiting the rights and interests of its citizens unless such public authorities be included within the limitation expressly or by necessary implication." Kubach Co. v. McGuire, supra.

[3] 2. The contention that section 1054, relating to attorneys that are members of the Legislature, "has no application to a case where the member became attorney of record after the beginning of the legislative session," involves the point next to be considered. Counsel for respondents cite People v. Golden-son, 76 Cal. 328, 342, 19 P. 161, and Stockley v. Goodwin, 78 Ill. 127, as supporting this contention. Those cases appear to support the respondents' position upon that proposition, although we are frank to say that we can perceive no logical reason for holding, as an abstract proposition, that section 1054 should not apply to a case where the attorney is employed after the session of the Legislature of which he is a member has commenced, as well as to the case where he has been employed before the legislative session has begun. Particularly should this be held to be the rule in this state, in which our legislative sessions are divided into two periods, since, to follow the rule laid down in the cases named, might, in many conceivable instances, preclude an attorney at law from accepting employment in cases about to be transmuted into actions in the courts pending the recess period of the Legislature, or, more important still, might prevent an attorney regularly employed for many years as the legal adviser of an individual, whose general business he is thoroughly familiar with, from attending to the preliminaries of an action brought in the courts while the Legislature is in session against such client and forcing the latter to employ an attorney not at all familiar with the legal phases of his business affairs. Moreover, it is known as a matter of common notoriety that in the last two or three decades the tendency with members of the legal profession has been, so that now it is pretty generally the course adopted by lawyers, to specialize in their practice in particular branches of the law, as, for instance, many devoting themselves in the practice exclusively to corporation law, others to what may be termed "water law," and so on through the various ramifications or branches of the vast body of the science of jurisprudence. The law relating to water rights, when invoked in the courts, always develops intricate legal problems, and actions at law or suits in equity arising thereunder demand, for their proper presentation in the courts, legal ability of the highest order—lawyers not only profoundly learned in the general principles of the law, but who have made a special study of that branch thereof and have had years of experience in applying its principles to concrete cases. These observations are advanced to show that a litigant should be entitled to call to his aid in a case which not only involves legal problems but property rights of transcendent importance, the lawyer or lawyers in whom he prefers to confide the care of undertakings of such tremendous moment to him. It is to be conceded, however, that cases may arise in which section 1054, in so far as it relates to lawyers that are members of the Legislature, should not be given application. If it be shown that the party to the action claiming the benefit of that provision of said section has other attorneys of record in the case capable of managing it in court, or that some attorney, a member of the Legislature, had been employed for no other purpose than to secure to a party the benefit of the provision in question from sinister or improper motives, then, in either such cases, particularly in the last suggested, a continuance should not be granted. In this case, so far as the record advises us, the defendant at no time before or at the time the action was commenced had any other attorney to represent him in the action out of which this proceeding grows than said Williamson. On the contrary, the uncontradicted affidavit of the defendant declares that Raymond D. Williamson is the only attorney that he has had in said action since the commencement thereof. While the language of the affidavit, in this particular, may not be as direct or explicit as it should be and is always desirable in a showing such as should be made on a motion for a postponement of the trial of a cause or other like motion, it is certain that from the affidavit it cannot be assumed or inferred that he had at any time at and after the time the action was begun any other attorney. So far as this record shows, Williamson might be and have been before the commencement of the action defendant's regularly retained attorney. The complaint in the action, as shown, was filed on the 30th day of December, 1926. On February 2, 1927, the Legislature being in recess, Williamson filed a demurrer to the complaint and a motion to strike out certain parts thereof, and later in that month argued the demurrer and motion, the same being, as seen, overruled and denied. The return (the orders of respondent on the demurrer and the motion) shows that Raymond D. Williamson was the only attorney who appeared for defendant at the hearing of those proceedings. There was, so far as the record here discloses, no attempt to show that the act of the defendant in retaining and employing Williamson as his attorney to represent him in the action was not prompted by good faith or not because defendant did not prefer him as such attorney over other attorneys. Our conclusion upon this branch of this discussion is that the record before us does not support the point here considered.

[4] 3. The remedy herein sought is proper. There is no appeal from an order granting or refusing to grant, or, as here, setting aside an order granting a continuance of the trial of a case. Section 963, Code Civ. Proc. Such an order would be reviewable on an appeal from the judgment, but the circumstances of this case obviously require a more speedy remedy than would thus be afforded. The case of Chicago Public Stock Exchange v. McClaughry, 148 Ill. 372, 36 N. E. 88, does not hold otherwise. It merely holds that it was error to deny a motion for a continuance of the trial of a certain case, upon the showing made, on the ground that the appellant's attorney was, at the time the motion was made, a member of and in actual attendance upon a session of the Legislature. So it was error for the court in this case to grant the motion to set aside its order continuing the trial of the action until after the Legislature adjourned sine die and for 30 days thereafter; but it does not follow that such error is reviewable only by appeal. No jurisdictional writ was ever issued except upon some alleged error of an inferior tribunal exercising judicial functions. In the Illinois case named the main question was whether, in a suit to enjoin the defendant from committing acts of trespass upon the plaintiff's property, injunction would lie where the several acts of trespass were committed by the same person. The court held that for the trespasses committed the plaintiff had available to him an adequate remedy at law, in that the wrongs complained of were committed by one and the same person, that it was not, therefore, a question of a multiplicity of suits, and that the loss suffered by plaintiff in such case "would be susceptible of compensation in damages."

The Southern California Edison Company, alleging that it is "the real party in interest" in the action from which the present proceeding arises, submitted, at the hearing of the proceeding before this court, a motion to be allowed to intervene herein. The ground upon which the right of intervention is based is that the petitioner herein, on applying for the writ of review issued herein, did not disclose to this court that the said action involved a special proceeding or not the ordinary action at law or suit in equity. The assumption was and is that the provision of section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure regarding attorneys that are members of the Legislature has no application to an action or proceeding in eminent domain, and that had this court been apprised or aware of the nature of the action this writ would not have been granted and issued. The conclusion at which we have arrived, as announced above, relative to the question of the applicability of said provision of section 1054 to a proceeding or action in eminent domain deprives the proposed intervention on the ground stated of all force, assuming, without deciding, that it would in any event have exercised controlling influence in the decision on this writ.

The motion of the Southern California Edison Company for permission to intervene herein is denied, and the order is annulled.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

82 Cal. App. 685

HAMMOND LUMBER CO. v. CRAVENS.
(Civ. 4313.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. May 3, 1927.

1. Compromise and settlement ⚡23(3)—Evidence held to show forbearance to prosecute lien suit under agreement in consideration of promise to pay money by way of compromise.

In action for money, evidence held to show oral agreement by plaintiff not to further prosecute pending action to foreclose lien, and to dismiss action in consideration of defendant's promise to pay money by way of compromise and performance by plaintiff of agreement.

2. Contracts ⚡53—Actuality of consideration, rather than quantum, is essential for contract in action at law.

In action at law, it is the actuality of consideration, rather than its quantum that supplies the essential ingredient of a contract.

3. Compromise and settlement ⚡6(3)—Oral agreement to forbear prosecution of lien suit and dismiss action fully performed held sufficient consideration for promise to pay money (Civ. Code, § 1605).

Under Civ. Code, § 1605, oral agreement by plaintiff to forbear prosecution of lien suit and to dismiss suit fully performed of which defendant received benefit, together with detriment suffered by plaintiff through forbearance of prosecution, was sufficient consideration for defendant's promise to pay money therefor.

4. Compromise and settlement ⚡2, 20(1)—Enforcement of oral agreement to pay money for forbearance of further prosecution of lien suit did not require novation or dismissal of suit.

In action against defendant purchasing property subject to plaintiff's lien and promising to pay money to plaintiff in consideration of oral agreement to forbear prosecution of lien suit and to dismiss suit on receipt of agreed amount, it was not necessary to prove novation releasing original debtors and accepting defendant in their stead or that suit should be dismissed.

- 5. Compromise and settlement $\Leftrightarrow$ 15(2)—Defendant orally promising to satisfy lien for forbearance to prosecute lien suit could not repudiate liability after court lost jurisdiction and defendant dismissed suit (Code Civ. Proc. § 581a).

Where defendant purchasing property subject to lien continued oral promises to settle amount of lien in consideration of plaintiff's forbearing to further prosecute suit, until court had lost jurisdiction and lien was extinguished by dismissal on motion of defendant under Code Civ. Proc. § 581a, defendant could not repudiate liability under agreement.

- 6. Compromise and settlement $\Leftrightarrow$ 20(1)—Direction by plaintiff's business agent to attorney of record to forbear prosecution of lien suit on defendant's agreeing to pay money showed sufficient control of suit to defendant's advantage.

In action to recover money orally promised by defendant in consideration of plaintiff's forbearing to further prosecute lien suit, direction to plaintiff's attorney of record to refrain from further prosecution, made by authorized business agent of plaintiff, showed actual control of suit to advantage of defendant.

- 7. Frauds, statute of $\Leftrightarrow$ 33(3)—Oral promise by defendant purchasing property subject to lien to satisfy lien on forbearance of further prosecution of lien suit held enforceable; "original undertaking" (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 2, § 2794, subd. 3).

Where defendant purchased property subject to lien and entered into possession, oral promise to satisfy lien in consideration of plaintiff's forbearing to further prosecute lien suit was not conditional or collateral promise to answer for debt of another, but an original undertaking based on beneficial consideration moving directly to defendant from plaintiff, excluded from operation of Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 2, requiring promises to answer for debt of another to be in writing, and on performance by plaintiff promise was enforceable under Civ. Code, § 2794, subd. 3.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Original Undertaking.]

- 8. Frauds, statute of $\Leftrightarrow$ 33(3)—Oral promise to compromise lien suit on forbearance of further prosecution became original contract on acceptance, and was admissible in suit to enforce promise.

In action based on uncompleted agreement for compromise of lien suit, oral promises by defendant to satisfy lien on forbearance by plaintiff of further prosecution of suit became original contract between parties on acceptance by plaintiff, and was admissible in evidence without being committed to writing as prescribed by Civ. Code, § 1624.

- 9. Compromise and settlement $\Leftrightarrow$ 2—Agreement to compromise controversy is valid.

An agreement to compromise is valid because it is for the settlement of a controversy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by the Hammond Lumber Company against A. H. Cravens. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Goodwin & Morgrage, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $600 and interest, found by the court to be owing to plaintiff under verbal promises of defendant to pay said sum in consideration of plaintiff's agreement to refrain from further prosecution of a pending action to foreclose a lien for materials supplied for, and used in, buildings constructed on land acquired by defendant after the lien attached, and to dismiss the action on receipt of the agreed amount. The appellant states that the appeal involves only the correctness of rulings of the trial court admitting oral testimony of the alleged promise by defendant to pay the antecedent debt of another, and of the court's order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

During a period when the Title Insurance & Trust Company and J. T. Lyons were owners, or reputed owners, of the property subject to the lien, certain lumber used in the construction of buildings thereon was furnished by plaintiff, of the purchase price of which there remained unpaid a balance of $737.49. On July 18, 1916, plaintiff had instituted, and caused summons to issue in, an action to enforce plaintiff's claim of lien against the property for the unpaid balance. Defendant was not a party to that action, but at a time in 1916, after the action had been begun and before service of summons on any of the defendants therein, Cravens, the defendant here, entered into a contract of purchase of the property, with part of the purchase price payable in futuro, and thereupon took possession. He stated in one part of his testimony that he knew of the lien on the property, in another part that he first learned that the lien had not been taken care of, and was a cloud on the title, when he asked for a deed in the year 1918. Owing to some expectation of a settlement of the lien suit, summons was not served on any of the defendants until July 8, 1918, at which time it was served on the defendant Lyons, the only defendant ever served in that action. There was never any appearance in the action by Lyons or any other defendant. After the service on Lyons, no return of summons was made until July 29, 1920, more than three years after its issuance and after service of notice of motion by Cravens to dismiss the action under section 581a, Code of Civil Procedure. The motion to dismiss was granted August 12, 1920, and this present action, based on previous verbal promises of Cravens to compromise and settle plaintiff's claim for $600, was then begun. The complaint contains three counts, each pleading a separate promise by defendant at as many different times, the first in September, 1918, the second in January, 1919, and the third in June, 1920. The defendant denied all such promises, but the court found them all to have been made as alleged in the complaint and awarded judgment against defendant accordingly.

The defendant contends that there was a lack of consideration for any of the promises, and that in any event they were promises to answer for the debt of another and invalid under subdivision 2 of section 1624 of the Civil Code because not in writing, and that the court erred in admitting oral evidence of any such promises. These contentions have, however, no justification in the record.

The court finds that each of defendant's promises was made in consideration of plaintiff's agreement not to prosecute the lien suit or take any further proceedings therein, and that this agreement was kept on plaintiff's part. These findings are fully supported by the evidence. According to testimony given on behalf of plaintiff, the defendant called on plaintiff's agent, C. S. Anderson, about September 1, 1918, and, exhibiting the copy of the summons served on Lyons, said that he had heard of the case from Lyons. Upon the representation that he desired to avoid the expense of litigation he offered to pay $600 in full settlement, promising to make such payment if the Hammond Lumber Company would refrain from prosecuting the action, and proposing that the case should stand without either further service of process or further prosecution. Anderson stated that this arrangement would be agreeable, and that they would accommodate Cravens. Accordingly, the prosecution of the case was allowed to linger. A few months later, as Anderson testified, he asked Cravens, in January, 1919, to make payment as had been previously agreed, whereupon Cravens said that he was short of money owing to the fact that he had in storage beans that he could not sell; but he agreed to pay in January, 1920, and also to sign a letter to be prepared by Anderson. Though such a letter was submitted to Cravens, it was, nevertheless, not signed. Again, at the time of Anderson's call in January, 1919, Anderson testified that he promised Cravens that the action would not be prosecuted. Payment not having been made, Anderson, accompanied by A. W. Greiner, a corroborating witness in the case, called on Cravens at a date fixed by the latter as about July 26, 1920; and, according to both Anderson and Greiner, Cravens said on that occasion that his beans were still unsold but that he expected to dispose of them shortly, and promised that as soon as he could sell, he would pay the $600. Anderson said in his testimony that at that time he made mention of the fact that the lien suit had been pending a long time and that something should have been done earlier, to which Cravens replied that Anderson had agreed to wait; and in this statement Anderson acquiesced, saying, "Well; we will wait." On that occasion Anderson presented also a letter, bearing date July 26, 1920, for Cravens' signature; and Cravens then said that he did not want to sign the letter, but that he would take care of the $600.

[1-3] It appears from the testimony recited that defendant, knowing of the lien suit and desiring to avoid the expense incident to litigation looking to a foreclosure sale, asked to have the action lie dormant and further service, or return, of process withheld, and in consideration of the promise of delay, followed by actual delay, in prosecution of the suit, and of the grace of additional time allowed to satisfy the claim of lien, he agreed to pay $600 by way of compromise. There was both an agreement to forbear further prosecution of the suit and an actual forbearance. In actions at law it is the actuality of a consideration, rather than its quantum, that supplies the essential ingredient of a contract; and the promise of delay, duly and fully performed, of which defendant received the benefit, together with the detriment suffered by plaintiff through the delay, was a sufficient consideration for defendant's promise to pay. Civ. Code, § 1605.

[4, 5] It was not necessary that there should be a novation, through release of the original debtors and acceptance of defendant in their stead, or that the foreclosure suit should be dismissed by plaintiff. Defendant wanted his property cleared of the lien; and, after lulling plaintiff into a sense of security by oft-repeated promises until the court had lost jurisdiction, and the lien was extinguished by a dismissal of the action on motion of the defendant himself as owner of the property in suit, defendant is in no position to repudiate his liability.

[6] A further point made on behalf of defendant is that Anderson, because not the attorney of record in the lien suit, could not control the action. Anderson was, however, an authorized business agent of plaintiff, and plaintiff, or its authorized agent, had power to, and did, direct the attorney of record to refrain from further prosecution. In that way there was actual control of the suit to the advantage of defendant.

[7] Defendant's objections that his promises of payment are unenforceable because not in writing, and that oral testimony concerning them was inadmissible, are also untenable. None of the promises was a conditional or collateral promise to answer for the debt of another. Each was a promise made directly to promote and subserve an interest of defendant himself, and became an original undertaking on his own part, based upon a beneficial consideration moving directly to himself from plaintiff. Hence these promises are excluded from the operation of section 1624 of the Civil Code and are made provable by oral evidence, and enforceable, under subdivision 3 of section 2794 of the Civil Code. Fuller v. Towne, 184 Cal. 89, 96, 193 P. 88; Leslie v. Conway, 59 Cal. 442, 444; Fairchild v. Cartwright, 39 Cal. App. 118, 121, 178 P. 333; Doe v. Allen, 1 Cal. App. 560, 564, 82 P. 568.

The case of Brightman v. Hicks, 108 Mass. 248, on which defendant relies, is not applicable here. In that case the defendant was not in possession of the property subject to the lien, nor was there a consideration moving to him so as to make his promise an original rather than a collateral undertaking. The present case has more resemblance to the ancient case of Williams v. Loper, 3 Burr. 1886 (97 Eng. Rep. 1152), where a landlord having a lien on an insolvent tenant's goods for rent was about to distrain, but was induced to refrain by an agent of the tenant's assignee for the benefit of the creditors, who promised verbally to pay the rent. The promise was held enforceable as an original obligation.

[8, 9] It may be said further that the oral evidence of each of defendant Cravens' promises was admissible not only for the reasons given; but also because of the fact that this action is founded upon an uncompleted agreement for the compromise of the lien suit. Plaintiff accepted Cravens' verbal offer to pay $600 in full settlement of plaintiff's claim of lien against Cravens' property; and each offer when accepted became an original bargain between plaintiff and Cravens, controlled by the principles applicable to contracts in general. Cravens' promises were therefore provable as the basis of the several contracts here sued upon in separate counts. An agreement to compromise is valid because it is for the settlement of a controversy; and, so far as section 1624, Civil Code, is concerned, the terms of each of the agreements between the parties, treated as an original contract of compromise, were such as to be valid without being committed to writing.

It follows from what has been said that no error was committed in allowing the oral evidence to which defendant takes exception, and that the evidence justifies the findings of the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

MILLER v. GREGORY, Judge of Superior Court et al. (Civ. 3315.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 30, 1927.

1. Prohibition ⇨17—Prohibition did not lie on application of stranger to record below to interfere with order in supplemental proceedings (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 386, 720).

Writ of prohibition did not lie to restrain proceedings under order entered in supplemental proceedings directing clerk to pay out moneys which had been tendered him by debtor in another action, notwithstanding claim that petitioner had made reimbursement for money so tendered, where petitioner was stranger to record below and clerk had not sought interpleader under Code Civ. Proc. § 386, or claimed adverse interest under section 720.

2. Execution ⇨397—On assertion of adverse claim in supplemental proceedings, court has no jurisdiction except to impound property and authorize actions to adjudicate rights therein (Code Civ. Proc. § 720).

Where, in supplemental proceedings, person alleged to have judgment debtor's property claims adverse interest or denies debt, under Code Civ. Proc. § 720, court's jurisdiction is limited to authorizing institution of actions to determine right to money or property and to provide for its retention or impounding until final adjudication.

Application by C. W. Miller for writ of prohibition prayed to be directed to H. D. Gregory, Judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of Butte, and C. F. Belding, Clerk, to restrain proceedings under an order directing the clerk to pay over a certain sum in his possession to C. J. Luckehe, pursuant to supplemental proceedings, in an action wherein C. J. Luckehe was plaintiff and J. P. Gordon and C. E. Pfister defendants. Writ denied.

Seth Millington, of Gridley, for petitioner. Raymond A. Leonard, of Oroville, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This matter comes before us upon a petition of C. W. Miller asking that a writ of prohibition be issued from this court directed to Hon. H. D. Gregory, as judge of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Butte, and C. F. Belding, clerk of said court, restraining and prohibiting further proceedings under an order of said court, directing the said C. F. Belding to pay over and deliver the sum of $819.75 to one C. J. Luckehe, now in possession of and under the control of said C. F. Belding, pursuant to supplemental proceedings had in the case of C. J. Luckehe against J. P. Gordon and C. E. Pfister, pending in said court.

It appears from the papers on file in this action and the stipulations of counsel entered into in open court upon the hearing hereof that in a certain action prosecuted in said superior court, wherein J. P. Gordon and C. E. Pfister were plaintiffs against C. J. Luckehe, one W. H. Carlin, who then and there appeared as attorney for the plaintiffs, did in open court make and tender the sum of $819.75 to the defendant in satisfaction of the controversy then in issue between the parties, which tender was refused by C. J. Luckehe, the defendant in the action then pending; that the action referred to was being prosecuted and the tender was made in open court on or about the 6th day of October, 1926; that the said W. H. Carlin made the tender by his own personal check then and there delivered by him to the respondent C. F. Belding, the clerk of said court; that thereafter, and on or about the 20th day of October, 1926, the said W. H. Carlin was reimbursed for the money tendered by him, as aforesaid, and left in the custody of the respondent Belding.

The petition alleges that the reimbursement to the said Carlin for the money tendered by him in the action referred to and left in the care and custody of the respondent Belding was made by the petitioner, C. W. Miller, herein out of funds of which he, the said Miller, was the owner.

It further appears from the pleadings and papers on file herein and the stipulations of counsel that in the action of Gordon and Pfister v. Luckehe judgment was rendered and entered for the defendant for his costs. The action was prosecuted on account of a certain lease, or contract of sale, for a certain tractor, of which the defendant had possession, and for the recovery of which the plaintiffs were prosecuting the action referred to, and the tender made and refused was of the amount upon the lease contract, or contract of sale, admitted to be due by the plaintiffs on the purchase price of the tractors in question.

It further appears from the papers on file that in a certain other action begun and prosecuted by C. J. Luckehe, as plaintiff, against J. P. Gordon and C. E. Pfister, as defendants, the plaintiff obtained judgment against said defendants in the sum of $2,711.71, as principal, $54.57 as costs, and attorney's fees in the sum of $350; that thereafter an execution was issued on the judgment just referred to, placed in the hands of the sheriff of the county of Butte, and by him returned as unsatisfied on the 16th day of February, 1927. Thereafter, upon the petition of the said C. J. Luckehe, supplemental proceedings were taken and had in said last-mentioned cause for the examination of the said C. F. Belding as to the $819.75 in his possession, deposited and left with him as herein above stated, upon the conclusion of which examination had before the said Hon. H. D. Gregory, as judge of the superior court of said county, an order was made directing the said C. F. Belding to turn over to the plaintiff C. J. Luckehe the said $819.75 in part satisfaction of the judgment obtained by the said C. J. Luckehe against the defendants J. P. Gordon and C. E. Pfister, as herein stated.

Prior to the making of this order and prior to the issuance of the execution, as above stated, a writ of attachment had been issued in the case of Luckehe against Gordon and Pfister, and garnishee process therein served upon said C. F. Belding, purporting to garnishee in his hands all moneys and credits belonging to the said J. P. Gordon and C. E. Pfister, to which process the respondent Belding made no answer. It further appears that immediately following the trial of the action of Luckehe against Gordon and Pfister, the said W. H. Carlin died and since said date said Gordon and Pfister have been represented by other counsel.

In so far as the record presented to this court shows the transaction which took place during the trial of the first action herein referred to, when the offer or tender was made, we are furnished with the following:

"Mr. Carlin: What does the record show that deposit was with the bank, do you know?"

"Mr. Gordon: $759.

"Mr. Carlin: Draw two checks, Mr. Clerk, one to Mr. Leonard for his costs, and to the clerk of the court here for the other sum; and I will ask you further questions about the money. Mr. Myers, will you kindly go over to the Bank of Italy here and get the money?"

"The Court: Are they your checks?"

"Mr. Carlin: Yes.

"The Court: Well, that will be all right. If you say so, we know the money is there.

"Mr. Leonard: Make the check payable to the clerk of the court.

"Mr. Carlin: You can make it out to suit yourself.

"The Court: Is there anything further in the case of Gordon and Pfister v. Luckehe?"

"Mr. Leonard: No."

After mentioning another case then pending, the following occurred:

"Mr. Leonard: If your honor please, how much is the amount of that larger check?"

"Mr. Gordon: $759 and some odd cents.

"Mr. Carlin: That is including the interest up to November?"

"Mr. Gordon: Yes.

"Mr. Leonard: We will stipulate, Mr. Carlin, that you may fix that up at noon.

"Mr. Carlin: No; I will give him a check to cover it."

Upon the hearing of the order to show cause in this proceeding, it was stipulated that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the proceedings had and as to what took place at the time of the tender of the sum of $819.75, involved in this proceeding.

[1] The petition for a writ of prohibition herein is entirely silent as to what took place upon the hearing had upon the supplementary proceedings in the case of Luckehe v. Gordon and Pfister, wherein the respondent C. F. Belding was examined as to the $819.75 placed in his possession, as aforesaid, and still in his possession. Whether the respondent Belding represented to the court that the money in his possession was other than money belonging to Gordon and Pfister, or whether any third person laid claim thereto, the record furnishes us no information. In the petition filed as the basis of this action, it is set forth that C. W. Miller furnished the money to reimburse W. H. Carlin for the tender made by him and the money which his check represented in the tender made in open court and by the said Carlin delivered to the clerk, as aforesaid. Whether this claim is well founded, or whether the transaction was such that the tender made by Carlin and the reimbursement to Carlin made by Miller constituted a loan of the money to Gordon and Pfister are questions which we cannot determine in this proceeding, and which are entirely outside of any matters affecting the right of the plaintiff to a writ of prohibition herein. It does not appear that the petitioner, C. W. Miller, appeared at the supplementary proceedings had in the case of Luckehe v. Gordon and Pfister, upon which respondent Belding was examined concerning said matters, and as we have said, the record is absolutely silent as to what defense, response, or answer, if any, was made by the said Belding, preceding the making of the order for the turning over of the said moneys to C. J. Luckehe by the respondent H. D. Gregory, as judge of said superior court.

No intervention in the action of Luckehe v. Gordon and Pfister was asked for by the said C. W. Miller, nor does it appear that the said C. F. Belding has sought in any manner to take advantage of the provisions of section 386 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by way of interpleader or bringing action against the respective parties requiring them to come into court and litigate their right and title to the money in his hands. So far as the record before us is concerned, the petitioner C. W. Miller, is an entire stranger to all the proceedings in the case of Luckehe v. Gordon and Pfister. It does not appear that his rights are being litigated. It does not appear that the respondent C. F. Belding is asking that the claims of other parties to the money be first determined before the money is paid over by him to any one. Under the authorities which we will hereafter cite, if the clerk had made it appear to the trial court during the examination had upon supplemental proceedings that the money in his hands was subject to conflicting claims, then, under the provisions of section 720 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the trial court would have had no jurisdiction to order the money paid over, but would have been limited in its power to authorizing a suit wherein all persons claiming the money may be made parties and complete adjudication had as to all conflicting claims. This is not a petition by the respondent C. F. Belding, as clerk of said court, to prohibit the execution of the order, and so long as the clerk makes no objection to following the order of the court, takes no appeal therefrom, nor seeks by any other proceeding to stop the execution thereof, in order that a judgment may be entered determining the title to the money in question and so relieve him from responsibility it does not lie within the power of this court to issue a writ of prohibition restraining the action of the trial court or preventing further proceedings upon the petition of an entire stranger to the action, where no showing was made in the trial court, so far as the record informs us, that the petitioner had any right whatever to the moneys deposited with the clerk. It may be here stated that, so far as disclosed to us upon the papers and files herein, the petitioner's rights are not determined, because he was not a party to the proceeding in the court below, and therefore any action of the clerk in turning over the money would not relieve the clerk from responsibility to the petitioner, nor would the proceedings, as disclosed to us, estop the petitioner from bringing an action against the respondent C. F. Belding to establish his ownership and right to the moneys involved.

[2] In the case of Deering v. Richardson-Kimball Co., 109 Cal. 73, 41 P. 801, the procedure necessary to invoke the power of this court is laid down, in so far as the respondent Belding and the petitioner, Miller, herein are concerned. In that case, one Lothian was a third party claiming an interest in the moneys held by the Los Angeles National Bank by virtue of garnishee process and became a party to the action by intervention. The bank was brought into the action by supplementary proceedings. An examination of the cashier of the bank was had and an order made directing the bank to turn over a certain sum of money to be applied in payment of a judgment held by the plaintiff against the defendant, Richardson-Kimball Company. Both Lothian, as intervener, and the bank, as a party to the supplementary proceedings, appealed. The action of the trial court was reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings according to section 720 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for an action to determine the rights of the respective parties to the moneys involved. The following cases show that the trial court has no jurisdiction under section 720 of the Code of Civil Procedure to make any order for the turning over of the money where the title thereto is disputed, where the party examined denies the indebtedness or sets up the fact that there are other parties making claim thereto. In such cases, the jurisdiction of the trial court is limited to authorizing the institution of actions to determine the right to the money or property, and providing for its retention by the party examined, or its impounding until the final adjudication of the rights of the respective parties to the fund. Parker v. Page & Hill, 38

Cal. 522; Hartman v. Olvera, 51 Cal. 501; Lewis v. Chamberlain & Morse, 108 Cal. 525, 41 P. 413; Deering v. Richardson-Kimball Co., 109 Cal. 73, 41 P. 801.

During all the time since the delivery of the check by W. H. Carlin, the attorney in the case of Gordon and Pfister v. Lucke, the petitioner herein, if the owner of said money, has had the right to institute an action against all persons and against the respondent C. F. Belding to recover possession thereof. So far as the record shows, he still possesses that right. He has not been made a party to any proceeding in the trial court and has not sought to intervene in any proceeding, and it is simply axiomatic to state that his rights are not determined in actions to which he is not a party, all of which clearly establishes that this court has before it nothing upon which it can issue an order prohibiting further proceedings in an action or actions to which the petitioner is not a party, nor to which the record discloses that he has made any attempt to become a party.

The respondents herein appeared in this proceeding first by demurrer and then by answer, but as the demurrer was submitted together with an argument upon the merits, we have concluded to decide the cause upon the merits, rather than upon the respondent's demurrer to the petition herein, which, nevertheless, appears to be well taken. For the reasons herein stated the writ prayed for is denied.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

82 Cal. App. 648

VENTURA REFINING CO. v. ROSEBERG OIL CORPORATION. (Civ. 4470.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 2, 1927.

1. Sales ☞371—Seller need not resell property on buyer's breach to sue for damages based on difference between contract price and market value (Civ. Code §§ 3049, 3311, 3353).

In action to recover difference between contract price and market value for breach of buyer's contract to purchase oil, it was not necessary, under Civ. Code §§ 3049, 3311, 3353, for seller to sell oil at best price obtainable at nearest market before he could sue for damages.

2. Sales ☞384(2)—Market value in determining damages for breach of contract to purchase oil was determinable as of reasonable time after termination of contract.

In action to recover damages for buyer's breach of contract to purchase oil, based on difference between market value and contract price, market value was to be determined as of a reasonable time after contract was to have been completed.

3. Sales ☞383—Finding of market value in determining damages for breach of contract, without specifying date of breach or of completion of contract, held justified, in absence of proof of established market during such period.

In action to recover damages for buyer's breach of contract to purchase oil, finding as to price seller could have obtained for oil at place nearest point of delivery, without specifying certain date, held justified, whether date for determining market value was date of breach or completion of contract, where evidence showed that there was no regular established market during such period.

4. Sales ☞384(2)—Buyer, requesting time for performance, cannot complain of granting of request, when sued for difference between contract price and market value after termination of contract.

In action to recover damages for buyer's breach of contract to purchase oil, based on difference between contract price and market value after termination of contract, buyer cannot complain of granting of further time for performance of contract made at his request.

5. Sales ☞89—Seller need not accept new offer on buyer's breach of original contract.

Where buyer breached contract to purchase oil by failure to supply shipping advices, seller was under no obligation to accept new offer changing terms of original contract.

6. Sales ☞152—Buyer's failure to furnish shipping instructions for 9 months constituted breach of contract to purchase oil in monthly installments for one year.

Under contract for sale of oil to be delivered in monthly installments for one year in accordance with buyer's shipping instructions, buyer's failure and refusal for 9 or 10 months to supply shipping advices constituted breach of contract.

7. Sales ☞379—Allegation that defendant "bought" oil held not fatal variance from contract under which defendant "agreed to buy" oil.

Petition by seller for buyer's breach of contract to purchase oil, alleging agreement whereby plaintiff sold and defendant "bought" oil, held not material variance from contract whereby defendant "agreed to buy" oil.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by the Ventura Refining Company against the Roseberg Oil Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Black, Hammack & Black, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert M. Clarke, of Los Angeles, and Charles W. Slack, of San Francisco, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. The difficulties to be adjusted by this action arise out of the failure on the part of the defendant and appellant to accept and pay for the major portion of the oil agreed to be purchased by it in the following contract:

"Los Angeles, Cal., January 10, 1921. Ventura Refining Company, Title Insurance Building, Los Angeles, Cal.: Please enter order for account of the undersigned of the following commodities: Five tank cars each month 38-40 gravity special gas oil. The price hereby agreed to be paid therefor is at the rate of 9 $\frac{3}{8}$ cents per gallon for said special gas oil and at the rate of — per — for said — f. o. b. Fillmore, Cal. It is agreed that payment shall be made by the undersigned, in United States gold coin, to Ventura Refining Company at its office in the city of Los Angeles, for all of said commodities loaded during each calendar month, to apply on account of said order at said point of Fillmore, Cal., on or before the 10th day of the next succeeding calendar month. In case of default in the making of such payments, or if the financial condition of the undersigned shall, in the opinion of Ventura Refining Company, have become impaired to an extent not foreseen, or existing, at the date of the acceptance of this order, then it is agreed that the whole amount in payment for all loadings actually made under this order, not yet paid for, shall become due and payable immediately upon demand in writing and further loadings to apply on this order shall be suspended pending such payment, or this order may be canceled forthwith at the option of Ventura Refining Company, without notice to the undersigned. It is agreed that all deliveries hereunder are contingent on conditions beyond the control of Ventura Refining Company, but said company will use its best efforts to make the following loadings: Fairly even monthly quantities between date and January 10, 1922. T. E. N. — S. R. R. It is agreed that said price of 9 $\frac{3}{8}$ cents per gallon for said special gas oil is based upon the present published market price of 30 gravity California crude oil at the well and said price is to be advanced or lowered $\frac{1}{8}$ cent per gallon for each advance or decline of 5 cents per barrel in the published market price of 30 gravity California crude oil at the well at time of delivery. S. R. Roseberg. Very truly yours, Roseberg Oil Company, by S. R. Roseberg. No order is binding until the same shall have been accepted by a duly authorized officer of Ventura Refining Company. Shipping address as directed. Address for invoices: 923 Santa Fé Ave., L. A., Cal. Rate of delivery, 5 cars each month; size of cars, 10,000 gallon. Credit approved: Roland Young. T. E. Nichols, Jr., Credit Department Salesman. Order accepted: Order approved: Ventura Refining Co., F. C. Deinse, Vice President; T. W. Okey, Sales Manager."

Under this agreement the plaintiff shipped 10 tank cars aggregating 101,639 gallons, the last of which was shipped on April 4, 1921. On May 13, 1921, a 25-cent per barrel decline in the price of crude oil reduced the contract price to 8 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents per gallon of the special gas oil, and on August 3 another decline reduced the price to 8 $\frac{1}{8}$ cents per gallon. Subsequent to April 4, 1921, the defendant failed to give any further shipping instructions, although orally requested to do so once a month or oftener and many times in writing, and although, according to plaintiff's witness, "shipping instructions were many times promised" by defendant, "but were deferred and were not forthcoming." Negotiations for delivery and acceptance by defendant continued until after the time for complete performance, and even as late as January 17, 1922, the defendant indicated by letter that efforts were being made for acceptance of the oil. This letter was in response to plaintiff's communication of January 17, 1922, demanding that the oil be taken to relieve the storage capacity. Finally, on March 11, 1922, the defendant wrote plaintiff as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., March 11, 1922. Mr. S. P. Van Deinse, General Manager, Ventura Oil Refining Co., Los Angeles, Cal.—Dear Sir: In order that we may settle the differences arising under the order that I signed January 10, 1921, to take 5 cars of oil per month for a period of one year at the prices named in the order, I having thus far accepted 8 cars, I would suggest and will therefore offer that I take the remaining number of cars, namely, 52, of the character of oil mentioned in that order and at the prices named in that order; the cars that I offer to take to be shipped at the minimum rate of 6 per month, commencing immediately, the terms of payment, price and quality to be as provided in the order I gave you on January 10, 1921. I hope you can see your way clear to accept this offer as an adjustment of the entire situation, as we always have been, and always ought to be the best of friends, doing business and as man to man. Yours very truly, Roseberg Oil Corp., by S. R. Roseberg, President."

On March 23, 1922, plaintiff commenced this action to recover the difference between the contract price of the special gas oil and its market value in the market nearest to the place where defendant should have accepted the oil. Judgment was recovered in the sum of $26,274.60, together with interest from March 23, 1922, at 7 per cent. per annum in the sum of $1,783.77. Defendant prosecutes this appeal from the judgment thus entered.

On the trial it developed that the plaintiff made sales of the oil in considerable quantities at 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents and 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents per gallon between January 24, 1922, and March 14, 1922, but was unable to resell the amount held for defendant. A witness testified that the market value on January 10, 1922, was from 3 to 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents per gallon f. o. b. Fillmore. There was testimony that there was not an established or regular market value for this special oil between April, 1921, and March, 1922.

[1] Appellant's principal position may be briefly stated as follows: Assuming a breach of the agreement; that such breach occurred on or about March, 1921, and that it was the duty of plaintiff to sell the oil contracted for within a reasonable time thereafter, or at least to sell the deliveries due each month within a reasonable time after failure to take the monthly delivery. To support this argument, counsel contends that by reason of the contract being executory it was necessary for plaintiff to sell the oil at the best price obtainable in the nearest market and sue for the difference between the price received and the contract price; that without such resale plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages. We cannot assent to this doctrine, nor do the cases cited by appellant support it. Those authorities are of two classes, the first holding that the seller of personal property is not entitled to recover the selling price in actions on the contract, where title has not vested in the purchaser, but is confined to his action for damages, and the second holding that he has the right to sell under the provisions of sections 3311, 3049, and 3353, of the Civil Code, but that when he attempts to exercise the right he must do it within a reasonable time and that the sale must be for the market value. In some of the cases the expression is used that the seller not only has the right, but it is his duty to sell; but such expressions were not necessary to the decisions and cannot be accepted as authoritative in the face of direct precedent to the contrary, and despite the express language of the sections of the Civil Code to the contrary, and in direct violation of the logic of such situations. Reversing the order thus stated, what difference can it make to the purchaser whether the seller conducts a sale at the market value, or keeps the goods himself and credits the damages with the market value, the seller himself becoming in effect and in logic the purchaser? It would be the superlative refinement of legal sophistry to hold to such a distinction. Again, section 3311 of the Civil Code says:

"The detriment caused by the breach of a buyer's agreement to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is not vested in him, is deemed to be: 1. If the property has been resold, pursuant to section three thousand and forty-nine, the excess, if any, of the amount due from the buyer, under the contract, over the net proceeds of the resale; or, 2. If the property has not been resold in the manner prescribed by section three thousand and forty-nine, the excess, if any, of the amount due from the buyer, under the contract, over the value to the seller, together with the excess, if any, of the expenses properly incurred in carrying the property to market, over those which would have been incurred for the carriage thereof, if the buyer had accepted it."

Section 3049 of the Civil Code simply provides for a seller's lien dependent on possession, giving to him the right of sale as though the property were pledged to satisfy the lien. It is apparent, therefore, that section 3311 expressly contemplates that a resale by the seller is not a necessary prerequisite to the maintenance of an action for damages in which the difference between the contract price and the market value is the measure of the detriment. It has been so held. See Cuthill v. Peabody, 19 Cal. App. 304, 125 P. 926; Lillie v. Weyl-Zuckerman & Co., 45 Cal. App. 607, 188 P. 619; Central Oil Co. v. Southern Refining Co., 154 Cal. 165, 97 P. 177; and Oldershaw v. Kingsbaker Bros. Co., 53 Cal. App. 667, 200 P. 729.

[2, 3] In one sense our conclusion upon this branch of the first question obviates the necessity of an extended discussion of that portion, which is, that the breach of the contract, if one in fact existed, occurred in March, 1921. There is some confusion in the specific date, due, no doubt, to the fact that, as the appellant's brief shows, the defendant was under the belief that it accepted only 6 or perhaps 8 carloads of oil, the last of which was in March, 1921, while the record justifies the conclusion and the court in effect found that ten cars were in fact shipped, the last of which was as stated above, on April 4, 1921. The question, however, is not affected. In substance it is that the market value within a reasonable time after the first failure to give shipping instructions, instead of the market value within a reasonable time after the arrival of the date for the complete performance, should be the unit used in determining the deduction from the contract price. The court did not find the market value as of a certain date, but did find that—

"The price which plaintiff could, by reasonable diligence, have obtained for the same at the place nearest to where the defendant should have received the said oil from the plaintiff, was the sum of 3¼ cents per gallon."

[4] Under the testimony which we have already recited, this finding would be justified, though the date were considered as immediately following April 4, 1921, or following January 10, 1922. It was shown that there was no regular established market during this entire period, and although the witness testified to the price on January 10, 1922, resort was had to other sales made in January, February and March of 1922 to fix the market value. Be that as it may, however, there can be no doubt but that negotiations were pending during this entire period looking to the acceptance by the defendant of the oil. It cannot be questioned under these circumstances that plaintiff assented by its acts and its statements to an extension of time within which defendant might accept; and not until after January 17, 1922, did plaintiff terminate the negotiations. It does not rest with defendant to complain on this score when it sought and was granted further time within which to supply shipping instructions. We find apt language in the case of Roberts v. Benjamin, 124 U. S. 64, 8 S. Ct. 393, 31 L. Ed. 334, to fit the situation here:

"It is contended by the defendants that the referee erred in taking the $34 per ton, the market value of the iron on November 7, 1879, as the measure of damages, instead of the market price in September, when the iron was to be delivered, and, when, it is alleged, the breach of the contract occurred. But, although the defendants did not deliver any of the iron on or about September 1, 1879, nor as soon as they had manufactured the required amount, yet it appears from the findings of fact, considered together, that the breach of the contract did not take place until November 7, 1879. The statement in the findings, that the defendants 'postponed the execution of the contract from time to time,' and finally insisted upon certain requirements as conditions of the delivery of the iron, must be accepted as a statement that the postponement of the execution of the contract * * * was with the assent of the plaintiff. From the fact that, as late as November 7, 1879, the defendants were naming conditions on which they would deliver the iron, it must be inferred that the question of delivery was still regarded by both parties as an open one, and that the mere failure to deliver the iron by the 1st of September, 1879, or even thereafter as soon as the required amount had been manufactured, was not regarded by either party as a breach of the contract."

To the same effect where delivery is deferred by request of buyer, see Kutztown Foundry & M. Co. v. Sloss-Sheffield S. & I. Co. (C. C. A.) 279 F. 627. Almost the identical principle was applied in an action where an anticipatory breach was coupled with an embargo, during the late World War. In the case of U. S. Trading Corp. v. Newmark G. Co., 56 Cal. App. 176, 205 P. 29, it was held that—

"Notwithstanding defendant's attempted anticipatory breach on October 7, 1919, plaintiff, at its election, could refuse to accept such attempted renunciation by defendant of its contract obligations, could treat the contract as subsisting, and could sue for a breach of contract * * * after the termination of the embargo."

[5, 6] Appellant's next assertion is that there was no breach of the contract by the defendant. We quote one sentence from appellant's brief on this point which answers defendant's own argument:

"The evidence in this case clearly shows that while in an embarrassed position the defendant kept putting off from time to time the actual taking of the product, and the plaintiff from time to time acquiesced in this situation by its failure to declare any breach and even while further negotiations were pending and before they had been acted upon the plaintiff started an action."

The sum of this argument is that because plaintiff had excused the breach in the past it should continue to excuse it in the future until under the offer made by defendant to enter into a new contract, as evidence by its letter of March 11, 1922, the shipments had been completed at the rate of 6 cars per month. Plaintiff was under no obligation to accept this new offer. Nor can there be any doubt that defendant's failure and refusal for 9 or 10 months to supply shipping advice constituted a breach.

[7] Appellant also claims a material and fatal variance between the allegations of the complaint which alleged that by "an agreement in writing, * * * the plaintiff sold to the defendant and the said defendant bought of said plaintiff 60 tank cars * * * of * * * special gas oil, to be delivered in fairly even monthly quantities—5 tank cars each month between January 10, 1921, and January 10, 1922, at Fillmore, Cal.," and the proof which consisted of the contract heretofore recited. There was also an allegation in the complaint concerning the market value in "the market nearest to the place at which it should have been accepted." We fail to see any material variance. Defendant was undoubtedly apprised of the true situation and could not have been prejudiced by plaintiff's failure to allege in precise language "that defendant had agreed to buy" instead of the words actually used "defendant bought." (Italics ours.)

From the discussion so far it is evident that it is not necessary for us to treat the point raised in appellant's reply brief that the court failed to find that the sale made by defendant was within a reasonable time. In the first place the sale was not a resale of the property agreed to be purchased, and therefore that question was not in issue. In the second place we have already determined that the market value was to be determined as of a reasonable time after January 10, 1922.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.; CRAIG, J.

83 Cal. App. 155

DOWN v. DE GROOT et al. (Civ. 4728.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 17, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 13, 1927.

1. Brokers ⇨63(1)—Broker who obtained person ready and willing to purchase at price named held entitled to commission, where failure to consummate sale was due to vendor's repudiation.

Broker producing person ready and willing to purchase property at specified sum under receipt which provided deposit was to be returned in case satisfactory arrangements for payment should not be effected, held entitled to recover commission, where deposit was returned, not as result of inability to effect satisfactory arrangements, but because vendors changed their minds and refused to sell property.

2. Brokers ⇨63(1)—Vendors who repudiated sale could not complain, in broker's action for commission, that consummation of sale was dependent on satisfactory arrangements for payment.

In suit by broker for commission for sale of real estate, vendors, who prevented consummation of sale by their repudiation of agreement, could not complain that satisfactory arrangements for payment, contemplated by receipt for earnest money, had not been effected.

3. Contracts ⇨303(4)—One who prevents performance of act upon which obligation depends cannot assert such nonperformance as defense.

Where one voluntarily prevents performance of some act upon which obligation depends, he is precluded from setting up such nonperformance as defense.

4. Brokers ⇨54—Broker who has produced purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy on seller's terms is entitled to commission.

Under contract in writing to pay broker commission on sale of real estate, broker who has produced purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy on terms proposed by seller has performed his part of contract and is entitled to payment of agreed commission.

5. Brokers ⇨39—Broker's right to commission on sale which vendor repudiated was not defeated by recovery of commission on subsequent sale to same purchaser of other property.

Fact that broker subsequently sold different piece of property to identical purchaser and received commission therefor did not prevent broker's recovery for sale, consummation of which was prevented by seller's repudiation, as right to compensation on first sale became fixed and was not subject to be defeated.

6. Brokers ⇨39—Broker's right to commission on performance of service specified by contract is unaffected by any future service to third persons.

On performance of contract by which broker is to be paid certain sum of money for specified service right to payment follows, unaffected by any future service which may be rendered to other persons.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul Burks, Judge.

Action by N. C. Down against M. De Groot and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. E. Light, of Glendale, for appellants.

A. C. Galloway, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought for a commission earned by him on a sale of real property for the defendants.

The facts appear to be that the property which was the subject of the sale was listed for sale with plaintiff by the defendants at a price of $8,400, payable $2,500 cash, with the balance to be paid at the rate of $75 per month, including interest, the buyer to assume a mortgage of $1,000 on the property; that thereafter plaintiff produced a person who was ready, able, and willing to purchase the property in question, and who thereupon paid to defendants the sum of $25, for which defendants issued to the purchaser a receipt in the following form, to wit:

"Received of James Oswald through the N. C. Down Company, $25 deposit on the property located at 1648 West 55th street, Los Angeles, price to be $8,400. Terms to be arranged on or before Monday, October 8. This deal subject to usual brokers' five per cent. commission. This deposit to be returned to James Oswald if satisfactory arrangements are not effected of $2,100 down, $75 TD."

Thereafter, and on the same day on which the said receipt was delivered to the purchaser, the defendants stated to the intending purchaser and the plaintiff that they "had changed their minds" and that they did not wish to, and would not, sell the property, and thereupon returned to the intending purchaser the $25 which theretofore had been paid as a deposit in connection with the transaction. However, on the same "night, late," the defendants "changed their minds again" and delivered to the intending purchaser a letter, the body of which was as follows:

"I am sorry that we have disappointed you in regards this deal and hope that you will forgive us for doing this. There has been some misunderstanding in regards our privilege of changing our minds. So now we have decided to let you people have the place, as we have it understood between each other."

By that time, however, the proposed buyer of the property was "getting disgusted" and "wanted no more to do with Mr. De Groot," and thereafter, although insistently urged to do so by plaintiff, declined and refused to proceed with the purchase of the property. On the day following, acting as agent for an owner of other property, plaintiff sold such property to the man who had expected to buy the property in question from defendants. Thereafter the instant action was brought by plaintiff against defendants, which, as hereinbefore stated, resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from which judgment defendants have appealed to this court.

[1-3] The evidence shows that plaintiff found a person who was ready, able, and willing to buy the property belonging to defendants on terms and conditions satisfactory to each of the proposed contracting parties to the agreement of sale. Although the deposit of $25 given by the prospective buyer to the defendants was returned to such buyer, that act was not the result of the failure of the parties to effect "satisfactory arrangements," as recited in the receipt signed by defendant De Groot, but apparently was done solely because the defendants "changed their minds" and refused to sell the property. It therefore was by no means the fault of the intending purchaser that the sale was not consummated, but rather because the defendants prevented the sale from taking place. While originally the consummation of the sale may have depended upon "satisfactory arrangements" being effected between the proposed purchaser and the defendants, if the defendants prevented any such arrangements from being made, they are in no position to complain on that account. For aught that appears the intending purchaser agreed, or would have consented, to each and every suggestion or demand which might have been made by the defendants. As is laid down in the case of Carl v. Eade (Cal. App.) 253 P. 750, where the authorities are cited:

"One who voluntarily prevents the performance of some act, on which an obligation depends, will be precluded from setting up such nonperformance as a defense."

[4] The rule with reference to the liability of one who in writing agrees to pay a broker a commission for the sale of real property is almost universally understood to be that when the broker has produced a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy on the terms proposed by the seller, the broker has performed his part of the contract and is entitled to the payment to him of the commission as agreed upon by the parties.

The case of Merriman v. Wickersham, 141 Cal. 567, 75 P. 180, is illustrative of both the facts and the law in the instant case. We quote therefrom:

"It is contended by appellant, however, that the contract between Wickersham and the Burnham & Marsh Company, contemplated an actual and completed sale, and that, as Wickersham repudiated the contract before its full execution by the transfer of title, he was not bound to pay the commissions contemplated. But, the answer to this is twofold. First, the contract which Wickersham approved was a sale of his property and thus the literal terms of his contract with the Burnham & Marsh Company had been complied with. It was a conditional sale, to be sure, but none the less it was a sale. Second, the law as to this contract is no different from the law as to brokers' contracts generally; that is to say, where the contract fixes the broker's right to remuneration upon his sale, if he shall produce a purchaser able and willing to buy, he has performed his part of the contract, and the owner's liability for his compensation or commission is complete, and cannot be avoided by any arbitrary or wanton refusal to consummate the sale. (Crane v. McCormick, 92 Cal. 176 [28 P. 222]; Smith v. Sehiele, 93 Cal. 144 [28 P. 857]; Gregory v. Bonney, 135 Cal. 589 [67 P. 1038])."

[5] Appellants urge the point that the trial court erred to defendants' prejudice in sustaining an objection to a question propounded to plaintiff as to whether on the subsequent sale of other property made to the intending purchaser of the property belonging to defendants, plaintiff received a commission. The effect of the point raised by appellant is that, even assuming that plaintiff had earned a commission for the sale of defendants' property, yet if subsequently thereto plaintiff sold a different piece of property to the same person who had anticipated purchasing property from defendants and received a commission therefor, plaintiff would not be entitled to be twice paid for his services; and consequently that there should be no recovery as against defendants.

[6] In that regard the evidence shows that, while the purchaser was in the market for one piece of property only, nevertheless, according to the testimony of the proposed purchaser, "we was able to buy two places if we wanted to." Moreover, from what heretofore has been said, it is clear that before the second sale had been made by plaintiff he had earned his commission for the sale of defendants' property. That labor had been fully completed. The work of making a new sale to the same customer probably entailed as much, if not greater, effort on the part of the agent than did the first sale, and likewise may have required greater efficiency in salesmanship. The actual time and labor required in making the first sale had been expended. Whatever its effect, was of the past. Unless recovery for a commission earned could be had by plaintiff from defendants, the incident represented a total loss of energy and time expended. The rights, duties, and obligations arising therefrom were fully accrued. No future acts by the parties or by either of them as affecting either his or their new contractual rights could be influenced or affected by reason of what had gone before. It was not like a contract to deliver goods in which, on the failure of the person obligated to supply the goods for delivery, the carrier delivers other goods for other persons within the same time that it would have taken to deliver the goods contracted with the first person to be delivered. Utter v. Chapman, 38 Cal. 659. Neither did it resemble an agreement to render personal services for a stipulated period at a fixed price. It was a contract for the payment of a certain sum of money in compensation for a specified service; on the performance of which, the right to payment therefor followed, unaffected by any future service which might be rendered to other persons.

It is therefore concluded that no error was committed by the trial court in sustaining the objection to the question as to whether plaintiff received a commission on sale of property subsequent to the failure of defendants to proceed with the consummation of the sale theretofore effected by plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 40

PEOPLE v. GODDARD. (Cr. 1407.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 12, 1927.

1. Bail ⚭44—Admission to bail, pending appeal from judgment on plea of guilty of bigamy, is within court's sound discretion.

Application for admission to bail, pending appeal from judgment on plea of guilty of bigamy, is addressed to sound discretion of court.

2. Criminal law ⚭1148—Trial court's refusal to admit to bail should not be interfered with, unless discretion is abused.

Determination of trial court refusing admission to bail pending appeal after plea of guilty should not be disturbed, unless abuse of discretion is clearly shown.

3. Bail ⚭44—Refusal of bail pending appeal from judgment on plea of guilty of bigamy held not abuse of discretion, in view of doubtful legal questions.

Denial of application for admission to bail, pending appeal from judgment, entered after denial of motion to permit withdrawal of plea of guilty of bigamy because of subsequently learned facts affecting validity of previous marriage, held not abuse of discretion, in view of doubtful legal questions presented by appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Application by Pruette Kearns Goddard for admission to bail, pending appeal from a judgment sentencing him to imprisonment after a plea of guilty of bigamy. Application denied.

Soren X. Christensen, of San Francisco, and J. C. Wood, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., Earle Warren, Dist. Atty., and Leonard J. Meltzer, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for the People.

CASHIN, J. An application for an order admitting the defendant to bail.

An information was filed in the superior court of Alameda county charging defendant with the commission in that county of a felony, to wit, the crime of bigamy, to which he entered a plea of guilty. Subsequently a motion for an order permitting a withdrawal of the plea was denied. By the judgment of the court he was sentenced to be confined in the state prison at San Quentin. An appeal was thereafter taken from the judgment, and an application made to the trial court for an order admitting him to bail, pending the appeal, which was denied.

[1-3] The appeal—which is based on the contention that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to permit the defendant to withdraw his plea of guilty—involves the question of the validity of his previous marriage, it being claimed that certain facts in that connection were unknown to him at the time the plea was entered. Applications of this character are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and its determination should not be disturbed except where an abuse of discretion is clearly shown. In re Preciado, 30 Cal. App. 323, 158 P. 1063; People v. Ephraim, 72 Cal. App. 479, 237 P. 801. In view of the doubtful questions of law presented by the appeal and which were considered by the trial court, we cannot say that its denial of the application was an abuse of discretion.

The application is denied.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

83 Cal. App. 143

TUCKER et al. v. NEWTON et al.
(Civ. 4842.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 17, 1927.

1. Exchange of property ⚭5—Evidence held to support finding that written exchange agreement was modified by oral agreement to convey property subject to incumbrances.

In suit for specific performance of agreement to exchange realty, defendants' evidence held sufficient to support finding that written agreement was modified by oral agreement whereby defendants were to convey their property subject to incumbrances of record.

2. Appeal and error ⚭1010(1)—Appellate court is bound by trial court's fact finding supported by sufficient evidence.

Appellate court is bound by trial court's finding, supported by sufficient evidence, that written agreement, sought to be specifically enforced, was modified by oral agreement.

3. Appeal and error ⚭882(6)—Variance between pleadings and proof is not available on appeal, where trial proceeded on theory that all facts should be brought out.

Where parties to suit for specific performance of agreement to exchange real property proceeded at trial on theory that all surrounding facts should be brought out in evidence, plaintiffs cannot first object on appeal that there was fatal variance between pleadings and proof in that answer did not plead executed oral agreement modifying written agreement.

4. Appeal and error ⇨197(1)—Party not objecting to sufficiency of pleading to raise issue cannot say in appellate court that finding is outside issue.

Where parties proceed to trial on pleading, without objection to its sufficiency to raise particular issue, and evidence is received as to facts and the issue found on, party whose duty it was to object will not be heard to say in appellate court that finding is not within issue.

5. Appeal and error ⇨197(7)—Appellants cannot rely on objection not made below, especially when removable by amending answer (Code Civ. Proc. § 469).

Appellants cannot avail themselves of objection, which they failed to make in superior court, especially when ground of objection could have been removed by amendment to answer, as under Code Civ. Proc. § 469, in case of variance between pleading and proof.

6. Exchange of property ⇨5—Failure to assign trust deed as security for defense of suit to quiet title held not to show that oral agreement modifying written exchange agreement was not fully executed.

Defendants' failure to assign trust deed as security for defense of suit to quiet title held not to show that oral agreement, modifying written agreement for exchange of realty, was not fully executed, where defendants filed bond to guarantee defense, no attempt was made to prosecute such suit, deed was delivered, and parties entered into possession immediately after oral agreement; agreement to assign trust deed being merely incidental or collateral.

7. Exchange of property ⇨5—Abandonment of written exchange agreement and substitution of new terms, whereby each party received valuable property subject to incumbrances, held "valuable consideration" for subsequent oral agreement.

Abandonment of written agreement for exchange of realty, except as to parties and descriptions of properties, and substitution of new terms of exchange, whereby each party received property of value subject to existing incumbrances, held to constitute valuable consideration for subsequent oral agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Valuable Consideration.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Suit by Marjorie M. Tucker and another against J. W. Newton and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Holcomb & Holcomb and Denis & Griffith, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

H. S. Laughlin and Frank L. Muhleman, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. This is a suit for specific performance of an agreement to exchange real property. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment rendered for defendants.

The complaint alleges that on the 4th day of March, 1922, plaintiffs and defendants entered into an agreement for exchange of properties and to take immediate possession of the properties exchanged, and further agreed that the property of plaintiffs should be conveyed to defendants subject to a mortgage of $4,250, and that the property of defendants should be conveyed to plaintiffs free from all incumbrances; that the plaintiffs, in addition to the conveyance of their property, should pay the defendants the sum of $4,250; and that the defendants, in addition to the conveyance of their property, should pay to the plaintiffs the sum of $2,000; that thereafter plaintiffs and defendants entered into possession of the properties so agreed to be exchanged, and plaintiffs had conveyed their property to defendants; that defendants have not conveyed, or offered to convey, their property to plaintiffs, free and clear of incumbrance, nor have they paid or offered to pay to plaintiffs the said sum of $2,000; that plaintiffs have offered and do offer to perform all the terms of said agreement on their part, but that defendants refuse to comply with said agreement.

The answer denies that the parties exchanged their respective properties upon the agreement set forth in the complaint, and alleges that a subsequent agreement was made and entered into between the parties, whereby the properties were exchanged and the possession thereof taken by plaintiffs and defendants. Defendants admit that they have not paid or offered to pay the said sum of $2,000, and allege that under a separate agreement defendants have delivered deeds to convey the said property, and that plaintiffs have accepted said deeds subject to a mortgage of $5,760; that defendants have placed security with plaintiffs, guaranteeing to defend the title against suit. Defendants deny that plaintiffs have offered or tendered to defendants the sum of $4,250, and defendants allege that they have done everything required of them to be performed by said subsequent agreement.

The trial court made findings that on or about March 4, 1922, plaintiffs and defendants made and signed the written agreement for exchange of properties referred to in plaintiffs' complaint and designated as Exhibit A and made a part thereof; that at the time of signing said agreement the parties had orally agreed that plaintiffs were to obtain a loan on the property exchanged by defendants in the sum of approximately $7,000, so as to carry out the agreement and to provide certain additional money; that on or about March 8, 1922, plaintiffs and defendants agreed orally to exchange the said properties, each taking the property of the other subject to existing incumbrances of record; that pursuant to said oral agreement one of the plaintiffs inserted in the deed conveying the property of the defendants a provision to the effect that the same was taken subject to incumbrances of record; that on the same day, and in furtherance of said oral agreement, plaintiffs and defendants signed certain escrow instructions, marked Exhibit A and attached to defendants' answer and made a part of the same, wherein and whereby it appears that the said property exchanged by the defendants to the plaintiffs is to be taken subject to incumbrances of record; that pursuant to said oral agreement plaintiffs and defendants took possession of the respective properties; that plaintiffs and defendants, after signing the original agreement of exchange and after plaintiffs were unable to obtain said loan, did, on the 8th day of March, 1922, modify the said written agreement of exchange of March 4, 1922, orally and by said escrow instructions so made and signed, in all matters save and except as to the parties to said agreement and as to the properties agreed to be exchanged, and that such modification has been executed by the parties respectively.

[1, 2] It appears from the evidence that the parties did enter into a written agreement of exchange on the 4th day of March, 1922, as alleged in the complaint. The testimony is in conflict as to whether the written agreement was modified by an oral agreement, and as to whether such oral agreement was fully executed. We believe the testimony offered by defendants was sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that the written agreement was actually modified by an oral agreement. Where such evidence appears this court is bound by the finding of fact made by the trial court. Defendants' evidence was to the effect that the original agreement of exchange and the deeds were signed and exchanged by the parties on March 4th; that thereafter plaintiffs applied for a loan of $7,000 in order to carry out the terms of the agreement, but were unable to secure the loan; that on March 8th the parties agreed to exchange equity for equity, and on that day there was inserted by the plaintiff Marjorie M. Tucker in the deed from defendants to plaintiffs, after the words "free and clear of all incumbrances," the following language: "Except mortgage $4,260 of record and trust deed for $1,500 of record; except the last half of 1921-22 taxes." Mrs. Yale, the escrow officer, testified that the parties signed the escrow on March 8th and left in her possession a deed from defendants to plaintiffs. The escrow data referred only to this deed and contained the following word: "Mortgage assumed of record $4,260." "By second mortgage to of record $1,500." "Other payments prop. exch. $8,240." "Total consideration $14,000." "Amount assumed by buyer $5,760." "Date of present incumbrances—Due." "Newton to defend suit against same, leave trust deed and assign interest in same to secure defense of suit." It will be seen from the most casual observation of the above provisions that they are totally inconsistent with the terms of the original agreement whereby the defendants Newton were required to convey their property free from all incumbrances. On the other hand, the terms of this escrow are all consistent with the testimony offered by defendants. Mrs. Yale further testified that the following document was handed to her by defendant J. W. Newton, in the presence of the plaintiffs, as a part of the instructions:

"Tuckers to assume $4,260.00 at 8 per cent. and $1,500.00 at 8 per cent. on 20 acres, Newton to assume $2,500 at 8 per cent. and $1,000, 8 per cent., on courts also furniture lease, Newtons to assume not to exceed $750. All interest, taxes & insurance etc. to be prorated at March 4th, 1922. Newton to put up as security his equity of $4,250 in a certain trust deed to guarantee to Tuckers that a suit to quiet title to the 20 acres will be defended & cleared of record.

"J. W. Newton. O. K. M.D.Y."

The above was also incompatible with the terms of the original agreement. The witness further testified that, pursuant to her suggestion, a $1,000 bond was left in escrow by defendants to guarantee defending the title, in addition to the trust deed, which was not accompanied by the note. Mrs. Yale also testified that the parties made certain alterations in the original exchange agreement and left the altered copy in escrow on March 8th. These alterations provided for payment for the personal property by defendants Newton, and canceled a cash payment of $2,000. While the subsequent transaction was very informal and in many respects not in accordance with the rules of good business practice in real estate matters, yet we find evidence sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that the parties entered into a new oral agreement subsequent to the written agreement of March 4th.

Appellants urge, and respondents concede, that the escrow data of March 8th did not constitute a contract. It was not the finding of the trial court that the escrow instructions constituted a contract, but the court did find that the parties entered into a new oral agreement on March 8th, and "that on the same day and in furtherance of the said oral agreement, plaintiffs and defendants signed certain escrow instructions, a copy of which is annexed to defendants' answer, marked Exhibit A and made a part of the same, wherein and whereby it appears that the said property exchanged by the defendants to the plaintiffs is to be taken subject to the incumbrances of record."

[3-5] It is claimed by appellants that there is a fatal variance between the pleadings and the proof, for the reason that the defendants abandoned the theory of defense pleaded in their answer, namely, that the agreement sued upon was canceled and the exchange consummated pursuant to the signed agreement called "escrow data," without seeking leave to amend the answer to conform to the proof that the exchange was consummated by an executed oral agreement. Appellants are correct in their statement that the answer does not plead an executed oral agreement, but does merely plead that the escrow instructions constituted the subsequent agreement made and entered into by plaintiffs and defendants. However, the proof offered by defendants was upon the theory of an executed oral agreement between the parties. Appellants' brief contains this statement: "Counsel on both sides and the trial judge proceeded on the theory that all the surrounding facts should be brought out in evidence." Having proceeded on this theory at the trial, appellants cannot be heard to object for the first time on appeal. The rule is well established that where the parties have proceeded to trial upon a pleading, without objection to its sufficiency to raise a particular issue, and evidence has been received as to facts and the issue found upon, the party whose duty it was to object will not be heard in this court to say that the finding is not within the issue. Rutz v. Obear, 15 Cal. App. 435, 115 P. 67; Illinois T. & S. Bank v. Pacific Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 297, 47 P. 60; Yik Hon v. Spring Valley Water Works, 65 Cal. 619, 4 P. 666. The plaintiffs cannot avail themselves here of an objection which they failed to make in the superior court, especially when it appears that the ground of objection could have been removed by amendment to the answer, if it had been made. Barrell v. Lake View Land Co., 122 Cal. 129, 54 P. 594. Section 469 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"No variance between the allegation in a pleading and the proof is to be deemed material, unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits. Whenever it appears that a party has been so misled, the court may order the pleading to be amended, upon such terms as may be just."

Had the appellants been misled they could have objected to evidence of the oral agreement, and the court then could have ordered the pleading to be amended upon such terms as might seem just. Appellants also object to a variance between the proof and the findings; but we find sufficient evidence to support the findings.

[6] Appellants also contend that the oral agreement was ineffective to alter the written contract, because not fully executed. In support of this argument appellants' only specification is that defendants agreed to assign a trust deed as security for the defense of the title suit, and that this was not done. This agreement was incidental or collateral to the oral agreement of exchange. As before stated, it was suggested by the escrow officer that the trust deed would have no value as security unless accompanied by the note; and, upon this suggestion being made, with the assent of plaintiffs, a bond of $1,000 was filed by the defendants as guaranty of defense of the quiet-title suit. It further appears from the evidence that no defense to the action had been made for the reason that defendants had not been served with summons and complaint and no attempt had been made to prosecute the action. According to the evidence the parties entered into possession immediately after the oral agreement of March 8th. The delivery of the deed and the exchange had in all respects been fully executed. There has been no failure of defendants to perform an incidental agreement to defend the quiet-title suit, and failure to assign the trust deed under the circumstances of this case does not, in our opinion, point to the conclusion that the oral agreement of exchange was not fully executed.

[7] Appellants' contention that the subsequent agreement was void for lack of consideration is without merit. Abandonment of the original agreement except as to parties and descriptions of properties, and the substitution of new terms of exchange whereby each party receives property of value subject to existing incumbrances, constitute, in our belief, a valuable consideration.

Appellants finally object to the findings as a whole. We have examined the findings and the testimony offered by defendants in support thereof, and see no prejudicial error in the findings.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 72

PETRICH v. FRANCIS et al. (Civ. 4338.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District. Division 2. California. May 12, 1927.

1. Exemptions ⇨122—Affidavit that money garnisheed was exempt from execution as earnings of seagoing fisherman held insufficient, as stating only legal conclusions (Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 9).

Affidavit in language of Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 9, that money garnisheed was exempt from execution because it constituted affiant's earnings as a seagoing fisherman, held insufficient, as stating only conclusions of law.

2. Exemptions ⇨148—One claiming benefit of exemption laws must show that he belongs to class mentioned therein.

One claiming benefit of exemption laws must bring himself within their spirit, or, in other words, show that he belongs to one of classes mentioned therein.

3. Exemptions ⇨148—Burden is on one claiming exemption to show right thereto.

Burden is on one claiming benefit of exemption laws to show that he is entitled to exemption.

4. Exemptions ⇨122—One claiming exemption must establish right by facts, not affidavit stating only legal conclusions.

One contending for exemption from execution must establish his rights by facts, and affidavit stating only conclusions of law is insufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Paul Petrich, doing business under the firm name and style of the Coronado Fish Company, against Joe Francis and John Santich, in which plaintiff garnished money payable to defendant Santich. From an order releasing the garnishment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Stickney & Stickney, of San Diego, for appellant.

WORKS, P. J. Plaintiff, to secure the payment of an anticipated judgment in his favor upon the claim upon which he brought suit, caused a garnishment to be served upon a corporation which had in its possession money payable to defendant Santich. The latter made claim that the money was exempt from execution and the trial court sustained his contention. Plaintiff appeals from the order made in that behalf.

[1] The order finds its sole support in an affidavit made by Santich, which showed only that he claimed the exemption because the money constituted "the earnings of affiant earned and acquired by him as a seagoing fisherman and while engaged in such occupation," and because "affiant is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been, a sea-going fisherman." This language represents the entire attempt on the part of Santich to bring himself within the provisions of the statute to the effect that "the wages of all * * * seagoing fishermen," not exceeding a certain amount, which is greater than the amount specified by Santich in his affidavit, are exempt from execution. Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 9.

[2-4] One who claims the benefit of exemption laws must bring himself within their spirit (25 C. J. 12), or, in other words, he "must show that he belongs to one of the classes mentioned" in them (Swanz v. Clark, 71 Mont. 385, 229 P. 1108). Again, the burden is upon him to show that he is entitled to the exemption. Murphy v. Harris, 77 Cal. 194, 19 P. 377. These rules necessarily mean that one who contends for an exemption must establish his right by evidence, by facts. The affidavit of Santich merely follows the language of the statute, and states nothing but conclusions of law. Such an affidavit proves nothing. 1 Cal. Jur. 669, 670. Order reversed.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; MURPHEY, Justice pro tem.

82 Cal. App. 269

CRAMER et al. v. JENKINS. (Civ. 3017.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 11, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1071(3)—Whether evidence sustained finding that sheep trespassed on specific day held immaterial, where no damages were awarded therefor.

In action for trespass of defendant's sheep on plaintiff's land, whether evidence sustained trial court's finding that defendant herded and grazed sheep on plaintiff's land on specific day held immaterial, where no damages were awarded for trespass on that day.

2. Animals ⇨100(4)—Finding that trespassing sheep were herded, not running at large on range, held sustained by evidence.

In action for damages for trespass of sheep, evidence held to sustain trial court's finding that the sheep were being herded and were not animals running at large on the range.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied.

For former opinion, see 255 P. 877.

Barry & Barry, of Susanville, for appellant.

R. M. Hardy, of Susanville, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. [1] The appellant on petition for rehearing herein calls attention to the fact that there is no testimony supporting the finding of the trial court that the sheep committing the trespass alleged to have taken place on the 7th day of May, 1924, were the sheep belonging to the defendant, and, also, that there is no testimony that the defendant knew of such trespass.

The trial court found that on or about the 7th day of May, 1924, the defendant, Reese T. Jenkins, by his agents, representatives, and servants, herded and grazed about 250 ewes and lambs upon the premises (described as belonging to the plaintiff) without first having obtained consent of such owner or of the tenants in possession.

The appellant's opening brief contains the following statement:

"There is absolutely no testimony to support the second finding that the defendant herded and grazed sheep upon plaintiff's lands, but as the court finds that there was no damage for this so-called trespassing, there is no use of discussing that point."

The second finding above referred to is the finding of the court which we have just set forth. There being no further argument made by counsel for appellant upon said finding, we assumed that the finding was probably correct, but whether correct or incorrect, as no damages were awarded for that purpose, it became wholly immaterial. It is now argued, however, that because in the opinion heretofore filed in this cause by this court, we referred to the trespass committed on the 9th day of May, 1924, as having been committed by the same sheep, a rehearing should be granted, because it does not sufficiently appear that the same sheep committed the trespass, or that the sheep that committed the trespass on May 7th actually belonged to the defendant. While we referred to the trespass committed by the sheep on May 7th as being of the same band of sheep committing the trespass on May 9, 1924, for which damages were awarded, we attach absolutely no legal significance as to whether it was or was not the same band of sheep. We might state that a re-examination of the testimony would indicate that the findings of the court that the sheep committing the trespass on May 7, 1924, belonged to the defendant has but little to support it, and for the purposes of what we are about to state, it may be conceded that the finding is not supported by the testimony. It appears that the plaintiffs based their allegations of ownership and their conclusions as to the ownership of the band of sheep committing the trespass on May 7th upon what a herder employed by the defendant had told them. This evidence was not admitted into the record.

[2] The real question which the court was deciding was whether the sheep committing the trespass on May 9th were sheep running at large upon the range or whether they were sheep being herded. This question is so completely answered by one of the defendant's witnesses, who was one of the persons in charge of the sheep, that we will set it forth verbatim. It may be further stated that this testimony shows that the herder had knowledge of a trespass by the same sheep upon the same premises on two different occasions, when the damages were inflicted by the band of sheep. The testimony of the witness Urtsan, to whom we have referred, called by the defendant, testified as follows:

"By Mr. Barry: Q. What is your name? A. Steve Urtsan.

"Q. You know Reese Jenkins? A. Yes.

"Q. You worked for him last year? A. Yes.

"Q. You know where the Cramer's place is out to Horse Lake? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Were you working out there in 1924? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What were you doing? A. Tending camp for Jenkins.

"Q. And did he have sheep out there? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Were you out there when he sheared? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you remember a bunch of those sheep getting in the Cramer field? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What time was that? A. I don't exactly know what day it was.

"Q. You know what month? A. It was in May.

"Q. Who was with the sheep when they got in the field? A. The herder and me.

"Q. And how many did you have? A. We had little over 2,000; 1,100 ewes and 1,100 lambs.

"Q. You had about 2,000 ewes and lambs? A. Yes.

"Q. Did some of them get away? A. Yes.

"Q. How many? A. I don't know how many altogether.

"Q. About how many? A. I seen a bunch go through into the field—was about couple of hundred the way it looks to me.

"Q. What did you do when they got into the field? A. Went after them.

"Q. Were you with the sheep when they got in the field? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did anybody come in from the Cramer ranch? A. Two men horseback.

"Q. Who were they. A. I don't know. I wasn't close enough.

"Q. What did you do with the sheep? A. Try to bring them back to the bunch, but before I got there two fellows come on horseback and get there and take bunch and drive them home.

"Q. How far were they from the fence when you first saw them? A. Inside you mean?

"Q. Yes. A. Two or three hundred yards.

"Q. What was you going to do with them? A. Take them back to the bunch.

"Q. Get them out of the field? A. Yes.

"Q. These fellows took them and drove them over to the house? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Were the sheep trying to graze or were they after water? A. They was trying for the water. They didn't look for feed at that time.

"Q. And if they had let you could you have got them out and got them to water? A. I don't understand.

"Q. If they hadn't taken them to the house what would you have done with them? A.

Bring them back right away. We had water little ways from there.

"Q. You would have taken them over to the water? A. Yes.

"Q. Did any more sheep get away that day? A. Not out of that bunch.

"Q. Later, did any sheep get away and go in the field? A. Not later in that bunch.

"Q. Did you see anybody from the Cramer place any more that day? A. No, sir.

"Q. Was that the only time any of the Jenkins sheep went under the fence? A. Before that bunch? The first bunch they took in the corral, I never saw that bunch.

"Q. They had taken a bunch that morning? A. Yes.

"Q. About what time of day was that when you were there? A. It was from 12 o'clock to half past 12, something like that.

"Q. You were with the sheep, you and the herder? A. Yes, they had that bunch get away; the herder come to get his dinner."

This testimony amply justifies the finding of the trial court that the sheep were being herded and did not come within the classification of animals running at large upon the range. In this we think the trial court did not err.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

83 Cal. App. 23

POZEN v. PAVLOVSKI et al. (Civ. 4725.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division One, California. May 11, 1927.

Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Proper judgment on fact findings, supported by evidence, will be affirmed, though evidence warrants findings for appellants.

Proper judgment on fact findings, supported by sufficient evidence, will be affirmed, though evidence authorizes findings favorable to appellants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Frank Pozen against W. A. Pavlovski and another, doing business under the fictitious name of the Pavlovski-Stone Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

I. R. Rubin and M. G. C. Harris, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Shapiro & Shapiro, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a money judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants for the sum of $836.75 and costs. As determined by the trial court, the facts of the case in substance are that plaintiff paid to defendants the sum of $836.75 on the promise made to plaintiff by defendants that they would "furnish tickets to cover three fares, third class, prepaids, from the city of Odessa, Russia, to the city of Los Angeles, Cal., for the relatives of said plaintiff herein"; that defendants would cause such immigration of the said persons within three months from the date of the receipt of said money, or, in the event that defendants were unable to bring about said immigration, defendants would return to plaintiff the said sum of $836.75; that, notwithstanding the fact that a period of more than three months elapsed after the payment of the money to defendants, the said relatives of plaintiff were not furnished with said transportation tickets, and defendants failed and refused to return to plaintiff the said sum of $836.75, or any part thereof.

The appeal comes to this court by the so-called "alternative method." Although the brief filed herein contains no specification of errors, nor any headings or titles by which may be definitely ascertained the foundational point upon which appellants rely for a reversal of the judgment, appellants' criticism appears to be directed to the objection that the facts adduced at the hearing of the action were insufficient to sustain the findings of fact made by the trial court; that the findings of fact should have recited an entirely different state of facts, and with such facts as a basis that the conclusions thereon and the judgment by the court should have been in favor of defendants.

Notwithstanding the failure of appellants to conform to the rule which requires that the appellant "must present each point separately, under an appropriate subheading, showing the nature of the question to be presented," this court, disregarding the possible penalty to appellants therefor of dismissing their appeal, has examined the transcript of the proceedings on the trial of the action, from which it clearly appears that the evidence was sufficient to justify the trial court in its several conclusions as to the facts in the case. Indeed, the brief filed by appellants contains many admissions and restatements of the evidence, which in and of itself would insure a foundation for the very findings of fact to which they apparently take exception. It would serve no useful purpose to set forth the evidence. Suffice it to say that, while it may have been open to a determination of facts favoring the theory and contention advanced by the defendants, it was ample in substance to fully satisfy the requirements of the law regarding the findings which were made by the trial court.

No question is raised by appellants as to the propriety of the judgment on the facts as found. It follows that the judgment should be, and it is, affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 796

I. ARGULA, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. W. A. PAVLOVSKI and Glen G. Stone, Doing Business under the Fictitious Name of Pavlovski-Stone Company, Defendants and Appellants. (Civ. 4726.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division One, California. May 11, 1927.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

I. R. Rubin and M. G. C. Harris, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Shapiro & Shapiro, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a money judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants for the sum of $366. The facts in the case, as determined by the trial court, are nearly an exact duplicate of those found in the companion case of Pozen v. Pavlovski, 256 P. 446, this day determined by this court, to which reference may be had.

With reference to the briefs filed by appellants, an identical situation is presented as is presented in the Pozen Case. The two cases were tried together, and the evidence in the one case is similar to that adduced in the other. In other words, it may be said that in no respect, whether in the pleadings, the evidence, the findings, judgment of the court, the appeal, or the briefs, does one of the cases present any substantial difference from the other.

Relying on the authority of the said case of Pozen v. Pavlovski, it is ordered that the judgment in the instant case be, and it is, affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

82 Cal. App. 610

TREAT et ux. v. LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC CORPORATION.
(Civ. 4591.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 29, 1927.

1. Statutes §109—Under Constitution, Legislature may insert in single act all legislation germane to the general subject expressed by title (Const. art. 4, § 24, art. 1, § 22).

Under Const. art. 4, § 24, and article 1, § 22, the Legislature may insert in a single act all legislation germane to the general subject as expressed in its title and within the field of legislation suggested by that title.

2. Statutes §114(2)—Provisions for nondependents held within scope of Workmen's Compensation Act as indicated in title stating act is "complete plan of workmen's compensation" (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) covers the entire field and substitutes its plan for all prior rights and all actions of every person against an employer based on an employee's death, and hence provisions for compensation to nondependents after employee's death by injury are within the scope of the act as expressed in its title, which states that the act provides for "a complete plan of workmen's compensation by creating a liability on the immediate employers."

3. Death §11—Right of action for death is matter of statutory provision.

The right of action for wrongful death is unqualifiedly a matter of statutory provision and completely within the jurisdiction of the Legislature.

4. Master and servant §347—That Workmen's Compensation Act is police regulation does not prevent incorporation therein of provision within legislative authority, independently of police power (Workmen's Compensation Act).

The mere fact that the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) is a police regulation does not nullify the authority of the Legislature to incorporate therein a provision indisputably within the right of that body to enact independently of the exercise of the police power.

5. Master and servant §355—Provision of Workmen's Compensation Act that remedy is exclusive held applicable to nondependents bringing action for son's death (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6[b], and § 9[c], [3], as amended by St. 1919, pp. 912, 913, §§ 2, 4).

The Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6(b), as amended by St. 1919, p. 912, § 2, stating that "this shall be the exclusive remedy" is applicable to a case wherein nondependents bring action for the death of their son while employed by defendant, since, where the conditions of compensation exist, section 9(c), (3), as amended by St. 1919, p. 913, § 4, requires payment of benefits for employee's death.

6. Master and servant §351—Workmen's compensation "in lieu of any other liability," means any other liability whatsoever to any one, dependent or nondependent (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6[a], as amended by St. 1919, p. 912, § 2).

Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6(a), as amended by St. 1919, p. 912, § 2, stating that liability for the compensation provided shall be "in lieu of any other liability" whatsoever to any person, means any liability on the part of the employer to any person whatsoever by reason of the injury to the employee, whether such person be a dependent or nondependent.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, In Lieu of.]

7. Master and servant §351—Workmen's Compensation Act provision for benefits to surviving nondependents held not to include right of action under another statute (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 9[c], [3] and [d], as amended by St. 1919, p. 913, § 4; Code Civ. Proc. § 376).

Workmen's Compensation Act, § 9(c), (3), as amended by St. 1919, p. 913, § 4, providing that death benefit to deceased employee leaving no dependents shall consist of burial expense and "other benefit" provided by law, held not to include right of action authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 376, in view of section 9(d).

8. Master and servant ⚡386(1)—Phrase "other benefit" in Workmen's Compensation Act death benefit section held to mean only other benefit as might be provided (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 9(c), [3] and [d], as amended by St. 1919, p. 913, § 4).

Any benefit to come within the purview of the phrase "other benefit" mentioned in Workmen's Compensation Act, § 9(c) (3), as amended by St. 1919, p. 913, § 4, providing that, if deceased employee leaves no dependents, the death benefit shall consist of burial expenses, and such other benefit as may be provided by law must be of such a character as to be administered under the scheme of the act and under the direction of the commission, in view of section 9(d).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Other.]

9. Master and servant ⚡371—"Conditions of compensation" held not contingent upon survival of dependents in case of employee's death (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Conditions of compensation in the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) are: That an injury has occurred to an employee at a time when he and his employer were subject to the compensation provisions; that he was at the time performing a service incident to his employment, within the scope thereof; that the injury was proximately caused by the employment, not due to intoxication, or self-inflicted. These facts existing, whether person making claim based on injury to employee is dependent or nondependent is immaterial.

10. Constitutional law ⚡70(3) — Appellate court is bound by legislative expression of intent in interpreting Workmen's Compensation Act, and cannot decide according to its own ideas of public policy (Workmen's Compensation Act).

In interpreting the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), appellate court is bound by the intent as expressed by the Legislature, and cannot interpret the law to effect a result calculated to put its own ideas of public welfare into effect.

11. Master and servant ⚡355—Complaint under death statute, alleging plaintiffs were non-dependent parents of minor injured while employed by defendant, held demurrable (Code Civ. Proc. § 376).

Demurrer to complaint, attempting to allege action for wrongful death, under Code Civ. Proc. § 376, which alleged that plaintiffs were parents of a minor who was employed by the defendant corporation and while so employed received injuries resulting in his death, and further stating that plaintiffs were not dependent on the earnings of deceased, held properly sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Harold L. Treat and wife against the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation.

Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

John C. Miles and Bertrand J. Wellman, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Paul Overton, S. W. Guthrie, Samuel Poorman, Jr., and Douglas Van Dyke, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. This action is one in which the appellants alleged that they were the parents of a minor, 18 years of age, who was employed by the defendant corporation and while so employed received injuries which resulted in his death. It is expressly stated that "plaintiffs were not at the time dependent either in part or in whole upon the earnings of said deceased for their support." A demurrer to the complaint was interposed, which was sustained, and appeal is taken from the judgment in favor of the defendant thereafter rendered upon such ruling.

The principal point made by the appellants is that only employees and their dependents are within the scope of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), and that the plaintiffs herein are therefore entitled to sue and recover under section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Several reasons are urged in support of this position, and it is also seriously argued that any law which would compel employers without fault to pay benefits to nondependents would be unconstitutional, as beyond the police power; so, also, that such provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act which purport to take away the right of action for wrongful death of a minor employee as heretofore created to nondependent parents by section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure are unconstitutional.

[1] It is said that provisions in the Workmen's Compensation Act dealing with nondependents are not within the scope of the act as indicated by its title, and are void under section 24, art. 4, and section 22, art. 1, of the Constitution of California. Under these sections the Legislature may insert in a single act all legislation germane to the general subject as expressed in its title and within the field of legislation suggested by that title. Hunt v. Manning, 24 Cal. App. 44, 140 P. 39; People v. Jordan, 172 Cal. 391, 156 P. 451.

In Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 407, 156 P. 491, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 390, after calling attention to the fact that at common law the right of action of the injured person and that of representatives for a wrongful act causing death were entirely distinct, our Supreme Court states that this new scheme provided by the Workmen's Compensation Act "undertakes to supersede the common law altogether, and to create a different standard of rights and obligations, covering the entire field of injury to workmen in the course of their employment. * * *

We think the language of the constitutional amendment was not inapt to describe a scheme of liability which should include the entire field embraced within the prior laws. * * * Compensation to employees for injuries incurred by them may fairly be said to mean not only a money payment to the employee himself, but provision or indemnification for the various elements of loss which may be the direct result of his injury."

[2] The purposes of the act in question as set forth in its title, comprehensively stated, are "to promote the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of the people of this state as affected by injury causing the disability or death of employees in the course of their employment. * * *" The major objects which this involves, as the title indicates, are provision "for a complete plan of workmen's compensation by creating a liability on the part of the immediate employers" (in other words, to provide all liability of the employers from the aforementioned causes), and "to compensate employees and their dependents for such disability or death irrespective of the fault of any party."

It is clear that to accomplish this purpose the scheme was intended to cover the entire field and substitute the plan here enacted for all prior rights and all actions of any and every person as against the employer based upon the fact of the death of the employee. Among the theretofore existing claims required to be taken into account, those of nondependents of the employee were relatively of minor importance. Such rights, however, are surely "germane to the general subject" as expressed in the portions of the title above quoted, and within the "field of legislation therein expressed." If, in return for added liability upon the part of the employer, such as liability to make compensation even where the injury was not in any way attributable to fault upon his part, some adjustment was to be made by way of relieving him of former burdens, in the whole realm involved, what better place to begin than by eliminating the cause of action of persons in no way dependent upon the deceased employee for support? Legislation disposing of such claims is undoubtedly germane to the topic of the liability of the employer through the death of the employee. Indeed, the statute would seem to be inadequate as a "complete plan of workmen's compensation," as the object is in the title avowed to be, without some provision in reference to the claims theretofore existing of nondependents.

[3, 4] Both of the contentions advanced by appellant, that the right to compensation of nondependent heirs is a property right, and may not be abrogated by statute, and that (upon the assumption that such right of nondependents is not the subject of regulation under the police power) to deal with it under the Workmen's Compensation Act would be unconstitutional, are disposed of by the mere recognition of the fact that the right of action for wrongful death is unqualifiedly a matter of statutory provision and completely within the jurisdiction of the Legislature.

It follows that the existence of such a right may be abrogated in whole or in part by legislative enactment. If this be so, the mere fact that the Workmen's Compensation Act is a police regulation does not militate against the authority of the Legislature to incorporate therein a provision indisputably within the right of that body to enact independently of the exercise of the police power. We are cited to no authority, and know of none, upholding the proposition that in the exercise of the police power the Legislature must confine itself to acts deriving authority from that source alone.

[5, 6] Appellants assert that the act gives nondependents no compensation and that hence the provision of section 6, par. (b) (as amended by St. 1919, p. 912, § 2), that "this act shall be the exclusive remedy," has no reference to them. The assumption that none but dependents are entitled to benefits is erroneous, for, where the conditions of compensation exist, section 9 (c), (3) (as amended by St. 1919, p. 913, § 4), requires the payment of benefits by the employer upon the death of the employee. It is clear that here we have a provision by which some nondependent persons shall receive a benefit which the employer shall pay. It is declared by section 6 (b) that, where the conditions of compensation exist pursuant to the provisions of this act, the right to recover compensation under it shall be the exclusive remedy against the employer, and that section 9 (c) (3) has reference to cases where the conditions of compensation exist cannot be disputed. Also section 6 (a) states that liability for the compensation provided by the act shall be in lieu "of any other liability whatsoever to any person." We think this declaration of the Legislature is not to be regarded in the narrow sense argued by appellants as excluding other liability than to the employee and his dependents alone, but in the broader view of the exclusion of liability on the part of the employer to any person whatsoever by reason of the injury accruing to the employee whether such person be a dependent or nondependent.

Appellants call attention to section 9 (c) (3), which reads as follows:

"If No Dependents. If the deceased employee leaves no person dependent upon him for support, the death benefit shall consist of the reasonable expense of his burial, not exceeding one hundred dollars and such other benefit as may be provided by law."

[7, 8] It is insisted that the words "and such other benefit as may be provided by law" include the right of action authorized by section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Considering the context as well as the language in question, we cannot think that an action at law was intended to be classed as a benefit as that word is used in the act. That compensation includes benefits also mentioned therein is clear, for section 9 states that where liability for compensation under this act exists the same shall be paid by the employer and be "as provided in the following schedule." Included within this schedule are the death benefits. Whatever the Legislature may have had in mind, it is certain that any benefit to come within the purview of the phrase "other benefit" mentioned in section 9 (c) (3) must be one of such a character as to be dealt with and administered under the scheme of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, and under the direction of the commission, for in the section which follows that last referred to, to wit, 9 (d), it is said that payment of compensation in accordance with the order and direction of the commission shall discharge the employer from all claims therefor. There is nothing in this language to indicate that the "other benefit" referred to in section 9 (c) (3) is excepted from the provision of section 9 (d). This consideration alone is enough to demonstrate that a suit for damages in a court could not have been contemplated. It seems obvious that the benefits intended were others of the same character as those referred to in section 9 (c) (1) (2) and the first part of 3, or others which might be provided by subsequent amendment of this act or by other acts having to do with the same subject.

[9] Appellants assert that where no dependents survive the employee the conditions of compensation do not exist, and hence that the provisions of the act have no application to the rights of such nondependents to maintain any action to which they would have recourse without regard to the Workmen's Compensation Act. This idea results from a mistaken notion of the meaning of the term "conditions of compensation." The conditions referred to are: That an injury has occurred to some one; that the person injured was an employee; that at the time of the injury both he and the employer were subject to the compensation provisions of the act; that at that time the employee was performing a service growing out of and incidental to his employment; that he was acting within the scope thereof; and that the injury was proximately caused by the employment, not due to the employee's intoxication, or intentionally self-inflicted. If these facts exist, the conditions of compensation are present, and the identity of the person who may attempt to make a claim based upon the injury to the employee, or his relation to the latter, cannot in any way affect the application of the provisions of the act, or remove the case from that class where the "conditions of compensation" exist.

[10] Concerning that portion of appellants'

argument which appears to be addressed to considerations of public policy, in its advocacy of a construction upon the various provisions of the act which are involved in this discussion, which they aver would better subserve the purpose of making it a "safety law" as well as a compensation act, we can only say that, where the Legislature has expressed itself unequivocally, courts cannot give weight to their ideas of the wisdom of a law to effectuate a result calculated to subserve the public welfare. Such considerations are for the Legislature and not for the judicial department of the government. By the terms of this act it has been provided that where an employee is injured "by reason of the serious and willful misconduct of the employer * * * the amount of compensation otherwise recoverable from injury or death * * * shall be increased one-half." Also the employer who violates any safety provision of the act is guilty of a misdemeanor. It is apparent that by these provisions the Legislature intended to remove the evil of serious and willful misconduct of employees, and to insure compliance with the safety provisions which they had enacted.

[11] We think the demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained on the ground that it failed to state a cause of action, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 55

PEOPLE v. RICE. (Cr. 1473.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 12, 1927.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 625—Court order is unnecessary to recall defendant from insane hospital for trial after medical superintendent declared him sane (Pen. Code, §§ 1367-1370, 1372).

Where defendant was taken to insane hospital pending trial, order of court is unnecessary, after he has been declared sane by hospital medical superintendent, to bring defendant back for trial, in view of Pen. Code, §§ 1367-1370, 1372.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 166½(1)—Reading order directing that defendant be brought back from insane hospital for trial, though error, held harmless.

In trial of defendant, who had been taken to insane hospital but subsequently declared sane, reading order directing that he be brought back from hospital for trial, though error, held harmless, where no request was made at trial for submission of the then mental status of defendant.

3. Criminal law §625—Trial court has jurisdiction to try defendant after release from insane hospital without judicial determination of mental status (Pen. Code, § 288).

Trial court had jurisdiction to try defendant on charge of sex perversion, under Pen. Code, § 288, after his release from insane hospital, without determination of present mental status by judicial inquiry.

4. Criminal law §625—Question of defendant's mental status at time of trial is largely within trial court's discretion.

Question of mental status of defendant at time of trial is one submitted largely to discretion of trial court.

5. Criminal law §1166(1)—Irregularities in procedure leading up to bringing of defendant from insane hospital for trial held immaterial, in absence of request for submission of defendant's present mental status.

In absence of request to submit question of the then mental status of defendant to jury in trial after defendant's release from insane hospital, any irregularities in procedure leading up to bringing of defendant from hospital before court were immaterial and of no consequence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

George W. Rice was convicted of lewd and lascivious acts on the body of a child, in violation of Penal Code, § 288, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. O'Keefe, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. On the 20th day of January, 1926, appellant, Rice, was charged by an information filed by the district attorney of San Diego county with the commission of lewd and lascivious acts upon the body of a child. Before the trial of the appellant a doubt arose in the mind of the court as to his sanity, and the question was submitted to a jury, which found the appellant insane. The defendant was then committed to the state hospital for the insane at Napa, Cal. Subsequently and on the 27th day of August, 1926, an order was made by the superior court directing the return of the defendant and appellant from the Napa state hospital for the insane. Pursuant to said order appellant was returned and tried in said court with the offense charged in the information aforesaid. This appeal is prosecuted by the appellant from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The appellant's main contention in this trial is that the procedure contemplated by sections 1367-1370 of the Penal Code of this state was not complied with in returning the defendant from the state hospital at Napa to the superior court in San Diego for trial. Section 1372 of the Penal Code provides that:

"Defendant Detained in Hospital until He Becomes Sane.—If the defendant is received into the state hospital he must be detained there until he becomes sane. When he becomes sane, the superintendent must certify that fact to the sheriff and district attorney of the county. The sheriff must thereupon, without delay, bring the defendant from the state hospital, and place him in proper custody until he is brought to trial or judgment, as the case may be, or is legally discharged."

[1] There is nothing in the record in this case to show upon what information the court acted in making the order directing the sheriff to return the appellant from the state hospital at Napa. Presumably, the sheriff or the district attorney received information as to defendant's sanity from the superintendent of the state hospital and submitted it to the court. It is our opinion that under the law the order of the court was unnecessary. No certificate or other writing is to be found in the record indicating that the superintendent of the state hospital had conveyed to either the sheriff or the district attorney his judgment and conclusion as to the mental status of the defendant. It is suggested in the record that letters were received from the superintendent conveying this information, although such letter or letters were not introduced at the time of the trial. The recitals in the order made by the judge indicate that he had been informed that the superintendent had declared the appellant sane, and presumably this information came through the regular channels. In any event, in response to the order made by the judge the defendant was brought before the court for trial and the respective parties announced themselves ready to proceed with the trial. No objection or suggestion that the defendant at that time was insane was made to the court. The defendant was permitted by the court to offer a further defense to the effect that at the time of the alleged commission of the act complained of in the information the defendant was insane, and it was announced by counsel for defendant at the opening of the trial that such would be the defense relied upon by the defendant. At no time during the course of the trial did the defendant object to proceeding therewith upon the ground that at the time of the trial the defendant was insane, but all objections were directed to the fact that the proceedings leading up to and resulting in removing the defendant from the state hospital to the county of San Diego for trial were irregular and not warranted by law.

[2] During the course of the trial and as a part of the record in the case the order made by the court directing that the defendant be brought before the court for trial was read in the presence of the jury and is as follows:

"Order Directing Return of Defendant From Napa State Hospital for the Insane.—The defendant above named, George W. Rice, having heretofore been duly and regularly arraigned before the above-entitled court upon an information charging and accusing the said defendant with the commission of a felony, to wit, sex perversion, and upon the arraignment, so as aforesaid, it having been made to appear to the above-entitled court that a doubt had arisen in the mind of the court as to the sanity of the above named defendant, George W. Rice, the court, on the 25th day of May, 1926, made an order in the above-entitled action directing that the question as to the sanity of the said defendant be submitted to a jury and suspending further proceedings upon the trial until the question of said defendant's sanity should be determined by the verdict of the jury, and on the date last aforesaid a jury having been called by the court from the venire duly and regularly in attendance upon said court, and the said issue of sanity being submitted to the said jury, and evidence, both oral and documentary, having been introduced on behalf of said defendant and on behalf of said plaintiff, the people of the state of California and the cause having been submitted to the jury for its consideration and decision, and said jury having thereafter found, rendered and returned a verdict finding the said defendant then and there insane, and an order having thereafter, to wit, on the 26th day of May, 1926, been made by the above-entitled court ordering and directing that the trial of the said defendant upon such alleged offense be and the same was thereby suspended until said defendant became sane, and further ordering and directing that said defendant, George W. Rice, be committed to and confined in the Napa state hospital for the insane at Napa, Cal.; and further ordering and directing that the sheriff of the county of San Diego take, convey and deliver said defendant, George W. Rice, to the superintendent of said state hospital for the insane at Napa, Cal., to be held and confined therein as an insane person; and it appearing that in pursuance of the order of the court so as aforesaid made, the sheriff of the county of San Diego, state of California, thereafter did take, convey and deliver said defendant, George W. Rice, into the custody of the said superintendent of said state hospital for the insane at Napa, Cal., and that the said George W. Rice, is now confined in said state hospital at Napa, Cal.; and it further appearing to the court that the said George W. Rice was admitted to said hospital on the 2d day of June, 1926, and that thereafter on or about the 11th day of August, 1926, the said defendant, George W. Rice, was, by the medical superintendent of said state hospital for the insane at Napa, Cal., found to be and declared to be restored to reason and sanity; and it further appearing that the said George W. Rice is now sane; and the court having in such aforesaid order ordered and directed that the said George W. Rice, upon his becoming sane, be redelivered to the sheriff of the county of San Diego, state of California, to be by him thereupon brought before the above-entitled court for further order and disposition herein—it is now, therefore, ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said sheriff of the county of San Diego, state of California, proceed with all convenient dispatch to the said state hospital for the insane at Napa, Cal., and demand, take, and receive into his custody the said George W. Rice, and bring him, the said George W. Rice, before this court for further order herein. And it is further ordered and directed that the said superintendent of the said state hospital for the insane at Napa, Cal., upon receipt of a certified copy of this order, deliver up into the custody of the sheriff of the county of San Diego, the said defendant herein, George W. Rice, to be by the said sheriff thereupon brought before this court for further order herein. Done in open court, this 27th day of August, 1926. C. N. Andrews, Judge of said Superior Court."

The defendant objected to the reading of this order in the presence of the jury, contending that it was hearsay and not admissible in evidence. At no time was there any suggestion that the order was read as evidence in the case, but simply as a record in the proceedings. There was no issue properly before the trial court as to the then mental condition of the defendant except in so far possibly as it might be a circumstance to be considered by the jury in determining the real issue in the case as to the mental responsibility of the defendant at the time of the commission of the offense charged in the information. In our opinion this order was entirely unnecessary and was improperly read in the presence of the jury, but the error was not of such consequence in our judgment as to warrant a retrial of the case, and this is particularly true in view of the fact that at no time during the trial did the defendant or anyone else ask that the then mental status of the defendant be submitted to a jury.

[3] The contention of the defendant that the court was without jurisdiction to retry the case, until the question of the present mental status of the defendant was determined by some sort of a judicial inquiry, is without merit and was directly determined against the defendant in the case of People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 576. There the court stated that it was the contention of the defendant that it was error "for the court to proceed to the trial of the case without having first instituted some sort of judicial inquiry into the present sanity of the defendant, which would have resulted in a formal reversal or vacation of the previous judgment of the court that he was insane; or, in other words, that the verdict and judgment of the previous term to the effect that the defendant was then insane operated as a bar to any further proceedings until formally vacated upon a further proceeding of some sort confined to the consideration of the same question. If such was the law, the proper time to make the question was before the trial was commenced. But such is not the law. The statute requires no such proceeding." It may be said here that the statute in force at the time the decision in the case of People v. Farrell, supra, was decided was substantially the same as the present statute upon that subject. The court further proceeded:

"At the previous term, upon the finding of the jury that the defendant was insane, the court made an order committing him to the custody of the officers of the insane asylum, pursuant to the provisions of section 589. It is provided in the 591 section that when the defendant has become sane the person or persons to whose custody he may have been committed shall give the sheriff and district attorney of the proper county notice of the fact, and that the sheriff shall thereupon proceed, without delay, to take him from the custody of such persons and place him in the proper custody until he be brought to trial or judgment. Whether this course was pursued in this case the record fails to show, but the presumption is that it was. But whether it was or not is of no consequence, for in either event the result would be the same. When a defendant once found insane is called for trial a second time, if there is any doubt as to his sanity, and the people demand a trial, the court proceeds, as at first, and tries the question of sanity anew, and so on to the end, as often as occasion may require."

It is our conclusion that when the defendant was tried on the issue as to his then sanity that trial supplanted the trial on the felony charge, and the trial upon that charge was merely suspended; that at no time did the court lose jurisdiction to proceed with the trial upon the information when the defendant was brought before the court for trial through official channels.

We are satisfied from the entire record that the defendant was properly brought before the court for trial on the information, after having been committed to the state hospital, and that at all times the court had jurisdiction to proceed with the trial; that no error affecting the substantial rights of the defendant was committed during the trial of the case.

[4, 5] The question of the mental status of the defendant at the time of the trial is one submitted largely to the discretion of the trial court. In the case of People v. Keyes, 178 Cal. 794, at page 802, 175 P. 6, 9, the court says:

"The right to a jury trial in proceedings inaugurated under said section 1363 is addressed to the sound discretion of the judge before whom the cause is pending, and the showing must be sufficient to create a doubt in the mind of the judge as to the sanity of the defendant before he is required to submit the question to a jury."

In the instant case no application was made by any person to submit the question of the then mental status of the defendant to a jury for determination; in the absence of any such request and where no objection was made at the opening of the trial to proceeding therewith by the defendant, any irregularities, if there were such, in the procedure leading up to the bringing of the defendant from the state hospital before the superior court for trial, were immaterial and of no consequence, and did not in any way affect his substantial rights.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

83 Cal. App. 144

CROSS v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY. (Civ. 5611; L. A. 9958.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. May 17, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 15, 1927.

1. Justices of the peace §166(2)—Stipulation to "set" case for trial held not to satisfy statute that appeal from justice court must be "brought" to trial within year (Code Civ. Proc. § 981a).

Stipulation that case might be "set" for trial held not to satisfy the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 981a, providing that an appeal from the justice court must be "brought" to trial within one year from the date of filing the appeal unless the time was extended by stipulation.

2. Justices of the peace §166(2)—Plaintiff held not to waive rights to assert statutory limitation by signing stipulation, over year after appeal from justice court, to "set" case for trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 981a).

Where defendant appealing from a decision of the justice court failed to "bring" case to trial within one year, plaintiff held not to waive rights to assert limitation, under Code Civ. Proc. § 981a, by thereafter signing stipulation that the case might be "set" for trial.

3. Estoppel §58—Waiver may be inferred only where party's conduct prejudices opponent's rights.

Waiver can result only from an intentional relinquishment of a known right and may be inferred only where the conduct of a party has prejudiced his opponent's rights because of belief that a waiver was intended.

Application for writ of mandate by Fred R. Cross, to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Imperial, M. W. Conkling, Judge, requiring the court to dismiss an appeal from the justices' court. Writ granted.

Jas. W. Glassford, of El Centro, for petitioner.

Harry W. Horton and M. W. Conkling, both of El Centro, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. [1] Briefly, the facts are that in an action brought in the justice court the plaintiff (petitioner herein) therein recovered judgment. Thereupon an appeal from such judgment was taken by the defendant to the superior court. More than one year after such appeal had been perfected, the attorney for the plaintiff signed the following stipulation, "It is stipulated the above case may be set for trial." Thereafter, under the provisions of section 981a of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff moved the superior court to dismiss the appeal on the ground that it had not been brought to trial within one year from the date of the filing of such appeal. The motion was denied, whereupon the instant proceeding was instituted by the plaintiff for the purpose of obtaining an order from this court directing the said superior court to dismiss said appeal.

Petitioner contends that the stipulation by him that the action "may be set for trial" is not the equivalent of a stipulation that the cause might be brought to trial. A distinction between the two propositions is apparent. A situation such as might be presented by a stipulation that the cause might be set for trial might arise from a desire on the part of the moving party to avoid the trouble incident to giving notice of a motion to set the cause for trial. It might be more convenient and possibly involve the expenditure of less time and labor to secure such a stipulation than it would be to serve and file a notice of motion. In such circumstances, a stipulation that the cause might be set for trial would not necessarily include a stipulation that the cause might be brought to trial on the day on which it was set for hearing. In this connection, see Boyd v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 185 Cal. 345, 197 P. 58, and Hoopes v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. App. 564, 235 P. 739.

The facts in the case of Rio Vista Mining Co. v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 1, 200 P. 616, resemble those in the instant case in that, after the statutory period had run, the parties sent a telegram to the judge of the trial court by which the parties agreed on a date for the trial of the action. Certain correspondence between the parties also figured in the matter. It was held that such correspondence, followed by the signed telegram, constituted a stipulation in writing signed by the parties, agreeing to bring the case to trial at a date beyond the period prescribed by the statute.

In the case of California L. & A. Co. v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. App. 767, 234 P. 408, it is held that where the petitioner for the writ of mandate, before the expiration of the statutory period, had himself caused the case to be set for trial, he was "estopped to take advantage of the defect." The force of the ruling in that case, however, is offset by a contrary ruling on similar facts in the case of Abbott v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 251 P. 221. See, also, Swim v. Superior Court, 193 Cal. 539, 226 P. 2. But in any event, the facts in either of those cases are unlike the facts in the instant case, in that in each of such cases the act of the nonappealing party took place before the time limited by the statute for the trial of the action had expired, while in the case now under consideration the act of the nonappealing party occurred after the statutory period had run.

Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 333, 219 P. 1006, is the most thoroughly considered case to which the attention of this court has been directed. The authorities are there reviewed, and the conclusion reached is that the terms of the statute will not permit of a waiver arising by implication or inference, and that nothing short of a written stipulation by which it must clearly appear that the benefit of the statutory provision was intentionally waived will have the effect of extending the time limited by the statute. Among other things, the court said:

"The provision that a written stipulation be entered into was intended to preclude all disputes, with their attendant charges and countercharges of overreaching and unethical conduct, by a requirement that clear and uncontrovertible evidence be presented to the court that the statutory time was deliberately intended to be extended by both parties."

[2, 3] As in the instant case the stipulation was not entered into until after the expiration of the time fixed by the statute, it becomes apparent that thereafter no conduct on the part of the plaintiff with reference to the case could prejudice the rights of the defendant in the premises. His statutory rights, so far as being able to bring the appeal to trial, were entirely ended, and no estoppel could be predicated on the assumption that the plaintiff had done something which defendant in reliance thereon had caused him to alter his position to his injury. Likewise, in the circumstances, the doctrine of waiver is equally unavailing to the defendant. The general rule is that a waiver can result only from an intentional relinquishment of a known right, and that it may be inferred only where the conduct of the party has resulted in a prejudice to the rights of his opponent caused by an honest belief that the waiver was intended. 25 Cal. Jur. 926, et seq.

As hereinbefore noted, the stipulation here under consideration was susceptible of two meanings—one that the action might be set for trial, and the other that the action might be brought to trial. To attach to the stipulation the broader meaning that the cause might be brought to trial would require a construction which would not even be founded on an inference arising from any conduct on the part of the plaintiff. Aside from the stipulation itself, so far as the record discloses, plaintiff had neither said nor done anything which would give rise to an honest belief in the defendant that plaintiff had intentionally relinquished his right to urge the provision of the statute in the enforcement of the benefits to which he was entitled. The one act of the plaintiff was equivocal. There was no evidence of the essential element of a deliberate intention on his part to extend the time limited by the terms of the statute. It follows that the plaintiff was entitled to have the appeal dismissed.

The writ should issue as prayed. It is so ordered.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for hearing in this court is denied. In denying the same, however, we do not desire to be understood as approving the holding of the District Court of Appeal that there is a necessarily controlling distinction between a stipulation that a cause "may be set for trial" and a stipulation that a cause "may be brought to trial." The decision otherwise is amply sufficient to support the judgment.

83 Cal. App. 34

PEOPLE v. TOGNOLA. (Cr. 968.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 11, 1927.

1. Robbery $\S$ 28—Verdict finding defendant guilty of robbery in first degree as charged in the information held not void for uncertainty.

Verdict, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of robbery in the first degree as charged in the information," held not void for uncertainty; language "as charged in the information" being surplusage, which may be disregarded.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 886—Surplusage in verdict should be disregarded where intention of jury is clear.

Where intention of jury is clear from verdict, it is sufficient to convict of crime charged or any crime necessarily included in information, and surplusage and informalities should be disregarded.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 893—Verdict must be construed in light of record to give effect to intention of jury.

Verdict must be construed in light of facts disclosed by record so as to give effect to manifest intention of jury.

4. Robbery $\S$ 28—Verdict of guilty in prosecution for robbery must specify degree of crime (Pen. Code, $\S$ 211a).

Verdict of guilty in prosecution for robbery must specify degree of crime in view of Pen. Code, $\S$ 211a, dividing robbery into first and second degrees.

5. Indictment and information $\S$ 189(11)—Information for robbery following statutory language is sufficient to support conviction of either degree of crime which evidence discloses (Pen. Code, $\S$ 211, 211a).

Information in prosecution for robbery need not charge specific degree on which conviction is sought, but is sufficient if it follows language of Pen. Code, $\S$ 211, and will then support verdict of either degree of crime which evidence discloses notwithstanding $\S$ 211a.

6. Robbery $\S$ 17(1)—Information for robbery of first degree need not describe accused's deadly weapon or allege that he was armed with such.

To support conviction for robbery of first degree, it is not necessary that information should describe or name deadly weapon with which accused is armed, or allege that he was armed with any deadly weapon.

7. Robbery $\S$ 28—Where accused is charged with robbery in statutory language and evidence shows crime committed by one armed with deadly weapon, verdict of guilty of first degree robbery is valid (Pen. Code, $\S$ 211).

Where accused is charged with robbery in language of Pen. Code, $\S$ 211, and evidence shows that crime was committed by one while armed with deadly weapon, verdict finding him guilty of robbery of first degree is valid.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 730(12)—Argument defendant was clever crook held not reversible, court instructing to disregard.

In prosecution for robbery, district attorney's argument that accused was crook who was more clever than any he had dealt with for some time held not reversible error, particularly where judge promptly charged jury to disregard statement.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 713—Argument in criminal case should be confined to bounds of logic and reason.

For purposes of illustration, argument may be afforded a considerable latitude in criminal case, but it should be confined to bounds of logic and reason.

10. Criminal law $\S$ 719(1)—Argument to show officer's mistake in thinking prosecuting witness first failed to identify defendant, containing reference to another prosecution, held not reversible error.

In prosecution for robbery, argument to show officer's mistake in thinking prosecuting witness first failed to identify defendant held not prejudicial, though accompanied by reference to conviction in former murder trial in which similar situation arose.

11. Criminal law $\S$ 1170(2)—Any error in sustaining objection to question as to what witness told officer was cured by subsequent proof without objection of entire conversation.

Any error in sustaining objection to impeaching question as to what witness told officer, in prosecution for robbery, was cured by subsequently proving without objection entire conversation which was being inquired into.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

William Tognola was convicted of robbery in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Bundy, of Marysville, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. The defendant was charged jointly with one Heber Norton with the crime of robbery alleged to have been committed by forcibly taking from the person of one Lala Singh the sum of $10. Norton pleaded guilty. Upon trial evidence most persuasive of defendant's guilt was adduced, upon which the jury rendered the following verdict:

"We, the jury, * * * find the defendant William Tognola guilty of robbery in the first degree, as charged in the information."

Defendant claims: (1) That the verdict is inconsistent and void for uncertainty; (2) that it is the result of prejudice on the part of the jury, created by the employment of opprobrious language with reference to the defendant, used by the prosecuting attorney in the course of his argument to the jury; and (3) error on the part of the trial court in sustaining an objection to an impeaching question asked by the defendant on cross-examination.

The evidence satisfactorily shows that about 8 o'clock on the night of November 14, 1926, this defendant and his confederate Norton, armed with a loaded revolver, which belonged to this defendant, went down, by prearrangement, to the locality of First and B streets in Marysville, which was the Chinese and Hindu quarter of that city, situated at the levee. There they encountered the prosecuting witness, Lala Singh, a Hindu, and, attacking him, one of the assailants held the victim while the other beat him about the head with the butt of the revolver, knocking him down and robbing him of $10. During the mêlée, the revolver was discharged. The culprits then fled. Their victim soon arose and hastened to the store of Charley Chan, a countryman, where he reported the robbery. From there he proceeded to police headquarters, where he arrived within half an hour of the escapade, with his shirt saturated and his face covered with blood flowing from several ugly wounds about the head. He once more reported the robbery, and the officers immediately went in search of his assailants, whom, by means of a flashlight, they soon located down by the levee. When the defendants were taken into custody Norton had in his possession the sum of $9.50 and also the loaded revolver, upon the butt of which were fresh bloodstains. One of the chambers of the revolver was empty. On the person of Tognola was found the sum of $11.34, and in his side pocket was an empty shell of the caliber which fitted the revolver. Later the officers visited the room formerly occupied by this defendant and found his empty revolver case and a large number of the same sized shells. On being confronted by the prosecuting witness Norton was positively identified as the one who had beaten him with the revolver, and Tognola was finally identified as the one who held him during the robbery. The evidence is somewhat conflicting as to whether the prosecuting witness may not have at first failed to identify this defendant. The Hindu spoke English poorly and finally explained that Tognola, when first presented to him for identification, looked different because he wore a different pair of eyeglasses at the time of the assault. On the trial, however, the Hindu denied that he had ever failed to identify Tognola, and explained that in response to a question propounded to him by the officer, as follows: "Do you recognize this man as one who hit you on the head?" he said, "No, sir."

Subsequently, without promise or hope of reward, Norton confessed his guilt and told the story of the robbery in detail, implicating Tognola as the chief instigator of the crime.

[1, 2] A verdict reciting that, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of robbery in the first degree, as charged in the information," is not void for uncertainty. The language "as charged in the information" is surplusage and may be disregarded. 8 Cal. Jur. 401; People v. Brady, 6 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 719, 65 P. 823; State v. Schweitzer, 18 Idaho, 609, 111 P. 130. Surplusage and informalities employed in the language of a verdict should be disregarded. The language is sufficient, and the verdict is valid if the intention of the jury is clear, to convict the accused of the crime charged, or of any crime necessarily included in the information. 8 Cal. Jur. 401; People v. McCarty, 48 Cal. 557; People v. Sheik (Cal. App.) 243 P. 39; People v. Mercado, 59 Cal. App. 69, 209 P. 1035.

[3-7] A verdict must be construed in the light of the facts disclosed by the record so as to give effect to the manifest intention of the jury, and if the language of the verdict is unambiguous and it is included within the charge pleaded in the information, it is valid. People v. Hatch, 163 Cal. 368, 125 P. 907. Since the amendment by section 211a, of the Penal Code, dividing robbery into the first and second degrees, a verdict of guilty must specify the degree of the crime, but it is unnecessary that the information should charge the specific degree upon which a conviction is sought. The information is sufficient if it follows the language of section 211 of the Penal Code, and will then support a verdict of either degree of the crime which the evidence discloses. To support a verdict of robbery of the first degree, it is not necessary that the information should describe or name the deadly weapon with which the accused is armed, or allege that he was armed with any deadly weapon at all. In re Colford, 68 Cal. App. 308, 229 P. 63. If the accused is charged with robbery in the language of section 211 of the Penal Code and the evidence shows that the crime was committed by one while he is armed with a deadly weapon, and the verdict finds him guilty of robbery of the first degree, the verdict is valid.

[8] The language used by the district attorney in his argument to the jury as follows: "I want to say this in the beginning, we are dealing with a crook who is a good deal more clever than any I have dealt with for some time"—is not reversible error, particularly since the trial judge promptly charged the jury to disregard the statement. People v. Bose, 28 Cal. App. 743, 153 P. 965; 8 Cal. Jur. 267.

[9, 10] The following language, also used by the district attorney in his argument to the jury, appears to have been addressed to the evidence of an officer who intimated that the prosecuting witness first failed to identify Tognola, and was in the nature of an illustration used for the purpose of argument and was not prejudicial:

"There has been * * * some attack made on the Hindu's identification of Tognola. * * * What if this complaining witness had failed * * * to identify Tognola? * * * At a murder case years ago, one officer came into court * * * and testified that my complaining witness, the only person I had * * * who identified the person charged with the crime, stated that the boy had said to him he could not identify any of the parties. Yet officers—where do they get these impressions; why they do it, I don't understand. But the fact remains that other officers who were following the case * * * knew that there was some misunderstanding, some mistake, because if you remember the jury went ahead and brought in a verdict of murder of the first degree, and the party convicted confessed and implicated all three, so you see sometimes an officer gets the wrong impression."

While it is true that, for the purposes of illustration, argument may be afforded a considerable latitude, yet it should be confined to the bounds of logic and reason.

In Tucker v. Henniker, 41 N. H. 317, it is said, with respect to the scope of legitimate argument:

"His illustrations may be as various as the resources of his genius; his argumentation as full and profound as his learning can make it; and he may, if he will, give play to his wit, or wings to his imagination." People v. Molina, 126 Cal. 505, 59 P. 34.

In the instant case the district attorney's boasting of securing a conviction of murder in another case "years ago," in spite of an officer's statement that the prosecuting witness failed to identify the accused, had no logical application to the case which he was arguing; but the language with which it was associated was intended to imply, because an officer was mistaken in his evidence of lack of identity in another case, that therefore the officer who testified in this case to a similar failure to identify this defendant might also be mistaken. The argument, if it may be dignified by that term, may have contained the veiled suggestion that the testimony of the officer was not the result of mistake, but was prompted by some ulterior motive. At least it cannot be said to be without some possibly legitimate application, and the reference to the conviction in the former murder trial was not prejudicial.

[11] The objection sustained to defendant's impeaching question, "What did you tell the police officer?" was cured by defendant subsequently proving without objection that entire conversation with the officer.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

82 Cal. App. 660
POWER v. CROWN STAGE CO. et al.
(two cases). (Civ. 4836.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 3, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 30, 1927.

1. Highways ⇨176—Bus driver, driving too close to automobile ahead and forced on wrong side of road when it slowed, held negligent.

In action by plaintiff for injuries from collision with autobus, bus driver, driving too close to automobile ahead, so that when it slowed it was necessary for him to drive clear off the highway on the wrong side, held guilty of negligence.

2. Highways ⇨175(1)—Plaintiff colliding with bus held not contributorily negligent in not stopping his automobile when suddenly confronted with dangerous situation.

Where plaintiff, injured in collision with autobus, was suddenly placed in a position of imminent danger because of bus approaching on wrong side of highway, held that he was not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to stop his car.

3. Negligence ⇨72—One in great peril need not exercise carefulness required under ordinary circumstances.

One in great peril, when immediate action is necessary to avoid it, is not required to exercise all the presence of mind which is required under ordinary circumstances.

4. Negligence ⇨136(9)—Contributory negligence is question of law only when facts point conclusively to plaintiff's negligence.

Contributory negligence is question of law only when the court is impelled to say that reasonable men can draw from the facts only an inference pointing conclusively to plaintiff's negligence contributing to his injury.

5. Highways ⇨184(3)—Contributory negligence of plaintiff injured in collision with automobile bus held for jury.

Contributory negligence of plaintiff injured in collision with automobile bus held question of fact for the jury.

6. Highways ⇨184(3)—Plaintiff held not contributorily negligent as matter of law because of inexperience in driving automobile.

Plaintiff injured in collision with autobus held not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law because of his inexperience in driving automobile.

7. Highways ⇨177—Automobile bus only 3 to 30 feet behind automobile running at 35 miles per hour is exceeding speed limit (St. 1919, p. 220, § 13).

Under St. 1919, p. 220, § 13, providing that vehicles are not entitled to exceed speed of 30 miles per hour, except when there is no vehicle visible ahead within 400 feet, automobile bus running 35 miles per hour only 3 to 30 feet behind another auto is exceeding speed limit.

8. Highways ⚡177—Speed of automobile may be negligent though not above statutory limits.

Even though the statutory limit of speed has not been exceeded, the rate of speed at which an automobile is traveling may be held, under some circumstances, to be negligent.

9. Trial ⚡244(4)—Instruction that if defendant bus driver violated speed law defendant was liable unless plaintiff "was guilty of some negligence" held not unduly emphasizing defendant's duties.

Instruction, in case resulting from automobile collision, stating that if defendant auto bus driver violated speed law, defendant was negligent unless the plaintiff was also guilty of some negligence proximately contributing to the injury, held not to unduly emphasize defendant's alleged violation of a law without pointing out plaintiff's reciprocal duties.

10. Trial ⚡296(4, 5)—Instruction failing to state that even slight contributory negligence would defeat plaintiff held not error, especially when point was stated in another instruction.

Instruction failing to emphasize rule of contributory negligence by stating that plaintiff's negligence, however slight, would defeat his recovery, held not error, especially since another instruction emphasized this point as defendant desired.

11. Trial ⚡296(3)—Instruction that if defendant autobus driver's negligence "proximately contributed" to injury plaintiff should recover held not misleading, since other instructions correctly stated "proximate cause."

Instruction stating that if defendant autobus driver's negligence "proximately contributed" to plaintiff's injury, plaintiff should recover, held not error misleading the jury, since other instructions sufficiently stated the rule that defendant's negligence must have been the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury.

12. Appeal and error ⚡1068(5)—Erroneously refusing to instruct that husband's contributory negligence in driving automobile would be imputed to wife held not prejudicial, since jury found husband not negligent.

Erroneously refusing to give an instruction requested to the effect that the husband's contributory negligence in driving automobile would be imputed to wife held not prejudicial since husband's case and wife's case were jointly tried, and jury's verdict against defendant in both cases implied finding of defendant's negligence and husband's freedom from contributory negligence.

13. Highways ⚡184(4) — Under evidence, plaintiff injured in automobile collision held entitled to instruction on imminent danger theory.

Under evidence showing that plaintiff injured in auto collision was suddenly confronted with dangerous situation, plaintiff held entitled to instruction on imminent danger theory.

14. Highways ⚡184(4)—Imminent danger instruction, not stating that plaintiff's danger must have been brought about through defendant's negligence, held not error.

Instruction on imminent danger, stating that plaintiff "was suddenly confronted with danger, not brought about by his own negligence," held not error because failing to limit the situation to one brought about through defendant's negligence.

15. Highways ⚡184(4)—Same rule as to imminent danger should apply to both parties in automobile collision.

In action for injuries sustained from automobile collision, the same rule as to imminent danger should apply to both plaintiffs and defendants, and, if one is given the benefit of imminent danger caused by any one at all, the other should be given the benefit of the same rule.

16. Judgment ⚡256(5)—In action against principal and agent, where verdict was for plaintiffs, judgment mistakenly entered against principal only held not void.

In action for injuries sustained from auto collision against bus company and its driver where verdict was brought for plaintiffs, judgment mistakenly entered against company alone held not void, since company and its agent were jointly and severally liable.

17. Judgment ⚡310 — Judgment entered against principal alone may be amended to include agent, where verdict was against both and both were liable.

In action against a principal and agent, where verdict was brought for plaintiffs and judgment was mistakenly entered against the principal alone, the judgment may be amended to include the agent; the principal and agent being jointly and severally liable.

18. Appeal and error ⚡1170(12)—Judgment will not be reversed because of mistake of entering judgment against principal only, where it should have been against principal and agent (Code Civ. Proc. § 475; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 475, providing that no judgment shall be reversed unless error is prejudicial, and Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that no judgment shall be set aside for any matter of procedure unless there has been a miscarriage of justice, judgment will not be reversed because of mistake of entering judgment against principal alone, where it should have been entered against both principal and agent.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Actions by Kate Power against the Crown Stage Company and C. Parks, and by William Power against the same defendants. Judgments for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert and B. P. Gibbs, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John L. Richardson and T. E. Parke, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in the sum of $2,033 in favor of the plaintiff, Kate Power, and against the defendant Crown Stage Company; also an appeal from a judgment in the sum of $2,000 in favor of the plaintiff William Power and against the defendant Crown Stage Company.

Plaintiff Kate Power brought an action against the defendants Crown Stage Company and C. Parks for damages in the sum of $10,000 for injuries, and special damages in the sum of $33 for injuries and damages, alleged to have been received by her through the negligence of C. Parks, an agent and employee of defendant Crown Stage Company. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $2,033. Plaintiff William Power brought an action against the defendants Crown Stage Company and C. Parks for damages in the sum of $10,000 for injuries, and special damages in the sum of $721.85 for injuries alleged to have been received by him through the negligence of C. Parks, an agent and employee of defendant Crown Stage Company, and $1,000 for loss of services of his wife, Kate Power. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $2,000.

The answers of defendants specifically deny the allegations of negligence contained in the complaint; and as a further defense allege, in the case of William Power:

"That defendant Parks was driving and operating said motorbus carefully and prudently along the proper side of the boulevard, when suddenly and without warning, a machine with human beings therein stopped with such abruptness that, in order to avoid a collision with said automobile and to avoid injuring the persons therein, and to avoid injuries to the defendant's passengers, it became necessary for said defendant to swerve his car to the left, and that the plaintiff was then driving and operating his said Chevrolet car east on Telegraph road at a high and dangerous rate of speed, to wit, at a speed in excess of 30 miles per hour; that he was keeping an insufficient lookout for traffic ahead of him upon the highway, and was not exercising ordinary care or any care in the operation of his said Chevrolet automobile, all of which was negligently done, and said negligence directly and proximately contributed to the happening of the accident in question."

Similar allegations are in defendants' answer in the case of Kate Power. Both of these actions were tried at the same time, before the same jury, and on the same evidence, and judgments rendered thereon as above stated.

On the 2d day of September, 1922, defendant Crown Stage Company was operating an autobus on Telegraph road, a public highway running between Los Angeles and Santa Fe Springs. The paved portion of Telegraph road was 20 feet wide, and the dirt portion of the highway between the pavement and the fence was 12 feet wide. Defendant C. Parks, the driver, was operating the bus in an easterly direction and traveling at a rate of speed between 25 and 40 miles per hour, following a Ford automobile at a distance of between 3 and 30 feet. The Ford swerved to the left in order to pass a Buick automobile which was either standing or backing up on the highway. The bus turned abruptly to the left of the Ford, departed from the paved portion of the highway onto and across the unpaved portion on the northerly side thereof, and came into collision with the plaintiff's automobile at or near the fence bordering the highway, where both cars stopped. The bus driver testified that he did not see any obstruction ahead until the Ford car swerved to the left onto the center of the road and almost stopped, when he saw the Buick car backing up; that he saw a Chevrolet coming toward him, turned abruptly to the left, and went straight across the road into the fence, where the Chevrolet collided with his car on the right front wheel and fender; that he turned across the highway to avoid a collision with the Ford and the Buick. Plaintiff William Power was driving a Chevrolet in a westerly direction at a speed of about 15 miles per hour. He testified that he first saw the approaching bus at a distance of 130 to 140 feet, when it turned to pass the Ford, at a speed of 35 or 40 miles per hour, and left the highway; that at the same time he turned to the right, off from the paved portion of the highway, at a point about 90 feet distant from the bus, slowed down, and came almost to a stop on the dirt portion of the highway within a distance of 25 feet, when his automobile was struck on the left front portion by the right front wheel of the bus and carried for a distance of 7 or 8 feet to the fence; that he could have stopped his automobile within a distance of less than 25 feet, but that it would have been directly in the path of the oncoming bus.

[15] Although the evidence was in conflict in many particulars, the record discloses sufficient evidence to support the verdict of the jury, unless there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. It appears from the bus driver's own testimony that he was guilty of negligence in driving at a rapid rate of speed so close to the Ford car that his view ahead was obstructed, so that when the Ford slowed down it was necessary for him to turn to the left in the path of the west-bound traffic when his car was not under control, making it necessary for him to drive clear off the highway onto the dirt on the wrong side of the highway.

Under such circumstances, it cannot be held that plaintiff William Power was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to stop his car within a distance of 25 feet while the bus was traveling off the highway a distance of 65 feet. The plaintiff William Power was entitled to believe that the driver of the bus would return to the highway after passing the Ford car, and was under no obligation to make any attempt to stop his car until he saw that a collision was imminent. If he had attempted to pass to the left of the bus, he might then have been charged with negligence in attempting to pass on the wrong side, had a collision occurred, even though a prudent driver might under certain circumstances be justified in turning to the left. He was in a position of imminent danger and would not be held to the same degree of care as under ordinary conditions. One in great peril, when immediate action is necessary to avoid it, is not required to exercise all that presence of mind and carefulness which are justly required of a careful and prudent man under ordinary circumstances. Tousley v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 457, 137 P. 31. Contributory negligence is a question of law only when the court is impelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his injury. Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125. Whether plaintiff William Power was guilty of contributory negligence was a question of fact to be determined by the jury under all the circumstances of the case. In Shupe v. Rodolf, 185 Cal. 371, 197 P. 57, it is said:

"But the question in the case is not whether the plaintiff could have turned farther to the right and have avoided the collision, but whether, assuming that he could, his failure to do so was necessarily due to lack of reasonable care to avoid the impending collision. The two things are not the same. It may be that the plaintiff, if he had turned more quickly to the right, might have avoided the collision. It may also be that he could have avoided it by turning to the left. The point is that when the defendants' car started to turn to the left, the plaintiff was confronted with a situation of imminent danger requiring instant action, and there may have been no negligence on his part in taking the action he did, although if he had done something else he would have escaped. As was said in Karr v. Parks, 40 Cal. 188, 193, 'it would be absurd to hold that even an adult person, in time of imminent danger, is negligent, unless he takes every precaution that a careful calculation afterward will show he might have taken.' Whether under the circumstances here presented the plaintiff did what he reasonably could to avoid the collision is very apparently a question about which there might be a reasonable difference of opinion. Such being the case, the answer to the question was exclusively within the province of the jury and we cannot disturb their conclusion."

[6] Plaintiff William Power was at no time guilty of negligence as a matter of law in the operation of his automobile, although the record discloses the fact that he had driven a total distance of only 491 miles. Inexperience in itself is not negligence. If this were true, all persons learning to drive automobiles would be guilty of negligence in attempting to operate them. An act of negligence may be committed by an experienced as well as by an inexperienced automobile driver.

[7] Appellants assert that the trial court committed error in giving and refusing certain instructions. Appellants requested the following instruction, which was refused except as given in other instructions:

"You are instructed that at the time and place of the accident, the defendants were entitled to operate their bus, in so far as the speed is concerned, at the rate of 35 miles per hour; and upon the question of speed considered alone, I instruct you that it was not negligence for the defendants to operate their car at 35 miles per hour."

Appellants' requested instruction was not a correct statement of the law as applied to the facts in this case. Under the Motor Vehicle Act as it existed at that time, defendants were not entitled to operate their bus in excess of 30 miles per hour, "except in the daytime and except when * * * there is no person, vehicle or other object visible ahead on such highway * * * within four hundred feet. * * *" Stats. 1919, p. 220, § 13. Under the evidence the conditions which existed at the time of the accident did not permit a speed of more than 30 miles per hour. In lieu of the above instruction, the court gave the following:

"Any person operating or driving a motor or other vehicle upon a public highway shall operate or drive the same in a careful and prudent manner, at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway; and no such person shall operate or drive a motor vehicle or other vehicle upon the public highway at such a rate of speed as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property. Now, it is true that in this case there is no question but that the limit at the place in controversy was 35 miles an hour; but the fact that that is the limit does not necessarily mean that anybody going at that speed under all circumstances is careful, because, as I have just read to you, regardless of the limit, every person operating or driving a motor or other vehicle upon the public highway shall operate and drive the same in a careful and prudent manner, and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway; and no person shall operate or drive a motor vehicle or other vehicle upon a public highway at such a rate of speed as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property. So that if either one of these parties was violating that provision of the law, that party was guilty of negligence, and if the defendant violated that provision of the law, it was negligence, and if that negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, then the defendant would be liable, unless the plaintiff was also guilty of some negligence proximately contributing to the injury."

[8, 9] Even though the statutory limitation of speed has not been exceeded, the rate of speed at which an automobile may be traveling may be held under some circumstances to be negligence. Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., supra. We cannot agree with appellants' contention that the instruction laid stress upon defendants' alleged violation of the law without pointing out the reciprocal duties of the plaintiff. The instruction specifically stated that if either party violated these provisions of the law, that party was guilty of negligence, and then stated that if defendants were guilty of negligence which proximately caused the injury, defendants would be liable, unless plaintiff was also guilty of some negligence proximately contributing to the injury. "Some negligence" on the part of the plaintiff could only refer to the negligence defined in this and other instructions. The instruction did not lay stress upon the speed of appellants' driver, but rather was a general statement of the law as applied to both parties. In a previous instruction the court said:

"If you should determine that the defendant's driver was not negligent, that ends the case and you don't have to go any further. If you determine that the driver was negligent, then you must also determine whether the plaintiff, driving his own machine, Mr. Power, whether he was guilty of any negligence which proximately contributed to the injury. If he was, notwithstanding that you find that the defendant was guilty of negligence—if you find that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, then there can be no recovery, because if both parties are negligent, if there is mutual negligence, there can be no recovery by either party. If the defendant is negligent and the plaintiff is guilty of negligence, no matter how slight, which proximately contributes to the injury, there can be no recovery, because you have no right to compare the negligence of one with the other. If both are negligent, without reference to the degree of negligence, there can be no recovery."

Appellants requested the following instruction:

"You are instructed that the duty was upon the plaintiffs at all times to operate their automobile with ordinary care and with due regard for other traffic upon the road, and if they saw, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have seen, that the traffic at the point of impact was becoming congested, then it was their duty to slow up or do such other things as would have been reasonably necessary to a prudent person in order to avoid becoming confronted with danger, and if they failed to do this, that failure was negligence, and if such negligence directly and proximately contributed to the happening of the accident in any degree, however slight, your verdict will be for the defendant notwithstanding the fact you may believe that the defendants were guilty of negligence at the time and place of the accident."

[10] Instead of the foregoing, the court gave the following instruction:

"It was the duty of both parties at all times to operate their machines with ordinary care and with due regard to other traffic upon the road; and if they saw, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have seen, that the traffic at the point of impact was becoming congested, then it was their duty to slow up or to do such other things as would have been reasonably necessary to a prudent person in order to avoid becoming confronted with danger. If they failed to do this, their failure was negligence."

"If the plaintiff was negligent in that respect, and his negligence proximately contributed to the injury, he cannot recover; and if the defendant was negligent in that respect, and that negligence proximately contributed to the injury, and the plaintiff was not negligent, then the plaintiff can recover."

Appellants urge in respect to the second paragraph of the foregoing instruction that the court failed to instruct the jury with regard to the degree of negligence that would prevent plaintiff from recovering. It is insisted that the following language should have been used by the court: "If the plaintiff was negligent in that respect and such negligence on his part directly and proximately contributed to the happening of the accident in any degree, however slight," he cannot recover. The equivalent of this suggested instruction had previously been given by the court and is quoted, supra. In People v. Mohammed, 189 Cal. 429, 208 P. 963, it is said that the fact that each instruction does not cover the whole case does not make such instruction erroneous, if the instructions as a whole do so. In view of all the instructions given by the court, we cannot agree with appellants' contention that comparative negligence might have been made by the jury in favor of the respondents to the prejudice of appellants. In Sinclair v. Pioneer Truck Co., 51 Cal. App. 174, 196 P. 281, the court said:

"The sole point urged by the appellants relates to the giving or refusing of instructions to the jury. The defendants requested the court to instruct the jury as follows: 'If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff by his own negligence directly contributed in any degree to the injury sued for, they will find for the defendants.' The court gave substantially this instruction and several others on the subject of contributory negligence, omitting from each of them, however, the words 'in any degree' included in the proposed instruction. It is urged that the court's refusal to thus emphasize the measure of any contributory negligence chargeable to the plaintiff was error sufficiently prejudicial to entitle the defendants to a new trial. This contention is not maintainable. It is true that in some of the cases cited by the appellants this phrase is used in connection with the legal effect of contributory negligence, but it is nowhere held that it is an essential qualification of such negligence, but adds emphasis only. Where, as here, the court instructs the jury that if the plaintiff was negligent, and his negligence amounted to want of ordinary care, and contributed proximately to the injury, he cannot recover, such an instruction is sufficient."

[11] Appellants point out that in the present case the court in its instruction did not use the qualifying term "(plaintiff's) negligence amounting to a want of ordinary care," as was used in the above instruction, and for that reason urge that the instruction here does not come within the language quoted from that instruction. However, in the case at bar, negligence was defined by the court in another instruction as failure to use ordinary care. This, of course, applied to both the plaintiffs and the defendants. Also, in the first part of the above instruction given in the instant case the court said it was the duty of both parties at all times to operate their machines with ordinary care. Appellants particularly object to the italicized portion of the foregoing instruction, as follows:

"And if the defendant was negligent in that respect, and that negligence proximately contributed to the injury, and plaintiff was not negligent, then the plaintiff can recover." (Italics ours.)

It is urged that the above is an incorrect statement of the law and is misleading to the jury and prejudicial error for the reason that the words "proximate cause of the injury" should have been used when referring to the defendants' negligence. It may be conceded that the words "proximate cause" should have been used in this instruction, but we do not think the use of the words "proximately contributing to the injury" was misleading to the jury, as the court in other instructions had said to the jury "that the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff not only to prove that defendant was negligent, but that that negligence was the proximate cause of the injury"; and in referring to the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act the court said: "If the defendant violated that provision of the law, it was negligence, and if that negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, then the defendant would be liable." Thus no doubt was left in the minds of the jury but that plaintiff could only recover for negligence of defendant proximately causing the injury.

[12] The court refused the following instruction, except as given in other instructions, and no other instruction was given on imputed negligence:

"You are instructed that this is an action prosecuted both by the husband and the wife. The undisputed testimony of the plaintiff is that the husband was driving the car at the time and place of the accident. Under the law of this state the negligence of the husband is imputed to the wife. That is to say, that if the husband, in law and in fact, was guilty of negligence, then the wife, in law and in fact, was guilty of negligence, and if the negligence of the husband, the driver of the car, directly or proximately contributed to the happening of the accident, in any degree, however slight, your verdict will be for the defendants notwithstanding the fact you may believe that the defendants themselves were guilty of negligence at the time and place of the accident."

This instruction should very properly have been given, and it was error to refuse it. McFadden v. Santa Ana, etc., Ry. Co., 87 Cal. 464, 25 P. 681, 11 L. R. A. 252; Dunbar v. San Francisco-Oakland T. Railways, 54 Cal. App. 15, 201 P. 330. However, we do not regard the error as prejudicial, for the reason that both cases were tried at the same time, before the same judge, and on the same evidence, and it was so stipulated. The jury was repeatedly instructed that if plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence no recovery could be had. The jury was instructed:

"If you determine that the driver was negligent, then you must also determine whether the plaintiff driving his own machine, Mr. Power, was guilty of negligence—if you find that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, then there can be no recovery."

Necessarily, this instruction applied to both cases. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff William Power, and therefore found that he was not guilty of contributory negligence. If there was no contributory negligence on the part of the husband, William Power, then there was none such to be imputed to the plaintiff Kate Power.

[13, 14] Appellants argue that respondents were not entitled to instructions on the theory of imminent danger, but that if so entitled, the instruction so given was erroneous, improper, and prejudicial to defendants. We have before indicated that the testimony shows that plaintiffs were in a position of imminent danger. It therefore follows that respondents were entitled to a proper instruction on that subject. The court instructed the jury that if they found "that the plaintiff while in the exercise of ordinary care was suddenly confronted with danger, not brought on by his own negligence," etc. Appellants object to the words, "not brought on by his own negligence," for the reason that the instruction does not limit the situation of danger with which plaintiffs were confronted as being brought about through the negligence of defendant C. Parks. In support of their contention, appellants cite Howard v. Worthington, 50 Cal. App. 556, 195 P. 709. It is true that the court in this case said:

"It will be observed that in stating this rule with reference to the plaintiff Howard the court, very correctly, gave him the benefit thereof only in the event that he was confronted with danger caused through the negligence of the defendant. But in specifying the duty of the defendant's driver, the court gives defendant the benefit of this rule, if confronted with sudden danger, without the limitation that it must have been caused through the negligence of the plaintiff. It is not questioned that the rule should have been applied alike in both instances."

[15] In that case there was no evidence of negligence committed by third persons. Under such circumstances the court very properly criticized the instruction because the rule was not applied alike to both parties, and for the further reason that under the instruction as given, defendant would have the benefit of the rule of imminent danger, even though the emergency was created by defendant's own negligence. In the instant case the rule of imminent danger was applied to the defendant in language similar to that used in the instruction from which we have just quoted. Appellants argue that a different rule should apply to the defendant than to the plaintiff; that is to say, appellants contend that in applying the imminent danger rule the defendants should have the benefit of imminent danger created by any person, including the plaintiff; but that plaintiff should have the benefit of imminent danger created by the acts of defendant C. Parks alone. We cannot agree with this contention. The same rule should apply to both parties. In Alameda County v. Tieslau, 44 Cal. App. 332, 186 P. 393, the plaintiff was given the benefit of the imminent danger rule even though the acts causing the danger were done by third persons. At all events, in the case at bar there was evidence sufficient to support the verdict of the jury that defendants' negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries to plaintiffs.

[16] The jury returned verdicts in favor of the plaintiffs, but the clerk entered judgment against the defendant Crown Stage Company only, and not against defendant C. Parks. Appellants contend that the judgments are void for this reason. In support of their argument appellants cite the cases of Thompson v. Southern Pacific Co., 31 Cal. App. 567, 161 P. 21, and Bradley v. Rosenthal, 154 Cal. 420, 97 P. 875, 129 Am. St. Rep. 171, holding that where recovery is sought based upon the act or omission of an agent which the principal did not direct and in which he did not participate, an acquittal of the agent of negligence is an acquittal of the principal. Also, the case of Doremus v. Root, 23 Wash. 710, 63 P. 572, 54 L. R. A. 649, where the verdict was silent as to the agent. These cases are not in point. In the instant case the verdicts neither acquitted the agent, nor were they silent as to the agent while speaking as to the principal. The verdicts were general in form and applied equally to both of the defendants. They read as follows:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled action, find for the plaintiff Kate Power and assess the damages in the sum of two thousand and thirty-three dollars ($2,033) this 14th day of June, 1923. Frank G. Sprake, Foreman."

A similar verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiff William Power. The judgment reads as follows:

"Wherefore, by virtue of the law, and by reason of the premises aforesaid, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that said plaintiff Kate Power have and recover from said defendant Crown Stage Company the sum of two thousand and thirty-three dollars ($2,033) together with her costs and disbursements incurred in this action, amounting to the sum of 38 and 25/100 dollars."

[17, 18] A similar judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff William Power. While judgments should have been entered against both defendants, it does not follow that the judgments as entered against the Crown Stage Company only are void. The liability of principal and agent was both joint and several. Such error in the judgment may be amended by the trial court at any time in such manner that it should properly designate both defendants, provided the amendment does not affect the substantial rights of the defendants, but consists of a clerical mistake appearing on the face of the record. Boust v. Superior Court, 162 Cal. 343, 122 P. 956. In the present case such amendment would not affect the substantial rights of either defendant and would consist in the rectifying of a clerical mistake appearing on the face of the record. Appellants have not been prejudiced by the omission of one of the defendants from the judgment, and the error is clearly within the provisions of section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where it is specified that no judgment shall be reversed by reason of any error unless such error was prejudicial, and that by reason of such error substantial injury was sustained by the appealing party. "No judgment shall be set aside, * * * for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Const. art. 6, § 4½. We have examined the entire cause, including the evidence, and are not of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

There being no prejudicial error, it is ordered that the judgments be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

83 Cal. App. 161

NUMITOR GOLD MINING CO. v. KATZER
et al. (Civ. 3263.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 17, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 13, 1927.

1. Taxation ☞734(1)—Tax deed is void unless every essential step leading to execution is strictly followed.

A tax deed is void unless every essential step leading to its execution is strictly followed.

2. Taxation ☞658(4)—Description of land in tax sale notice as tracts lying east of creek, stating subdivisions of section and areas, held sufficient (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771a).

Descriptions of land in notice under Pol. Code, § 3764, of tax sale, under section 3771a, as "portion E. of Greenhorn creek of E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 15, Twp. 15 N., R. 9 E. Mt. D. B. and M., cont. 5 acres," "portion E. of Greenhorn creek of E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of Sec. 15, Twp. 15 N., R. 9 E. Mt. D. B. and M., containing 80 acres," held sufficient.

3. Taxation ☞658(4)—Description of land in tax sale notice as section subdivision of stated acreage, excepting part in river, held sufficient (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771a).

Description of land in notice, under Pol. Code § 3764, of tax sale, under section 3771a, as "S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ (except part in Bear river) and S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 14, Twp. 15 N., R. 9 E. Mt. D. B. and M., containing 180 acres," held sufficient.

4. Taxation ☞421(1)—Description of land for purposes of taxation is prima facie sufficient if land can be readily identified (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771a).

A description of land for purposes of taxation is prima facie sufficient if the land can be readily identified and located so as not to mislead the owner, within Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771a, relating to sales of land for delinquent taxes.

5. Taxation ☞658(3)—Caption to addenda notice of tax sale "property to be sold" held not notice property would be sold (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771a).

A caption to addenda notice, under Pol. Code, § 3764, of tax sale, under section 3771a, of "property to be sold" held not strictly a notice that the property would actually be sold.

6. Taxation ☞658(3)—Clerical error in body of tax sale notice by inserting date of prior year rendered notice fatally defective (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771a).

A clerical error in the body of a notice, under Pol. Code, § 3764, of a tax sale, under section 3771a, in inserting the year 1922 instead of 1923, rendered the notice fatally defective.

7. Taxation ☞658(3)—Correct date in caption of tax sale notice cannot overcome defect of erroneous date in body (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771a).

Reference to the caption of a notice, under Pol. Code, § 3764, of a tax sale, under section 3771a, which gives the correct date, cannot be resorted to, to overcome the fatal defect of an incorrect date in the body of the notice.

8. Taxation ☞658(3)—Notice that tax collector would be in office and would sell property held not strictly to state time or place of sale (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3771a).

Notice, under Pol. Code, § 3764, of tax sale, under section 3771a, that the tax collector would "be in office and sell" property, construed strictly, held not notice of time and place of sale.

9. Taxation ☞658(1)—Return before sale date of unclaimed jurisdictional notice of sale sent by mail renders tax deed void (Pol. Code, § 3771a).

A notice sent by registered mail before a tax sale, under Pol. Code, § 3771a, to the last known address of the owner is jurisdictional, and, if returned unclaimed before the sale date, renders the tax deed issued pursuant to the sale void, since, if the notice remained in the post office up to the time of sale, the owner might claim it.

10. Taxation ☞658(1)—Jurisdictional prerequisite of registered mail notice of tax sale is not waived by return of notice unclaimed under postal laws (Pol. Code, § 3771a; U. S. Postal Laws, § 956, as amended in 1918).

The jurisdictional prerequisite of a registered mail notice of tax sale, under Pol. Code, § 3771a, is not waived by return of notice unclaimed under U. S. Postal Laws, § 956, as amended in 1918, providing for return of registered letters remaining undelivered, since under the provisions thereof mail may remain on sender's request 90 days before being returned.

11. Taxation ☞834—Statute providing for reimbursement to holder of void tax deed does not make owner liable for improvements made by holder (Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5).

Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5, providing that, before a conveyance of real property made upon sale for delinquent taxes can be set aside as void, the holder must be reimbursed the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs paid out by him, does not make the owner liable for improvements made by the holder of such void deed.

12. Taxation ☞834—"Costs," as used in statute requiring owner to reimburse holder of void tax deed, does not include expenditures for betterments (Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5).

The term "costs," as used in Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5, providing that, before a conveyance of real property sold for delinquent taxes can be set aside as void, the holder must first be repaid taxes, penalties, and costs paid out by him, does not include improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Costs.]

13. Taxation ☞834—General rule, in absence of statute, does not make owner liable for betterments to holder of void tax deed.

The general rule of law, in the absence of statute, does not make the owner liable for the cost of improvements made by the holder of a void tax deed.

14. Taxation ☞829—Expenses of undetermined litigation to terminate right of way held too speculative for reimbursement to holder of void tax deed, even if entitled to compensation for betterments.

The expenses of undetermined litigation instituted by the holder of a void tax deed to terminate a right of way held too speculative to require reimbursement by the owner, even if the holder of such deed would be entitled to compensation for improvements and betterments made by him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; George L. Jones, Judge.

Suit by the Numitor Gold Mining Company against Stephen M. Katzer and another. From a judgment for plaintiff quieting title and declaring a tax deed void because of defective notice of sale, the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Gerald R. Johnson and Thomas Ashby, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

J. M. Walling, of Nevada City, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment quieting plaintiff's title to real property, and declaring defendants' tax deed void on account of a defective notice of sale.

The defendants assert that the notice of sale was a sufficient compliance with the statute and charge the trial court with error in the exclusion of evidence of the cost of improvements, which they claim to have incurred, and which should have been allowed as a prerequisite to the granting of the decree.

Plaintiff was the owner of 6 tracts of land situated in Nevada county, Cal., aggregating 161 acres of land, which were sold to the state June 25, 1918, for delinquent taxes. On June 4, 1923, pursuant to section 3764 of the Political Code, the tax collector published notice of the sale of these lands in The Morning Union, a newspaper of Grass Valley, which notice in part read:

"Addenda Notice.

"Property to be Sold at Public Auction on June 27, 1923, for Delinquent Taxes of 1918.

"Public notice is hereby given that the five-year period allowed by law for the redemption of property sold to the state for delinquent taxes will have expired on the 25th day of June, 1923, on all of the property sold to the state for delinquent taxes in the year 1918, as herein listed (unless redeemed or canceled on or before the date of sale), and that pursuant to the provisions of section 3771a of the Political Code, I, Wm. T. Garland, as county tax collector of the county of Nevada, will be on the 27th day of June, 1922, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, and continuing each day thereafter, if additional time is required to complete the sale, in the tax collector's office in the courthouse in the county of Nevada, state of California, the undersigned tax collector will sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for cash in lawful money of the United States, the several parcels and lots of property hereinafter described. * * *

On June 27, 1923, the land in question was sold to defendants in consideration of the payment of the accrued delinquent taxes and costs, and two days later a deed of conveyance was executed and delivered to them. The validity of the deed is challenged for the following alleged irregularities in the tax sale proceedings, to wit, inaccurate description of the separate parcels of land and defective notice of sale.

[1] The rule is firmly established that the proceedings on tax sales are in invitum, and that every essential step leading to the execution of a tax deed must be strictly followed, or the deed executed pursuant thereto will be void. 22 Cal. Jur. 324, § 296; Russell v. Mann, 22 Cal. 131; Lachman v. Clark, 14 Cal. 131; Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 609; Lewis v. Tulare Rec. Dist. 749, 56 Cal. App. 52, 204 P. 421; Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 123 P. 258, L. R. A. 1915C, 492.

The statute requires the notice of sale to specify the time, place, and description of the property to be sold. "Such notice shall state the day and hour and place of sale. * * *" Pol. Code, § 3764.

[2] The following descriptions of land were challenged as insufficient:

"Portion E. of Greenhorn creek of E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 15, Twp. 15 N., R. 9 E. Mt. D. B. and M., cont. 5 acres."

This description clearly includes all that portion of the specifically described land lying east of Greenhorn creek, which portion consists of 5 acres and is not uncertain.

For the same reason the following description is sufficient, to wit:

"Portion E. of Greenhorn creek of E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of Sec. 15, Twp. 15 N., R. 9 E. Mt. D. B. and M., containing 80 acres."

[3] Nor is the following description uncertain:

The "S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ (except part in Bear river) and S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 14, Twp. 15 N., R. 9 E. Mt. D. B. and M., containing 180 acres."

This description includes 200 acres of land, except the portion thereof contained within the boundaries of the river which evidently flows through this tract, and which excluded portion by elimination consists of 20 acres of land. There can be no doubt as to the land described, nor as to the portion thereof which is excepted from the levy.

[4] While it is true that a description of land for the purposes of taxation must be certain, yet the description is prima facie sufficient if the land can be readily identified and located so as not to mislead the owner. Black on Tax Titles, p. 139, § 112; 3 Cooley on Taxation, p. 2363, § 1175; Corson v. Crocker, 31 Cal. App. 626, 161 P. 287.

Strictly construed, the notice which was published in this case stated neither the time nor the place of sale. An error also occurred in the date of sale. We are of the opinion that this notice was, therefore, fatally defective.

[5, 6] The caption to the addenda which reads, "Property to be sold at public auction on June 27, 1923, for delinquent taxes of 1918," is not a definite statement that the property would, in fact, be sold on that date. Moreover, if it can be said to be an affirmative statement that the property would be sold on June 27, 1923, it is in direct conflict with the following language employed in the body of the notice:

"I, Wm. T. Garland, as county tax collector of the county of Nevada, will be on the 27th day of June, 1922, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, and continuing each day thereafter, if additional time is required to complete the sale, in the tax collector's office. * * *

[7] Evidently a clerical error occurred in inserting in this notice the year 1922 instead of 1923. Of course, the figures 1922 indicated an impossible date of sale, since at the time of the publication that date had already elapsed. Nor can it be held that reference to the caption of a notice can be resorted to to correct and actually change an erroneous date contained in the body of the instrument. The notice of the time of sale is statutory and jurisdictional, and the court may not speculate as to the actual date intended to have been inserted. Lewis v. Tulare Rec. Dist., 56 Cal. App. 52, 204 P. 421; Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 622, 50 P. 761. In Black on Tax Titles, § 207, it is said:

"It (the notice) must designate the time and place of the sale with such certainty that there can be no reasonable misconception in regard to it." 3 Cooley on Taxation (4th Ed.) p. 2804, § 1415; Knowlton v. Moore, 136 Mass. 32.

[8] A strict construction of the language employed in this notice impels the conclusion that there was an omission to state that the property would actually be sold, even upon that inaccurate date of 1922, for the language is:

"I, Wm. T. Garland, as county tax collector * * * will be * * * in the tax collector's office," on "June 27, 1922, * * * and continuing each day thereafter," etc., and "will sell at public auction * * * the several parcels and lots of property hereinafter described. * * *

This language, construed strictly according to the rule invoked, means that Wm. T. Garland, county tax collector, gave notice that he would be in his office June 27, 1922, and continuing thereafter, and would sell the property in question, without stating when or where he would dispose of it.

[9] In addition to the publication of notice of sale, the tax collector is required by the provisions of section 3771a to send by registered mail a copy of the notice to the last known address of the party to whom the land was last assessed. This notice must be mailed within 5 days of the first publication, and at least 21 days before the date of sale. The purpose of this mailing of notice is to afford personal service upon the owner, if reasonably possible, and enable him to redeem the property. A copy of this printed notice, with the inaccurate date of 1922 first changed to 1923, in the copy, was on June 4, 1923, forwarded by registered mail to the plaintiff's last known address at Chicago, Ill. The wrapper of this parcel contained printed instructions to return the parcel to the sender within 10 days, if not claimed. It was thereafter returned unclaimed before the date upon which the sale was made.

The service of this notice by mail is also jurisdictional, and, where it is returned prior to the sale without having been delivered, it is an insufficient service of notice, and a deed executed pursuant to such a defective notice is void. The purpose of the statute in requiring this notice to be sent to the owner 21 days before the sale is that he may be thereby given a reasonable opportunity of obtaining personal notice of the sale. If the notice remains in the post office up to the time of sale, there is always a possibility that the owner may claim his mail and thus obtain knowledge of the proposed sale. If it is withdrawn and returned before the sale, this opportunity may be defeated. 24 Cal. Jur. 346, §§ 323, 329; Healton v. Morrison, 162 Cal. 668, 124 P. 240; Joslin v. Shaffer, 66 Cal. App. 69, 225 P. 307.

[10] Nor is this jurisdictional prerequisite waived, by virtue of the reason that the United States postal rules, in the absence of instructions from the sender to the contrary, require the return of the parcel prior to the expiration of the 21 days required by the statute. Section 956 of the United States Postal Laws, as amended in 1918, provides:

"Domestic registered letters and parcels which remain undelivered for the period stated in paragraph 1 of section 633, or such period as may be named in the sender's return request, if any, not less than three nor more than ninety days, shall be marked on the face with the reason for non-delivery, and be disposed of as herein provided."

This postal rule clearly implies that a sender of registered mail may request the retaining of the parcel at its destination not to exceed 90 days. The postal rules are, therefore, not in conflict with the California statute respecting the service by mail of notice of proposed tax sales. The failure of the tax collector to request the holding of the parcel at Chicago for the required 21 days, and his inadvertence in placing upon the wrapper the request to return it if unclaimed within 10 days, was, no doubt, the cause of the premature return of the notice. Whatever may have been the cause, the statute was not fulfilled, and the notice of mailing was therefore defective and inadequate.

The defendants offered to prove that, subsequent to acquiring their title, they expended the sum of $1,000 prosecuting a suit to terminate a right of way over the property in question, which right of way had been conveyed by the Nevada County Narrow Gauge Railroad Company, a former owner thereof, to one Nolan by deed dated September 19, 1911, and recorded July 10, 1923. It was claimed that this expenditure was in the nature of betterments or improvements to the property and resulted in enhancing the value thereof. Pursuant to this theory, the deed was offered in evidence and was rejected as incompetent on the ground that the statute does not contemplate repayment for improvements or betterments.

[11] Subdivision 5 of section 3898 of the Political Code provides that in an action at law, before a conveyance of real property made upon a sale for delinquent taxes can be set aside as void, the holder of such deed must first be repaid "the full amount of taxes, penalties and costs paid out and expended by him. * * *"

[12] This statutory provision appears to embrace all classes of expenditures, the repayment of which the Legislature intended to make a prerequisite to the entry of a decree declaring a tax deed void on account of irregularities, and it does not pretend to include expenditures for betterments or improvements. Nor can the term "costs," as it is used in this section, be construed to include improvements. Evidently the Legislature, in the use of this term, was considering only the costs which might be incurred on the sale of the property for delinquent taxes.

The case of Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 132 P. 258, L. R. A. 1915C, 492, upon which appellant relies, and which contains some language favorable to his contention, involved nothing but a question as to whether the tax deed holder was entitled to interest on the sum of $327 paid by him for the purchase of the tax title. This case was decided in 1912, before there was any California statute requiring the tax deed holder to be reimbursed for the money expended by him for the purchase of his tax title. It seems a significant fact that, apparently in response to this very decision, the Legislature, the following year of 1913, amended section 3898 of the Political Code, and specifically enumerated just what character of expenditures must be refunded in case of a void tax deed. It would require the exercise of a vivid imagination to read into this statute the requirement to compensate for improvements, and this omission raises almost a conclusive presumption that the Legislature intended to absolve the owner from this liability.

[13] The general rule of law, in the absence of statute, does not hold the owner liable for the cost of improvements, where the tax deed is void. In 3 Thompson on Real Property, p. 933, § 2777, it is said:

"The rule of caveat emptor applies with great strictness to a purchaser at a tax sale; and if he fails to secure a good title to the property he attempts to purchase, because of the invalidity of the tax sale, he cannot recover the amount paid therefor, unless some statute expressly provides some such remedy. The purchaser at such sale usually buys at a nominal price, and assumes the liability of having his title prove to be worthless. If he gets nothing by his purchase, he has, in the absence of a statutory provision, no recourse upon any one. The statutes in some states * * * provide that the party seeking to have the sale set aside must reimburse the purchaser to the extent of the taxes legally assessed, with costs of the sale and interest. The effect of such a statute is to modify the rule of caveat emptor as applied to such sales. * * * So the extent of the purchaser's title in a particular case depends on the statute under which the sale is made." 3 Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) § 1349.

In Black on Taxes (2d Ed.) p. 592, § 463, it is said:

"If the tax sale is absolutely void, the payment of the tax by the purchaser stands on the footing of a voluntary payment, not made at the request of the owner of the land, and which a court of equity will not require him to refund." Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233.

The texts relied upon by appellant either declare a limited and conditional requirement on the part of the owner to recompense the disseized tax deed holder for improvements, or bases this necessity upon the existence of a definite statute to that effect.

In 4 Cooley on Taxation (4th Ed.) p. 3058, § 1557, the author says:

"If the holder of a tax title goes into possession and in good faith makes improvements, he is ordinarily entitled to compensation for such improvements on the owner's recovering the property, so far as such value exceeds rental value. It is generally required that the defeated tax purchaser account for rents and profits received by him.

"A common statutory provision is that the owner of the original title, in the event of his establishing the title to the land, shall pay to the tax purchaser the enhanced value of the land in consequence of the expenditures the latter has made upon it. The requirement that payment shall be made of the fair value of betterments which an adverse claimant has made in good faith upon the land, and which the party making them must now lose, is one that, under ordinary circumstances, is eminently just and proper.

"No serious question of the right of the Legislature to make such requirements can well arise. The requirement is at this time very generally made, either by statutes especially applicable only to tax sales, or by general 'occupying claimant' statutes applicable to tax sales as well as other sales, but no recovery for improvements is possible where the statute providing therefor has not been complied with, nor where the purchaser has entered into possession in violation of a statute."

In 26 R. C. L. p. 441, § 397, it is said:

"In many of the states the remedy for improvements, made in good faith by persons in possession under color of title, has been established by statute, and the rule of the common law * * * has been (thereby) greatly extended."

Likewise the same text-writer, in 26 R. C. L. p. 439, § 395, says:

"When an owner's land has been sold for taxes under an invalid sale, and he comes into a court of equity and asks for a decree setting aside the sale and quieting the title * * * he should be required to reimburse the person who purchased the land at the tax sale for so much of the purchase price as was applicable to the payment of the tax, as a condition precedent to relief on the general principle that 'he who seeks equity must do equity.' In many states the foregoing principle is established by statute, and in but a few states is it now the law that the doctrine of caveat emptor will be extended so far as to enable the owner to obtain relief in equity against an invalid sale without reimbursing the purchaser to the amount of the taxes of which the owner has been relieved."

Some confusion exists among the authorities as to the liability of an owner of land to recompense the holder of an invalid tax deed for the value of improvements placed upon the premises upon the good faith of his tax title. There is a sharp conflict between the doctrine of caveat emptor which applies to the purchaser of a tax title, and the maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity," applying to an owner who seeks to quiet title against an invalid tax deed. Many states have enacted statutes, termed betterment laws, which are intended to recognize the equities and enable a bona fide holder of a tax title to recover the enhanced value of property, on account of improvements placed by the purchaser upon premises in good faith. 26 R. C. L. p. 441, § 397; 14 R. C. L. p. 19, § 7; 31 C. J. p. 315, § 18. In a few states, independent of such betterment statutes, it has been held that where an owner brings his action in equity for an accounting for rents and profits, or to quiet title against a tax deed held by a bona fide holder, the owner must recompense such holder for the value of improvements. 31 C. J. p. 314, § 16; 14 R. C. L. p. 18, § 6. Most cases confine this doctrine to actions in equity instituted by the owner, and do not extend it to cases where the tax holder is the actor in the litigation. 31 C. J. p. 314, §§ 16, 17. And in many cases it has been held that the value of improvements may be recouped by the tax deed holder, only as an offset, when the owner has sought for an accounting for rents and profits. "It has been held that if no claim is made for rents and profits, no allowance can be made for improvements." 31 C. J. p. 314, § 16; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1, 5 L. Ed. 547.

An examination of the authorities indicates that the common-law rule, which precludes the recovery of the value of improvements made by a holder of tax title under a void deed, has been very cautiously extended. Recognizing the far-reaching effect and the possible irreparable injury to the owner by abandoning the rule of caveat emptor with respect to tax titles, the courts have been loath to extend the rule compelling compensation for improvements, in the absence of statutory requirements. The language of the text-writers and of the decisions, which supports the doctrine compelling an owner to recompense a tax deed holder for the value of improvements, is usually based upon the existence of betterment statutes. And those authorities which have required payments as a pure doctrine of equity independent of statute have usually confined this requirement to the mere repayment of assessments, taxes, penalties, costs, and interest. That is the full extent to which the case of Holland v. Hotchkiss, supra, can be said to go, for the question of interest on the taxes paid by the purchaser of the title was the sole problem there involved. We have been cited to no case in the California reports which extends the rule beyond this limit. Indeed, it would seem to be revolutionary and dangerous to do so. For generations the theory of the law has been that the purchaser of a tax title is a mere speculator, who, owing to the misfortune or carelessness of the owner, has become possessed of a desirable property for an infinitesimal proportion of its actual value. In the absence of negligence or laches on the part of the owner, the purchaser, on the doctrine of caveat emptor, should improve or radically alter the character of the property at his peril, at least until he had remained the undisputed owner for a reasonable length of time. Justice would seem to require the protection of an unfortunate owner against too hasty or radical changes in the character of the property by an ambitious tax buyer, which might amount to appropriation, even though the deed proved to be void and the purchaser was without title.

[14] In the instant case, the plaintiff was a foreign corporation with a residence at Chicago, and therefore there was a greater probability of its being ignorant of the existence of delinquent taxes. Defendants became the purchaser of the tax deed on June 27, 1923, without any actual knowledge of the sale on the part of plaintiff. This suit to quiet title was commenced January 9, 1924, within 6 months and 12 days from the time defendants received their deed. Yet within this brief period defendants are claiming to have instituted litigation to terminate a right of way across the land and ask to be reimbursed to the extent of $1,000.

All that defendants offered to prove was that they had commenced this action; it had not been terminated in their favor, or at all. There was no offer to show that it was even likely to terminate favorable to the defendants. For aught that appears, it may have been ill-advised litigation with no reasonable hopes of success. Indeed, the grantees apparently held a good deed of conveyance to the right of way. Moreover, there was no proof, nor offer of proof, that the litigation, even though it terminated successfully for the defendants, would enhance the value of the premises to any extent whatever. The showing in this case is too speculative, remote, and uncertain to warrant the assumption that the mere commencement of an action of that character would constitute an enhancement of value or a betterment to the property involved.

For this reason and because we are of the opinion that, under our statute, the owner of property is not liable for the value of improvements or betterments placed upon property by the holder of a void tax deed, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

MOJAVE RIVER IRR. DIST. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA WITHIN AND FOR SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5507.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 28, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 27, 1927.

1. Constitutional law §43(2)—Petitioner appropriating water under act held not to have waived right to question constitutionality of provision for review in superior court (Water Appropriation Act, § 1b).

Petitioner for water right under the Water Commission Act (St. 1923, p. 162) because it received permission to appropriate water thereunder held not to waive right to object to constitutionality of section 1b, providing for review in the superior court by party aggrieved, especially where section 1b was severable from other sections.

2. Courts §20—"Special cases and proceedings" as respects superior court's jurisdiction are new cases and proceedings unknown to general framework of law and equity (Const. art. 6, § 5).

Where 30 years prior to adoption of Constitution of 1879, phrase "special cases and proceedings" was judicially defined as new cases, the creation of statutes and the proceedings under which are unknown to the general framework of courts of law and equity, since it must be presumed the language of article 6, § 5, of the present Constitution was intended to have the same meaning as when used in the same sense and context as that of 1879, such definition is applicable to present article 6, § 5, giving superior court original jurisdiction of "special cases and proceedings" not otherwise provided for.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Proceeding.]

3. Waters and water courses §142—Appropriation under statute merely gives preference over subsequent appropriator and fixes date of inception of claim (Water Commission Act).

Effect of appropriation of water under the Water Commission Act (St. 1923, p. 162) is merely to give a preference over a subsequent appropriation or diverter who takes under no other right or title and to fix date of posting of notice as inception of claim under it.

4. Waters and water courses §152(1)—Action to review order of state water commission held not one in certiorari (Water Commission Act, § 1b).

Proceeding under Water Commission Act, § 1b (St. 1923, p. 162), to review order of state water commission in granting application to appropriate water, held not one in certiorari, since remedy afforded is in affirmance, reversal, or modification of order of the division of water rights and not to set aside a decision of that body.

5. Waters and water courses §152(4)—Superior court held without jurisdiction of appeal or writ of review from order of division of water rights, granting permit (Water Commission Act, § 1b).

Since the division of water rights under the water commission act (St. 1923, p. 162) cannot exercise judicial functions nor be vested with judicial authority, the superior court is without jurisdiction under Water Commission Act, § 1b, of appeal or writ of review from its order granting permit to appropriate water.

6. Constitutional law §48—Construction upholding legislative act is favored over one rendering it void.

Courts favor a construction which will uphold a legislative act rather than one rendering it void.

7. Waters and water courses §128—Statutory review of order of water commission by superior court held not a "special case or proceeding" not otherwise provided for within Constitution (Water Commission Act, § 1b; Const. art. 6, § 5).

Water Commission Act, § 1b (St. 1923, p. 162), permitting action in the superior court to review order of the state water commission issuing or refusing to issue permit to appropriate water, held not, in view of remedies afforded to persons aggrieved to provide for "special case or proceeding," within Const. art. 6, § 5, providing superior court shall have jurisdiction of special cases and proceedings not otherwise provided for.

8. Statutes $\S$ 85(4)—Act permitting review of quasi judicial order of water commission by superior court held invalid as "special law" regulating practice in courts (Water Commission Act, $\S$ 1b; Const. art. 4, $\S$ 25).

Water Commission Act, $\S$ 1b (St. 1923, p. 162), permitting action in the superior court to review quasi judicial order of the state water commission issuing or refusing to issue permit to appropriate water, held invalid under Const. art. 4, $\S$ 25, as a "special law" regulating practice in the courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Law.]

9. Statutes $\S$ 76(3)—Act permitting review of order of water commission by superior court held invalid as special law where general law is applicable (Water Commission Act, $\S$ 1b; Const. art. 4, $\S$ 25, subd. 33).

Water Commission Act, $\S$ 1b (St. 1923, p. 162), permitting action in the superior court to review order of the state water commission issuing or refusing to issue permit to appropriate water, held, in view of other remedies of parties aggrieved, invalid under Const. art. 4, $\S$ 25, subd. 33, as a special law where general law was applicable.

10. Constitutional law $\S$ 56—Waters and water courses $\S$ 128—Act permitting review of order of water commission held invalid as conferring nonjudicial duty on superior court (Water Commission Act, $\S$ 1b; Const. art. 6, $\S$ 1).

Since duties of the superior court under Water Commission Act, $\S$ 1b (St. 1923, p. 162), in reviewing order of the state water commission in issuing or refusing to issue permit to appropriate water, are regulatory and ministerial, act held void under Const. art. 6, $\S$ 1, as conferring on court duties of nonjudicial nature.

11. Prohibition $\S$ 3(5)—Prohibition may be granted by Supreme Court though right of appeal exists if appeal from superior court's order would be inadequate (Water Commission Act, $\S$ 1b).

Where existing right of appeal if the superior court proceeded under Water Commission Act, $\S$ 1b (St. 1923, p. 162), to review order of the state water commission granting permit to appropriate water of a river would not be adequate remedy, petitioner is entitled to writ preventing the court from taking further steps to review the commission's order.

Original prohibition by the Mojave River Irrigation District against the Superior Court of the State of California within and for the County of San Bernardino and others. Writ granted.

Meserve, Mumper, Hughes & Robertson, of Los Angeles (Timon E. Owens, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner.

Byron Waters and Grant Holcomb, both of San Bernardino, for respondents.

Spencer Burroughs, of Sacramento, T. P. Wittschen, of Oakland, and Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

CRAIG, J. The purpose of this proceeding is to prevent the respondent court from taking further steps in a certain suit instituted therein and entitled Van Dyke et al. v. Department of Public Works of the State of California et al. That action is one under section 1b of the Water Commission Act, enacted in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 162). It was brought to secure a review of an order of the division of water rights of the department of public works (herein referred to as the division of water rights), granting the Mojave River irrigation district a permit to appropriate water of the Mojave river.

The petitioner relies principally upon the claim that section 1b of the Water Commission Act is unconstitutional. The section reads as follows:

"Any person, firm, association, or corporation interested in any application for a permit to appropriate water or any party protestant before the state water commission may within thirty days after issuance of a permit or an order refusing to issue a permit and rejecting an application bring an action in the superior court in and for the county wherein the proposed point of diversion or a proposed point of diversion lies. Said action shall be for a review of the order of the state water commission. Said court shall review all correspondence, maps, data and other records on file with the state water commission which pertain to said application and all evidence taken before said commission and take such additional evidence as it may require or as may be submitted by the parties in interest or the state water commission and shall then render judgment affirming, reversing, or modifying the action of the state water commission. The priority of right of an applicant shall continue until final judgment is rendered."

One of the provisions of the Constitution with which this section is said to conflict is the third paragraph of section 25, article 4, by which the Legislature is prohibited from passing local or special laws regulating the practice of the courts of justice. That this criticism is good cannot be disputed unless the procedure provided is justified as within the practice of the common-law or equity actions or proceedings as administered by courts of law or equity as such at the time of the adoption of our Constitution, or as belonging to the class of special cases or special proceedings allowed by the Constitution to be created by the Legislature. It is expedient first to determine the nature of the proceeding in the superior court, and to do this our principal task is to construe the provision under which it was instituted, and which for purposes of brevity will be referred to herein merely as section 1b. With slight variations in the phraseology of this section it might be interpreted as intended to provide for a proceeding in the superior court in the nature of certiorari, an appeal, or for special cases or special proceedings such as those to which reference is made in section 5, article 6, of the Constitution.

[1] A preliminary objection is interposed to the maintenance of this proceeding by the petitioner on the ground that it is estopped to question the constitutionality of the Water Commission Act by reason of the fact that it has taken advantage of the provisions thereof by applying for and receiving an order from the division of water rights permitting the appropriation of water of the Mojave river, which order is the one sought to be reviewed in the action involved in this proceeding. We think the principle of estoppel cannot be extended this far. If, having applied to the division of water rights for permission to appropriate water, petitioners had disputed the constitutionality of the act giving it the right to grant such permission, an estoppel would exist against the assertion of such a claim. The authorities cited, Gregory v. Hecke, 73 Cal. App. 268, 238 P. 787; Cofman v. Ousterhous, 40 N. D. 390, 168 N. W. 826, 18 A. L. R. 219, as well as Stuart v. Norviel, 26 Ariz. 493, 226 P. 908, justify this conclusion, but they do not hold or suggest that one who has sought and secured a benefit from a single provision of an act is estopped to assert that another and a severable provision is unconstitutional. It is obvious that section 1b is severable from other sections of the act, and especially that under which the division of water rights is authorized to allow permission to appropriate water. Section 1b not only has no necessary connection with the latter provision, but in the sense that it permits of the annulment of any order made thereunder it is inconsistent therewith. Hence, an applicant for such a permit does not waive the right to object to the legality of section 1b.

[2] Section 5, article 6, of the Constitution, reads as follows:

"Sec. 5. The superior court shall have original jurisdiction * * * of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for."

The inquiry logically narrows to the ascertainment of the scope and definition of the term "special cases and proceedings" as it is here used. This is particularly essential because of the constitutional inhibition heretofore mentioned, declaring that the Legislature shall not pass "local or special laws regulating the practice of courts of justice," and among the subjects within the constitutional inhibition are cases where a general law can be made applicable. Article 4, §§ 25, subd. 33. Special cases give new rights and afford new remedies. Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145; Appeal of Houghton, 42 Cal. 35. Concerning the phrase "special cases and proceedings," used in section 5, article 6, of the Constitution of 1879, it is said in Bixler's Appeal, 59 Cal. 550, 555:

"Nearly thirty years prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1879, they had been defined by the Supreme Court of the state as something entirely different—'new cases, the creation of statutes, and the proceedings under which are unknown to the general framework of courts of law and equity'—as not including any class of cases for which courts of general jurisdiction had always supplied a remedy."

And the opinion approves this definition. A similar expression is to be found in Re Central Irrigation District, 117 Cal. 382, 49 P. 354.

It must be presumed that the language found in the present Constitution was intended to have the same meaning as when used in the same sense and context as that of 1879, and hence the definition above quoted is applicable to the present provision of section 5, article 6, of the Constitution.

[3] The determination of this proceeding then hinges upon whether or not a party having rights which may be affected by the order of the division of water rights on application for permit to appropriate water has a remedy through the institution of a suit within the general jurisdiction always possessed by courts of law or equity. What may be the rights of others than the applicant which may be infringed by the granting of such a permit by the division of water rights? What may be the rights to be acquired by the applicant for such a permit? What effect has an appropriation upon the rights of others? The last question may be answered first, that "its effect is merely to give a preference over a subsequent appropriator or diverter who takes under no other right or title, and to fix the date of the posting of the notice as the inception of the claim under it." Herminghaus v. Southern California Edison Co. (Cal. Sup.) 252 P. 607.

[4] The proceeding is not an ordinary one in certiorari, since the remedy afforded is the affirmance, reversal, or modification of the order of the division of water rights and not the setting aside of a decision of that body. Again, if section 1b contemplated a writ of review the tribunal making the order would be the respondent, and the only one. Here the successful party in the proceeding before the division of water rights is such a party. Also the hearing before the superior court is one at which evidence not presented to the division of water rights is authorized to be considered, whereas only the record before the inferior tribunal is before the reviewing court on certiorari.

[5] The review of the order here involved cannot be intended as an appeal to the superior court, because such an appeal can only be taken from the decision or judgment of an inferior court (Const. art. 6, § 5; Chinn v. Superior Court, 156 Cal. 478, 105 P. 580), and this principle is also applicable to a writ of review (Dept. of Public Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 239 P. 107C). But the division of water rights of the water commission is in no sense judicial, the Legislature is without power to vest it with judicial authority, and it cannot exercise judicial functions. Dept. of Public Works v. Superior Court, supra.

We might state the proposition in another way, and say that if section 1b should be construed as an attempt to provide for appeal to the superior court from an order of the division of water rights it would be unconstitutional, for the reason just stated. Also, if it should be decided that by section 1b provision was meant to be made for a different or extended form of writ of review beyond the common-law scope as it existed when the present Constitution was adopted, this would be unconstitutional. People v. Barbera (Cal. App.) 248 P. 304; Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 P. 35; Maurer v. Mitchell, 53 Cal. 289; State v. Durand, 36 Utah, 93, 104 P. 760.

In view of another phase of the argument which will require consideration later, it may be appropriate to state at this point that were it to be held that by section 1b provision has been made for an appeal from the order of the division of water rights, it would necessarily follow that this would constitute an unconstitutional attempt to vest judicial power and the performance of a judicial function in that body.

[6] We proceed, then, to consider whether or not the legislative intent was to authorize a special case or special proceeding, and if so to determine its legality. That this was the purpose is urged by those seeking to uphold the law and who oppose the granting of this petition, and we think at this point it may be assumed that section 1b was meant to provide for an original proceeding in the superior court, for if an appeal or enlarged form of certiorari were intended such legislation would be unconstitutional, and courts always favor a construction which will uphold rather than render void a legislative act.

[7] The rights of others than the applicant may have originated by purchase, prescription, condemnation, or otherwise. They may be possessed by individuals or by corporations, public or private. They may be for purposes of irrigation, power production, domestic uses, or what not. The right to exercise them may be continual or occasional, or at certain times only. They may be independent of others, or dependent and secondary to them. They may be vested or merely inchoate, but capable of becoming vested, and through the doctrine of relation finally attach from the date of their initiation. But concerning all of these rights ample provision has always existed for their protection. Remedies by way of injunction, mandamus, suit to quiet title, prohibition, damages, and certiorari have afforded adequate protection to every interest in water heretofore or now known to the law. As to such rights no new interests are conferred in any instance by the Water Commission Act, and cases provided by section 1b are not those for which courts of general jurisdiction have lacked a remedy.

In appraising the rights to be acquired by the applicant for a permit to appropriate water, it must first be observed that the extent of the right is merely permission to make claim to a water right, and to subsequently acquire title thereto. Title is not conferred or even confirmed by the order of the division of water rights. The effect of such an order may be nullified by the decision of the court in a proper proceeding. If the division of water rights improperly refuses a permit, mandamus will issue to require that it be granted. If permission be wrongfully granted, those having rights which are prejudiced thereby have ample protection through the well established remedies above mentioned, and even if, as argued by some of those who uphold the constitutionality of the section, it were to be held that since the amendment of 1923 the division of water rights acts in a quasi judicial capacity in passing upon applications for permits its decision might be reviewed upon certiorari.

Up to 1913 the same right to appropriate water existed which is recognized by the Water Commission Act. The latter has created no new right in water, but only a different procedure for the acquisition thereof, and the title of one who has taken the first step toward making an appropriation is an interest in realty, and as such may be protected through a suit to quiet title. Inyo Cons. Water Co. v. Jess, 161 Cal. 516, 119 P. 934.

It is suggested that proceedings before the division of water rights are highly complicated; that many parties and numerous issues may be involved in a single hearing, and these considerations are apparently advanced to show that without section 1b no remedy exists or existed before its enactment for an adjudication of water rights which may be the subject of dispute. We have read the long list of issues and subissues which are set forth in the briefs of an amicus curiæ in this behalf, but have found none which may not be determined and the rights of the parties therein adjudicated in some one of the ordinary actions or proceedings at law or in equity.

It is said that where a ministerial officer exercising quasi judicial powers acts upon conflicting evidence his decision is discretionary, and not merely ministerial. However, it must be conceded that this rule is not peculiar to its application to the acts of the division of water rights, but applies to them only because it is a principle general in its scope and application affecting all officers charged with the discharge of regulatory duties involving quasi judicial decisions of preliminary questions of fact. Many instances where the decisions of such officers have been held to be discretionary are found throughout the decisions. The latest of that type is Bank of Italy v. Johnson (Cal. Sup.) 251 P. 784, where it is determined that the banking business is an appropriate subject for police regulation, and the powers of the bank commissioner in withholding his approval of the establishment of branch banks is held to be discretionary; and further that while the writ of mandamus may be used to compel a public official possessing discretionary power to act, the court may not substitute its discretion for that vested in the officer. If the rule operates to subserve public justice as governing the conduct of other officers of a similar class exercising like authority, there is nothing to indicate that it is not producing the same beneficial result when applied to the orders of the division of water rights in issuing permits to appropriate water. It must be remembered that in such cases jurisdictional matters may always be ascertained in a proceeding in certiorari, and that in that behalf the court may inquire into the existence of the facts necessary to give the executive officer authority to act. Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 P. 35.

Difficulties often arise in the application of even the most clearly established principles of law to deeply involved conditions in extreme cases. That such a result might follow from the judicial recognition of the doctrine of correlative rights as apply to percolating waters was admitted by the court in its decision in Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 70 P. 663, 74 P. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35, but it was nevertheless held that such difficulties in the performance of judicial duty, even though it might be seriously argued that they were so great as to present the impossibility of the performance thereof, would present no bar to the maintenance of property rights. Our courts have never admitted the impossibility of performance of judicial functions because of the difficulty of the task imposed upon them by reason of the great number of parties, or of issues.

[8] We conclude that, although the action provided by section 1b may be a special proceeding, it is not "a special case or special proceeding" as that phrase is used in section 5, article 6, of the Constitution of California. On the other hand, it requires but a cursory examination to disclose that the section is a special law regulating the practice of courts of justice. A single observation is sufficient to establish that this is true. The only remedial action authorized by section 1b to be taken by the superior court in the exercise of jurisdiction conferred is that of affirming, reversing, or modifying the order of the division of water rights. The division of water rights is not a court or judicial body, and its orders are regulatory and ministerial. Department of Public Works v. Superior Court, supra. It requires no citation of authorities to point out that in ascribing to a trial court such duties, as part of its judicial procedure in the exercise of original jurisdiction in the trial of a case, the Legislature has provided a special procedure in courts of justice. Although the division of water rights is not strictly a court or judicial tribunal, it nevertheless performs quasi judicial functions, exercising discretionary powers, but this would not under general laws regulating the procedure in courts permit the superior court to affirm, reverse, or modify the order of the quasi judicial body. The regular and ordinary procedure in such a case is a review of such order by certiorari. Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P. 965; Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v. Supervisors, 162 Cal. 14, 120 P. 780.

[9] Section 1b is also repugnant to article 4, section 325, subdivision 33, against special laws where a general law can be made applicable, for, as we have shown, the general laws now available are adequately remedial (which section 1b would not be, even if upheld) for the protection of all interests which can possibly exist in water rights. We say that even if section 1b were held to be constitutional it would not furnish an adequate remedy in the matter of the improper issuance of permits to appropriate water. A single instance will make this plain, although others might be stated. Suppose that after a hearing in the superior court upon an order of the division of water rights it were determined that a permit was improperly refused to one applicant and granted to another. The only action which the court is authorized to take would be to reverse the order. It has no authority to issue a permit nor even to direct the division of water rights to issue one. The reversal of the order being accomplished, there is no legal hindrance to the division granting a permit to another applicant who has perhaps appeared while the appeal to the superior court was in progress and again refusing the appealing applicant his permit. He might appeal again, and so on, ad infinitum, without ever securing an effective order from the division of water rights for himself. If the superior court under its authority to modify such an order should attempt to exercise the right in such a case to issue a permit to the appealing applicant, this would surely involve the exercise of an administrative function, and be without its jurisdiction.

An examination of the cases cited in the brief of the state division of water rights to support the constitutionality of section 1b against the claim that it is a special law regulating the practice of courts of justice shows that the acts construed were upheld upon the ground that the law in question was general and not special, or that an entirely new right was created which, of course, placed the statute in question within the class of "special cases and special proceedings not otherwise provided for." For example, in Title, etc., Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 P. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199, it is said:

"A statute which affects all the individuals of a class is a general law, while one which relates to particular persons or things of a class is special." McDonald v. Conniff, 99 Cal. 386, 391, 34 P. 71. * * *

"Under these rules we think the proceeding created by the act in question is sufficiently distinct and different from ordinary civil actions covered by the general rules of the code to justify the creation of a class which shall be characterized by the special rules of procedure here provided. * * *"

Elberta Oil Co. et al. v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 239 P. 415, illustrates the other type of cases. The statute there construed created a new right, in that it gave a stockholder the right to institute a proceeding to set aside an election of directors of a corporation. The opinion states:

"Prior to the enactment of these sections of the Code, or of legislation similar thereto, the only method of setting aside an election of directors at a stockholders' meeting was by quo warranto proceedings, instituted in the name of the people of the state. Whitehead v. Sweet, 126 Cal. 67, 58 P. 376."

The confirmation act involved in Re Central Irrigation District, 117 Cal. 382, 49 P. 354, also clearly falls within this classification. There the entire subject concerning the organization of irrigation districts and other matters designated in the act is statutory, and concerns rights and remedies unknown to the common law. The same is true of the act construed in Roche v. Superior Court, 30 Cal. App. 255, 157 P. 830. In such cases the Legislature may provide procedure unknown to the common law so long as property rights are not divested without due process of law.

The acts construed in Gridley v. Fellows, 166 Cal. 765, 138 P. 355, and Cohen v. City of Alameda, 168 Cal. 265, 142 P. 885, are clearly distinguishable from section 1b of the Water Commission Act. Both cases involved mere questions of the classification of causes of action. Neither has to do with the creation of new rights or new and different actions. In Department of Public Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 239 P. 1076, it was held that all acts of the division of water rights are ministerial and regulatory, but the decision relates to section 12.

Much reliance is placed upon U. S. v. Ritchie, 17 How. 525, 21 Curt. 656, 15 L. Ed. 236, holding that an act which provided that after a board of commissioners had rendered final decision an appeal might be taken to the United States district court was in fact intended to provide for an original proceeding in that court. No consideration was given to the possible conflict of that enactment with such an organic inhibition as that contained in section 25, article 4, of our Constitution, for there was no such limitation upon the power of Congress to pass a special act.

[10] We also agree with the petitioner that since all acts of the division of water rights relative to applicants for permits to appropriate water are regulatory and ministerial, and not judicial, and since the jurisdiction of the superior court is limited by section 1b to merely the right to affirm, reverse, or modify orders of the division of water rights, the function thus required to be performed by the superior court would be regulatory and ministerial only and in no sense judicial. Of course, this would not follow if the superior court were reviewing the record of the division of water rights upon certiorari, but the conclusion above stated must result since the action authorized in the superior court cannot for the reasons we have heretofore stated be upheld as such a proceeding and only, if at all, upon the theory that it is meant to provide an original action in the superior court. Hence, the provision is unconstitutional, for duties of a nonjudicial nature cannot be conferred upon courts. Section 1, art. 6, Const; People v. Sanderson, 30 Cal. 168; Phelan v. City and County of San Francisco, 20 Cal. 40; Tyson v. Washington County, 78 Neb. 211, 110 N. W. 634, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350. The same principle is recognized in Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 194, 8 P. 852.

In considering this issue the Water Commission Act must not be confused with that class of statutes which place quasi judicial powers in the hands of administrative officers charged with the enforcement of police regulations. In County of Los Angeles v. Spencer, 126 Cal. 670, 59 P. 202, 77 Am. St. Rep. 217, an act giving horticultural commissioners authority to determine whether a particular place was a nuisance because of infection with scale, insects etc., was upheld as not violative of the Constitution. The opinion reviews many other similar ordinances, all involving the exercise of police power, and which place a certain degree of discretion in the hands of such officials as fire commissioners, viticultural commissioners, health officers, park commissioners, and quarantine officers. To this list might be added members of boards of medical examiners and dental examiners, and many others. The opinion last mentioned points out that although these ordinances allow and require the exercise of some discretion, which in a strict sense is judicial in its nature, still it is not judicial within the meaning of the inhibition of article 6, of the Constitution. Further, that such acts constitute a proper exercise of the police power within the meaning of section 1, article 19, of the Constitution. It is said that the efficiency of many police regulations depends upon their prompt and summary execution, which makes it necessary to place a certain discretion in the hands of officers who are making the regulations effective.

The discretion authorized by section 1b of the Water Commission Act to be exercised by the division of water rights in similar to that conferred upon the register of titles by an act involved in People ex rel. Deneen v. Simon, 176 Ill. 165, 52 N. E. 910, 44 L. R. A. 501, 68 Am. St. Rep. 175. It was there held that the act did not conflict with a provision of the Constitution similar to that contained in our own, which forbade the conferring of judicial powers upon nonjudicial officers. The court held that the registrar was required to determine certain facts quasi-judicially, but that this did not constitute an exercise of judicial power, strictly speaking, and as contemplated by the Constitution. It is said:

"The primary purpose is the issuing of the certificate, and the exercise of the judgment of the registrar is incidental. The prohibition in question 'has never been held to apply to those cases where judgment is exercised as incident to the execution of a ministerial power.' Owners of Lands v. People, supra." (113 Ill. 296.)

In the instant case the primary purpose of issuing the permit, and the exercise of the judgment of the division of water rights is incidental. Its judgment is exercised only as an incident to the execution of its ministerial powers. To review its acts in that behalf before a judicial tribunal whose only purpose and power is to affirm, modify, or reverse the order of the division of water rights, cannot be regarded as the exercise of a judicial function by the court. The sole object of the proceeding in the superior court is to determine the correctness of the act of the division of water rights.

The act construed in People ex rel. Deneen v. Simon, supra, provided that any person feeling himself aggrieved by the act of the registrar in any matter pertaining to the duties required of him might file a petition in equity in the proper court, making the registrar and other persons interested parties defendant, and that "the court may proceed therein as in other cases in equity." The statute involved in Ricks v. Reed, 19 Cal. 551, also provided for a proceeding before the county court under general rules of procedure and without special regulations as to the character of the decree to be rendered by the court. In this regard the difficulty with section 1b is that instead of authorizing an action by any one aggrieved by the order of the division of water rights, in conducting which the superior court would have jurisdiction to proceed as in other cases, the procedure provided allows the introduction and use of hearsay evidence; it requires the consideration of all of the records used by a ministerial officer, whether such evidence is admissible or not under the ordinary rules governing the production of evidence, the subject-matter of the action is merely the order of the division of water rights, and finally it limits the court to affirming, reversing, or modifying the order of the board having ministerial and regulatory authority only.

Authorities from other states referred to in the briefs of those maintaining the constitutionality of the laws under construction are of little assistance, for various reasons. No judicial interpretation of a similar statute has been called to our attention rendered in a jurisdiction having the same constitutional provisions and the same doctrines concerning water rights as our own. It appears that in a number of the western states provisions quite similar to that before us exist and have been acted upon without question, apparently on the assumption of their validity. However, this furnishes but slight authority.

Section 1b is clearly severable from other provisions of the Water Commission Act, therefore no expressions of opinion upon the validity of any other sections of the act are here announced. Whatever may be the reasons for doubting their validity, it is expressly provided by section 46 of the act that—

"If any section, subsection, sentence, clause or phrase of this act is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of this act. The Legislature hereby declares that it would have passed this act, and each section, subsection, sentence, clause and phrase thereof, irrespective of the fact that any one or more other sections, subsections, sentences, clauses or phrases be declared unconstitutional." Stats. 1913, p. 1012.

[11] We think that well-recognized principles entitle the petitioner to the relief sought, notwithstanding the right of appeal would provide a remedy should the superior court proceed with the trial, for such right of appeal would not in this instance be adequate. The situation is similar in principle to that presented in Davis v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 691, 195 P. 390, in which it was said:

"While the existence of the right of appeal at that time might have been a sufficient reason for that court to have then refused to entertain the petition (Glougie v. Superior Court, 169 Cal. 675 [147 P. 972]), yet, in view of the fact that the superior court was then, and ever since has been, without power or jurisdiction to proceed further in the action, as we have shown, but nevertheless proposes to do so, and that further proceedings of any kind, except to again dismiss the action, would be void, we are disposed to grant the writ, rather than put the parties to further vexation and useless expense by further attempts to prosecute it. The question is largely one of discretion, and we deem it the better policy to terminate the proceedings forthwith."

The petitioner herein would otherwise be put to the expense of a voluminous record, and of attending a protracted hearing in the superior court, as well as of making extensive preparations for the hearing.

Entertaining these views, which necessitate the granting of the petition, it is unnecessary and unprofitable to consider the other ground urged by the petitioner, namely, the alleged insufficiency of the complaint filed in the superior court to state a cause of action, or to determine whether that ground is open in a proceeding like the present.

The peremptory writ of prohibition is granted.

THOMPSON, J. I concur.

WORKS P. J. I concur in the judgment, but not upon all the grounds stated in the foregoing opinion. I am in thorough accord with what is said upon the question of estoppel. I also assent to the views that section 1b of the Water Commission Act was not intended to confer jurisdiction to issue the writ of review, nor to confer a right of appeal, and I concur in the reasoning which is advanced in the opinion in support of those views. I agree, also, in the conclusion that section 1b is unconstitutional, but upon one only of the grounds advanced in the foregoing opinion in support of it. I think the section is a special law regulating the practice of courts of justice, for the reason that it attempts to empower—in truth, it directs—the superior court to consider evidence which would not be admissible in the ordinary civil action. Section 1a of the Water Commission Act (Stats. 1923, p. 161; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 9091) provides that in hearings before the commission upon applications for such permits as the one which is in question here, "technical rules of evidence need not be applied." It may be difficult to determine exactly what is meant by this very general language, but some effect must be given to it. Doubtless, at least, if the commission in some hearing should consider hearsay evidence or so-called evidence in the form of affidavits, it would not be held that it had acted improperly. Section 1b of the act provides that the superior court, in the proceeding sought to be authorized by the section, "shall review"—and this must mean shall consider—"all correspondence, maps, data and other records on file with the state water commission which pertain to said application and all evidence taken before said commission. * * *" As already observed, I think this language renders section 1b unconstitutional. I express no opinion upon the other grounds stated in the foregoing opinion as affecting the constitutionality of the enactment. Particularly, I am not prepared to say, and I find it unnecessary to say, whether the words found in the section to the effect that the superior court "shall then render judgment affirming reversing or modifying the action of the state water commission" are operative in such manner as to prevent the rendition of a final judgment like the "action" of the commission or either partially or wholly different from it.

I am in accord with everything in the foregoing opinion which is not referred to or mentioned in this concurring opinion as beyond my desire now to decide.

83 Cal. App. 41

CHURCH OF CHRIST OF LONG BEACH et al. v. HARPER et al. (Civ. 5194.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 12, 1927.

1. Religious societies ⇨25—Defendants will not be enjoined from interfering with plaintiffs' religious services, where only interference was act past and completed.

Defendants will not be enjoined from interfering with plaintiffs in conducting religious services in church edifice, where plaintiffs will not suffer great or irreparable injury if defendants are not enjoined, and defendants have not threatened to take possession of church and exclude plaintiffs therefrom, only interference being act past and completed.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Findings supported by evidence will not be disturbed.

Where there is evidence to sustain findings of trial court, they will not be disturbed.

3. Religious societies ⇨25—Interference with church services on one day held merely act of trespass not continuing, and not justifying injunction restraining further interference.

Defendant's interference with plaintiffs in continuing religious services in church edifice on one day, on which factions conducted separate services in building, held no more than act of trespass not continuing, so that it did not justify injunction restraining further interference.

4. Injunction ⇨46—Equity will not restrain trespasser simply because he is trespasser.

Court of equity will not interpose to restrain trespasser simply because he is trespasser, even if insolvent, unless evidence indicates that trespass will be repeated or continued.

5. Religious societies ⇨14—Only basis for court's interference in ecclesiastical controversy is that some property or civil right is involved.

Only basis for court's interference in ecclesiastical controversy is that some property or civil right is involved, since civil courts have no ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and cannot revise or question ordinary acts of church discipline.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1047(1)—In suit to enjoin interference with plaintiffs' religious services, admission and rejection of evidence as to dismissal of church members, not relating to defendant's interference, if error, held harmless.

In suit to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiffs in conducting religious services in church edifice, admission and rejection of evidence as to charges against church members and proceedings to dismiss them from membership, if error, held harmless, since such evidence did not touch transactions on day of defendants' interference.

7. Appeal and error ☞1047(1)—Admission or rejection of evidence is not prejudicial, where result would have been unchanged, had rulings been different.

Admission or rejection of evidence is not prejudicial, where issue would have been found for appellee, if all evidence objected to by appellants had been excluded, and all evidence sought by them to be introduced had been admitted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Suit by the Church of Christ of Long Beach and others against A. E. Harper and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

F. A. Knight, of Long Beach, for appellants.

Doyle, Clark & Thomas, of Long Beach, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. In this action appellants pray that an injunction issue, enjoining and restraining respondents from interfering in any way with appellants in conducting their religious services in the church edifice of appellant corporation in the city of Long Beach. No other judgment or relief is asked. The complaint alleges that on Sunday, May 6, 1923, respondents, in violation of the authority of the Church of Christ, entered the church edifice and took possession thereof, and conducted religious services, and excluded and refused to allow appellants to conduct their services, and that respondents threaten to and will, unless restrained, continue to hold possession of the church property, and to conduct services in the church building, and will preach and teach doctrines which are opposed and foreign to the belief and teachings of the Church of Christ, and exclude appellants from conducting services, and cause appellants great and irreparable injury, and that appellants have no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law, etc.

Appellants complain, first, that there are many errors of law which occurred during the trial of the action; second, that the findings of fact and conclusions of law are in many respects not sustained by the evidence; third, that an injunction should have issued as prayed for in the plaintiffs' complaint to protect the orderly conduct of church services against these three evangelists, Harper, Roberts, and Burcher, as no church action had been taken, either legally or otherwise, to put others than the plaintiffs in possession of the church property or services. The trial court found against the contention of plaintiffs, and found that defendants did not on May 6, 1923, nor at any other time, in defiance of plaintiffs or the authority of the church, enter the church edifice or take possession of the same or exclude or refuse to allow plaintiffs to conduct their services; that while defendants W. G. Roberts and W. A. Burcher conducted religious services in the church on such date, plaintiffs were not excluded therefrom and that at the conclusion of said service plaintiffs held a religious service; that it is not true that defendants will preach hatred or false doctrines in the church edifice, or doctrines or theories which are opposed or foreign to the belief or teachings of the Church of Christ, or will exclude plaintiffs from conducting services in the church edifice, or that the action on the part of defendants will cause great or irreparable or any injury to the plaintiffs.

[1, 2] If the appellants will not suffer great or irreparable injury if respondents are not enjoined, and respondents have not threatened to and do not intend to take possession of the church and exclude appellants therefrom, and the only interference shown is an act past and completed, the injunction should not issue. It is not necessary to a decision of the point discussed to quote from the testimony of the many witnesses sworn in the case, for, if there be evidence to sustain the findings, such findings will not be disturbed. Nelson v. McCarty, 5 Cal. App. 773, 91 P. 406; Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. McHugh, 166 Cal. 140, 134 P. 1157. From the testimony of W. P. Reedy, an appellant, Ernest Beam, and C. H. Cassell, there is reasonable certainty that the facts occurring on May 6, 1923, in the order of their sequence are as follows:

About 9:45 a. m., that being the regular hour for opening the Sunday morning services, appellant Rucker, an elder of the church, arose and began leading a song, and respondent Rehkop immediately arose, stood by Rucker, and sang the song in unison with him. At the close of the song, respondent Rehkop announced another song and began singing it, whereupon Rucker took his seat and remained silent during the rest of the service. Before the second song had ended, respondent Roberts mounted the stand and at the close of the song began reading a scripture lesson, at the end of which some member called upon him to lead in prayer. Following the prayer, respondent Roberts announced that respondents Harper, Burcher, and Beam would take charge of the classes previously taught by Taylor and appellants Rucker and Reedy. Whereupon appellant Rucker arose and asked all loyal members to occupy the north end of the hall, and about one-third of the members present heeded his call. Rucker, together with those who stood with him, then conducted their classes, while at the same time respondents, with those who stood with them, held their session; neither faction interfering with the other. At the conclusion of the classes, all parties repaired to the main church auditorium, wherein the preaching service was customarily conducted. One or two songs were sung, appellant Rucker and respondent Rehkop leading the same in unison. Elder Taylor announced and led another song, with no interference. Meanwhile respondent Roberts ascended to the pulpit, and after this song began to read a scripture lesson, and the elders Rucker and Taylor sat down. The respondents Roberts and Burcher conducted this service, which consisted of the communion and the sermon by Roberts, and there was no interference or protest on the part of appellants. At the close of this service appellants and their adherents immediately proceeded to conduct a preaching and communion service, without in any manner being interrupted or disturbed by respondents. A sermon by Evangelist Morris had been previously arranged for and announced publicly at church by appellant Rucker, and a preaching service to be conducted by Evangelist Roberts had been previously arranged for and announced at church by respondent Burcher. In other words, on this Sunday morning two persons desired to lead the singing; one arose and started the song, the other joined in unison, and the first subsequently quit and took his seat; two persons wished to teach the Sunday school classes; one took charge, the other called for those who wished to be taught by him, and those who did separated themselves from the others and were taught by him. Respondent Roberts preached the sermon; no one else attempted to preach, nor was Roberts requested by any one not to preach, nor was any objection interposed. Respondents never attempted to exclude appellants from the church, or to use force or menace.

Appellants fail to point out in their brief any evidence, nor have we been able to find any in the voluminous record before the court, indicating in any manner that respondents, or any of them, ever after the occurrence above enumerated interfered with or threatened to interfere with appellants' use of the church for religious services, or with their conduct of any religious or other services therein, or that the respondents ever at any time after May 6, 1923, conducted a religious service, or ever at any time threatened to conduct any religious service, or ever preached or threatened to preach heretical doctrines therein, or doctrines which are opposed and foreign to the belief and teachings of the Church of Christ, and it does not appear from the testimony, or from appellant's brief or otherwise, except by the allegations of the complaint, that such threats were ever made.

[3, 4] The acts of respondents, of which appellants complain, placing the construction upon them most favorable to appellants' contention, amount to no more than an act of trespass, not continuous, but completed on that day, and its continuance not being threatened, the finding of the trial court must be sustained. A court of equity will not interpose to restrain a trespasser simply because he is a trespasser even though he be insolvent (Mechanics' Foundry v. Ryall, 75 Cal. 601, 17 P. 703), unless the evidence indicates that the trespass already committed will probably be repeated indefinitely or is of a continuing nature (Standard Lumber Co. v. Madary's Planing Mill, 54 Cal. App. 107, 201 P. 129).

[5] In the instant case there is no evidence upon which a finding could be based that the trespass—if it be a trespass—is of a continuing nature, or that it will be repeated. The only basis for the court's interference in an ecclesiastical controversy is that some property or civil right is involved. Civil courts in this country have no ecclesiastical jurisdiction. They cannot revise or question ordinary acts of church discipline (White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends v. White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends, 89 Ind. 136; Ferraria v. Vasconcellos, 31 Ill. 25), or properly interfere with that part of church management which concerns the spiritual welfare and discipline of the members, but only when rights of property are involved (Prickett v. Wells, 117 Mo. 502, 24 S. W. 52; State [Livingston, Prosecutor] v. Trinity Church, 45 N. J. Law, 230). The jurisdiction of a civil court to adjudge any ecclesiastical matter must result as a mere incident to the determination of some property right. Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 303, 18 S. W. 874, 15 L. R. A. 801. In this state the same rule pertains. In Wheelock v. First Presbyterian Church, 119 Cal. 477, 51 P. 841, the court holds that the division and apportionment of the property of the church is a matter for the civil courts, and that an ecclesiastical decree upon that subject is not binding upon legal tribunals, but that the decree of the presbytery, dissolving the original church into two new and independent organizations, is conclusive on all parties, and must be so treated by the civil courts in determining the property rights of the parties.

[6, 7] The objection that errors of law occurred during the trial is directed to the admission and rejection of certain evidence going to the question of charges against members of the church and proceedings to dismiss them from membership, and does not in any manner prejudice appellants on the controlling issue for they do not touch the transactions which occurred on May 6, 1923, nor the circumstances connected therewith. Nor can these alleged errors prejudice appellants upon what they contend to be the issue, namely, the question whether Moss or Mars was director of the church on May 6, 1923; for, if all evidence objected to by appellants had been excluded, and all evidence sought by them to be introduced had been admitted, neither could aid appellants nor hinder respondents in establishing the withdrawal of fellowship from Mars, or the validity of the election of Moss. The second objection, that the findings are not supported by the evidence, is directed to the findings that respondent E. E. Mars was at the time in question a director of the church, and that appellant J. C. Moss was not at the time in question a director of the church. There is sufficient evidence to support these findings. It is, however, unnecessary to quote the evidence, or to cite authority, as our attention is not directed to any evidence to the effect that the acts of respondents complained of and as forming the basis for the injunctive relief sought are of a continuing nature, that they will be repeated, that respondents ever threatened a repetition, nor have we found any such evidence in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.; CASHIN, J.

83 Cal. App. 87

HINKEL v. CROWSON et al. (Civ. 3191.) *

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 12, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 11, 1927.

1. Pleading ⚡49—Allegations of complaint rather than its title determine character of action.

Character of action is not determined by title of complaint entitled "Complaint to Establish and Foreclose a Vendor's Lien," but by allegations thereof.

2. Pleading ⚡72—Vendor asking relief contrary to statute and such other relief as to the court may seem proper held entitled to judgment in accordance with statute (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 580, 1475).

Vendor seeking sale of lot, application of proceeds to discharge of vendor's lien, and deficiency judgment against estate of deceased purchaser, which would be contrary to Code Civ. Proc. § 1475, but asking for such other relief as to court may seem proper, held entitled to judgment in accordance with section 1475, in view of section 580.

3. Pleading ⚡403(3)—In vendor's action against purchaser's estate to recover unpaid balance, failure to allege existence of homestead in complaint held cured by answer.

In vendor's action against administrator of deceased purchaser's estate to recover unpaid balance, allegation as to homestead in answer held to cure defect in complaint, which did not allege existence of homestead.

4. Executors and administrators ⚡227(1)—Vendor's claim against purchaser's estate, erroneously assuming he could enforce lien on homestead lot before resorting to other property, held sufficient where stating facts necessary to justify allowance of claim.

Vendor's claim against estate of deceased purchaser, erroneously assuming he was entitled to enforce lien on homestead lot before resorting to other property, was not insufficient where it stated all facts necessary to justify allowance of claim, since claim need not state facts in detail necessary in complaint and its sufficiency is not tested by rules of pleading.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⚡266(8)—Vendor's unexecuted agreement to accept security for payment of purchase price does not destroy lien (Civ. Code, § 3046).

Unexecuted agreement to accept security for payment of purchase price of land does not destroy vendor's lien, in view of Civ. Code, § 3046.

6. Bills and notes ⚡63—Purchaser's delivery of note to third person for vendor constituted delivery, where such person put note among vendor's papers in desk.

There was sufficient delivery of purchaser's note to vendor where she delivered it to third person for him, and such person placed it among vendor's papers in his desk during his absence.

7. Executors and administrators ⚡451(4)—Court, in finding that purchase-money note was executed to vendor, found that it was delivered; "executed" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1933).

Where complaint by vendor against purchaser's estate for unpaid balance of purchase price alleged that purchase-money note was "executed" by decedent to plaintiff, court, in finding such allegation to be true, found that there was delivery to plaintiff, since "executed" includes delivery, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1933.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Execute.]

8. Limitation of actions ⚡83(2)—Limitation does not run against installments on purchase price of land falling due after purchaser's death, until administrator is appointed.

Statute of limitations does not begin to run against installments on purchase price of land due after death of purchaser, until administrator is appointed; and vendor is not bound to cause administration to be had.

9. Limitation of actions ⚡51(2)—Vendor and purchaser ⚡95(3)—Notwithstanding election to declare whole sum due, vendor may subsequently waive purchaser's default, so that limitation against subsequent action would run only from maturity of installments.

Vendor, having elected on default in payment of installments to declare whole of principal of note due, under provision therein, may still waive default, so that as against subsequent action statute of limitation would run only from maturity of installments.

10. Adverse possession ⚡63(5)—Surviving husband cannot claim land of wife, set apart to him, by adverse possession as against vendor with vendor's lien (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1474, 1723; Civ. Code, § 1241).

Homestead land set apart to surviving husband, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1723, was taken by him subject to vendor's lien, so that he could not claim by adverse possession against vendor, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1474 and Civ. Code, § 1241.

11. Election of remedies ⇨11—Vendor held not estopped to recover from funds of deceased purchaser's estate by waiving recourse against them in former action under mistaken theory of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1500).

Vendor held not estopped to recover from funds of estate of deceased purchaser by waiving recourse against all property except property sold, in former action, under mistaken theory of law, in absence of prejudice to defendants, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1500, since plaintiff undertaking to obtain remedy to which he is not entitled is not prevented from subsequently availing himself of one to which he is entitled.

12. Gifts ⇨49(4)—Evidence held to justify finding that plaintiff's conveyance to son's surviving wife was pursuant to sale, and was not gift.

Evidence held sufficient to justify finding that property was not given by plaintiff to son or to latter's surviving wife, but that conveyance to latter was made pursuant to sale thereof to her by plaintiff.

13. Executors and administrators ⇨437(7)—

Three months' limitation for bringing action on rejected claim against estate is inapplicable, where administrator does not expressly reject claim (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1496, 1498).

Where claim against estate of deceased was neither allowed nor expressly rejected by administrator, and claimant brought suit on theory that failure to allow claim was rejection, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1496, limitation of three months for bringing action, provided for in section 1498, is inapplicable.

14. Executors and administrators ⇨453(2)—

In vendor's action against deceased purchaser's estate, judgment held not erroneous in directing sale of lot in event funds of estate were insufficient (Code Civ. Proc. § 1504).

In vendor's action against administrator of deceased purchaser's estate to recover unpaid balance on lot, judgment held not erroneous in directing sale of lot in event of deficiency after applying funds of estate toward satisfaction of judgment, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1504.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Dudley Kinsell, Judge.

Action to recover the unpaid balance on the sale of real property by John Hinkel against E. A. Crowson, individually and as administrator of the estate of Florence G. Crowson (formerly Hinkel), deceased, in which Ada M. Hinkel, as executrix of the last will and testament of John Hinkel, deceased, was substituted as plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals, individually and as administrator. Affirmed.

James F. Sheehan and Charles J. Heggerty, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Richard B. Bell, of Berkeley (R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Respondent, Ada M. Hinkel, as executrix, has been substituted for John M.

Hinkel, the original plaintiff herein. The latter will be referred to as the plaintiff. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff sold and conveyed a certain lot to Florence G. Hinkel November 27, 1914, for the agreed price of $4,000; that she gave the plaintiff her promissory note, payable in monthly installments of $30 each, for the full purchase price; that although the note recites that it is secured by a mortgage it is not so secured; that thereafter she and defendant Crowson intermarried; that she died in October, 1916; that she paid a total of $510 on the note, and that no other payments have been made thereon; that Crowson was appointed administrator of her estate January 3, 1921; that on April 28, 1921, plaintiff filed his claim against said estate for the balance due upon the note, but that the administrator failed to allow the same; and that in said claim plaintiff asserted a vendor's lien upon the lot for the amount due upon the note. The prayer of the complaint is for judgment that there is due upon the note $5,028.93, with interest thereon from April 4, 1921; that the plaintiff has a vendor's lien therefor upon the lot; that the lot be sold and the proceeds be applied in satisfaction of the judgment; that, if there be a deficiency, "judgment for such deficiency be entered and docketed against said E. A. Crowson, as administrator of said estate, to be paid in due course of administration"; and "for such other, further, or different relief as to the court may seem meet and proper." The aforesaid claim set out the note, and alleged that it was not secured by a mortgage or otherwise secured, "save and except the equitable right to a vendor's lien" upon the lot; that "said vendor's lien has been established by judgment and decree, now in full force and effect, but pending on appeal; * * * that in presenting this claim the plaintiff does not in any manner waive, or intend to waive, or relinquish, or abandon his right to a vendor's lien as claimed by him in said action and as established by said judgment and decree, but insists on said lien; and that this claim is presented solely with the intention that the personal obligation against the decedent may be established, and, if there is any deficiency left after said real property shall have been sold under the said judgment and decree, such deficiency may be paid in due course of administration out of the estate of said decedent." The answer is too long to be set out even in substance. Such parts thereof as are material to the questions presented by appellant will be stated in connection with the discussion of such questions.

The court found the allegations of the complaint to be true; that Florence G. Hinkel and defendant Crowson intermarried November 30, 1914, and thereafter the former filed a declaration of homestead on the lot; that all unpaid installments of said promissory note which became due prior to the death of Florence G. Crowson are barred by the statute of limitations, but that the installments which became due after her death "are not barred by any statute of limitations."

The decree adjudges that there is due plaintiff on the promissory note the sum of $6,503.60; that he has a vendor's lien on said lot for that sum; that the plaintiff "is entitled to have paid in due course of administration upon the amount of the judgment, the whole thereof, or so much thereof as may be available therefor, out of and from the funds of the estate"; that defendant Crowson, as administrator, "is hereby ordered, adjudged and directed to pay in due course of administration to the plaintiff out of the funds of the estate of said decedent the amount of said judgment, or such portion thereof as the said funds may be available for said purpose"; and that the vendor's lien be enforced against said lot for any deficiency remaining after the available funds of the estate shall have been applied in payment of the judgment. The defendant Crowson, individually and as administrator, has appealed from the judgment.

The judgment referred to in the claim against the estate of decedent was rendered in an action brought by the plaintiff herein against Crowson individually, as sole defendant, to foreclose the alleged vendor's lien involved in this action. The judgment was reversed on the ground that the plaintiff had not presented his claim to the administrator of the estate for allowance. Hinkel v. Crowson, 188 Cal. 378, 206 P. 58. This action was thereafter commenced, and during the trial thereof the former action was dismissed.

[1-4] The complaint is entitled "Complaint to Establish and Foreclose a Vendor's Lien," but it is not what the complaint is called that determines the character of the action, but the allegations thereof. The prayer is, among other things, for a sale of the lot in question and the application of the proceeds toward the discharge of the lien and judgment for the deficiency, if any, payable in due course of administration. A judgment to that effect would be in violation of the terms of section 1475 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, in case of a claim against an estate secured by a lien on the homestead selected and recorded prior to the death of the decedent, provides:

"If the funds of the estate be adequate to pay all claims against the estate, the claims so secured must be paid out of such funds. If the funds of the estate be not sufficient for that purpose, the claims so secured shall be paid proportionately with other claims allowed, and the liens or incumbrances on the homestead shall only be enforced against the homestead for any deficiency remaining after such payment."

But the plaintiff also prayed "for such other, further or different relief as to the court may seem meet and proper," and the judgment rendered by the court is in accordance with the provisions of section 1475. The court had jurisdiction to grant "any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue." Code Civ. Proc. § 580. The existence of the homestead is not alleged in the complaint, but it is fully alleged in the answer. This allegation in the answer cures the defect in the complaint. 21 Cal. Jur. 277. In his claim against the estate, the plaintiff fell into the same error, as he did in his complaint, of assuming that he was entitled to enforce his lien on the lot before resorting to the other property of the estate. The claim, however, states all the facts necessary to justify its allowance and that it is presented "with the intention that the personal obligation against the decedent may be established." "The purpose of presenting such a demand is to advise the representative of the estate of its nature, and there is no requirement that it shall state the facts with all the detail necessary in a complaint nor is its sufficiency to be tested by the rules of pleading." Doolittle v. McConnell, 178 Cal. 697, 705, 174 P. 305, 308.

[5] The note recites:

"This note is secured by a mortgage bearing even date herewith."

The complaint alleges, however, and the plaintiff testified that the note was not secured. The plaintiff testified that the decedent agreed to secure the note by a trust deed, but that no such deed was ever executed. It has been held that a seller of real property waives his vendor's lien thereon for the selling price thereof by accepting security for the amount thereof. Jones v. Allert, 161 Cal. 234, 237, 118 P. 794. No case has been found, however, which holds that an unexecuted agreement to accept such security destroys the vendor's lien. Where the vendee has agreed to give but has not given security for the purchase price of real property, the price "remains * * * unsecured otherwise than by the personal obligation of the buyer," and the seller of the "property has a vendor's lien thereon" for the price thereof. Civ. Code, § 3046.

[6] The appellant contends that the promissory note was never delivered. The note is dated November 27, 1914. Plaintiff testified that he left his home in Alameda county for Chicago, November 29, 1914; that he did not have the note at that time; that he returned home about six weeks later; that on his return home he found the promissory note among his papers in his desk in his home; that he never knew how the note got there; that the signature to the note is in the handwriting of the decedent; and that the decedent made 17 monthly payments on the note of $30 each. In answer to a question on cross-examination as to why he did not get the note before delivering the deed to decedent, the plaintiff replied:

"I had to go to Chicago on only one day's notice, and then I left it all to Rena to fix this thing, and he fixed it."

Rena Haunt testified:

"At the time I was chauffeur for Mr. Hinkel. One day he gave me instructions to take some papers to Mrs. Florence Hinkel. * * * I took those papers to Mrs. Florence Hinkel, as Mr. Hinkel told me to do. * * * I don't know exactly what they was. There was two or three papers together, in regard to the sale of a house where she was living. * * * I gave them to Mrs. Florence Hinkel. * * * I never saw them again. I was supposed to go and get them back about a week after, but I never did. * * * I told her that she have those signed and recorded and send them back to Mr. Hinkel. * * * I got them (the papers) on the morning before Mr. Hinkel left for Chicago, a day or two before. * * * I know that those papers were in regard to the sale of the house."

The placing, by some person, of the promissory note, signed by the decedent, in the plaintiff's desk and the fact that the decedent thereafter made 17 monthly payments in accordance with the terms of the instrument warrant the inference that the decedent intentionally delivered the note into the possession of the plaintiff, even though it was not delivered to him personally by her. It was sufficient if she delivered it to some person for him, and that such person placed it among plaintiff's papers in his desk.

[7] Appellant further contends that the court did not find that the note was delivered to plaintiff. The complaint alleges that the note was "executed by her (decedent) to the plaintiff." The court found this allegation to be true. The term "executed" includes delivery. Code Civ. Proc. § 1933; Worthley v. Worthley, 33 Cal. App. 473, 475, 165 P. 714; Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 12 Cal. App. 572, 579, 108 P. 42.

[8, 9] It is urged that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations at the time the complaint herein was filed. The statute did not begin to run against installments falling due after the death of the decedent until an administrator was appointed, January 3, 1921. 11 Cal. Jur. 754; 16 Cal. Jur. 562; In re Bullard, 116 Cal. 355, 357, 48 P. 219. "A party having a cause of action against the estate of a deceased person is not bound to cause administration to be had." Davis v. Hart, 123 Cal. 384, 388, 55 P. 1060, 1062; Churchill v. Woodworth, 148 Cal. 669, 673, 84 P. 155, 113 Am. St. Rep. 324. The note provides that if any installment "is not paid within 90 days after the same becomes due," the whole of the unpaid principal and interest "shall forthwith become due and payable, at the election of the holder of this note." In the former action referred to herein, commenced August 23, 1917, the complaint alleged that, because of defaults in payments which had become due, "plaintiff * * * elected and so declared the whole of said principal sum, together with all interest thereon, due and payable." Appellant contends that such election set the statute in motion and that, therefore, the whole of the promissory note became barred at the end of 4 years thereafter. Notwithstanding such election, it was still within the power of the plaintiff to waive the default, and, as against a subsequent action, the statute of limitations ran only from the maturity of installments as they fell due. California Sav., etc., Soc. v. Culver, 127 Cal. 107, 112, 59 P. 292; Moore v. Russell, 133 Cal. 297, 300, 65 P. 624, 85 Am. St. Rep. 166; Keeler v. Baird, 48 Cal. App. 29, 33, 191 P. 563. Further, as stated, the statute did not begin to run against any of such installments which fell due after the death of the decedent until the appointment of an administrator.

[10] By proceedings under section 1723 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the lot in question was, on May 7, 1917, set apart to Crowson, as the surviving husband of decedent. Crowson has been in possession of the property at all times since and has paid all taxes thereon. Appellant contends that he thereby acquired title, as against plaintiff, by adverse possession. Section 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that when such a homestead is so set apart:

"It is not subject to the payment of any debt or liability contracted by or existing against the husband and wife, or either of them, previous to or at the time of the death of such husband or wife, except as provided in the Civil Code."

Section 1241 of the Civil Code provides:

"The homestead is subject to execution or forced sale in satisfaction of judgments obtained: * * * On debts secured by * * * vendor's liens upon the premises."

It is clear that, under these Code sections, Crowson took the property subject to the vendor's lien. His possession was no more adverse to plaintiff's lien than was that of decedent. He invaded no right of the plaintiff by holding such possession, and therefore his possession was not adverse. Sullivan v. Zeiner, 98 Cal. 346, 350, 33 P. 209, 20 L. R. A. 730; 2 C. J. 50.

[11] Appellant contends that plaintiff is estopped to recover any sum out of the funds of the estate, because in the complaint in the former action he stated:

"Said plaintiff hereby expressly waives all recourse, claim, and demand, under and by virtue of said vendor's lien and said promissory note, against any and all property of the estate of the said Florence G. Crowson, deceased, * * * other than the real property described in the first paragraph of said complaint," the lot involved herein.

In that action the plaintiff proceeded upon the mistaken theory that the law permitted the foreclosure of his vendor's lien without first presenting the claim secured thereby for allowance and payment out of the other assets of the estate. On appeal, it was held that this could not be done. Hinkel v. Crowson, supra. Since such a claim had not been presented before the complaint in that action was filed, plaintiff was put to the necessity of dismissing the action. The alleged waiver was an attempt to exercise the option given a lien claimant by section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that a lien may be enforced against the property of an estate subject thereto, without presenting the claim for allowance, "where all recourse against any other property of the estate is expressly waived in the complaint," the plaintiff apparently overlooking the requirement of section 1475 to the effect that, if the lien be upon the homestead selected in the lifetime of the decedent, the claim "must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate." It would hardly be contended that the plaintiff would have been bound by the alleged waiver if, prior to any action with relation thereto by the defendant to his prejudice, the plaintiff had filed an amended complaint omitting the waiver. It is not perceived that a different rule should be applied in case of a dismissal and the subsequent commencement of a new action. The defendants have not acted to their prejudice in any manner by reason of the alleged waiver, and, in the absence of such prejudice, they cannot claim an estoppel. 10 Cal. Jur. 611. "If a plaintiff is mistaken and undertakes to avail himself of a remedy to which he is not entitled, he is not prevented from subsequently availing himself of the one to which he is entitled under the facts of the case. The defendant is placed in no worse position by reason of the unsuccessful prosecution of the action and there is consequently no estoppel." 10 Cal. Jur. 5.

[12] The answer alleges that the decedent was the wife of Lewis Hinkel, the son of plaintiff, until the son's death on November 8, 1913; that the lot in question and other lots were purchased by the plaintiff and his son, as copartners, and the title thereto taken in the name of the plaintiff; that "plaintiff promised to give and convey the said lot of land described in the complaint to said Lewis and his wife, Florence, as and for their home, and thereupon said Lewis built a residence thereon for himself and his wife," and went into possession thereof, and resided therein until the death of Lewis; that thereafter Florence held exclusive possession thereof until the time of her death; and that the conveyance involved herein was intended as a gift. It is contended that the plaintiff made an oral gift of the lot to his son and, apparently, that the conveyance to decedent was made for the purpose of completing the gift. It would require convincing evidence to establish that contention in the face of decedent's execution of the promissory note and her payment of the installments as they fell due thereon for so many months. The plaintiff testified that he purchased and paid for all the lots mentioned; that his son had charge of the building of houses thereon, under an agreement that the latter was to have half of the profits, if any, on the sale of the lots, but that no profits were realized therefrom; that the plaintiff paid all costs of construction of all the houses, including the one on the lot in controversy; and that the house on that lot was better constructed and more expensively finished than the others because it was the intention that the son and his wife should occupy it as their home. On cross-examination, he testified as follows:

"Q. And that was the understanding between you and your son, was it not, that when he had completed those eight buildings, including this house, that this house would be his? A. Yes.

"Q. But there was no consummation; you never carried out that understanding between you and your son during his lifetime, did you? A. No. * * *

"Q. Those houses were all finished by your son and yourself during the lifetime of your son, Mr. Hinkel? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And, as I understand you to say—I may be wrong—upon completion of the buildings and the completion of the building on lot 13, the house in controversy here, your son and his wife moved in there, according to the arrangements between you and your son that he was to have that as his own; is that correct? A. No, not as his own."

The plaintiff further testified that he supported his son and the latter's wife during their married life. The evidence is certainly sufficient to justify the finding that the property was not given to the son or to his surviving wife, but that the conveyance to the latter was made pursuant to a sale thereof to her by the plaintiff.

[13] Section 1498 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, when a claim is rejected:

"Written notice of such rejection shall be given by the executor or administrator to the holder of such claim, * * * and the holder must bring suit in the proper court against the executor or administrator within three months after the date of service of such notice if the claim be then due."

Appellant contends that this action was not commenced within the time prescribed by that section. The claim upon which the suit is based was neither allowed nor expressly rejected by the administrator. Neither was any notice of rejection served upon the plaintiff. Under the provisions of section 1496 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff elected to treat the failure of the administrator to allow the claim as a rejection thereof. The limitation prescribed by section 1498 has no application to such a case. Bank of Ukiah v. Shoemaker, 67 Cal. 147, 7 P. 420; Cowgill v. Dinwiddie, 98 Cal. 481, 483, 33 P. 439; Gregory v. Clabrough's Executors, 129 Cal. 475, 479, 62 P. 72.

[14] It is urged that the judgment against the estate "only establishes the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the administrator," and that he or any other heir of the deceased "can contest the claim even after a judgment and affirmance on appeal and have a jury trial" of the question of its validity, citing section 1504 of the Code of Civil Procedure and Estate of Hellier, 169 Cal. 77, 145 P. 1008, and that, therefore, the judgment is erroneous in directing a sale of the lot in the event of a deficiency, after applying available funds of the estate toward the satisfaction of the judgment. The latter provision in the judgment does not preclude a contest of the claim by any person who otherwise may have the right to contest it. No good reason appears for requiring the plaintiff to prosecute two actions for the collection of a single debt. The decree makes provision for further proceedings, in the event of a deficiency of assets of the estate, as follows:

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that in the event that the funds of the said estate shall prove insufficient to pay the whole of the amount of this judgment, the plaintiff shall be at liberty to apply, at the foot of the judgment, for further directions."

In Moore v. Russell, 133 Cal. 297, 65 P. 624, 85 Am. St. Rep. 166, the claim of the plaintiff for the amount of a promissory note secured by a mortgage, executed by the decedent, was rejected by the administrator and suit was brought thereon. Judgment in favor of the plaintiff establishing the claim, foreclosing the mortgage, and providing for a recovery against the administrator for any deficiency after sale of the mortgaged premises, to be paid in due course of administration, was affirmed. No reason appears for applying a different rule here, and no authority is cited in support of appellants' contention. The same objections which are made here could have been made with equal force to the judgment in the case cited.

Appellants argue more than 40 alleged errors. It would require an opinion of undue length to discuss them all specifically. Most of them are substantially covered in the foregoing discussion. The remainder have been carefully considered and are deemed wholly without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; HART, J.

83 Cal. App. 137

WELLS et ux v. ZENZ et al. (Civ. 5202.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 17, 1927.

1. Fraud ☞1—"Fraud" includes all unfair means by which another is deceived (Civ. Code, §§ 1572, 1710).

"Fraud" includes all means of surprise, trick, cunning, dissembling, and unfair means by which another is deceived, including suppression of facts likely to mislead and other acts fitted to deceive, under Civ. Code, §§ 1572, 1710.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fraud.]

2. Judgment ☞443(1)—Presenting false affidavit for service by publication is "fraud" for which judgment will be set aside, where rights of innocent parties have not intervened.

Where false affidavit is presented to court for purpose of obtaining order for service of process by publication, fraud is committed upon court and party constructively served, and judgment based thereon will be set aside at instance of defendant constructively served, provided no rights of innocent parties are involved.

3. Judgment ☞443(1)—Affidavit for service by publication stating affiant knew of no way to locate defendants held fraudulent, justifying vacation of judgment of adoption.

Affidavit for service by publication held fraudulent, justifying vacation of judgment of abandonment and adoption, where plaintiff, though she had been in telephone communication with defendant within month previous and knew person from whom she could obtain defendants' address, stated in affidavit that she knew of no means by which to locate defendants and failed to mail letter to their last known address.

4. Fraud ☞16—Fraud may be committed by suppression of truth.

Fraud may be committed by suppression of that which one is under duty to declare, as well as by declaration of that which is false.

5. Judgment ☞463—Finding of intent to defraud was unnecessary to set aside judgment where affidavit for publication was fraudulent.

Where affidavit, upon which order for publication was made, was fraudulent, court could set aside judgment of abandonment and adoption without finding that intent to defraud was present.

6. Appeal and error ☞882(11)—Appellant could not complain that there was no evidence and no findings on issue, where evidence offered thereon was excluded as immaterial on his objection.

Where court, on defendants' objection to evidence as immaterial, excluded such evidence, defendants could not, on appeal, complain that there was no evidence and no findings on issues in support of which excluded evidence was offered.

7. Trial ☞397(5)—Findings need not be made on immaterial issues.

It is not necessary for the court to make findings on immaterial issues.

8. Adoption ☞1—"Adoption" is special statutory proceeding.

"Adoption" proceeding is special statutory proceeding and not an ordinary civil action, power being conferred by statute and in derogation of common law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Adopt—Adoption.]

9. Adoption §1—Adoption, to be valid, must comply strictly with statutory requirements.

One who claims valid adoption must show that every requirement of statute has been strictly complied with, adoption being statutory proceeding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Suit by Charles E. Wells and wife against Frank Zenz and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George A. Hooper, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Walter J. Little and Helen M. Randall, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment setting aside the judgment of abandonment of the juvenile court and a judgment of adoption predicated thereon on the ground that the juvenile court was without jurisdiction in the premises for the reason that fraud was practiced on the juvenile court in that an order for the service of citation by publication in the abandonment proceedings was procured by means of a false affidavit of appellant Nina M. Zenz.

Respondents Charles E. Wells and Ada Wells are the parents of the minor child, Elvira Wells, and brought this suit in equity to set aside the judgments on the ground of fraud. The trial court found in favor of respondents and entered judgment accordingly.

Appellants urge in support of their appeal that there was no fraud, and the evidence does not sustain a finding of fraud; that a court of equity will not do an idle thing, and the findings do not support the judgment.

The court found that some of the facts set forth in the affidavit for publication made by appellant Nina M. Zenz, upon which the order for publication of the citation was made, were false and untrue in that she stated that she knew of no other way or means in which to locate the parents; that she called at the residence of respondents at 1132 North Evergreen street, Los Angeles, but found respondents had moved therefrom; that the father left a forwarding address at the post office, giving the address where he moved; that Nina M. Zenz did not send a letter to the last known address of respondents; that Nina M. Zenz made inquiries of one Mrs. La Liberty of the Juvenile Protective Association of Los Angeles as to the whereabouts of respondents and understood that Mrs. La Liberty knew the address, but that she did not feel that she could give her the new address, for personal reasons; that Nina M.

Zenz could have cited Mrs. La Liberty into court to inquire further as to whether she knew the whereabouts of the parents, but that she did not do so; that Nina M. Zenz did not set forth in her affidavit for publication of the citation the fact that she had communicated with Mrs. La Liberty concerning the whereabouts of respondents, and that Mrs. La Liberty would not give her the address for personal reasons; that Nina M. Zenz did not do all she could have done to locate respondents; that she could have written to their last address and the letter would have been forwarded to them. In other words, appellant Nina M. Zenz in her affidavit set forth certain facts that were false and untrue; that is, that she knew of no other means than those set forth in her affidavit by which to locate the parents of the minor child she sought to have adjudged an abandoned child for the purpose of predicated thereon an application for adoption, when, in fact, she had knowledge of the fact that Mrs. La Liberty knew the whereabouts of respondents, but refused to divulge their whereabouts to her because of personal reasons, and, further, that it was fraud knowing a somewhat recent address of respondents that she did not write them, as such letter would have been forwarded to them. These facts, which should have been made known to the court, were concealed from it.

[1] Fraud is a generic term which embraces all the multifarious means which human ingenuity can devise and are resorted to by one individual to get an advantage over another. No definite and invariable rule can be laid down as a general proposition defining fraud, as it includes all surprise, trick, cunning, dissembling, and unfair ways by which another is deceived. Armstrong v. Wasson, 93 Okl. 262, 220 P. 643. The statutes of California expressly provide that the suppression of a fact by one who gives information of other facts likely to mislead for want of communication of the fact concealed is deceit (Civ. Code, § 1710), and any other act fitted to deceive is actual fraud (Civ. Code, § 1572).

[2] Where a false affidavit is presented to the court for the purpose of obtaining an order for the service of process by publication, this of itself is an act of fraud both upon the court and upon the party constructively served, and any judgment based thereon will be set aside in an action by the defendant constructively served against the plaintiff claiming the benefit of the judgment, where no rights of innocent parties are involved. Stern v. Judson, 163 Cal. 726, 127 P. 38.

While the affidavit for publication of the citation is not contained in the record, the testimony shows, and it is not disputed, that appellant Nina M. Zenz did state in her affidavit that "she knew of no other means in which to locate said parents," and that she made no mention in her affidavit that the address of the parents was known by Mrs. La Liberty, of whom she inquired and by whom she was told that the whereabouts of the parents would not be disclosed to her for personal reasons, and in that conversation appellant Nina M. Zenz admits that she did not tell Mrs. La Liberty the reason she desired to locate respondents.

The evidence is undisputed that Mrs. Zenz was in telephone communication with respondent Mrs. Wells within a month of the time of filing the affidavit in question. The court should have been informed of this fact as bearing on the question as to whether or not due diligence had been exercised in an effort to locate the parents.

[3, 4] The facts that Mrs. Zenz had this telephone communication with Mrs. Wells within a month of the filing of the affidavit; that Mrs. Zenz had knowledge that Mrs. La Liberty of the Juvenile Protective Association of Los Angeles knew the whereabouts of the parents—which facts are undisputed—and that she concealed these facts from the court, and instead of setting them forth in her affidavit stated in such affidavit that "she knew of no other way or means in which to locate said parents," together with the fact that no letter was mailed to the last known address, which if mailed would have been received by the parents, justified the trial court in finding that she set forth facts in her affidavit that were false and untrue, and that she practiced a fraud upon the court. As has been said, fraud may be committed by the suppression of the truth as well as by the suggestion of falsehood. It may consist in suppression of that which it is one's duty to declare as well as in the declaration of that which is false. 12 Cal Jur. 770. Had such facts known to appellant Nina M. Zenz and concealed by her been disclosed to the juvenile court, the court might well have concluded that it was not a proper case for constructive service, and that respondents by the exercise of due diligence could be personally served.

The facts in the case support the conclusion that appellant Nina M. Zenz practiced a fraud upon the court in withholding facts which should have been set forth in her affidavit. In Dunlap v. Steere, 92 Cal. 344, 28 P. 563, 16 L. R. A. 361, 27 Am. St. Rep. 143, the court says:

"An affidavit of this character is always ex parte. The absent defendant is not present to impeach it, and if it is sufficient in form, the court cannot disregard it, but is compelled to accept its statements as true, and make the order which is demanded. Under such circumstances, a plaintiff who seeks to avail himself of the statutory mode for a constructive service of summons must exercise good faith in his representations to the court or judge. He must at least believe that the affidavit which he presents is true. The presentation of a willfully false affidavit for the purpose of obtaining an order for service of the summons for publication is itself an act of fraud."

And in Miller v. Higgins, 14 Cal. App. 156, 111 P. 406, it is said:

"The fraud practiced upon the court making the order of adoption in this case was the concealment from the court of facts affecting its jurisdiction. * * * Such concealment of facts affords ground for relief in equity."

While in Miller v. Higgins the concealment was the fact that another court had already assumed jurisdiction, yet the principle involved is the same.

[5] Appellants contend that there is no fraud in a case of this kind without an intent to defraud; that there is no such finding; and that therefore the findings do not support the judgment. The court found that the affidavit upon which the order for publication of the citation was made, set forth facts which were false and untrue. This is fraud per se. Where a false affidavit is presented to the court to obtain an order for publication of a summons or citation, this of itself is a fraud perpetrated upon both the court and the party sought to be constructively served. Stern v. Judson, supra.

[6, 7] As to the point urged that a court of equity will not do an idle thing—that there is no evidence or finding that upon a subsequent hearing on the merits the child would not be declared an abandoned child—it is sufficient to say that the sole question upon which the case was tried was that of fraud. Respondents did attempt to introduce evidence upon the question of abandonment and support to establish the allegations of their complaint, which was duly verified, setting forth that in December, 1917, plaintiff Charles E. Wells was about to join the army, and fearing that he would not have sufficient means to care for and support his wife and minor child he placed such child in the custody of his father, Fred Wells, under a written agreement wherein his father agreed to care for such child until she attained the age of six years; that his father cared for such minor child until September, 1920, when the child was by him placed in the custody of defendants, his father agreeing to pay defendants $5 per week for the care of the child. This evidence was objected to by appellants as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and not within the issues of the case, that there is only one issue in the case, and that is fraud, and their objection was sustained. In sustaining the objection, the court said:

"I can't see any relation to the testimony of whether there was or was not an agreement. * * * I think I will sustain the objection on that point. I will permit any question that goes directly to the fact of the affidavit or the contents of it."

Appellants are, therefore, not now in a position to complain that there is no evidence and no findings on these issues. If the evidence was immaterial as appellants contended, no finding thereon is required, as it is not necessary for the court to find on an immaterial issue.

The trial court proceeded only upon the question of fraud. Evidence upon all other questions, except in so far as it affected the question of fraud, under the objection of appellants was excluded as immaterial, and accordingly no evidence was given concerning them.

[8, 9] An adoption proceeding is not an ordinary civil action; it is a special statutory proceeding. The power of the court in adoption proceedings is a special power conferred by statute and is in derogation of the common law and repugnant to its principles, and one who claims a valid adoption must show that every requirement of the statute has been strictly complied with. Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 177 P. 283.

We find no error in the record calling for a reversal of the judgment, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, A. P. J.; CASHIN, J.

83 Cal. App. 313

RAGOS v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.*
(Civ. 5493.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 23, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 21, 1927.

1. Master and servant $\S$ 405(2)—Evidence held to support finding of Industrial Commission that parties were joint employers of woman injured in cleaning apartment.

Evidence held to support finding of Industrial Accident Commission that defendants were engaged in a joint enterprise of renovating apartments and were jointly liable as employers of plaintiff injured in cleaning apartment.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 417(7)—Decision of Industrial Accident Commission as to credibility and weight of testimony is conclusive.

In compensation proceeding, the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be attached to their testimony is a matter for the Industrial Accident Commission, not to be reviewed on petition for review.

3. Master and servant $\S$ 417(7)—Finding of Industrial Accident Commission on conflicting evidence is conclusive.

On petition to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission, a finding of fact by the commission on conflicting evidence will not be set aside.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Maria L. Schroeder, claimant, opposed by Edward Ragos and Mrs. A. M. Allen. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, granting an award, Edward Ragos petitions for certiorari. Award affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent commission.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is a proceeding on the petition of Edward Ragos for a review of an award against him by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Mrs. Maria L. Schroeder, for payment of $184.19, together with the sum of $14.82 per week from March 27, 1926, until termination of disability or the further order of the commission. The award is based upon a finding that Mrs. Schroeder was temporarily disabled by reason of an injury sustained on December 22, 1925, in the course of, and arising out of, her employment while employed both by the petitioner and Mrs. A. M. Allen, his mother-in-law, the award being not only against Ragos, but also against Mrs. Allen. The petition for review is, however, that of Ragos alone; and the sole question involved is whether there is sufficient evidence in the record to support the award against him. Neither Ragos nor Mrs. Allen carried compensation insurance.

The matter was first heard before Letus N. Crowell, referee, on April 20, 1926, and his decision in favor of Mrs. Schroeder, and against both Ragos and Mrs. Allen, was approved and award made by the commission on April 29th. Thereafter, on the petition of Ragos and Mrs. Allen, a rehearing was granted to consider further whether both were the employers or only one; and on July 26, 1926, the parties and their witnesses were examined at length before A. B. Harris, referee, after which the commission, on September 15, 1926, readopted the original findings and reaffirmed the award previously made against both Ragos and Mrs. Allen.

Ragos was the owner of an apartment house in Long Beach, containing 25 apartments and known as the Ward Apartments. The house and the furniture had been leased to a tenant named Morris, whose management, after a trial of a few weeks, proved unsuccessful, and before the injury to Mrs. Schroeder, Ragos had resumed possession and had made some business arrangement regarding the premises with his mother-in-law, Mrs. Allen. Mrs. Allen testified that she had bought the furniture from Ragos, while Ragos said he had leased the building with the furniture to Mrs. Allen; and there was introduced in evidence a lease bearing date December 12, 1925, which is, in terms, a lease for one year of the apartment house with its furnishings and furniture at a rental of $350 a month. Under previous tenants, the building had apparently been neglected to some extent and needed renovation; and when it came back into the possession of Ragos, he testified:

"I agreed with Mrs. Allen we would go in there and fix the rooms all up; tint them, re-paper them, and do whatever they needed. I worked my help exclusively, and she hired hers."

Among other things, Ragos stated that some of the windows needed repairs, and it was while Mrs. Schroeder was cleaning one of the windows, which was smeared with putty, that she was injured. Ragos stated in his testimony that Morris surrendered possession to him on December 10, 1925, but Mrs. Allen said that she took over the apartments on December 9th. There was evidence of the night watchman, however, as well as of Mrs. Schroeder, that Ragos and Mrs. Allen had taken possession in the early part of November.

Mrs. Schroeder had been an occupant of one of the apartments for about 2 years, and earned her living by doing housework by the day at the rate of 50 cents per hour. She was directly hired by Mrs. Allen, and, according to Mrs. Schroeder's testimony, she had been continuously at work cleaning the various apartments for at least a week before the injury occurred. Her testimony is that while she was engaged in apartment No. 21, on December 22, 1925, cleaning a heavy window which had had new panes inserted, but the cords of which were either lacking or defective, the sash fell upon her right hand with such force that she fainted, and, as the award states, thereby suffered a contusion of the third and fourth metacarpal bones, followed by or resulting in traumatic neuritis and dermatitis. There is a further finding, that the injury caused temporary total disability of continuance still indefinite, and compensation was awarded in the amounts stated.

There is considerable conflict in the testimony, and so great is the variance on material points that there is reason to believe that the commissioners discredited the testimony of both Ragos and Mrs. Allen. Not only did both deny that Mrs. Schroeder had done work in apartment 21, but Mrs. Allen further denied that Mrs. Schroeder had been employed at all on December 22d, and insisted that she had been hurt while doing her own work in her own apartment.

[1] Doubt of the genuineness of the lease between Ragos and Mrs. Allen is expressed by the attorney for the commission; and it is to be noted that while the lease to Mrs.

Allen is dated December 12, 1925, and calls for payment of a rent of $350 per month, there was no evidence, either at the original hearing in April, 1926, or at the later hearing in July, that any rent had ever been paid by Mrs. Allen. Whatever may be the true character of the lease, and whatever its true date, it is a fair inference from the evidence and the conduct in relations of the parties that Ragos and Mrs. Allen were engaged together in renovating the apartments; and though Mrs. Allen gave her individual attention to the cleaning while Ragos attended to the mechanical and structural repairs, still they were both engaged as principals in a joint enterprise to an extent which made them jointly liable as employers of the woman hired to do such cleaning as might be required in the common work of renovation.

The evidence shows that on the day following the injury Ragos suggested that Mrs. Schroeder consult Dr. Tollesen, and gave her his own card, on which he wrote the doctor's name and address. Upon this suggestion Mrs. Schroeder then placed herself under Dr. Tollesen's treatment, which continued for 21 days, and Dr. Tollesen in his testimony said that the Ward Apartments promised to pay his bill. Moreover, while Mrs. Allen ordinarily directed Mrs. Schroeder as to the work for each day, there is some evidence also that on one occasion, shortly before the injury, Ragos directed her to clean the kitchen floor in an apartment where he was about to lay linoleum.

[2, 3] It is not the function of the court in a proceeding of this character to determine the credibility of the witnesses or the weight to be attached to their testimony. Its jurisdiction is limited strictly to determining whether, with the inferences fairly deducible from the evidence, there is sufficient to support the findings and the award of the commission, and where either of two reasonable opposing inferences may be drawn, the commission is the final arbiter. Walker v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Cal. 737, 171 P. 954, L. R. A. 1918F, 212; Eastman v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 200 P. 17; Tartar v. Industrial Accident Commission, 191 Cal. 703, 218 P. 39. After a careful reading of the record, we conclude that the rule applied in Gray v. Industrial Accident Commission, 34 Cal. App. 713, 714, 715, 168 P. 702, is applicable here, and that it must be said that the evidence as a whole is sufficient to support the decision that both Ragos and Mrs. Allen were jointly interested and are to be regarded as joint employers.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

83 Cal. App. 48

ELLIS et al. v. COLUMBINE CREAMERY CO. et al. (Civ. 4722.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 12, 1927.

1. Trial $\S$ 396(7)—Finding that plaintiffs in action for unlawful detainer were owners as joint tenants held authorized, where such allegation was not denied (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 462).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 462, finding in action for unlawful detainer that plaintiffs were owners as joint tenants of property described in complaint held authorized, where allegation of such ownership was not denied, and hence for purposes of action must be taken as true.

2. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 86(2)—Tenant's notice to one joint owner of desire to renew lease held sufficient notice to both.

Tenant's notice to one joint owner of property of its desire to renew lease or execute a new one in accordance with option contained therein held sufficient notice to both owners.

3. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 291(13)—Evidence held not to support finding that tenant was not entitled to possession in accordance with manifested intention to exercise renewal option.

In action for unlawful detainer, finding that tenants were not entitled to possession of premises, and that owners were entitled thereto, held not supported by evidence showing tenant's intention to avail itself of right to continuance of relation of landlord and tenant between parties, in accordance with agreement giving option of renewal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by J. Harvey Ellis and another against the Columbine Creamery Company and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Chris. Wilson, of Long Beach, for appellants.

Swaffield, Swaffield & Pray, C. Douglass Smith, and Frank P. Farrell, all of Long Beach, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment in an action for unlawful detainer, wherein plaintiffs were awarded possession of the premises described in the complaint, as well as the sum of $1,000 damages for unlawful detention.

Plaintiffs were the owners in joint tenancy of the property described in the complaint. The defendant Columbine Creamery Company was an original lessee, and the defendant Swift & Co. was a subtenant of Columbine Creamery Company. The original lease contained a provision by which the lessee was given "an option of renewing this lease at the expiration of the date as specified herein." About 16 months before the lease expired, each of the then parties thereto signed the following agreement:

"Long Beach, California, March 15, 1922.

"By mutual agreement the terms of the within lease are this day changed to read and be as follows: At the expiration of the terms mentioned herein (July 31, 1923), the party of the second part is given an option to lease the premises at a monthly rental of seventy-five dollars per month for a term of three years."

Nearly three months preceding the date of the expiration of the lease, the tenant then in possession sent to J. Harvey Ellis, who was one of the joint owners of the leased premises, a registered letter, the body of which was as follows:

"Having been advised that you are now the owner of the premises known as 836 Pine avenue of this city, under the provisions of the lease which we hold on said premises, the terms and conditions of which you are familiar with, we hereby notify you in writing that we will exercise the option granted to us to lease the premises for the period of three (3) years from and after July 31, 1923, at a monthly rental of $75 per month."

Approximately one month later the same tenant served on said J. Harvey Ellis a notice, of which the following is a copy:

"To J. Harvey Ellis, Owner of the Premises Described as Certain Storeroom Occupying Ground Floor of a Certain Building Known and Designated as No. 836 Pine Avenue in the City of Long Beach, County of Los Angeles, State of California, and to All Persons Claiming Any Interest Therein:

"You and each of you are hereby notified that Columbine Creamery Company desires and intends to exercise the option granted to it in a certain lease dated February 26, 1920, wherein the above-described premises, namely, a certain storeroom occupying ground floor of building No. 836 on Pine avenue in the city of Long Beach, county of Los Angeles, state of California, were leased to it, which said option grants to the said Columbine Creamery Company the right of renewing said lease at the expiration of the date as specified therein, namely July 31, 1923.

"You and each of you are hereby further notified that Columbine Creamery Company desires and intends to use, avail itself of, and exercise a certain option in said lease, which said option is set forth in said lease as follows:

"Long Beach, California, March 15, 1922.

"By mutual agreement the terms of the within lease are this day changed to read and be as follows: At the expiration of the terms mentioned herein (July 31, 1923) the party of the second part is given an option to lease the premises at a monthly rental of seventy-five dollars per month for a term of three years."

Thereafter, and before the date fixed in the lease for its expiration, plaintiff J. Harvey Ellis ordered the tenant in possession to vacate the leased premises on the termination of the original lease. At the same time, according to the testimony of one of the witnesses, the tenant, through its officers, stated to said plaintiff that it wished to re-lease the property for three years at the rate of $75 per month, which suggestion was declined by Mr. Ellis. In other words, as was stated by the judge of the trial court:

"The testimony shows conclusively that the defendants took the position that they did not need a new lease, that they had a lease here which would be renewed, and the lease itself would go on, but that they did offer, if Mr. Ellis insisted on a new lease, to make it. Mr. Ellis did not insist on it, and said they were not entitled to anything, either the renewal or a new lease. * * *

Plaintiffs having refused either to renew the lease or to execute a new one (although on the 1st day of each and every month after the termination of the original lease and up to the date of trial of the action the tenant tendered to J. Harvey Ellis the sum of $75 per month, which in each case the plaintiffs declined to accept), the present action was commenced, and which, as hereinbefore stated, resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for the restoration to them of the possession of the leased premises, together with the sum of $1,000 damages for the unlawful detention thereof.

The gravamen of appellants' complaint is that the findings of fact are not supported by the evidence. The first of the specifications of error upon which reliance is placed arises from the fact that each of the several requests made by the defendants, whether oral or written, to the effect that either the original lease be renewed, or that a new lease be executed, was made to one of the plaintiffs only.

[1] The complaint alleges ownership in plaintiffs as joint tenants of the property in question, which allegation not being denied in the answer, "must, for the purposes of the action, be taken as true." Section 462, Code Civ. Proc. It follows that the finding that the plaintiffs "were the owners, as joint tenants," of the property described in the complaint was fully authorized.

But, assuming that the ownership by the plaintiffs was joint, the respondents question the sufficiency of the notice. In the case of Hepburn v. McDowell, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 383, 17 Am. Dec. 677, it is held that notice to two or more persons engaged in a joint act is notice to all; and in Holbrook v. Holbrook, 15 Me. 9, the principle is announced that a notice given to one of two parties jointly liable is binding upon both. To the same effect, see the following authorities: Knight v. Field, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 263; Watson v. Walker, 23 N. H. 471. In the case of Morse v. Aldrich, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 544, the syllabus contains the following statement:

"Where the owner of land, by a covenant which binds his heirs and assigns, engages to do a certain act when thereto requested, a written request to do such act, addressed to all the heirs or assigns, and seasonably delivered at the dwelling house of one of them, is sufficient. * * *

In the case of Ellis v. Lull, 45 N. H. 419, it is held (syllabus):

"Where two or more persons are subject to a joint duty or obligation upon notice, and where other special notice is not made necessary by statute or by contract, a notice addressed to all and served on one is notice to all. * * *

[2] As affecting the question of the sufficiency of the notice with reference to a renewal of the lease, or the execution of a new lease, given by the tenant to one of such joint owners only, the principle is laid down in 7 Ruling Case Law, p. 874, that such a notice is binding upon each and all of the joint owners. In discussing the difference in this regard between cotenants and joint tenants, it is said:

"* * * Nor is the relation of cotenancy of such a nature that notices served on one cotenant, as, for example, of defects of title in the common property purchased, bind the remaining cotenants; but where a grant is made to several persons jointly, a notice addressed to all of them, and served on one of them, is sufficient. In such case it is held that notice to one is notice to all. Where the relation is that of joint tenancy and not cotenancy, a different rule prevails. * * *" (Citing authorities.)

The following authorities are in point: Detlor v. Holland, 57 Ohio St. 492, 49 N. E. 690, 40 L. R. A. 266; Glenn v. Thompson, 75 Pa. 389; Wright v. Kaynor, 150 Mich. 7, 113 N. W. 779; Baker v. Kellogg, 29 Ohio St. 663.

Without at this time having reference to, or in any manner considering, the form or the contents of the notice, it therefore appears that each of the several acts of the tenant, in notifying one of the plaintiffs of its desire to renew the lease or execute a new one, was a sufficient notice thereof to both of the plaintiffs.

The next finding to which appellants object includes the ultimate fact that, following the expiration of the original lease, the defendants were not entitled to the possession of the premises described in the complaint, but, to the contrary, the plaintiffs were entitled to such possession. It will be remembered that the lease as originally executed by the respective parties thereto contained a provision by which the lessee was given "the option of renewing the lease at the expiration of the date as specified herein," and that during the term of the lease the provision with reference to its renewal was modified by an agreement between the then owner and the lessee, by which on the expiration of the lease the latter was "given an option to lease the premises at a monthly rental of $75 per month for a term of three years."

The only substantial difference between the two options was that by the first the lessee was given the right of renewing the lease, without any price per month or term therefor being specified, while in the second option the lessee was given the right to lease the premises—the price per month and the term being fixed. By the terms of the registered letter sent to plaintiffs by the tenant nearly three months before the lease expired, plaintiffs were notified that the defendant wished to "exercise the option granted to us to lease the premises" in accordance with the terms of the agreement modifying the provision contained in the lease as originally executed. In the second notice by the tenant to the plaintiffs the intention of the tenant was made more specific (if possible), in that the tenant declared that it "desires and intends to use, avail itself of, and exercise a certain option in said lease, which said option is set forth in said lease as follows." Then follows a copy of the modified agreement by which the defendant was given the option to "lease" the premises.

Following such last written notice of the intention of the tenant with reference to its desire as affecting the renewal of the lease or the execution of a new lease, it appears from the testimony given by one of the witnesses that, in a conversation among the officers of the tenant and one of the plaintiffs, the tenant orally informed the plaintiffs that, while the tenant claimed that its then lease was "good for another three years," nevertheless it wished to re-lease the premises in accordance with the terms of the modified agreement with reference thereto. The testimony was as follows:

"* * * Of course we discussed pro and con as to whether that lease was good or not that I had. I claimed I had a lease, and it was good for another three years. Mr. Buck (manager of Swift & Co.) stated, 'Regardless of that, we want to re-lease. We would like to make a new lease with you for three years at $75 a month.'"

[3] No evidence was introduced which tended to contradict the fact that the notices of intention on the part of the defendants to re-lease the property were given by the defendants to the plaintiffs. The only testimony which at all had a tendency to create a conflict in the evidence as affecting the desire of defendants to re-lease the property related entirely to the oral notice as expressed in the conversation which took place among the several parties to the controversy, and in that regard it appears that one of the plaintiffs testified:

"I simply made a statement to Mallonee that when that property was re-leased, or when he got a new lease, I was the person to state what the conditions of that lease would be. * * * I had not been asked for a new lease. * * * He said he had all the lease he needed."

Resolving all doubts in favor of the judgment, it may be assumed as a conclusion from such testimony that no oral notice was ever given to the plaintiffs by the defendants of their intention to exercise the option to which reference has been had. But disregarding the technical question of whether the original lease was to be renewed, or a new lease executed, it is uncontroverted that by the written notices, by whatever form the proposed new tenancy was to be evidenced, the tenant wished to avail itself of the right created in it by the modified agreement relating to a continuance of the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties. The intention of the tenant was clearly made manifest in the premises. Its right to a re-lease of the property in accordance with the agreement of the parties should not be cut off because of any alleged failure on its part either to give oral notice, or in every instance to technically specify the exact nature of the instrument by which the tenant should remain in the possession and enjoyment of the premises.

It follows that the findings in question were not supported by the evidence, and as a consequence that the plaintiffs should have failed in their action.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 119

DAWSON v. DAWSON et al. (Civ. 4740.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 16, 1927.

Venue $\Leftrightarrow$ 52(1)—Refusal to change venue to county of defendants' residence because of convenience of plaintiff's witnesses prior to joining issue held error (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 395, 397, subd. 3).

Refusal of defendants' motion to change place of trial of action to recover damages for alleged breach of lessor's agreement to permit removal of certain improvements made by lessee at termination of lease, which action was transitory in nature, to county of their residence, because of alleged convenience of plaintiff's witnesses, under Code Civ. Proc. § 397, subd. 3, held error, where no answer had been filed and no issue of fact joined, in view of section 395.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action by Jay P. Dawson against Byron F. Dawson and another. From an order refusing to change the place of trial, defendants appeal. Reversed, with instructions.

Louis Lamy, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Huber A. Collins, of El Centro, for respondent.

YORK, J. Before an issue of fact had been joined, defendants moved, under section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have the trial of the action transferred to the county of Los Angeles, on the undisputed fact that they were residents of the county of Los Angeles at the time of the commencement of the action, and were not at the time of the commencement of the action, or at the time of the hearing, residents of Imperial county. An objection was made by the plaintiff to the removal of the cause on account, of alleged convenience of witnesses, under subdivision 3 of section 397 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The question is therefore presented whether or not such an objection would be well taken or could be considered before an issue of fact has been joined. No answer has yet been filed, and until the trial court could be properly informed of the facts to be established at the trial, or until it could be determined from all the pleadings of the case whether witnesses, and the evidence to be given by them, as set forth in affidavits presented to support such objection, would be even necessary or material, a transfer on account of convenience of witnesses could not be granted.

In the case of Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 72, particularly at page 80, the Supreme Court says:

"Independent of an express provision of statute, the superior court ought not to be called on before issues of fact have been joined to decide that the convenience of witnesses will be promoted by a change of the place of trial. * * * The Code of Civil Procedure does not require a decision which, in the nature of things, must ordinarily be premature."

See, also, Wong Fung Hing v. S. F., etc., Funds, 15 Cal. App. 537, 538, 539, 115 P. 331, 332, where the court says:

"It clearly appears that defendant was a resident of San Francisco at the time of the commencement of the action, and, hence, upon demand duly made therefor, was, in the absence of a countershowing, entitled to an order changing the place of trial to the county of its residence. Code Civ. Proc. § 395. Assuming, then, that notwithstanding such right on the part of defendant, the court might, nevertheless, upon a proper showing that the convenience of witnesses would be subserved thereby, retain the case for trial in Los Angeles county, the question presented for determination is whether the facts set forth in the affidavits presented by plaintiff justified the order made by the court. Subdivision 3 of section 397, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the court may, on motion, change the place of trial, 'when the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change.' Manifestly, until an answer is filed and issues of fact joined, it cannot be said a production of witnesses upon a trial will be required. Hence, a motion either to change the place of trial or to retain it for trial in a county other than the proper county, based upon the convenience of witnesses, will not be entertained where the defendant appears by demurrer only. Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 76; Armstrong v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 411; Sheffield v. Pickwick Stages, 191 Cal. 9, 214 P. 852. In the former case it is said: 'But where no issue of fact has been raised, as where the motion to change the place of trial is made when defendant has appeared only by demurrer to the complaint, how can the court intelligently determine that it will be for the convenience of witnesses to change the place of trial, or to retain the action for trial in the county designated in the complaint?' Therefore, in passing upon motions for a change of place of trial, where an answer is filed, it is the duty of the court to disregard the proposed testimony of an alleged witness which is not material to some issue of fact made. Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 P. 836; Ennis-Brown Co. v. Long, 7 Cal. App. 313, 94 P. 250. It is clear that plaintiff could not successfully resist defendant's motion unless it appeared from his affidavits that the testimony of the witnesses whose convenience was to be thereby subserved would be material and competent upon the trial of the issues involved. Applying this rule, it is apparent from an examination of the record herein that the facts did not justify the court in making the order from which defendant appeals."

The action is transitory in its nature; being an action to recover damages for the alleged breach of a lessor's agreement that the lessee, at the termination of his leasehold, should be "privileged to remove" any fences, buildings, and other improvements which he may have made on the land at his own expense.

The lower court having refused to change the place of trial from the county of Imperial to the county of residence of defendants, to wit, Los Angeles county, the order of the lower court is reversed, with instructions to the lower court to order the transfer of said cause to the superior court of Los Angeles county.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

83 Cal. App. 128

(286 P.)

FISHEL v. F. M. BALL & CO., Inc.*
(Civ. 3197.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 16, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 13, 1927.

1. Master and servant $\S$ 80(10) — Evidence held to support finding that employee was to receive percentage of employer's net profits computed annually.

In action against employer for balance due for services as salesman, evidence held sufficient to support finding that plaintiff was to receive percentage of net profits of business in addition to salary, such profits to be computed annually on December 31st.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 80(10) — Evidence held to support finding that there had been no profit or loss on canned goods on hand at end of year of employer's business.

In action against employer for balance due for services as salesman, based in part on a percentage of net profits, evidence held sufficient to support finding in computing net profits that there had been no profit or loss on canned fruit bought three months before end of year and which was still on hand at that time.

3. Evidence $\S$ 113(8) — Price lists as evidence of value of goods are inadmissible without preliminary testimony showing qualification.

In computing net profits of employer's business at end of year, in employee's action for commission which was to be computed on such profits, price lists of canned goods bought three months before end of year and still on hand at that time should not be received in evidence without preliminary extrinsic evidence showing how they were made up, where information was obtained, and whether prices quoted were derived from actual sales.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 206(1) — Preliminary proof relative to price list as evidence of value of goods held waived by failure to object.

In employee's action for commissions which were to be computed on net profits of employer's business at end of year, plaintiff waived preliminary proof relative to price list showing value of goods on hand at end of year by failure to object, and appellate court cannot presume that preliminary proof would not have been furnished in absence of such waiver.

5. Evidence $\S$ 571(7) — That expert in market values based testimony on price lists of little value does not entirely deprive testimony of credit.

Though price lists to extent that they represented mere asking price were of little weight in determining net profits of employer's business on which employee's commissions were computed, fact that plaintiff testifying as expert in market values based testimony to some extent on such list does not entirely deprive it of credit.

6. Evidence $\S$ 113(8) — Cost of goods held relevant on question of value in view of doubtful market.

Where there was doubt or uncertainty as to existence of market or of sufficient basis for determining market value, in determining net profits of employer's business on which salesman's commissions were computed as affected by quantity of canned goods carried over end of year when profits were to be computed, cost of such goods was relevant in determining market value.

7. Evidence $\S$ 142(3) — Exclusion of evidence relating to sales at date different from that of price lists showing value of canned goods held proper.

In computing net profits of employer's business in employee's action for commissions to be computed thereon, where employer carried over end of year quantity of canned goods at which time profits were to be computed, rejection of evidence relating to sales and prices at other times than date of price lists showing value of such goods held not error.

8. Evidence $\S$ 547 — Market value cannot be established on direct examination by evidence of particular sales.

In computing net profits of employer's business in employee's action for commissions which were to be computed thereon, market value of goods carried over end of year at which time profits were to be computed, cannot be established on direct examination by evidence of particular sales.

9. Appeal and error $\S$ 1058(2) — Exclusion of evidence as to whether price list represented market price held not prejudicial error, where witness had already answered question.

In salesman's action against employer for commissions which were to be computed on net profits of employer's business, exclusion of testimony as to whether particular price list represented market price of goods carried over end of year, at which time profits were to be computed, held not prejudicial error, where witnesses had already testified that market price was lower than price set out in price list.

10. Evidence $\S$ 113(8) — Where price lists were introduced to aid in computing net profits on which salesman's commissions were computed, testimony as to how such lists were regarded by trade held admissible.

In employee's action for commissions which were to be computed on net profits, in which price lists were introduced to show value of goods carried over end of year, at which time profits were to be computed, testimony as to how such price lists were regarded by trade as establishing prices held proper, in absence of motion to strike for failure to produce further evidence on proper admissibility of lists.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by Lester M. Fishel against F. M. Ball & Co., Inc., for balance due for services as salesman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Robert B. Gaylord, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arnold C. Lackenbach and Paul A. McCarthy, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

BUCK, Justice pro tem. [1] This is an action brought to recover a balance claimed to be due from defendant for services rendered by plaintiff as a salesman for defendant. Plaintiff recovered judgment in the sum of $2,710, and defendant appeals. The case was tried before the court without a jury. There was no conflict in the evidence that plaintiff was in the employ of the defendant during the time in question, and that he was paid by defendant during the time of his employment the sum of $200 per month. And the evidence also shows, without conflict, that there was some understanding between the parties to the effect that plaintiff was to receive under certain conditions a percentage upon the profits of the business. But there was a sharp conflict in the testimony as to whether the additional sum was to be paid by defendant as a bonus, or gratuity, at some indefinite time in the future, or whether it was to be paid as a fixed commission at the end of each year, in an amount equal to 25 per cent. of the net profits of the business earned during the year. The court found, in accordance with the contention of the plaintiff, that, in addition to his regular salary of $200 per month, he was to receive "25 per cent. of the net profits of the business, such profits to be computed on the 31st day of December, 1922, and annually on each 31st day of December thereafter."

It does not appear that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the foregoing finding. It is supported by the testimony offered on behalf of the plaintiff and also, to some extent, by the testimony of the defendant to the effect that during the time of plaintiff's employment he paid him, in addition to his regular wages, the sum of $1,050, which payment was afterwards entered by him upon his books as a payment on account of commissions earned, and was by him entered in his federal income tax return as a fixed expense of his business for the year.

[2] Counsel also contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that the net profits of the business upon which plaintiff's commissions were to be computed amounted to the sum of $15,043.46, and he also contends that the court erred in its ruling on the admission of evidence pertaining to this finding.

The defendant was engaged in a brokerage and commission business, and also in the business of buying and selling merchandise.

From the testimony of an expert accountant who examined the books of defendant, it appears that the aggregate gross profits of the business for the year 1922 amounted to $50,475.42. But for the purpose of enabling the court to determine the actual net profits, it was conceded on both sides that there were unquestioned net profits in the sum of $3,173.41, and that the court should determine from the evidence whether the defendant, in arriving at the above amount of net profits, was justified in deducting from the gross profits, among other amounts, certain four items, it being conceded that all other deductions claimed by the defendant were properly made. The court made no express finding as regards each of these claimed deductions, but from a simple calculation it is plain that the court allowed two of the foregoing deductions claimed by the defendant, and disallowed the two other items of deduction claimed by defendant in the sums, respectively, of $5,899.55 and $5,967.50. These items were by the court accordingly added to the amount of net profits agreed upon as above. This sum gave the amount (less an apparent clerical error of $3) of net profits found as above by the court.

Defendant's claim for the foregoing deductions was based upon his contention that he had purchased in September and October 19, 1920 cases of canned fruit, which he still had on hand at the end of the year, and which he claimed had at that time depreciated in market value in the above amounts as shown by his own inventory. It was agreed that the price of these goods at the time they were purchased was $2.05 per dozen. But the court was required to determine the market value of the goods at the end of the year. The plaintiff, on the one hand, contended that the goods at the end of the year were worth about 30 cents per dozen above their cost, while the defendant contended that they were worth about that much less than their actual cost. But the court, as above indicated, found that there was neither a profit nor a loss in the goods at the end of the year, and that their value at that time was the amount of their original cost. On this issue a number of witnesses testified. Appellant's contention is that:

"Solely upon two loosely identified printed price lists of asking prices by two California fruit packers, and in contravention of the uncontradicted testimony of several witnesses as to current market price, the court based its findings that the current market price of $1.70 reflected in the inventory was incorrect, and held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover upon the basis of price measured by the asking prices which appeared in these printed price lists. * * * That unidentified printed price lists of asking prices are not competent evidence to establish market value, and therefore that the court's finding upon this subject is not supported by the evidence. * * * And the court erred in its rulings as to the evidence which the defendant attempted to introduce to controvert that testimony."

[3, 4] As regards the "two loosely identified printed price lists," the record shows that these objectionable lists were offered and received in evidence, not only without any objection on the part of the defendant, but in accordance with his express desire and wish. And it further appears that the trial judge, though they were so received, did not base his finding thereon. For these lists, if they had been received and accepted as conclusive evidence, would have shown a profit on the goods at the end of the year. Learned counsel is of course correct in his contention in this court that, before the foregoing price lists could regularly be received in evidence, there should have been introduced preliminarily extrinsic evidence showing how or in what manner the lists were made up, and where the information therein contained was obtained, or whether the quotations of prices made were derived from actual sales or otherwise, or were relied upon and consulted by the trade. Vogt v. Cope, 66 Cal. 31, 32, 4 P. 915. See full annotations on the subject, 43 A. L. R. 1192. Also, as stated in Clemens Horst Co. v. Breidt, 94 N. J. Law, 230, 109 A. 727:

"The weight of authority is to the effect that a price current list, published in a newspaper, is not competent evidence of market value without proof as to the source from which the information therein was obtained, or whether the quotations of prices were from actual sales or otherwise. The credit to be given the paper must depend upon some such extrinsic proof."

But, as already noted, this preliminary proof was waived by learned counsel at the trial, and, as held by our Supreme Court in a case involving life, this court cannot presume that the preliminary proof would not have been furnished in the absence of counsel's waiver.

As stated by our Supreme Court in People v. Owens, 123 Cal. 482, 56 P. 251, involving the admission of a dying statement of the deceased:

"The consensus of opinion, as illustrated by these cases and many others, is that where the proffered evidence is imperfect by the lack of preliminary proof which may or may not be supplied by the party offering the evidence, the objector must specifically point out the defect by his objection, and, if he fails to do so, it is waived."

Also, as stated in the case of Yule v. Miller (Cal. App.) 252 P. 733, at page 736:

"While some evidence was received that might have been subject to an objection, no objection was made, and it is well settled that incompetent evidence admitted without objection is to be regarded as sufficient to establish the fact. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset, etc., Co., 176 Cal. 466, 168 P. 1037. Evidence technically incompetent admitted without objection must be given as much weight in the reviewing court in reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence as if it were competent. Parsons v. Easton, 184 Cal. 769, 195 P. 419; Janson v. Brooks, 29 Cal. 223; Curia v. Packard, 29 Cal. 197; McCloud v. O'Neill, 16 Cal. 397; Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 102, 77 P. 762."

[5] Though to the extent that these lists may have represented mere asking prices and nothing else, they would be of little weight, and were evidently so considered by the trial judge. Peters v. McPhadden, 75 Wash. 525, 135 P. 26 [26 Ann. Cas. 1915C, 63]; Houston Packing Co. v. Griffith (Tex. Civ. App.) 164 S. W. 431; Fountain v. Wabash R. R. Co., 114 Mo. App. 676, 90 S. W. 393; Fairley v. Smith, 87 N. C. 367 [42 Am. Rep. 522]; Atlantic National Bank v. Korrick (Ariz.) 242 P. 1009 [43 A. L. R. 1184, at page 1189].

The mere fact, however, that the plaintiff, while testifying as an expert in market values, bases his testimony to some extent on these lists, does not entirely deprive his testimony of credit. As stated by Holmes, C. J., now of the United States Supreme Court:

"An expert may testify to value although his knowledge of details is chiefly derived from inadmissible sources, because he gives the sanction of his general experience. But the fact that an expert may use hearsay as a ground of opinion does not make the hearsay admissible." National Bank v. New Bedford, 175 Mass. 257, 56 N. E. 288.

In the case at bar the objection was absolutely withdrawn, and learned counsel who represented defendant at the trial reserved the right to avail himself of similar hearsay and possibly incompetent evidence.

Further, as regards counsel's contention that the finding of the court was in contravention of the uncontradicted testimony of several witnesses as to the current market price, there is sufficient in the record to show that the trial judge exercised his own proper discretion in passing upon the weight that should be accorded the testimony of these witnesses. It appears that their testimony was, in effect, a mere ratification of the inventory price fixed as of the end of the year upon these goods by the defendant in his federal income tax return. One of the witnesses testified that, after looking at the inventory taken by his accounting department, he took it for granted that the market value was the same, and that the inventory price was not fixed "as the sale price in any event." And, furthermore, as to the market value at the end of the year, the witnesses testified, in substance, that at that time no one can fix the real market value derived during that period; that during that time there was no demand, and for that reason the witness was unable to fix any market value, and that when they inventoried at the end of the year, they inventoried it at "as low a price as they could consistently do so." And defendant's principal witness on market value testified that in the canned goods business, unlike the wheat or grain trade, there is no exchange or market where daily fluctuations in the market prices are established of record. The market value is whatever each broker or jobber interprets it for himself.

[6] It further appeared from the evidence that at about the time the goods were purchased in September and October the market was confronted with "a pretty heavy carry-over on hand from the spring of 1922, and there were indications that the market price would not hold up, and everybody was uneasy as to what the eventual outcome would be," and that the dealers "were very hard-pressed at that time in being able to dispose of one hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand cases of their next year's pack." In view of this uncertainty we cannot say that the trial court was without justification in accepting the purchase price of these goods as potent evidence in determining the value of them under not dissimilar conditions three months later in the year. Where there is doubt or uncertainty as to the existence of a market, or of a sufficient basis for correctly determining the market value, the cost of personal property is held to be very relevant on the question of its value. Yoakam v. Hogan, 198 Cal. 16, 243 P. 21; Angell v. Hopkins, 79 Cal. 181, 21 P. 729; Greenebaum v. Taylor, 102 Cal. 624, 36 P. 957; Union Hollywood Co. v. Los Angeles, 184 Cal. 535, 538, 195 P. 55; Travis Glass Co. v. Ibbetson, 186 Cal. 724, 200 P. 595; Wholesale Grocers' Corp. v. Richheimer Brokerage Co., 233 Ill. App. 64, at page 68.

[7] As regards the specific rulings of the court claimed to have been errors prejudicial to the defendant, it does not appear that the court was in error in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the question asked the witness Fishel as to whether or not in December, 1922, and January and February of 1923, the defendant had not sold goods at prices lower than the prices quoted in the price list above referred to. The court's ruling in disallowing the question was not erroneous for the reason that it included periods of time in January and February, and even in December, that were not covered by the price list in question, and hence did not tend to contradict it. And furthermore, as already indicated, the finding of the court shows that the trial judge did not accord full faith or credit to the price list in question.

[8] Also, the court did not err in not allowing the defendant, when testifying as an expert on direct examination, to testify as to particular sales of apricots and peaches subsequent to the 31st day of December, 1922. The question did not indicate how long subsequent, and market value cannot be established on direct examination by evidence of particular sales. Central Pacific R. R. Co.

v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 247; City of Los Angeles v. Pedersen (Cal. App.) 255 P. 889 (April 25, 1927).

[9] In regard to the questions asked witnesses Mel and Philpott in regard to the price lists which, as already indicated, had been received in evidence with the consent and at the request of the defendant, each of these witnesses had already testified, as experts, that the market price of the goods referred to in the price list was as much as 50 cents per dozen below the price set out in the price list. It was therefore not prejudicial error for the court to sustain the plaintiff's objection to the question asked the witnesses as to whether or not the price list in question "represented the market price." The question was merely argumentative, and, as one of the witnesses himself stated, he had already answered the question.

[10] The witness Fishel, when testifying as an expert on the question of market value, after the price lists referred to above had been already received in evidence without objection, was permitted to testify, over the objection of defendant, as to how these price lists were regarded by the trade as establishing prices. This was a proper question to ask in an attempt to lay at least a partial foundation for the introduction of these price lists, even if a proper objection had been interposed. 3 Wigmore on Evidence, par. 1704; Jones v. Ortel, 114 Md. 205, 78 A. 1030; Mount Vernon Brewing Co. v. Teschner, 108 Md. 158, 69 A. 702, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 758. Also, there was no motion to strike out this testimony for failure to produce further evidence on the proper admissibility of the list. In fact, the witness was allowed to testify, without further objection or motion to strike out on the part of the defendant, that the defendant and the witness and the defendant's salesman and jobbers generally looked to these prices in making sales.

Furthermore, defendant complains that the court refused to hear further testimony on the question of values, but the record does not show what, if any, testimony was offered, nor whether or not the testimony, if offered, would have been material.

For the foregoing reasons we do not believe that there is a sufficient showing of error in the record to warrant a reversal of this case, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

ing property on which to operate and maintain a hospital held within reasonable intendment of Treaty of Commerce and Navigation with Japan (37 Stat. 1504) art. 1, and not within prohibitions contained in Alien Land Law, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, since as a corporation they would not be authorized to exercise any right over property which they did not possess as individuals.

2. Citizens ⇨11—United States citizenship does not entitle citizen to rights and privileges of state citizenship.

Citizenship of the United States does not entitle citizen to privileges and immunities of citizen of state, since privileges and immunities of one are not the same as the other.

3. Treaties ⇨7—Words of treaty are to be taken in ordinary meaning, unless restriction impressed by local law is clearly intended.

Words of treaty are to be taken in their ordinary meaning, as understood in the public law of nations, and not in any artificial or special sense impressed on them by local law, unless such restricted sense is clearly intended.

4. Treaties ⇨8—Treaty, conferring on subjects of one country residing in another privileges of native citizen, extended all rights enjoyed by native citizen, irrespective of source.

Treaty of Commerce and Navigation with Japan (37 Stat. 1504), conferring on subjects of one country residing in the other right to exercise certain privileges on same terms as native citizens, held to extend to foreign subjects all rights that the native citizen enjoyed, irrespective of source, and not to limit privileges and immunities of Japanese citizens to those accorded native citizens and subjects of the United States and not of the several states.

In Bank.

Application for mandamus by K. Tashiro, M. D., and others, prayed to be directed to Frank C. Jordan, Secretary of State, and another, to compel them to file certain articles of incorporation. Writ granted.

J. Marion Wright, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Chief Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

CURTIS, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondents, as secretary of state and deputy secretary of state, respectively, to file certain articles of incorporation prepared and executed by petitioners and presented by them to respondents as such officers, for the purpose of filing in the office of secretary of state. The application also asks that the respondents be compelled to issue a certificate of incorporation and to certify and deliver to petitioners three copies of said articles of incorporation. It appears from said application that petitioners are residents of the state of California and county of Los Angeles, and are all Japanese

201 Cal. 236

K. TASHIRO et al. v. JORDAN, Secretary of State, et al. (S. F. 12346.)

Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1927.

1. Aliens ⇨12(4) — Japanese subjects may form corporation to lease property on which to operate and maintain hospital (Alien Land Law, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020).

Right of Japanese subjects residing within state to form a corporation for purpose of leas-subjects ineligible to become citizens of the United States or state of California; that they have voluntarily associated themselves together for the purpose of forming a corporation under the laws of the state of California to be known as the Japanese Hospital of Los Angeles; and that among the purposes for which this corporation is sought to be organized are those of maintaining a general hospital, to purchase the necessary equipment for the same, and to lease land upon which the buildings necessary for the maintenance of said hospital may be erected. Respondents refuse to file these articles of incorporation or to take any official action thereon for the reason, as contended by them, that the treaty between this government and the Japanese government confers no right upon Japanese subjects residing in this country to form a corporation under the laws of this or of any other state of this country. Without this right is given to petitioners by the terms of said treaty, the respondents contend, petitioners are prohibited by the laws of this state, and particularly by the provisions of the Alien Land Law, from forming any corporation, one of the purposes of which is to possess, use, or occupy real property situated in this state.

Section 1 of the Alien Land Law, as adopted by the electors of this state in 1920 and thereafter amended by the act of the Legislature approved June 20, 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 1020), deals with the rights of aliens eligible to citizenship and in no way relates to any matter involved in the present proceeding. Sections 2 and 3 of this act are as follows:

"Sec. 2. All aliens other than those mentioned in section one of this act may acquire, possess, enjoy, use, cultivate, occupy and transfer real property, or any interest therein, in this state, and have in whole or in part the beneficial use thereof, in the manner and to the extent, and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject, and not otherwise.

"Sec. 3. Any company, association or corporation organized under the laws of this or any other state or nation, of which a majority of the members are aliens other than those specified in section one of this act, or in which a majority of the issued capital stock is owned by such aliens, may acquire, possess, enjoy, use, cultivate, occupy and transfer real property, or any interest therein, in this state, and have in whole or in part the beneficial use thereof, in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the government of the United States and the nation or country of which such members or stockholders are citizens or subjects, and not otherwise. Hereafter all aliens other than those specified in section one hereof may become members of or acquire shares of stock in any company, association or corporation that is or may be authorized to acquire, possess, enjoy, use, cultivate, occupy and transfer real property, or any interest therein, in this state, in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty now existing between the government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject, and not otherwise."

It will be observed from a reading of the foregoing sections of the Alien Land Law that by the provisions of section 2 thereof the rights of aliens ineligible to citizenship to possess, use, or occupy real property in this state are limited to such rights as are prescribed by the treaty between the country of which said aliens are subjects and this country. By section 3 of said act the rights of any corporation organized in this or any other state, of which a majority of the members thereof are aliens ineligible to citizenship, to possess, use, or occupy real property situated in this state, are likewise limited and governed by the terms of the treaty existing between this government and the government of which such aliens are citizens or subjects. In other words, it was undoubtedly the object and purpose of the Alien Land Law of this state to accord to aliens ineligible to citizenship, either individually or as members of a corporation, in which a majority of the members thereof are ineligible to citizenship, the right to acquire and possess real property in this state "in the manner and to the extent and for the purposes prescribed by any treaty," and to deny to such aliens any and all other rights or privileges in or to the real property of this state. It is apparent, therefore, that the measure of petitioners' rights as asserted in this proceeding is to be determined by the terms and provisions of the treaty or treaties now in force between this government and the empire of Japan. Article 1 of the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation between this government and the empire of Japan, proclaimed April 5, 1911 (37 U. S. Stats. at Large, p. 1504), in so far as it is material to any question arising herein, provides that:

"The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel and reside in the territories of the other to carry on trade, wholesale and retail, to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses and shops, to employ agents of their choice, to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established."

It will be observed that, by the terms of this article of said treaty, subjects of Japan are accorded the right, among others, to carry on trade, to lease land for commercial purposes, and "generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens" of this country or state. In the case of State of California v. Tagami, 195 Cal. 522, 234 P. 102, it was held that a lease of land to a subject of Japan, for the purpose of using and occupying the same as a health resort or sanatorium, is for a "commercial purpose" within the terms of said treaty. It is not seriously contended by respondents that the use of land for the purpose of erecting and maintaining thereon a hospital is not a use for commercial purposes as the term is used in said treaty, nor is it contended that a subject of Japan or any number of them, either in their capacity as individuals or as members of a partnership, cannot under the terms of said treaty lease real property in this state for the purpose of maintaining thereon a hospital. The sole claim of respondents is that the treaty does not expressly or by reasonable inference confer upon Japanese subjects residing in this state the right to form a corporation, if one of the purposes thereof is to lease for commercial purposes real property situated in this state.

In the case of California v. Tagami, supra, this court quoted with approval from the following language from the case of De Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 S. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642:

"It is a general principle of construction, with respect to treaties, that they shall be liberally construed, so as to carry out the apparent intention of the parties to secure equality and reciprocity between them. As they are contracts between independent nations, in their construction, words are to be taken in their ordinary meaning, as understood in the public law of nations, and not in any artificial or special sense impressed upon them by local law, unless such restricted sense is clearly intended. And it has been held by this court that where a treaty admits of two constructions, one restrictive of rights that may be claimed under it, and the other favorable to them, the latter is to be preferred."

The principle thus enunciated appears to be accepted by the courts generally, and in 38 Ency. of Law and Procedure (Cyc.) 970, it is stated as follows:

"Treaties should ordinarily be construed liberally, and so where the treaty admits of two constructions, one restrictive as to the rights that may be claimed under it and the other liberal, the latter is to be preferred."

In support of this text the following authorities are cited: In re Wyman, 191 Mass. 276, 77 N. E. 379, 114 Am. St. Rep. 601; In re Stixrud's Estate, 58 Wash. 339, 109 P. 343, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 632, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 850; The Disconto Gesellschaft v. Umbreit, 208 U. S. 570, 28 S. Ct. 337, 52 L. Ed. 625; Scharpf v. Schmidt, 172 Ill. 255, 50 N. E. 182; Adams v. Akerlund, 168 Ill. 632, 48 N. E. 454; and De Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 S. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642.

As we have already seen, article 1 of the treaty of 1911 provides that subjects of Japan residing in this state shall have the right to carry on trade, wholesale and retail, to lease land for commercial purposes and generally do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects. It is apparent from the reading of this section of the treaty that it was the intention of the high contracting parties thereto to give to the subjects of either country residing in the territory of the other the right to carry on trade therein upon the same terms as native subjects or citizens of the latter country. Yet this right to carry on trade is limited to such subjects and purposes as are enumerated in the treaty itself. Subjects of Japan residing in this country and subjects of our own country residing in Japan have only such rights in the country of their domicile as are expressly or by reasonable implication given to them by the treaty. The right to possess real property for agricultural purposes is not mentioned or referred to in the treaty; in fact, the treaty is silent upon this subject. Accordingly it has been held that no right to possess real property for agricultural purposes is given to subjects of Japan residing in this country, and therefore a statute prohibiting Japanese subjects residing in this state from possessing real property for agricultural purposes is valid and constitutional. Porterfield v. Webb, 195 Cal. 71, 231 P. 554; Porterfield v. Webb, 263 U. S. 225, 44 S. Ct. 21, 65 L. Ed. 278; Webb v. O'Brien, 263 U. S. 313, 44 S. Ct. 112, 68 L. Ed. 318. It was further held that the right "to carry on trade" given by the treaty does not give to Japanese subjects residing in this state the privilege of acquiring stock in a corporation owning farm or agricultural land situated in this state. Frick v. Webb, 263 U. S. 326, 44 S. Ct. 115, 68 L. Ed. 323. In this case the court said:

"The provisions of the act [Alien Land Law of California] were framed and intended for general application and to limit the privileges of all ineligible aliens in respect of agricultural lands to those prescribed by treaty between the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject. The state has power, and the act evidences its purpose, to deny to ineligible aliens permission to own, lease, use, or have the benefit of lands within its borders for agricultural purposes. * * * It may forbid indirect as well as direct ownership and control of agricultural land by ineligible aliens. The right 'to carry on trade' given by the treaty does not give the privilege to acquire the stock above described. To read the treaty to permit ineligible aliens to acquire such stock would be inconsistent with the intention and purpose of the parties."

[1] By the right "to carry on trade" in the specific lines of business mentioned in the treaty, such as conducting manufactories, warehouses, and shops and leasing land for commercial purposes, is from the very terms of said treaty as extensive and complete as that employed by native citizens or subjects. It would be difficult to frame language much more comprehensive than that found in the following provision of article 1 of the treaty:

"And generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects."

This language follows the provision enumerating the different classes of trade or business in which resident aliens are authorized to engage and must be read in connection with such provision, and as so read it gives to such aliens an equal standing with native citizens or subjects in the conduct of those enumerated classes of business which may be carried on by such aliens. If, then, Japanese subjects residing in this state are authorized to engage in certain lines of business, including that of leasing real property for commercial purposes, and under the terms of the treaty they are further authorized to do anything incident or necessary in the conduct of such business upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, are they thereby empowered to form a corporation as one of the necessary incidents of transacting such business? The statutes of this state provide the terms under which native citizens of this country may enter into corporate relations, and it is not questioned by respondents that petitioners have complied with the requirements of all such statutes, provided they are eligible to form a corporation under the terms of the treaty. It is hardly necessary to call attention to the extent to which corporations are formed and used by the citizens of this state, as well as by those of all other civilized countries, in the transaction of the various lines of trade carried on therein. There is scarcely a class of business of any consequence carried on in this state in which corporate interests do not play, if not a leading, at least an important part in its transaction. The extensive and widespread use of this means of carrying on trade or transacting business is convincing proof of the advantages to be derived therefrom. Why, then, should this method of carrying on trade as to the classes of business enumerated in the treaty be denied subjects of Japan residing in this state in the face of the plain provisions of the treaty conferring upon them as to such classes of business the right to do anything incident to such business upon the same terms as native citizens? A corporation, or the members thereof, in conducting any certain business do not thereby exercise any more extensive or different right or control over the property of said business than they would exercise over said property if they carried on the business as individuals. Should the petitioners as individuals decide to lease land and erect thereon and equip a hospital and maintain and operate the same, they could do so in the same manner and to the same extent as a corporation organized by them might do the same identical acts. As a corporation they would not be authorized to exercise any right over property which they do not now possess as individuals nor to transact any business nor engage in any line of trade which they could not transact or engage in as individuals. The corporation is simply the instrumentality through which the members thereof engage to carry on the business in which they have a common interest. It is simply incidental to the business just as an agreement of copartnership would be if a partnership were formed to perform the same acts. In view of these considerations, and mindful of the rule already referred to, requiring courts to give to treaties a liberal construction, we are of the opinion that the right of Japanese subjects residing in this state to form a corporation for the purpose of leasing real property upon which to operate and maintain a hospital is within the reasonable intentment of the treaty of 1911. Such right is therefore not within the prohibitions contained in the Alien Land Law of this state, but is expressly recognized by the terms thereof.

Respondents have directed our attention to the provisions of article 7 of the treaty of 1911, which was designed, to confer certain rights upon corporations (therein referred to as limited liability companies or associations) "organized in accordance with the laws of either high contracting party and domiciled in the territories of such party." Following the granting of such rights said article of the treaty provides that:

"The foregoing stipulation has no bearing upon the question whether a company or association organized in one of the two countries will or will not be permitted to transact its business or industry in the other, this permission remaining always subject to the laws and regulations enacted or established in the respective countries or in any part thereof."

It is insisted by respondents that this provision argues most strongly against petitioners' contention, in that it evinces no desire on the part of either party to the treaty of securing freedom of action in the territories of the other for corporations of its own creation. "Therefore," say respondents, "how much less must it have been concerned in the creation by that other of corporations which were to act in this country of their creation?" We are not able to perceive the force of respondents' argument. The parties to the treaty evidently were not prepared to definitely bind themselves as to the rights of a corporation organized in one country and domiciled therein to transact and carry on business in the other. Hence they left the question unaffected by the treaty and subject to be regulated by the respective countries. They were, however, prepared to definitely fix and determine the rights of citizens and subjects of one country domiciled in the other, and to this end they set forth these rights distinctly and comprehensively in article 1 of the treaty, the terms of which we have already considered and attempted to construe. Article 11 of the treaty also refers to corporations, but clearly this reference has no bearing upon the question to be considered in this proceeding.

[2-4] Finally, respondents contend that the words "native citizens" as used in the treaty in article 1 thereof, whereby it is sought to confer upon subjects of one country residing within the territory of the other the right "generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens" are employed in a restrictive sense, and that this provision of the treaty deals only with native citizens and subjects of the United States and their privileges and immunities as such and not with the privileges and immunities of the citizens and subjects of the several states. That there is a citizenship of the United States and a citizenship of a state, and the privileges and immunities of one are not the same as the other is well established by the decisions of the courts of this country. The leading cases upon the subjects are those decided by the Supreme Court of the United States and reported in 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394, and known as the Slaughter House Cases. However, to adopt the construction of the words "native citizens," as contended for by respondents, would be contrary not only to the spirit but to the express language of the rule applicable to the interpretation of treaties which we have already considered. We refer to the rule quoted with approval by this court in State of California v. Tagami, supra, and particularly to the following portion thereof:

"Words [of a treaty] are to be taken in their ordinary meaning, as understood in the public law of nations, and not in any artificial or special sense impressed upon them by local law, unless such restricted sense is clearly intended."

There is nothing in the language of the treaty to indicate that the words "native citizens" used therein were employed in any restricted sense. On the other hand, we think it is plainly obvious from the terms of the treaty that the intent of the parties thereto in conferring upon the subjects of one country residing in the other the right to exercise certain privileges "upon the same terms as native citizens" was to extend to such foreign subjects all the rights that the native citizen enjoyed irrespective of the source of such rights.

It may be that the right to form a corporation such as that which petitioners desire to organize is governed by the local laws of each particular state, and that such right may not be conferred upon alien residents in this state, or, for that matter, upon any class of persons whatsoever, by treaty or by any other act of the federal government. If this is so, then the state might disregard the treaty or any statute enacted by Congress which would infringe upon its exclusive jurisdiction in this particular and enact such laws in that regard as may meet the approval of the Legislature or of the people of the state, irrespective of any treaty or federal statute. But in the enactment of the Alien Land Law the state of California has not attempted to run counter to the treaty of 1911, or to any other treaty between this country and a foreign country. On the other hand, the provisions thereof relative to the right of aliens ineligible to citizenship to acquire and possess real property in this state expressly recognize such acquisition and possession "in the manner and to the extent and for the purpose prescribed by any treaty now existing between the government of the United States and the nation or country of which such alien is a citizen or subject." The provision found in section 3 of said act relative to corporations, a majority of whom are aliens not eligible to citizenship, acquiring or possessing real property in this state, contains a like reference to and recognition of the terms of any treaty between this government and any foreign nation. The fact, therefore, that the right to provide for and control the organization of corporations in this state may be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the state and not the national government is not decisive of any question arising in this proceeding for the reason that the action taken by the state in reference to such matters by the enactment of the Alien Land Law expressly limits the terms and provisions of said law to such rights as are not prescribed by any treaty.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.

201 Cal. 231

EL DORA OIL CO. v. GIBSON et al.
(L. A. 8551.)

Supreme Court of California. May 17, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1244—Corporation held proper plaintiff to sue on bond to stay execution of appointment of receiver, though not respondent named in the bond (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 367).

Where respondents named in bond to stay execution of order appointing receiver acted for and in behalf of corporation for which receiver was sought, since, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 367, real party in interest was required to bring action, corporation was proper party for plaintiff in suit on bond, though not named as respondent therein.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 469—Bond to stay execution of order appointing receiver held enforceable against defendants, though providing that appellant would pay all damages respondent sustained (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 1636, 1641, 1649, 2837).

Though bond to stay execution of order appointing receiver for a corporation properly described joint appeal of several defendants, and recited that they desired to stay execution, and provided that, if judgment was adverse, named appellant would pay all damages which respondent might sustain, it was not unenforceable, in view of Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 1636, 1641, 1649, 2837, because it could not be ascertained from the language of the condition to or against whom the bond inured.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by the El Dora Oil Company against G. R. Gibson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant R. McDonald appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. A. Barnhart and Leo V. Silverstein, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alfred H. McAdoo and A. H. Swallow, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. Defendant McDonald appeals from a judgment against him upon a bond made and executed by him, jointly with the other defendants, to stay the execution of an order of the superior court appointing a receiver of the El Dora Oil Company pending an appeal from said order, which appeal has been dismissed.

The circumstances connected with the execution of this bond are disclosed by the findings of the trial court, from which we recite the following facts:

In a certain action, wherein T. B. Fredendall, G. A. Lathrop, T. J. Green, L. C. Merideth, Monroe Thurman and N. L. Hall were plaintiffs and El Dora Oil Company, John Shrader, E. S. Good, Trusten Clark, D. W. Staten, Herman Friedman, and J. L. Campbell, Henry M. Jackson, and John Schrader, copartners doing business under the firm

name and style of Ohio Valley Construction Company, a corporation, were defendants, then pending in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, said superior court on the 17th day of January, 1914, made and entered an order appointing J. A. Kibele receiver of said El Dora Oil Company and authorizing, empowering, and ordering the said Kibele to take possession and control of all of the property and assets of the said El Dora Oil Company, and to conduct, operate, and manage its business and to conserve the assets thereof. Said action was instituted, prosecuted, and maintained by the plaintiffs therein named in the interest and on behalf of the said El Dora Oil Company and all of its stockholders in like situation as the plaintiffs, and in the supplemental and amended complaint in said action it was alleged by the plaintiffs, and the facts were and are, that said E. S. Good, Trusten Clark, D. W. Staten, Herman Friedman, and John Shrader were the directors of the said El Dora Oil Company, and that at the time said action was instituted, and for a long time prior thereto, the defendants therein named, E. S. Good and John Shrader, absolutely and entirely controlled the actions, conduct, and management of the board of directors of said company, and that the defendants therein named, D. W. Staten, Trusten Clark, and Herman Friedman, were, as directors of said El Dora Oil Company, absolutely and entirely subservient to the will, control, and direction of the said Good and Shrader, and cast their votes on all matters connected with the conduct, management, and affairs of the said El Dora Oil Company, as instructed and directed to do by the defendants Good and Shrader. The defendants E. S. Good, John Shrader, J. L. Campbell, and Henry M. Jackson were, at the time of the commencement of said action, handling and treating the funds and moneys of the said El Dora Oil Company as if same were their own, and were disbursing the same without any regard for the rights of the said El Dora Oil Company or its stockholders, and that they threatened and would continue to do so unless said receiver for said company were appointed.

In said action the plaintiffs prayed, among other things, that the defendants therein named be required to account for and pay over to the defendant therein named, El Dora Oil Company, all moneys and property theretofore or which thereafter might be taken and converted to their own use by the defendants E. S. Good and John Shrader.

After the making and entry in said action of the order appointing a receiver for the said El Dora Oil Company, certain of the defendants therein named, to wit: E. L. Foster, J. W. McGrath, G. R. Gibson, Charles A. Barnhart, and the Ohio Valley Construction Company, appealed from such order and for the purpose of procuring a stay of the execution of said order caused to be filed in said action an undertaking on appeal to stay said order, which undertaking was subscribed and executed by the defendants in the present action.

In April, 1921, the Supreme Court of the state of California made and entered an order dismissing the appeal from the said order appointing the receiver. Thereupon the present action was brought, in which it was found that, by reason of the stay of execution of said order appointing a receiver for the property of the El Dora Oil Company, the plaintiff in this action has been damaged in the sum of $35,000, for which sum judgment was given.

[1] Appellant urges two grounds of appeal. The first is that the plaintiff in the present action was not the respondent named in the undertaking on which this action is based and therefore cannot sue upon it. From the facts herein recited, it appears that the respondents named in the undertaking were acting for and in behalf of the El Dora Oil Company, the present plaintiff, and any recovery which might be had by them upon the undertaking would inure to the benefit of said company. Under such circumstances section 367, Code of Civil Procedure, would require that the real party in interest bring the action. We see no merit in this objection to the judgment.

[2] The other objection is predicated upon the fact that, although the undertaking properly describes the joint appeal of Foster, McGrath, Gibson, Barnhart, and Ohio Valley Construction Company, and recites that these appellants desire to stay the execution of the order appealed from, it then provides that the sureties named promise and undertake "on the part of the above named appellant that, if the order appealed from, or any part thereof, be affirmed or the appeal dismissed, the appellant will pay all damages which the respondent may sustain," etc. It is contended that the bond is not enforceable by or against the parties to this appeal because it cannot be ascertained from the language of the condition to or against whom it inures. The cases relied upon are Zane v. De Onativia, 135 Cal. 440, 67 P. 685, and Title Ins. Co. v. Cal. Dev. Co., 168 Cal. 397, 143 P. 723. Neither of these cases involve an undertaking such as we are considering here. Both have to do with cost bonds upon appeal, the filing of which was jurisdictional. The filing of the bond in the instant case had nothing to do with the jurisdiction of the appeal.

In interpreting the terms of a contract of suretyship in this state, the same rules are to be observed as in the case of other contracts. Civ. Code, § 2837. A contract must be interpreted so as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties, and the whole of a contract is to be taken together, so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other. Civ. Code, §§ 1636, 1641. If the terms of a promise are in any respect ambiguous or uncertain, it must be interpreted in the sense in which the promisor believed at the time of making it that the promisee understood it. Civ. Code, § 1649. The cases of Roberts v. Security T. & S. Bank, 196 Cal. 557, 238 P. 673, and Sather Banking Co. v. Briggs Co., 138 Cal. 724, 72 P. 352, hold that a contract of suretyship is to be fairly construed with a view to effecting the object for which it was given and to accomplish the purpose for which it was designed, and that the old rule of strictissimi juris applies only to the extent that no implication shall be indulged in to impose a burden not clearly inferable from the language of the contract, but does not apply so as to hold that the contract shall not be reasonably interpreted as other contracts are.

We find no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

83 Cal. App. 111

JOHNSON v. HULSE et al. (Civ. 4277.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 13, 1927.

1. Corporations ⚡78—Promise to repay subscribers' money is implied where corporation contemplated is abandoned.

Promise to repay money subscribed prior to organization is implied by law, where corporation contemplated is never formed.

2. Corporations ⚡30(2)—Preorganization agreement stating tentative plan for incorporation did not of itself render signers liable for repayment of subscriptions, on abandonment of project.

Preorganization agreement, by which tentative plan was arranged for formation of corporation on obtaining requisite amount of money through subscriptions, did not of itself render signers liable for repayment of money subscribed, on abandonment of plan for incorporation.

3. Principal and agent ⚡92(2)—Money paid promoters' agent may be considered as money paid promoters.

Money paid agent of promoters of corporation for stock subscriptions may be treated as money paid to promoters themselves.

4. Corporations ⚡30(2)—Promoters, who failed to receive subscription money collected by their agent, held nevertheless liable to subscribers on abandonment of scheme for incorporation.

Promoters planning organization of corporation, who selected agent and set him to work to procure subscriptions and collect money from subscribers, held liable to subscribers, on abandonment of project, for money paid agent, though money was not received by promoters.

5. Corporations $\S$ 30(2)—One who signed preorganization agreement without actively participating in promotion or selection of agent was not liable to subscribers for moneys paid agent which promoters never received.

Subscriber of stock in proposed corporation, who signed preorganization agreement, held not liable to refund subscription money for which promoters' agent allegedly failed to account, where such subscriber had not taken part in plan of operation or selection of agent.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 1050(1)—Testimony of subscriber under original partnership scheme held not prejudicial, in action against promoters for refund of subscription money on abandonment of incorporation scheme.

In action by subscriber against promoters to recover subscription money on abandonment of incorporation scheme, testimony of subscriber under original partnership scheme held not prejudicial.

7. Corporations $\S$ 30(2)—Testimony of promoter as to option on oil lease held not erroneously admitted, in action to recover subscription, where there was evidence that lease was to be transferred corporation.

In action against promoters to recover amount of subscription on abandonment of incorporation scheme, admitting testimony of promoter as to option secured on certain oil lease held not error, where there was some evidence that lease was to be transferred to corporation on its organization.

8. Witnesses $\S$ 268(1)—Permitting cross-examination of promoter as to whether he sought to set aside newspaper statement published by alleged agent held not error, in action to recover subscription money which agent collected.

In action against promoters of corporation to recover amount of subscriptions collected by alleged agent, admitting cross-examination of promoter as to whether he sought to set aside facts which might be stated in newspaper advertisement published by alleged agent held not error, where question was apparently asked to prove agency.

9. Appeal and error $\S$ 880(3)—Promoters sued could not complain on appeal that judgment against them failed to include codefendant promoter.

On appeal by promoters from judgment in favor of subscriber of stock, promoters could not complain that no judgment had been entered against codefendant promoter; liability of promoters being joint and several.

10. Corporations $\S$ 30(1)—Promoters' liability is joint and several.

Liability of promoters is joint and several, and judgment in action against promoters is not invalidated because entered against some only instead of against all.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by D. K. Johnson against Ben Hulse, C. S. Abbott, Lee Little, and others, operating as an association under the name of Big Four Oil Association. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants named appeal. Affirmed as to the two defendants first named, and reversed as to the last-named defendant.

M. C. Atchison and Leslie Reed, both of Calexico, for appellants.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendants Hulse, Abbott, and Little from a judgment rendered against them in favor of plaintiff. The legal question involved is that of the obligation of promoters of a projected corporation to repay, upon an abandonment of the scheme, money received from subscribers for shares to be issued upon organization of the corporation. We have not had the benefit of any brief from respondent, and must therefore deal with the points advanced by the appellants in our own way.

The complaint is in three counts: The first, to recover on a subscription made by plaintiff himself; the second, on a subscription made by D. L. Zinn, who assigned his claim to plaintiff; the third, on a subscription made by P. P. Stavron, whose claim was likewise assigned to plaintiff. Only part of Zinn's subscription having been paid in money, and that having been returned to him, the trial court found in favor of the defendants on the second count, and therefore no further reference will be made thereto.

The facts in the case are simple. The defendants Hulse, Abbott, and Dye had been interested together in certain oil ventures, and in February, 1919, Hulse secured certain options for oil leases in Texas, in which he associated with himself, Abbott and Dye. All three lived in California, but during the period involved in the transactions in question Hulse and Dye spent most of their time in Texas. After the options had been acquired, an arrangement was made by Hulse and his two associates with Martin C. Brumbly with a view to raising money in California for prospecting work on the Texas lands. The first plan was to have Brumbly raise not less than $40,000, in exchange for which there was to be transferred to him an interest in the options. The method first tried for providing funds through Brumbly was that of uniting subscribers in a copartnership divided into "units," for which each member was to pay $500. Certain subscriptions under this plan were obtained by Brumbly, the proposed partnership being designated as Imperial Valley-Texas Oil & Gas Association. A question having arisen, however, as to the legality of this procedure in view of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), as amended the use of the instrumentality of a copartnership was abandoned, and in its stead a scheme was devised for taking subscriptions for shares in a corporation to be thereafter formed. Pursuant to this plan an instrument called "Preincorporation Agreement" was prepared. It is dated May 1, 1919, and is an agreement by which the subscribers agree to form a corporation, to be known as "Big Four Oil Association," with an authorized capital of $200,000, divided into shares of a par value of $500 each, for the purpose, among other things, of prospecting and drilling upon certain described lands in Texas, called the Merkel lease and the Petrolia lease, as well as any other lands that might be acquired. The agreement provided for five trustees to act without compensation pending the organization of the corporation, and named an trustees Abbott, Hulse, Dye, Little, and Brumbly. It authorized the appointment of a general manager, fixed his duties, gave the trustees power to buy and sell oil leases and take title in their names, also, to take subscriptions and receive payments; and stated that the two leases named had been transferred to the trustees in consideration of a subscription of $60,000. It further stated that the trustees were authorized to accept subscriptions for $140,000, and that of such sum no part was to be expended until at least $25,000 had been subscribed, which sum, it was estimated, would be more than sufficient for drilling the first well. The only persons who ever signed this particular instrument were Abbott, Little, and Brumbly, and neither the leases named nor any assets were ever transferred to any of the trustees to be held for the benefit of the proposed corporation. Abbott testified that the agreement was not to be effective "until after the deal had been completed," and that was why Hulse and Dye did not sign. Dye testified that he and Hulse did not sign because Brumbly had not done his part.

After this preincorporation agreement had been prepared, Brumbly obtained from plaintiff and his assignors the subscriptions giving rise to this action. Johnson and Stavron subscribed each for a half unit, and each paid Brumbly therefore the sum of $250. Brumbly testified that the total subscriptions obtained aggregated between $14,000 and $17,000; that an unspecified part of the money he received was retained by him for commissions, and the rest he transmitted to Abbott. Whatever money Abbott received from Brumbly was deposited by him in a bank at Calxico, in an account carried in the name of Big Four Oil Association, Abbott signing checks as trustee. Brumbly having failed to raise sufficient money within the time necessary to fulfill the requirements of the options, Hulse directed the abandonment of the enterprise and the return of the money received from the subscribers. None of the money paid by the plaintiff Johnson or his assignor Stavron had been paid over to Abbott by Brumbly; and the demands of Johnson and Stavron for repayment were therefore refused by Abbott, with the result that this action was instituted for recovery of the amounts claimed.

[1] In taking subscriptions from subscribers Brumbly used an application blank with which he had been provided, and which was in the following form:

"I * * * hereby make this application which is to be attached and become a part of the original preorganization agreement of the Big Four Oil Association for * * * units in the association, at $500 per whole unit; it is understood and agreed that I am to receive a certificate for my investment when the association is incorporated."

The receipts given were signed either by M. G. Brumbly, Trustee, or simply M. G. Brumbly. Plaintiff and Stavron testified that when they subscribed they were told by Brumbly that if the corporation should not be formed, their money would be returned, but even if such promise had not been expressly made, it would have been implied by law.

The complaint alleges that the defendants Hulse, Dye, Abbott, and Little, and one fictitiously named as John Doe, were operating under the name of Big Four Oil Association, and that plaintiff and his assignors had paid them the amounts sued for, in return for which defendants agreed to organize the corporation and to issue certificates of stock, or, in the event that the corporation was not organized, to return to the subscribers the amounts paid. The action was later dismissed as to the fictitious defendant John Doe. Defendant Little answered separately, and the defendants Hulse, Abbott, and Dye jointly, but the answers are all in the same general form. All the defendants denied any contract with plaintiff or his assignors, and, while admitting that none of the defendants had incorporated the company referred to, they denied that any agreement for that purpose was made, and denied, also, that they received any money from plaintiff or his assignors. The court found in favor of plaintiff on the first and third counts, but only against the defendants Hulse, Abbott, and Little, giving judgment against them for $500 and interest. The appellants contend that the court erred in denying the motions of defendants for a nonsuit and in admitting certain evidence to which they objected, and erred also in finding that there was a contract between any of the defendants and either plaintiff or his assignor Stavron. Error is alleged further in the failure of the court to make Dye share the burden of the judgment with the other defendants charged.

[2-4] As we read the record, the liability to plaintiff and his assignors was not created by the preorganization agreement. That is not an agreement of promoters, as such, nor did the defendants treat it as anything more than a statement of a tentative plan, without binding force on the holders of the options until the requisite amount of money had been raised through subscriptions. It was designed to be an agreement between those who became subscribers for shares, and contemplated a temporary operating arrangement in the interests of the subscribers during the preparatory period preceding the actual incorporation of the proposed company. The real promoters were the coadventurers who devised the scheme and set Brumbly at work to raise enough money to carry their plan into execution.

Money paid to an agent of the promoters is as if paid to the promoters themselves, and, in so far as the promoters or their agents received money from subscribers for shares in the projected corporate enterprise which was afterwards abandoned, they are jointly and severally liable for the return of money paid on a consideration which has failed. The rule is thus expressed in section 162 of Alger on the Law of Promoters and the Promotion of Corporations:

"When a subscriber for shares in a projected corporation has paid money thereon in advance to the promoters, and the scheme proves abortive, he may recover back his money. This right rests on the failure of the consideration on which the money was paid. But the scheme is not to be deemed abortive until the formation of the corporation has been abandoned or has become impracticable, or a reasonable time for the formation has elapsed. It is reasonable, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, that the expense of exploiting the proposed undertaking should, in case it collapses, fall upon the original projectors, and not on those who advanced their money on the faith of the ability of the projectors to do that which they undertook to do."

See, also, 14 C. J. 276, § 322.

Without reciting the evidence in detail, it is sufficient to say that there is abundant evidence to the effect that at least Hulse and Abbott were promoters of the enterprise, and that Brumbly was selected as the agent of the promoters and was by them set to work to procure subscriptions and collect money from subscribers. Under such circumstances, the promoters became liable for the return of the money of the subscribers, whether it was actually transmitted by Brumbly to Abbott or not. Accordingly, so far as Hulse and Abbott are concerned, the court did not err in denying their motion for a nonsuit, or in making the findings to which they take exception.

[5] As to the defendant Little, the situation is not the same. Little had no interest in the Merkel or Petrolia options, and had had nothing to do with arranging the plan of operation or setting Brumbly at work. Before the plaintiff rested, and Little made his separate motion for nonsuit, the only evidence connecting him with the transaction was his signature to the preorganization agreement and the testimony of Brumbly that the "Big Four" were Little, Dye, Abbott, and Hulse. At the same time Brumbly went on to say that he had had no conversation with Little, but that Abbott had stated, without Little being present, that:

"If we get Lee Little in the corporation we can sell to every one in Calxico with his name in to help."

Brumbly said also that later Abbott had sold a unit to Little. After the court had denied the motions of all the defendants for a nonsuit, some further evidence was given concerning Little's connection with the scheme. He himself testified that at Brumbly's request he subscribed for a unit and gave Brumbly a check for $500, and Abbott testified that Little's name was in his book as one of those who had paid their subscriptions. Little testified also that he was asked if they could use his name as a director in a company that was being formed, and that he expressed a willingness, "if it would help the cause any," and that accordingly he signed the preorganization agreement and Brumbly signed it at the same time. Little stated that he had never attended any meetings and knew nothing further about what was being done. Abbott corroborated this, and said further that Little was not present at any time when they had any conversation regarding the matter of the Big Four Oil Association.

Such is the nature of the evidence upon which the liability of Little is predicated. And instead of showing Little to have been one of the promoters, it shows him to have been a subscriber, just as were plaintiff and his assignors; and Little's signature to the preorganization agreement put him in a position corresponding to that of plaintiff and his assignors by their signatures to the separate application blanks, each of which stated that it was to be attached to and become part of the original preorganization agreement. Whether or not the court was correct in its ruling on Little's motion for a nonsuit, we do not think the evidence as a whole justifies the finding that there was a contract between Little and either plaintiff or his assignor Stavron.

[6] In the specifications of error in the admission of evidence, appellants first direct attention to testimony given by Dr. Rankin, who was called out of order as a witness for his accommodation. At that time the trial judge could not well determine the relation of his testimony to the case at large. Dr. Rankin had been a subscriber under the original partnership scheme, and testified to certain statements then made to him by Brumbly. This evidence was not competent under the issues in this case, but it is without prejudice to the defendants.

[7] When defendant Abbott was on the stand he was asked whether he, Little, Dye, and Hulse had ever secured any lease of a company or association known as Silver Lake Oil Company, and he answered that he understood that there had been an option on the lease, but Hulse was "handling all that stuff." This was not one of the leases referred to in the preorganization agreement, but there is some evidence that if the corporation should be organized, Hulse intended to transfer that lease to the corporation. The ruling was not erroneous.

[8] Abbott was also asked whether he ever sought "to set aside any fact which might be stated" in a certain newspaper advertisement published by Brumbly, a portion of which was read to the witness. Abbott stated that he had never seen the advertisement, and the inquiry was not pursued further. The question was no doubt asked in an endeavor to elicit additional proof of Brumbly's agency, and there was no error in allowing the witness to answer the question.

[9, 10] The appellants contend, in addition, that they are entitled to a reversal because there is no judgment against their codefendant Dye. The omission to include Dye in the judgment is, however, not a grievance of which these appellants may complain. The liability of promoters is a joint and several liability, and the judgment is not invalidated because its sting is felt by some only instead of all.

The judgment is affirmed as to the defendants Hulse and Abbott, and reversed as to the defendant Little.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

83 Cal. App. 179

JONES v. BULLARD et al.

KENDRICK v. SAME.

(Civ. 5669.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 18, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1061(3)—Plaintiffs were not prejudiced because court granted nonsuit instead of adverse judgment on merits called for by evidence and findings.

Where evidence and findings thereon called for judgment on merits for one of defendants, plaintiffs were not injured because trial court entered judgment of dismissal in favor of such defendant.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 330(3).—Finding automobile repairer in driving automobile to loosen bearings was not owner's agent held sustained by evidence.

Evidence held to warrant finding that automobile repairer in driving automobile on streets to loosen bearings was not acting as agent or employee of owner, who left automobile with him for repairs, so as to make owner liable for his negligence resulting in collision of automobile with automobiles belonging to plaintiffs.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Actions by Leon B. Jones and by Charles H. Kendrick against E. D. Bullard and others, consolidated and tried together. From a judgment in favor of defendant Marie S. Bullard, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

George E. Sandford, of San Francisco, for appellants.

James M. Wallace, of San Francisco, for respondents E. D. Bullard and Marie S. Bullard.

C. A. Henning, of San Francisco, for respondent Carrigan.

STURTEVANT, J. Mrs. Marie S. Bullard was the owner of a Cadillac automobile. She allowed her son-in-law and daughter, James W. Towne and wife, to keep the custody of it and to have the use of it. In November, 1922, the car was in need of repairs. Mr. Towne so informed Mrs. Bullard, and she told him to deliver the car into the possession of Joseph Carrigan, one of the defendants. After the car had been delivered Mrs. Bullard called on Carrigan and was informed as to the nature of the defects and the repairs necessary, and made an agreement with him to make the repairs and fixed the amount of his compensation. The repairs to be made included, among other things, the tightening of the bearings. The labor was to be done by Carrigan in his garage at his convenience. When the car had been repaired the bearings were so stiff that the car would not respond to the starter. Therefore Carrigan blocked the car up and allowed the engine to run, and, carrying out the same purpose, he drove the car outside of the shop and drove it around to different places. While doing so, on one occasion, he stopped the car on a side hill in front of his own house, which is located on Pierce street between Vallejo and Green streets in San Francisco. At that place the hill is quite steep. After Carrigan stopped the car he got out and was entering his house when he saw the car start down the hill. The car continued to move on down the grade until it collided with the car of the plaintiff Kendrick, and that collision caused the Kendrick car to collide with the car of the plaintiff Jones. The owners of the latter cars severally sued Marie S. Bullard, her son E. D. Bullard, and Joseph Carrigan. The defendants answered, and the cases were consolidated and tried together before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings against Joseph Carrigan and in favor of all of the other parties. The plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment in favor of Marie S. Bullard.

As to the defendant E. D. Bullard the trial court by consent entered a motion of nonsuit.

[1] At the end of the case made by the plaintiffs, the defendant Marie S. Bullard made a motion for a nonsuit. The motion was ordered submitted. Thereafter the defendant Marie S. Bullard proceeded to introduce her evidence both oral and documentary. The defendant Joseph Carrigan did the same thing. When the evidence was all in an order was made submitting the actions on briefs. Neither before that order was made nor at any other time was the trial court called upon to rule on the motion for a nonsuit, except as will presently be noticed. After the trial court had received briefs and after it had reached its conclusions it signed a set of findings in which all of the material issues were found against the defendant Carrigan and in favor of each plaintiff and in favor of Marie S. Bullard. The findings contained conclusions of law, among others that Marie S. Bullard's motion for a nonsuit should be granted. A formal judgment was entered in each case which ordered: (1) A judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant Carrigan; (2) that the action be dismissed as to E. D. Bullard; and (3) that Marie S. Bullard's motion for a nonsuit should be granted and that as to her the action should be dismissed. If it be conceded that it was erroneous, in the instant case, to grant Marie S. Bullard's motion at the time it was granted, nevertheless the order was without prejudice. If we were to reverse the judgment because of the supposed error our ruling would be so made merely for the purpose of directing that the trial court make a formal order as at the end of the defendants' case overruling the motion for a nonsuit and further directing the trial court to enter a judgment on the merits in favor of Marie S. Bullard based on the findings of fact which the trial court had already made. That course of procedure, however, is not necessary, as will presently appear. The findings made by the trial court are sustained by the evidence and such findings called for a judgment on the merits in favor of Marie S. Bullard. It follows that the appellants were not injured because the trial court entered a judgment of dismissal instead of a judgment on the merits in favor of Marie S. Bullard.

[2] The appellants claim that the finding to the effect that Joseph Carrigan was not the agent or employee of Marie S. Bullard is not supported by the evidence. The claim may not be sustained. There was an abundance of evidence to support the finding. In making this claim appellants assert that when Carrigan took the car out onto the street for the purpose of loosening the bearings, that he did so pursuant to directions given him by James W. Towne. However, Mr. Towne distinctly testified that he gave no such directions. The appellants also assert that at the same time Carrigan had finished his work on the car, that the matter of loosening the bearings was "a task which was supposed to be done by Mr. Towne," and that all acts of Carrigan from the time he drove the car out of the garage were acts on his part in the capacity of a servant for the owners. These assertions are not supported by the record. In her deposition Marie S. Bullard testified that Carrigan was "to put it in good condition." James W. Towne repeatedly testified that in talking to Carrigan over the phone on each occasion he stated to Carrigan that he did not want the car "until it was in order." The uncontradicted evidence is that the car was not "in order" nor "in good condition" at any moment prior to the accident. In other words, Carrigan's assumed task was not completed.

What we have just said on the point last discussed applies also to the contention that the finding that Joseph Carrigan was not at the time of the accident engaged in the performance of any mission or business for Marie S. Bullard is not supported by the evidence.

In the next place the appellants assert that Marie S. Bullard ratified Carrigan's acts. The record shows that Mrs. Bullard's son visited the scene of the accident, ascertained certain facts, and held certain conversations. However, the evidence does not disclose that he had any authority from Marie S. Bullard to do any of those things, nor does it disclose that he did in any manner ratify the act of Carrigan.

The record discloses that there were irregularities in the proceedings below, but it also discloses that there was no miscarriage of justice.

The judgments are affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

82 Cal. App. 728

RUSSELL v. RILEY & PETERSON et al.
(Civ. 4625.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 5, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⚡1011(1)—Appellate court will not disturb trial court's findings, when there is conflict of evidence on material point and evidence to support findings.

An appellate court will not disturb trial court's findings, when there is substantial conflict of evidence on material points and evidence to support findings.

2. Reformation of instruments ⚡45(9)—Evidence held to sustain finding that there was no mutual mistake in drafting agreement to use land for quarry and maintenance of camp (Civ. Code, § 1625).

Where plaintiff claimed defendants agreed, after using her land for quarry purposes and for a camp, to leave land in same condition it was found, to remove all débris, blast foundation for rock crusher, replot roads, and fill cesspools, evidence held to sustain finding that there was no mutual mistake in drafting contract which omitted such matters, contract as written, under Civ. Code, § 1625, superseded oral negotiations therefor.

3. Compromise and settlement ⚡23(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff accepted defendants' check in full settlement of claims for damage to her land.

Where plaintiff permitted defendants to use her land for quarry purposes and for maintenance of a camp, evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff accepted defendants' check in full settlement for claim for defendants' alleged breach of agreement to remove débris, blast foundations for rock crusher, replot roads, and fill cesspools.

4. Compromise and settlement ⚡17(1)—In absence of evidence of fraud or mistake, plaintiff is bound by what she accepts, signs, and indorses.

Where plaintiff could read check given her, in absence of satisfactory evidence as to fraud or mistake, she was bound by what she accepted, signed, and indorsed.

5. Accord and satisfaction ⚡25(4)—Generally one relying on accord and satisfaction must plead and prove both.

Generally he who relies on an accord and satisfaction must plead and prove both.

6. Accord and satisfaction ⚡25(4)—If plaintiff proves payment under circumstance amounting to accord and satisfaction, defendant may rely thereon, though not pleading it in answer.

Rule that accord and satisfaction, to be available as a defense, must be pleaded and proved, is subject to exception that, if plaintiff, as part of case, proves payment and circumstances tending to show accord and satisfaction, defendant may rely on facts thus shown as accord and satisfaction, though not pleaded as such in answer.

7. Accord and satisfaction ⚡19—Compromise and settlement ⚡6(2)—Agreement to accept lesser sum in payment of amount in dispute, when carried out, extinguishes original obligation.

Where agreement to accept in full payment a sum less than the amount in dispute is executed by payment and acceptance of the lesser sum, the original obligation is extinguished.

8. Accord and satisfaction ⚡4—Compromise and settlement ⚡5(3)—Acceptance of check as agreement of accord and satisfaction of disputed debt need not be in writing (Civ. Code, § 1524).

Acceptance of a check as agreement of accord and satisfaction of disputed debt under Civ. Code, § 1524, is not required to be in writing.

9. Trial ⚡397(5)—Where findings of fact of accord and satisfaction control judgment for defendant, failure to find on issue of negligence in setting fires held not error.

Where evidence sustained finding of accord and satisfaction for any damage to plaintiff's land by defendants, failure of court to find as to alleged negligence of defendant in building fires on plaintiff's land and destroying fences held not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by Ida May Russell against Riley & Peterson, copartners, and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George H. Stone, of San Diego, for respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff's first amended complaint sets forth two causes of action; the first being for the reformation of an agreement between the parties and to recover damages for the alleged breach thereof, and the second being an action for damages by reason of alleged negligence of the defendants in building a fire on the land of plaintiff and permitting the same to get beyond their control and to burn down plaintiff's fence. The answer denies the material allegations in both causes of action, and pleads as a further defense thereto payment to the plaintiff on April 12, 1921, of the sum of $213.60 as "settlement in full for all claims to damage of property, real estate and personal, to date." Plaintiff appeals from the judgment rendered for defendants.

[1, 2] The evidence in this case is in sharp conflict. The rule is established by a host of decisions that an appellate court will not disturb findings of the trial court when there is a substantial conflict of evidence on material points and when there is some evidence to support the findings. 2 Cal. Jur. § 543, p. 921. It remains, therefore, to be de-terminated whether the record shows there was some evidence to support the findings. Appellant contends that the findings herein-after quoted were not sustained by the evidence:

"(4) That said agreement Exhibit A was the contract and contained the terms of agreement as contemplated by the parties prior to its execution.

"(5) That there was no specific agreement between the parties that defendants should put the land back in the same condition it was at the time they went onto it, nor that they would plow up all the roads they might make on or across plaintiff's land, or that they would refill any holes or excavations made, or that they would haul away the débris; that no agreements as to damages were made other than those contained in the contract, viz.: To in no way injure or damage the buildings or farm land or farm property of plaintiff.

"(6) That there was no mutual mistake of the parties in the terms of the agreement.

"(7) That such damage as plaintiff may have sustained to her farm land and buildings by reason of débris, excavations, roads, or fire, was settled in full by agreement between plaintiff and defendants and paid in full by defendants.

"(8) That, pursuant to such agreement of settlement, defendants on April 12, 1921, gave plaintiff voucher check for $213.60, which recited therein that it was in 'settlement in full for all claims to damage of property, real and personal, to date.'

"(9) That said check was received by plaintiff as, in settlement in full of her damage as therein set forth, was knowingly indorsed by her under the printed words: 'Payee's indorsement hereon constitutes receipt in full of within account. Indorsement must be made in ink and only by person having authority.'

"(10) That the fire which injured plaintiff's fence was not built on plaintiff's land by defendants, and was not negligently or carelessly permitted by defendants to get away or from under their control, and did not injure or damage plaintiff's buildings or farm property."

Appellant, in support of her attack on findings 4, 5, and 6, which relate to the terms of the agreement, quotes liberally from the testimony of the plaintiff. Plaintiff testified that she orally agreed with defendant Riley for the use of her land for quarry purposes and for the maintenance of a camp thereon, for a consideration of $200; that defendant agreed to leave her land in the same condition he found it, with the exception of the quarries, remove all débris, blast foundations of rock crusher, replot the roads, and fill up the cesspools; that defendant Riley thereupon prepared a written agreement, and the plaintiff signed the agreement without reading it, upon the assurances made by defendant Riley that the agreement contained all the terms and conditions agreed upon. Plaintiff admitted that she noticed that her daughter's name had been placed in the instrument, instead of plaintiff's name, and that she saw defendant Riley write in her name, the amount of the consideration, and the description of the land, before she signed the agreement; that the first time plaintiff realized that certain conditions had been left out of the agreement was when she read the same in the presence of her daughter some three or four weeks after it had been signed, and that in the presence of her daughter she spoke to defendant Riley regarding the fact that the agreement did not contain all the terms and conditions as to plowing the roads, removing débris, etc., and that defendant Riley stated to her:

"Oh, that doesn't amount to anything. I am an honorable man; I always do all those things. Well, that don't amount to anything; that will be all right."

This statement was corroborated by the testimony of plaintiff's daughter. The written contract contained no provision as to removing débris, blasting foundations, filling cesspools, or replotting roads; but it did contain the provision wherein the defendants agreed "to maintain all roads which they use on her said property for taking out said material, and agree to keep the property about their camp in a clean, sanitary condition and that the said rock and sand removed and the removal thereof, shall in no way injure or damage the buildings or farm land of said first party."

On the other hand, defendant Riley testified that he held a conversation with the plaintiff as to the use of her land for quarry and camp purposes for a consideration of $200 and walling up a well; that plaintiff told him to get everything in writing; that he prepared a contract and returned with it a week later; that plaintiff read it aloud and discussed it before she signed it; and that plaintiff objected only as to the consideration, and said nothing about cesspools, nothing about damages for roads, and nothing about damages to her property, except from blasting. The defendant denied the subsequent conversation, as testified by plaintiff. Defendant denied that he told plaintiff he would plow up the roads and put the land back in the same condition, even though that had been left out of the agreement.

The witness McLean testified that the agreement was signed in his presence, after plaintiff looked at it and discussed it with defendant Riley. He could not say whether plaintiff read the contract. It thus appearing that the testimony is in direct conflict as to the substance of the conversation preceding the execution of the contract and as to the circumstances surrounding the signing of the agreement, if plaintiff read the contract, the court would be justified in concluding there was no mistake of fact as to its contents, and plaintiff is bound thereby. The substance of the testimony of the defendant Riley is that the written contract contained the whole and actual agreement of the parties. Applying the rule heretofore stated, we find there is some evidence to support the finding, and that therefore there is no ground for reformation of the agreement. In Burt v. Los Angeles Olive Growers Association, 175 Cal. 668, at page 675, 166 P. 993, 996, it is said:

"Where so solemn an instrument as a written contract is sought to be reformed for mistake, 'evidence of the mistake must be clear and convincing, and not loose, equivocal, or contradictory, leaving the mistake open to doubt.' Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 675. Every presumption in equity favors the view that such a contract as this, thus deliberately entered into, expresses the true intent and meaning of the parties. The burden of showing the contrary is upon the party seeking to avoid its plain terms. Under this evidence it cannot be successfully contended that the mistake was mutual or that it was induced by plaintiff by the suppression of any term in the contract, or even that it was known to plaintiff, or suspected by plaintiff, that defendant did not understand its terms. Nothing in the writings of defendant to plaintiff after the execution of the contract so establishes, and plaintiff's own testimony is to the contrary. This testimony is aided by the legal duty imposed upon a party to read such a contract before executing it. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 50 Cal. 558; Metropolitan Loan Ass'n v. Esche, 75 Cal. 513, 17 P. 675; Pope v. Armsby Co., 111 Cal. 159, 43 P. 589."

The written contract superseded all oral negotiations which preceded the execution of the contract. Civ. Code, § 1625.

[3] Appellant insists that the defendants failed to establish payment by a preponderance of the evidence. The findings of the court on the subject of payment appear in paragraphs 7, 8, and 9 of the findings hereinbefore quoted. Plaintiff and the witness McNett testified that at the time of the settlement plaintiff presented to defendant Riley a statement of her claims, which was examined by said defendant, and that Riley agreed, in addition to paying plaintiff $213.60, to plow up all roads, fill all cesspools and excavations, furnish 17 fence posts, and haul away all débris. Defendant Riley testified that at the time of settlement the plaintiff presented an itemized statement of her claims for various articles used or destroyed, fixing up roads, removing sand and stone at the quarry; that he told her the contract did not require him to fix the roads; that he was not responsible for the damage to the fence and would not furnish the fence posts or build the fence; that the cesspools were all filled up at the time of the settlement; that nothing was said about removing concrete foundations; that he did not set any fire or order any one to set a fire on the land; that plaintiff afterward ordered defendant to remove the rock at the quarry; that he told her the state highway would take the rock and the sand at the crusher, and he would allow her for it whatever the state would permit; that he told plaintiff he absolutely refused to pay for the roads, and that he would go to court before he would do that; that he was willing to pay for all he should pay for, and would not pay for anything he did not owe; that plaintiff said she would rather settle the matter out of court, that she felt she had been injured and was willing to adjust the matter; that he gave her his personal check for $213.60 as payment in full. Subsequently, on April 12, 1921, the firm check of Riley & Peterson for $213.60 was substituted for Riley's personal check and delivered to plaintiff by defendants' bookkeeper, Vallin, who testified that he filled out a portion of the check in plaintiff's presence, with her pen and ink, and told her what he was writing. The witness testified as follows:

"Q. What part of it was written out in her presence with her pen and ink? Read the words. A. 'April 12, 21, Mrs. I. M. Russell. $213.60,' in figures; then written out, and on the reverse side, 'April 12, settlement in full for all claims to damage for property, real estate and personal, to date,' with the amount in dollars and cents."

The check also contained the words, "being in full payment of within account." The plaintiff testified that after Vallin had given her the check, he asked her to return it, saying, "I want to make a memorandum of what that is for;" that she handed him the check, and that he wrote something on it and handed it back to her; that she did not read it. On April 22, 1921, plaintiff cashed the above check, indorsed in the following words appearing on the reverse side of the check: "The payee's indorsement hereon constitutes receipt in full of within account." Plaintiff received the check on April 12, 1921, but made no demand for additional settlement until January, 1922. Plaintiff was able to read.

[4] An examination of the record discloses that the trial court was justified in concluding that the plaintiff was capable of looking after her own affairs, and having received the check in this unusual form, having kept it for eleven days, and then having indorsed the check as a receipt in full, that the plaintiff could not possibly have overlooked the fact that the check was given as payment in full. Plaintiff must read, since she could, and, in the absence of satisfactory evidence as to fraud or mistake, plaintiff is bound by what she accepts, signs and indorses. Burt v. Los Angeles Olive Growers Ass'n, supra; Smith v. Occidental, etc., Steamship Co., 99 Cal. 462, 470, 34 P. 84. We believe payment was shown by the defendants by a preponderance of the evidence. We find no error in the finding of the trial court that payment in full was made by defendants.

[5, 6] Appellant argues that the position advanced by defendants as a matter of law is accord and satisfaction, and not payment in full; that accord and satisfaction was not pleaded, and therefore could not be proved. The general rule is that he who relies upon an accord and satisfaction must plead and prove both. Berger v. Lane, 190 Cal. 443, 213 P. 45. In the instant case the answer alleged as follows:

"As a further and separate defense the defendants allege that on April 12, 1921, they paid to the plaintiff the sum of $213.60 which sum was paid to plaintiff and received by her and receipted for by her in 'settlement in full for all claims to damage of property real estate and personal to date'; that no work of any kind was done upon said property by defendants subsequent to said date, no rock crushed, no roads made, no excavations dug."

In B. & W. Engineering Co. v. Beam, 23 Cal. App. 164, 137 P. 624, where in the amended answer it was specifically pleaded that plaintiff's assignor had accepted a certain sum of money in full settlement and extinction of the obligation sued upon, the court said:

"Upon principle, the defense of accord and satisfaction at the very best requires nothing more to be pleaded than the payment and acceptance, upon a mutual agreement express or implied, of a certain sum of money or other thing of value in full settlement and satisfaction of a pre-existing and previously disputed obligation."

Conceding, without deciding, that the pleading in the present case does not fully meet these requirements, yet the rule requiring an accord and satisfaction to be specifically pleaded before it can be availed of as a defense is subject to the exception that if the plaintiff, as a part of his case, proves the payment and the circumstances under which it was made, tending to show an accord and satisfaction, the defendant may rely upon the facts thus shown as an accord and satisfaction, though not pleaded as such in the answer. B. & W. Engineering Co. v. Beam, supra. In Looby v. Village of West Troy, 24 Hun, 78, it is said:

"The objection taken by the plaintiff that the settlement of accord and satisfaction had not been pleaded cannot prevail, because the plaintiff himself chose to prove the fact of payment in aid of his own case. This opened the subject. Indeed the plaintiff, under defendant's objection, also proved the conversation between himself and the president before the warrant had been given in evidence. He has no right to object that all the facts connected with the payment were shown."

[7, 8] In the case at bar plaintiff chose to prove the fact of payment in aid of her own case; also the conversation between herself and defendant Riley before the check had been given in evidence. Accordingly, plaintiff has no right to object that all of the facts connected with the payment were shown. The check accepted by the plaintiff contains the words, "being in full payment of within account," and "settlement in full for all claims to damage for property real estate and personal to date," and, above plaintiff's indorsement, the words, "payee's indorsement hereon constitutes receipt in full of within account." If the transaction be considered as one of accord and satisfaction, then the rule is well settled that, where an agreement to accept in full payment a sum less than the amount in dispute is shown to have been fully executed by the payment and acceptance of the lesser sum, the original obligation is thereby extinguished. B. & W. Engineering Co. v. Beam, supra. It is insisted that the acceptance of the check for $213.60 could not constitute satisfaction unless expressly so accepted in writing. In support of this contention we are cited to section 1524 of the Civil Code, which reads:

"Part performance of an obligation, either before or after a breach thereof, when expressly accepted by the creditor in writing, in satisfaction, or rendered in pursuance of an agreement in writing for that purpose, though without any new consideration, extinguishes the obligation."

This question was raised in B. & W. Engineering Co. v. Beam, supra, and was decided adversely to appellant's contention. The court said:

"* * * It is certain that section 1524 of the Civil Code has reference only to agreements of release and satisfaction made in cases where the obligation is neither doubtful nor disputed, and has no application to an executed agreement of accord and satisfaction founded upon the settlement and extinction of a disputed debt. Simmons v. Hamilton, 56 Cal. 493; Rued v. Cooper, 119 Cal. 463, 51 P. 704; Flaningham v. Hogue, 59 Ill. App. 315; Reynolds v. Silvers, 17 N. J. Law, 275; Farmers' Bank, etc., v. Blair, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 641."

In Berger v. Lane, 190 Cal. 443, page 447, 213 P. 45, 47, the court says:

"The general rule, which is but an amplification of our Code sections (Civ. Code, §§ 1521, 1523) defining satisfaction and accord, is 'that, where the amount due is in dispute and a check less than that claimed is sent to the creditor with a statement that it is sent in full satisfaction of the claim, and the tender is accompanied by such acts or declarations as amount to a condition that if the check is accepted at all it is accepted in full satisfaction of the disputed claim, and the creditor so understands, its acceptance by the creditor constitutes an accord and satisfaction even though the creditor states at the time that the amount tendered is not accepted in full satisfaction.' Lapp-Gifford Co. v. Muscoy Water Co., 166 Cal. 25, 134 P. 989; B. & W. Engineering Co. v. Beam, 23 Cal. App. 164, 137 P. 624."

The fact that plaintiff made further demands from defendants eight months after she had accepted the money as payment in full does not make the transaction a part performance of the obligation. Plaintiff was bound by her settlement in full in accepting the check. The decisions cited by appellant to the effect that the giving of a check for an antecedent debt is not absolute payment in the absence of express agreement are beside the point. Here the check was not only accepted, but also cashed. In this case the question does not arise as to whether the check itself, as distinguished from the cash represented by the check is to be taken as absolute payment.

[9] Appellant states that no findings were made by the court upon the second cause of action, and that therefore plaintiff is entitled to a reversal. Appellant says that the second cause of action did not directly arise out of the contract, and that plaintiff seeks to recover in the second cause of action for damages sustained by reason of the unlawful and negligent way in which the defendants permitted a fire to burn and destroy her fence and trees. However, the second cause of action contains no allegation as to damage to trees. It does incorporate paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the first cause of action, in which the contract and the mutual mistake of the parties are alleged, and then alleges:

"That the above-named defendants after making and entering said agreement, herein alleged and set forth and referred to, and in pursuance thereof, entered upon the land of said plaintiffs and while said defendants were upon said land of said plaintiff, pursuant to said contract and agreement, and without any authority, permission, or consent of said plaintiff, did build a fire upon the land of said plaintiff, and negligently and carelessly permitted said fire to get away and from under their control, and said fire did burn down, consume, and destroy, a quarter of a mile of fence, to the plaintiff's damage in the sum of $300."

While it does not specifically appear from the findings that plaintiff's fence was not destroyed, yet it does appear that the fire was not built on plaintiff's land by defendants and was not negligently permitted to get away from under their control, and did not injure plaintiff's buildings or farm property. The court found:

"That such damage as plaintiff may have sustained to her farm land and buildings by reason of debris, excavations, roads, or fire, was settled in full by agreement between plaintiff and defendants and paid in full by defendants."

The contract between the parties provided that the removal of rock and sand "shall in no way injure or damage the buildings or farm land of said first party." Where the findings of fact necessarily control the judgment, failure to find on other issues is not error. The facts found show that plaintiff is not entitled to judgment, and render any finding on the other issues immaterial and unnecessary. Fogg v. Perris Irrigation Co.

154 Cal. 209, 219, 97 P. 316; Sharp v. Pitman, 166 Cal. 501, 505, 137 P. 234.

There being no prejudicial error, it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 62
PEOPLE v. POWELL. (Cr. 1469.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 12, 1927.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1186(4)—Failure to impose sentence within time prescribed held error of procedure not resulting in miscarriage of justice (Pen. Code, $\S\S$ 1191, 1202; Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½).

Failure to impose sentence within time prescribed by Pen. Code $\S\S$ 1191, 1202, held error of procedure not resulting in miscarriage of justice, in prosecution for robbery, hence not ground for reversal under Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 829(7)—Refusal of instruction that proof of alibi sufficient to create reasonable doubt would require acquittal held not error, where instructions required proof of crime beyond reasonable doubt.

In robbery prosecution refusal to instruct that defendant should be acquitted if evidence of alibi was sufficient to create reasonable doubt held not error, where instructions fully covered subject of presumption of innocence and requirement to prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 777½—Court need not direct jury's attention to particular line of testimony.

Trial court need not call attention of jury to any particular line of testimony, whether offered by prosecution or defense.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 814(16)—Instruction that facts admitted should be deemed proved against party making admission held not abstract in robbery prosecution, where date of defendant's leaving hotel was stipulated.

In robbery prosecution, instruction that admission of fact or facts material to case should be deemed proof as against party making admission held not erroneous as abstract, where defendant stipulated date at which he had checked out of hotel.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 811(6)—Instruction that neither prosecution nor defense need call all persons present as witnesses held not prejudicial as discriminating against defendant.

Instruction that neither prosecution nor defense was required to call all persons present or knowing of matters on trial as witnesses nor to produce all objects or documents referred to held not prejudicial as throwing suspicion on defendant's testimony.

6. Robbery $\S$ 24(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction of robbery.

In prosecution for robbery of bank in which two of bank's employees identified defendant as person committing robbery, evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Charles J. Powell was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Benjamin W. Shipman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, for the People.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. The defendant and appellant was accused by an information filed by the district attorney of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, of the crime of robbery, a felony. He was tried by a jury and found guilty as charged. From the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial the defendant appeals. The jury, on November 15, 1926, found the defendant guilty of the crime as charged; sentence was not pronounced until December 6, 1926, following the hearing on the motion for a new trial, and after the time limit for the imposition of sentence prescribed by sections 1191 and 1202 of the Penal Code of the state of California.

The defendant in his opening brief stresses three points as grounds for the reversal of the judgment. First, error of the trial court in refusing motion for a new trial and in pronouncing sentence after the lapse of the statutory time; second, refusal of the court to give certain instructions proposed by him; and, third, the giving by the court of confusing and erroneous instructions. In his final brief, and for the first time, the defendant raised the point that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence and quotes rather copiously from the testimony in support of this contention.

[1] Taken in the order of their assignment the defendant in support of his first contention cites many cases decided by the Supreme and appellate courts before the Supreme Court had finally passed upon the applicability of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution to cases of this character. The law is now definitely settled that a failure to impose sentence within the time prescribed by sections 1191 and 1202 of the Penal Code is an error of procedure fully amenable to the provisions of the above quoted section of the Constitution.

In the case of People v. Zuvela, 191 Cal. 223, at page 224, 215 P. 907, the Supreme Court of this state said in referring to this matter:

"The failure to impose the sentence within the time specified by section 1191 of the Penal Code is clearly an 'error' of 'procedure.' * * * We see no good reason for excepting this particular error from the general provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. After an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, we are satisfied that the error complained of in the instant case did not result in a miscarriage of justice. It will not, therefore, suffice to warrant a reversal of the judgment for the purpose of having a new trial," —quoting the language of the District Court of Appeal in the case of People v. Barr, 55 Cal. App. 321, 203 P. 827, which is as follows:

"Indeed, if we may concede that its language is broad enough to apply to proceedings taken after verdict, to extend it to cover the error herein as contended for by respondent would be to nullify completely the effect of said sections 1191 and 1202. We must attribute no such purpose to the people in adopting the amendment."

Counsel for appellant calls attention to the fact that the Supreme Court in the Zuvela Case did not take up and consider the language in the Barr Case, and had it been considered counsel suggests that a different conclusion may have been reached. With this suggestion we cannot agree. The question of the application of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution to the matter of sentences imposed after the time prescribed by these sections was the very matter before the court, and the very matter upon which they were called upon to decide, and the conclusion is inevitable that the court intended to decide exactly what it did decide. This view is confirmed in the recent case of People v. Haines, 64 Cal. App. 628, at page 630, 222 P. 183, where the court quotes the Zuvela Case as the settled law on this subject, and with which conclusion we are in entire accord. In the case of People v. Haines, supra, at page 630, 222 P. 184, where sentence was pronounced three days later than the maximum time allowed by section 1191 of the Penal Code the court said:

"It is urged that because of this delay the defendant was entitled to a new trial and that the judgment should be reversed. This contention is met by the recent case of People v. Zuvela, 191 Cal. 223, 215 P. 907, wherein it was held that the failure to impose sentence within the time specified by section 1191 of the Penal Code is clearly an error of procedure within the meaning of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution and that a new trial would not be granted because of such error unless an examination of the entire record disclosed that the error complained of had resulted in a miscarriage of justice. As pointed out by the respondent, the error complained of occurred after the verdict of the jury and could not have changed the verdict in any way."

In the instant case, in view of the law as above stated, there is nothing to indicate or evidence in the slightest degree any suggestion of a miscarriage of justice.

[2, 3] The second point raised by appellant is the refusal of the court to give the following instruction:

"You are instructed that where evidence has been offered by the defendant for the proposed purpose of proving an alibi—that is to say, that the defendant was in another place at the time of the alleged crime, and was far distant from the scene of the crime at the time, and therefore, could not have participated in it—if, from the whole case and a consideration of all the testimony, the evidence in his behalf produced belief sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant was present at the time and place of the alleged crime, he must be acquitted.”

In view of the instructions that were given by the trial court, we are of the opinion that the above instruction was entirely unnecessary. In the case of People v. Perrin, 67 Cal. App. 612, at page 617, 227 P. 924, 926, the court said:

“The appellant requested the trial court to give certain instructions regarding the evidence which the appellant had introduced in his attempt to prove an alibi. The trial court did not give any one of those instructions and the appellant assigns its refusal as error. However, the trial court did instruct the jury as follows: ‘The court instructs the jury that if you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that in the county of Fresno, at or about the time mentioned in the information, the defendant knowingly and designedly. * * *’ The trial court also carefully and fully instructed the jury to the effect that the prosecution must prove the allegations of the information beyond a reasonable doubt. The nature of the defense interposed was to the effect that the defendant did not commit the alleged offense on the date charged at Fresno, because on that date he was at Tijuana, Mexico. It is patent that if the jury found that he did commit the act on the date alleged at Fresno, that he was not on that date at Tijuana, and the converse is equally true. * * * We find no prejudicial error in the record.”

In the instant case the trial court's instructions to the jury were as follows:

“A defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved. And in case of a reasonable doubt, whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal. * * * The burden of proof is upon the prosecutor. All the presumptions of law, independent of evidence, are in favor of innocence, and every person is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty. If, upon such proof, there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal. For it is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is more likely to be true, than the contrary; but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it.” “The court instructs the jury that if the evidence in this case is equally susceptible of two interpretations, one interpretation pointing to the innocence of the defendant and the other interpretation pointing to the guilt of the defendant, then it is your sworn duty under the law to give the defendant the benefit of the interpretation which points to his innocence and acquit him.”

[4] As will be observed, the instructions in this case cover the ground more thoroughly than in the Perrin Case, supra, and we see no good reason why a trial court should call attention to any particular line of testimony whether offered by the prosecution or the defense. Objection is made to the following instruction given by the court to the jury, “If either party has during the trial admitted any fact or facts material to the matters involved in this case, such admission is to be deemed by you as proven against the party making such admission,” upon the ground that it was not applicable to any fact or circumstance connected with the trial of the case, it being the contention of the appellant that there were no agreed or stipulated facts in the record. The objection is without merit and is in direct conflict with the record.

The question as to the date when the defendant Powell checked out of the La Tosca Hotel was involved, and the record was as follows:

“Mr. Hahn: If you will show me what it is I will stipulate with you.

“Mr. Isaac: Just to show that Powell checked out on the 25th of March.

“Mr. Hahn: That is true; we will stipulate to that; he left on the morning of the 25th of March, checked out of the hotel. I will stipulate with you that that is correct.”

[5] Counsel objects to the following instruction given by the court:

“The court instructs the jury that neither the prosecution nor the defense is required to call as its own witnesses all persons who are shown to be present, or who may appear to have some knowledge of the matters here on trial, nor is the prosecution or the defense required to produce as exhibits all objects or documents which have been referred to or the existence of which may have been suggested by the testimony in the case.”

Counsel insists that this instruction in connection with the one set out immediately preceding this one is confusing, and that the effect of the instruction charges the jury to view with prejudice, suspicion and disbelief the testimony of the defendant. We do not believe the instructions are fairly susceptible of the criticism directed against them. They are not discriminating, and the possible effect is magnified beyond any reasonable construction to be placed on the language. Such an instruction as the last quoted may well be omitted unless the circumstances of the case require its submission, but, as given in this case, we do not believe it influenced the jury in the slightest degree.

[6] And finally the appellant in his closing brief for the first time contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. The evidence shows that on the 24th day of March, 1926, appellant Powell entered the Thirty-Third and Main street branch of the Pacific-Southwest Trust & Savings Bank at about 3 o'clock, just as the bank manager, H. M. Ostrom, was closing the bank for the afternoon. At the point of a revolver the appellant covered Ostrom and two other employees of the bank and required them to turn over to him money in the sum of about $2,400. Two of the employees of the bank, Ostrom, the manager, and Miss Taylor, a stenographer, testified that they had ample opportunity to observe the defendant and his characteristics and that they and each of them positively identified the defendant Powell as the man who robbed the bank. In view of this positive identification there is no merit in the point that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, and in fact a careful reading of the entire record would warrant us in saying that the jury would not have been justified in arriving at any other conclusion.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

83 Cal. App. 122

GABEL et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 3312.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 16, 1927.

1. Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 361—Express or implied contract of employment must exist to create liability under Workmen's Compensation Act (Civ. Code, §§ 1965, 2009).

To create liability for injuries compensable under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), as being within section 1965 defining employment and section 2009 defining a servant, a contract of employment, express or implied, must exist.

2. Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 361—Contract of employment within Workmen's Compensation Act may provide compensation for services in any valuable property or services (Civ. Code, §§ 1965, 2009).

Contract of employment, to create liability for injuries compensable under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), as being within Civ. Code, § 1965, defining employment, and section 2009, defining a servant, may provide compensation for the services by means of any property of value or by return of services.

3. Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 361—Agreement to exchange farm labor for indefinite term may be employment contract within Workmen's Compensation Act (Civ. Code, §§ 1965, 2009).

Contract of employment to create liability under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), as being within Civ. Code, §§ 1965 and 2009, defining employment and servant may be general agreement between neighbors to exchange farm labor of any and all character for an indefinite term.

4. Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 405(2)—Industrial Accident Commission's findings that farmer assisting neighbor to fight fire was "employee" held sustained by evidence.

Finding of Industrial Accident Commission, that farmer who while assisting in fighting grass fire was instructed by his neighbor with whom he habitually exchanged work to "take the truck and go down there and save my buildings" was employee while acting pursuant to these directions, held sustained by evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employee.]

5. Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 361—Farmer helping neighbor to fight fire would not necessarily be acting solely to protect own property and not as neighbor's employee (Workmen's Compensation Act; Civ. Code, §§ 1965, 2009).

Farmer in fighting mile-wide grass fire at neighbor's buildings under his directions would not necessarily be acting from sole motive of protecting his own adjoining farm a mile distant so as to preclude recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), as an employee of his neighbor at the time, with whom he had a general agreement for exchange of labor, within Civ. Code, §§ 1965, 2009, defining employment and servant.

6. Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 375(1)—Fighting fire held within neighbors' contract for exchange of farm labor making injury compensable.

Finding of Industrial Accident Commission that services in fighting grass fire were within general contract between neighboring farmers formerly partners, to exchange any and all kinds of service necessary for operation, maintenance, or preservation of their respective farms, so that personal injuries thereby sustained were compensable, held proper.

7. Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 361—Friendship would not preclude recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act, though circumstance would be considered in determining whether employment contract existed.

Fact that neighboring farmers were friends would not preclude recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), for injuries sustained by one while fighting fire on the other's premises under his directions, where they had general contract for exchange of services, though fact would be considered in determining whether contract of employment existed.

Certiorari to review order of Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by W. G. Bach, claimant, to recover for personal injuries, opposed by William Gabel, employer, to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission granting an award. The employer and the State Compensation Insurance Fund apply for certiorari. Award affirmed.

Frank J. Creede, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is a writ of review to annul an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission against petitioner Gabel for injuries sustained by respondent Bach while fighting a grass fire on petitioner's premises under his direction and alleged employment.

The petitioner Gabel and the respondent Bach were farmers, friends, and neighbors, who owned and operated adjoining stock ranches in the vicinity of Oakdale, Cal. For 15 years they were partners in a farming enterprise. Some 3 or 4 years prior to the accident they dissolved partnership, but retained a specific agreement, continuing on down through the years to the time of the accident, to exchange farm labor, serving each other in this capacity upon request and whenever required. There was no monetary compensation for services, but it was mutually agreed that they would equalize their service as nearly as possible, the assistance of one balancing the services of the other. The nature of this exchange work included everything which arose in the operation of their respective farms, including the repairing of buildings and fences, caring for the stock, and general farm work. Each of these neighbors relied almost solely upon the other for farm assistance and rarely ever employed any other help. Both of them by mutual agreement carried compensation insurance, largely for the protection of each other. Mr. Bach testified:

"I took out the insurance policy to protect Mr. Gabel, and any other hired help I had. These policies were taken out to protect one another; that is the biggest work we have; we do most of the work for each other."

Mr. Gabel virtually corroborated this statement. Besides owning adjoining farms, the petitioner and respondent were next-door neighbors in Oakdale. On July 5, 1926, while petitioner and respondent were at their respective homes in Oakdale, a fire alarm was heard, and upon inquiry at the fire department it was learned that a dangerous grass fire was burning a few miles distant, near Knight's Ferry and about a mile northerly from their ranches. The rural fire truck immediately started for the fire. Petitioner and respondent rode out together in another car. They found the fire burning fiercely and spreading rapidly in a southerly direction toward their ranches. Both ranches were in the course of the fire, but respondent's ranch was situated about a mile beyond petitioner's farm. In spite of the efforts of the fire fighters, consisting of half a dozen men with the aid of the rural fire engine, the fire jumped the highway and spread until it covered a front of approximately a mile in extent. Becoming alarmed for the safety of his buildings, the petitioner Gabel went to respondent Bach and said: "Go on the truck, and go over to my place and try to save my buildings and feed there." Bach left the position where he was then engaged in fighting the fire, and went over to the Gabel ranch in the neighborhood of the house and was engaged in trying to control the flames by the use of a hose. The fire apparatus became disabled; the pump stopped working and the water ceased flowing. The other men ran away, but Bach was surrounded by dense smoke and flames, and in attempting to make his escape was compelled to pass through the burning grass and flames. His face, hands, neck, head and feet were badly burned. He was taken to a hospital for treatment and was completely incapacitated for several weeks.

Upon application the Industrial Accident Commission made an award of $4 per day wages during the period of disability, and found that Bach sustained his injuries in the course of his employment for Gabel as a ranch hand. This finding and award is challenged by petitioners on the theory that the relation of master and servant did not exist between the parties with respect to the services which were being performed at the particular time the injuries were sustained, and, on the contrary, assert that respondent was burned while he was engaged in the performance of voluntary services.

The only question presented upon this writ is whether the facts above recited constituted an employment of respondent Bach so as to make petitioners liable under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended).

[1-3] In order to create a liability, the facts must bring the relationship of the parties within the provisions of section 1965 and 2009 of the Civil Code. A contract of employment, either express or implied, must exist. Services voluntarily and gratuitously performed create no liability. 27 Cal. Jur. 278, § 19. But a pecuniary consideration for services is not necessary. One may compensate for services by means of any property of value, or even by a return of services pursuant to agreement. Tucker v. Cooper, 172 Cal. 663, 158 P. 181; Rector v. Stumpff, 11 I. A. C. 155; Smith v. Jones, 102 Conn. 471, 129 A. 50, 43 A. L. R. 952. In the case of Tucker v. Cooper there was an agreement between farmers, who were cousins, to exchange service in baling hay for the respective parties for a particular season. In Rector v. Stumpff, above cited, two draymen agreed to assist each other whenever it was necessary in the moving of pianos. In Smith v. Jones, supra, there was a continuing mutual agreement between adjoining dairy farmers to assist each other in cutting ensilage and filling their silos, which were used to store food for stock. In these cases it was held that the agreement to exchange services was a sufficient consideration to bind the owner of the property as an employer, while the one performing the service was considered, at that particular time, the employee. Such agreements may be made to exchange labor of a similar character for a definite, specific employment, such as filling the silos referred to, or they may contemplate an exchange of work for a particular season, as in the hay-baling case above cited. But there appears no good reason to distinguish such limited employment from a more general contract to exchange farm labor of any and all character, even though the term of employment may extend indefinitely, provided the evidence satisfactorily establishes the intent of the parties to create such a contract.

[4, 5] In the instant case the Industrial Accident Commission has found that the contract was made, and that the respondent Bach was injured in the course of his employment. "Where the findings are supported by substantial testimony, even though there may be a conflict of evidence, the findings will be upheld." 27 Cal. Jur. 578, § 218; White v. Industrial Accident Com., 192 Cal. 16, 218 P. 414. There was, however, no substantial conflict of evidence in this case. Both parties agree as to the terms of their contract to exchange labor, as to their purpose in taking out insurance to protect each other, and as to the circumstances of the particular employment which resulted in the injuries sustained. As it was said in the case of Tucker v. Cooper, above cited, the facts warrant the conclusion that Gabel not only definitely directed the respondent Bach what to do, but that both parties assumed that this particular service was pursuant to the specific directions and under the control of petitioner Gabel. "Take the truck and go down there and save my buildings," he instructed the respondent. These specific directions refute the theory of a voluntary service. County of Monterey v. Industrial Accident Commission, 199 Cal. 221, 248 P. 912, 47 A. L. R. 359. It cannot be fairly said that Bach volunteered this service merely as a friend and neighbor. Nor can it be said that he did this specific thing with the sole selfish motive of protecting his own property. His property was situated a mile beyond the Gabel property; the fire was burning along a line more than a mile in extent, and, as the evidence proves, Bach could have worked for the protection of his own property alone, with equal beneficial results anywhere along the line of fire. It is apparent that he left his general work of fighting the fire, at the urgent request of Gabel, and went over to protect his buildings. Both parties testify that they assumed these services were to be performed pursuant to their general contract of an exchange of labor.

[6] A more serious question may be whether this special emergency service came within the terms of their agreement to exchange work about their respective farms. Of course, fighting fire is not what would be termed farm work. But it must be recalled that these neighbors had been friends and partners, but were now operating their respective stock ranches independently, although they still retained a mutual interest in the welfare of each other. Under such circumstances they agreed to exchange work about their farms whenever it was required. The terms of the contract were not limited to "farm work." It was testified that the agreement included "any general work; any kind of work that comes up." Among other classes of work specified was "remodeling and repairing buildings, fences, corrals, grading, dehorning, and delivering cattle at the railway station, and marketing of stock."

It seems evident that the contract of employment was quite general and included almost any service for the operation, maintenance, or preservation of their respective farms and the improvements which they contained. If a regular hired man, or handy man about a farm, should be injured in fighting a fire which started in his employer's dwelling house or barn upon the premises where he was engaged to work, it seems entirely reasonable to hold that such injuries would be sustained in the course of his employment.

[7] Nor should the friendship of the parties preclude a recovery. Relationship and friendship are circumstances to be considered in determining whether a contract of employment in fact existed. The relationship of husband and wife, or parent and minor child, might raise a presumption against an alleged contract of employment, but it would be a violent, harsh, and unnatural construction to even presume that the friendship of parties would be in conflict with the theory of an employment. In truth, friendship is often an inducing motive for employment. 27 Cal. Jur. 281, § 20.

We are of the opinion that there is substantial evidence to support the finding that the respondent was injured in the course of his employment.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

83 Cal. App. 100

BARRINGTON v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al. (Civ. 5198.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 13, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨699(2)—Error in giving or refusing isolated instructions cannot be reviewed where instructions are not incorporated in record.

Alleged record, predicated on giving or refusing to give to jury certain isolated instructions, is not reviewable on appeal where instructions are not incorporated in record.

2. Evidence ⇨368(8)—Failure to require motorman to produce written report of accident made to employer, materiality of which was not shown, held not error, in action for injuries (Code Civ. Proc. § 1000).

In action against electric railway and motorman for injuries, failure of court to require motorman to produce written report of accident made to company held not error where materiality of report did not appear; right to production not being shown, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1000.

3. Evidence ⇨368(8)—Court may not order production of records by one party for opponent's use without substantial showing of their materiality.

Court has no power to order production of books or papers by one party to be used as evidence for his opponent, without substantial showing that records sought contain evidence material to cause of action or defense.

4. Street railroads ⇨68—Motorman held not required to state whether persons whose names he took at accident were subpoenaed and appeared as witnesses (Pen. Code, § 367c).

In action against motorman and electric railroad for injuries, refusal to require motorman to answer question as to whether all persons whose names he took were subpoenaed and appeared as witnesses held not error; Pen. Code, § 367c, not being applicable to interurban cars.

5. Street railroads ⇨68—Interurban car held not "other motor vehicle" within statute requiring driver to give names of passengers on occurrence of collision (Pen. Code, § 367c).

Interurban electric car held not "other motor vehicle," within terms of Pen. Code, § 367c, requiring drivers of automobiles, motorcycles, motor vehicles, or any vehicle to give to occupants of vehicle struck names of passengers at time of collision.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Other.]

6. Trial ⇨33—Statute requiring driver of motor vehicle to give occupants' names on occurrence of collision, if applicable to electric trains, does not authorize court to require furnishing of names (Pen. Code, § 367c).

Pen. Code, § 367c, requiring driver of motor vehicle to give names of occupants on occurrence of collision, if applicable to electric trains, does not authorize court to require motorman to furnish names of such parties; statute being penal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by P. R. Barrington against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bertrand J. Wellman and John C. Miles, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Karr and E. E. Morris, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment on the verdict of the jury in favor of respondents in an action for personal injuries suffered by appellant in a collision between an automobile driven by appellant and an interurban car of respondent corporation.

Appellant specifies six assignments of error, which he urges as grounds for a reversal of the judgment. The first four have to do with the giving and refusing of certain instructions. The fifth assignment of error is that the court erred in not requiring the defendant Sharpe, when upon the witness stand, to produce his written report of the accident made at the time to the railway company; and the sixth assignment of error is that the court erred in not requiring the defendant Sharpe to answer the question whether all of the persons whose names he took at the time were subpoenaed and did appear as witnesses at the trial.

The accident occurred in the city of Los Angeles, at the point where Manchester avenue crosses the tracks of the respondent's railway line running between Los Angeles and Long Beach, the west track being used for local cars between Los Angeles and Watts going southerly, and the east track for such cars going northerly. The two tracks between the east and west tracks are used by the company's fast interurban cars between Los Angeles and Long Beach. The accident happened on the south-bound interurban track, at about 10:40 o'clock on the morning of February 28, 1922. The appellant was going east at the time and the interurban car was going south. There is an automatic flagman or wigwag at the southwest corner of Manchester avenue and the right of way of respondent railway company. Appellant could not get a view of the track from the direction the interurban car approached until he was within a few feet of the west track on account of the building located on the northwest corner of the intersection. The automatic flagman or wigwag was working and giving warning of the car's approach before and at the time the appellant attempted to cross. At the time the collision the interurban car was traveling 18 to 20 miles an hour.

Appellant drove his automobile upon the car tracks, and when on the track of the interurban his motor stopped and his automobile was stalled on the car track. Up to this point there is no dispute as to the facts.

Respondent F. R. Sharpe, the motorman on the interurban, testified that he first saw the automobile driven by appellant when his car was about 150 or 175 feet from the crossing; that the automobile was approaching the crossing; that appellant drove his automobile slowly—3 or 4 miles an hour; that he was rolling very slowly; that he sounded his crossing signal—two long and two short blasts of the whistle; that as the car approached the crossing appellant started his automobile forward again at a fairly good clip, and when the car was about 30 or 40 feet from the crossing appellant stopped his automobile right in front of the car; that he applied his emergency brakes and reversed his motors, which was all he could do; that after the collision he stopped his car, and when at a standstill the rear end was on the property line on the edge of the crossing. According to the testimony of Sharpe, the collision was unavoidable. There is a conflict in the evidence as to how far the car was from the crossing when appellant's automobile stalled on the car track, appellant testifying that he could not see the interurban car when he drove upon the tracks, and the witness Mrs. Mattice stating that when appellant's automobile stalled the electric car was up at the next station away north, the other witnesses varying in their estimate of the distance the interurban car was away when appellant's automobile stopped on the track, placing it all the way from 40 to 135 feet.

[1] Appellant does not raise the point that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict but claims that the question of contributory negligence should not have been submitted to the jury, and that the court erred in not giving the instruction on this question proposed by him, as well as the giving and refusing of other instructions. In discussing the giving and the refusing of the instructions complained of, it is sufficient to say that the instructions of the court are not included in the transcript; neither are the instructions requested and refused. The only instructions called to the attention of the court are those the giving of which, and the refusal to give, are made the subject of the claim of error and set forth in appellant's brief. Alleged error predicated upon giving or refusing to give to the jury certain isolated instructions cannot be reviewed on appeal where the instructions given are not incorporated in the record. Foster v. Young, 172 Cal. 317, 156 P. 476; Goldman et al. v. Dahlberg (Cal. App.) 249 P. 536; Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 P. 589; Churchill v. More, 4 Cal. App. 219, 88 P. 290; O'Brien v. New Method Co-operative Laundry Co., 38 Cal. App. 532, 176 P. 879.

[2, 3] There is no merit in the contention that the court erred in not requiring defendant Sharpe, when on the witness stand, to produce his written report of the accident made at the time to the company. Appellant bases his right to have the report produced on section 1000 of the Code of Civil Procedure and authorities which hold that an injured plaintiff who has brought a suit for damages for his injuries is required to submit himself to a physical examination, and that the court may order a defendant to allow plaintiff's expert to examine machinery alleged to have caused damage. We cannot see any similarity of analogy between requiring an injured plaintiff who has brought a suit for compensation for his injury to submit himself to an examination or ordering a defendant to allow an inspection of machinery and requiring a defendant to produce private papers relating to an accident. Appellant fails to show by the record that he brought himself within the provision of the section cited, but if he has, the penalty for failure to produce such instrument is provided in the section. The penalty is that the court may exclude the paper from being given in evidence by the defendant, or, if wanted as evidence by the plaintiff, may direct the jury to presume it to be such as he alleges it to be. While the section referred to is not to be construed to prevent a party from compelling another to produce books, papers, or documents when he is examined as a witness, the evidence here is that the witness had turned the report over to the company and it was not in his possession or under his control. Defendant did not offer the report in evidence, nor so far as the record discloses ask the court to instruct the jury to be as he alleged—in fact, plaintiff did not make any claim as to what the report contained. It is not claimed that it conflicted with the testimony given by Sharpe or any other witness. The court has no power to order the production of books or papers by one party to be used as evidence for the other party without an affirmative and substantial showing, by affidavit, or otherwise, that they contain evidence material to the cause of action or defense of the party requiring them. Ex parte Clarke, 126 Cal. 235, 58 P. 546, 46 L. R. A. 835, 77 Am. St. Rep. 176. There was no such showing made here.

[4, 5] In support of appellant's sixth assignment, that the court erred in not requiring defendant Sharpe to answer whether all of the persons whose names he took at the time were subpoenaed and did appear as witnesses at the trial, he cites us to section 367c of the Penal Code as authority in support of his contention. We are not in accord with the construction placed upon the section by appellant, that the interurban car of respondent company is such a vehicle as comes within the mandate of the section requiring the driver or person having or assuming authority over such driver of an automobile, motorcycle, or other motor vehicle, or other vehicle, to give to the occupants of the vehicle or person struck the names of the passengers, not exceeding five, in such automobile, motorcycle, or other motor vehicle, or other vehicle at the time of such striking or collision.

[6] This section is penal, and, even if applicable to electric trains, only makes the motorman or person having authority over him liable to prosecution for failure to comply with its provisions. It nowhere authorizes the court to require a party to furnish these names.

This disposes of the points urged by appellant, and from what has been said it follows that there is no merit in the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, A. P. J.; CASHIN, J.

83 Cal. App. 236

PEOPLE v. BROWN. (Cr. 1361.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 20, 1927.

1. Criminal law ☞662(8)—Defendant's attorney held authorized to waive formal showing of endeavor to locate absent witness and stipulate that his testimony at preliminary examination might be read (Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3).

Defendant, whose attorney stipulated that prosecuting witness' testimony at preliminary examination might be read without formal showing of endeavor to locate witness and bring him into court, waived such showing, as against contentions that attorney had no right to do so, and that defendant's fundamental right, under Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3, to be confronted with witnesses against her, may not be waived.

2. Criminal law ☞1144(13)—Appellate court must assume from verdict of guilty that jury found supporting testimony not inherently improbable, unreasonable, and unbelievable.

Appellate court must assume from verdict of guilty that jury found that testimony in support thereof was not inherently improbable, unreasonable, and unbelievable.

3. Larceny ☞65—Evidence held to support conviction of grand larceny.

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction of grand larceny.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Hazel Brown was convicted of grand larceny, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Myron Harris, L. A. Sullivan, and H. L. Richardson, all of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. The defendant was convicted of grand larceny; she made a motion for a new trial; the motion was denied; and she has appealed from the order denying the motion and from the judgment of conviction.

According to the testimony of Raymond Smith, the complaining witness, he was, on the evening of June 12, A. D. 1926, in the employ of the police department of the city of Oakland as an operative; that at about 9 o'clock on that evening he met the appellant, Hazel Brown, at the corner of Third and Lewis streets in the city of Oakland; that she smiled at him as he passed, and shortly thereafter he met her for the second time, whereupon she spoke to him; that they walked together from that point to an old building near the corner of Third and Center streets in the city of Oakland, where, according to the story of Smith, the appellant asked him if he had $2 for the purpose of intercourse; that he gave her the $2, but had no intention or desire of accomplishing such an act, but was merely performing his duty as a police operative; that he and the appellant stood there in or near the deserted building for several minutes; that during that time the appellant had one of her hands upon his left hip and the other upon his person; that, after a few minutes had elapsed, he suggested that they get a bottle of wine and go to a room, which was approved by appellant, but, as they started to walk away, they were accosted by police officers and separated; the police officers having taken the complaining witness Smith to that vicinity a short time before in their automobile. Both Smith and appellant were taken to police headquarters by the officers, appellant riding on the back seat of the car, Smith riding on the front seat with one of the officers. The appellant was searched, and the search revealed that she had on her person the $2 in silver which Smith had given her, and which was marked money given to Smith by the officers. One of the officers testified that on the back cushion of the automobile in which appellant had ridden to the police station he found $17 in currency. Smith, the complaining witness, testified that earlier in the evening of that same day he had changed a $20 bill, and had put $17 in currency in a leather wallet, and placed the same in his left hip pocket, and that, so far as he knew, the wallet had remained there all the evening. He did not miss any money until his attention was called by the officer to the fact that he (the officer) had found the $17 in currency in the automobile. There is also some testimony to the effect that there was a piece of newspaper in the wallet after the appellant and Smith had been taken to the police station, and that the wallet was at that time ripped or torn. Smith testified that the paper was not in there earlier in the evening before he met appellant, and that the wallet was not at that time ripped or torn. Smith also testified that he did not see or feel the appellant remove anything from his pocket; that he knew his wallet was there all the time because he could feel its presence; that, if appellant removed anything from his pocket or from the wallet, he did not know when or how she did so. But Smith, the complaining witness, did not testify that the $17 in currency was in the wallet in his pocket at the time he was with appellant at the building.

[1] The first point made on the appeal is that the trial court erred in allowing the district attorney to read to the jury the testimony given by Raymond Smith in the police court on the preliminary examination. After the jury had been selected, and after the deputy district attorney had made his opening statement, as the first testimony introduced, Mr. Chamberlain arose in court, and stated that the witness Smith could not be located, and that the defense would stipulate that his testimony taken at the preliminary examination might be read. Mr. Richardson, the attorney for the defendant, replied that the statement was correct. The trial court then inquired if it was stipulated that the deposition might be read and considered as evidence the same as if Mr. Smith was present, and the defendant's attorney answered in the affirmative. The direct examination of the witness was read by the district attorney and the cross-examination was read by the defendant's attorney. The defendant now contends that Mr. Richardson, as an attorney, did not have the right in behalf of his client to waive the duty resting on the prosecution to make a formal showing of its endeavor to locate and bring into court the prosecuting witness. In this behalf the appellant contends that she was entitled "to be confronted with the witnesses against her" (Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3), and that a fundamental right may not be waived. In making this contention the appellant cites no authority that directly sustains her contention. So far as we know, the exact point has not been decided. However, the case of People v. Clark, 151 Cal. 200, 90 P. 549, is very nearly in point. In that case the deposition of a witness taken on the preliminary examination was offered in evidence. The defendant made the objection that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent. Later he urged other objections. After stating the facts and the contention made by the appellant, on page 205 (90 P. 551), the court said: "Under these circumstances, the defendant must be held to have waived this objection." There are numerous cases involving other statutory rights, in which it was held that the defendant waived the right by failing to object in the trial court. People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 P. 1093; People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 251, 252, 63 P. 351. We think the point is not well taken.

[2, 3] The second point made by the appellant is to the effect that the evidence was not sufficient to support the verdict. In this connection she claims that the testimony "is inherently improbable, unreasonable, and unbelievable." That argument, no doubt, was presented to the jury. By reason of the verdict, we must assume that the jury found to the contrary. Under the particular facts of this case we think the verdict should not be disturbed. People v. Troutman, 187 Cal. 313, 315, 201 P. 928.

We find no error in the record. The order and judgment are affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

83 Cal. App. 307

SHERMAN v. KIRKPATRICK. (Civ. 4342.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 23, 1927.

1. Sales ⇨195—If engine was not installed as agreed, buyer on receiving seller's letter claiming workmanlike installation could treat contract as breached.

If engine which buyer ordered was not installed as agreed, buyer, on receiving seller's letter written after inspection stating that engine had been installed in workmanlike manner and requesting payment, was justified in considering contract as breached.

2. Sales ⇨182(1)—Issue whether seller breached contract in failing to make proper installation of oil engine held for jury.

In action to recover purchase price of oil engine, issue whether seller had breached contract by failing to install engine in workmanlike manner held for jury, where buyer promptly elected to consider contract as violated.

3. Sales ⇨195—Seller's breach of contract before purchase price became due released buyer, though covenant to pay may have been independent.

Though payment required to be made for installation of engine may have been constituted independent covenant, buyer was under no obligation to make payment, where seller actually breached contract prior to date purchase price became due.

4. Appeal and error ⇨999(1)—Appellate court need not investigate facts to determine correctness of verdict.

Appellate court is under no duty to make investigation of facts in case to determine correctness of jury's verdict.

5. Sales ⇨183—Installation was necessary before recovery of price for oil engine, where seller's agent agreed price should cover installation.

Seller of oil engine was bound to install plant before price could be recovered, where agent in making sale figured price on basis of plant's installation.

6. Trial 255(1)—Court is not required of its own motion to give special instructions not requested.

Court need not of its own motion give special instructions, in absence of request therefor by counsel.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by W. H. A. Sherman against C. A. Kirkpatrick. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Stutsman & Stutsman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

S. N. Bachtell, of Los Angeles, and Paul B. Bachtell and N. B. Bachtell, both of Lancaster, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by the plaintiff as assignee of Fairbanks, Morse & Co. to recover the purchase price of an oil engine with standard appliances and equipment sold to the defendant. The company will be hereafter designated as plaintiff in this opinion. Under the terms of the written contract between the parties the seller was to install the engine in a workmanlike manner on the defendant's ranch to be there used for the purpose of pumping water for irrigation purposes. The purchaser was to pay therefor 30 days after the date of the contract the sum of $1,611. The engine was to be set up by an engineer-erector to be supplied by the plaintiff. The adequacy of the installation was questioned by the defendant and this controversy resulted. There is no dispute as between the parties but that the plaintiff did furnish and deliver on the premises of the defendant the exact equipment called for by the written contract, but it is the contention of the defendant and respondent that the engine was not installed in an efficient and workmanlike manner, and he refused to pay the purchase price therefor, basing his refusal on that ground. Judgment went for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff relies upon: (1) Errors of law committed as he alleges by the trial court in refusing to give certain instructions to the jury and in giving others; (2) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. His contention is that the contract entered into between the parties was unequivocal and free from ambiguity; that there is a covenant of defendant as buyer to pay the purchase price, which covenant is direct, positive, and unequivocal, and which required the buyer to pay at a fixed and definite time; there is also a covenant of plaintiff as seller to install the machinery in question; the contract is silent as to the time within which such installation was to be made or completed. The plaintiff's contention is that the covenant to pay is and was an independent promise of the buyer, performance of which could be enforced at all events if the purchase price was not paid when due.

Many cases are cited to sustain this position relative to dependent and independent covenants, which, conceding their correctness as abstract principles of law, have in our opinion no application to the facts of this case as made out by the plaintiff himself.

After the engine had been installed by the plaintiff's erector a discussion arose concerning a missing pump coupling and installation work ceased. It may be fairly deduced from the record that it was the understanding at this time between all of the parties connected with the job that further work was necessary to complete the installation. However that may be, nothing further was done, and defendant testified that he called up Forbes, the general manager of plaintiff, and told him that he absolutely would not accept the plant in the condition in which it was in and asked Forbes to come to Lancaster, where the equipment was to have been installed, and stated to him that if he did not agree with him he would pay the expenses up and back. Further negotiations and discussion was had in which the defendant, the corporation erector, engineer, and credit manager participated, with the result that on the 26th day of April, 1922, the due date of the payment of the purchase price, the corporation addressed a letter to the defendant, the substantial and material part of which is as follows:

"Referring to the contract between us dated March 25, 1922, also to the conversation had yesterday between yourself, our shop foreman, Mr. Reuland, our engine erector, Mr. Case, and the writer. We have reported the result of our interview with you to Mr. F. F. Forbes, our Pacific Coast manager, and after a very careful review of the situation and the circumstances surrounding the same, we cannot but feel that we have thoroughly complied with our obligations; that the engine is properly installed and in a workmanlike manner, and that your fears concerning damage to the engine are not well founded. * * * Our Mr. Forbes has read this letter and it has his approval. We respectfully ask that check for $1,611, which was due yesterday, according to the terms of sale, be mailed to us."

To which letter the defendant immediately and on the same date addressed a letter to the plaintiff as follows:

"In accord with our phone conversation of the 25th inst., you sent your representatives to inspect the installation of the engine you installed under the contract between us. Your workman who installed the engine was also present at the time of the inspection; while they made a thorough inspection, nevertheless it was very evident that the inspection was for the purpose of justifying and approving the installation as it had been made. It is so evident that the installation of the engine was unworkmanlike, inefficient and would result in the destruction of the engine or at least great damage to it, under operation, and that it has already been damaged to a greater or less extent in the short time it has been operated, that it is unnecessary for an expert to discover that fact. I told your representative that I would not accept your engine in its present condition, under its present installation; and I now give you formal notice that the installation is not according to the contract and that I shall not accept the engine, and it is at your disposal, and I ask you to remove the same from my premises at your own cost and expense. * * * I will ask you to make no delay in removing the engine from the premises, as I must install another engine in order to take care of my crops."

[1-4] The plaintiff's letter discloses the fact that so far as it was concerned negotiations were at an end and the installation complete. There are no reservations, and there is no suggestion of further performance of any character. The terms of the contract so far as it was concerned had been fully complied with. It is apparent from the context of this letter that this conclusion was reached after an inspection and report made by the experts of the plaintiff. If any further service was contemplated or the corporation harbored any thought that further performance was contingent upon any act to be performed by the defendant, such facts and mental reservations should have been clearly disclosed in this ultimatum. If the installation had not in fact been completed in a workmanlike manner when the communication was dispatched by the plaintiff, upon its receipt the defendant was justified in declaring that the contract had been breached by the corporation and he was fully warranted in abiding the status of the situation as it then existed and as made by the corporation's declaration. The defendant having promptly elected to declare the contract breached, it was the duty of the trial court to submit this crucial issue to the jury under proper instructions, and it was the duty of the jury to determine the issue in accordance with the evidence submitted for their consideration. The verdict of the jury was adverse to the plaintiff and in effect determined that the contract had been breached by the corporation prior to the due date of the payment of the purchase price, as provided in the contract. This necessarily eliminates from the discussion the question of dependent and independent covenants. No one, we assume, would question the proposition of law that if the plaintiff had actually breached the contract prior to the due date of the purchase price, even though that may have been an independent covenant, defendant would be under no obligation to make that payment. It is not incumbent upon this court to make any investigation of the facts in the case to determine the correctness of the judgment of the jury.

Expert evidence was submitted by both sides to the controversy. On conflicting testimony and evidence the jury resolved the facts in favor of the defendant and determined that the installation had not been made in a workmanlike manner, which finding on the entire record we have no disposition to question.

[5] There is some contention on the part of the plaintiff that under the terms of the contract it was not incumbent on plaintiff to install the plant. The language of the contract itself on this aspect of the case we deem sufficient to require this. Nevertheless, if there be any doubt about it the following citation from the record will make the matter entirely clear. Mr. McLaren, the man who sold the engine to the defendant, testified in substance:

"Mr. Kirkpatrick told me he wanted a price on the engine installed. That was absolutely the basis upon which I figured him the price.

"Q. He told you at the time, didn't he, Mr. McLaren, that he did not know anything about erecting engines himself, and he thought you people did, and he wanted you to do it? A. Absolutely."

[6] In our judgment the issues were squarely and correctly submitted to the jury by the trial court. Indeed the court at the suggestion of the plaintiff submitted this instruction to the jury:

"The contract entered into between defendant and plaintiff's assignor only required Fairbanks, Morse & Co. to furnish, deliver, and install the engine and equipment in question in a good and workmanlike manner. * * * If you find, however, that the installation of the engine could not have been completed until the pump was permanently placed and that the pump had not been permanently placed up to the time this action was commenced, because of acts or conduct of defendant, not attributable to plaintiff's fault, then your verdict must be for plaintiff if you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the engine and equipment were installed in a good and workmanlike manner."

This instruction was given in response to certain evidence adduced at the trial which in our opinion under timely objection should have and probably would have been excluded by the court as not being within the issues. No other special instructions were asked by the plaintiff, and the law does not require the court of its own motion to perform this duty for counsel. There are suggestions that certain instructions given by the court should have been amended by inserting: "Unless you find from the evidence that the defendant by his conduct prevented plaintiff from changing the foundation so that the engine could be made to line up with the pump." No instruction was submitted to or offered by the plaintiff containing this or similar language, and even had such a request been made it no doubt would have been refused by the court, and properly so.

We find no error in the record, and accordingly the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

83 Cal. App. 105

BARRIOS v. FOLEY. (Civ. 5790.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 13, 1927.

1. Brokers ⇨8(3)—Agent held shown not to have required authority in writing to sign contract for sale of goods for more than $200 (Civ. Code, §§ 1624, 2309).

That one signing, as agent of buyer, contract for sale of goods at price exceeding $200 had no authority in writing to do so, as required by Civ. Code, §§ 1624, 2309, held shown by evidence.

2. Brokers ⇨19—It is broker's duty to act in highest good faith towards principal.

Relation between broker and his principal is of a confidential nature and imposes on broker duty of acting in highest good faith towards his principal.

3. Brokers ⇨8(1), 84(1)—To recover commissions, broker must show he was duly authorized and performed services according to contract.

For broker to recover commissions on sale made by him, he must show that he was duly authorized to perform the services for which he seeks commissions, and that he performed them according to the terms of his contract of employment.

4. Brokers ⇨52—Broker has no right to commissions till he brings minds of parties to agreement for sale and the terms thereof.

Broker's right to commissions does not accrue till he has brought the minds of buyer and seller to an agreement for a sale and the price and terms on which it is to be made.

5. Brokers ⇨53—Broker must be procuring source of transaction.

Broker, to be entitled to commissions, must be procuring source of transaction.

6. Brokers ⇨48—To be entitled to commissions, broker must prove finding of buyer able and willing and obtaining of binding contract or bringing parties together.

To be adjudged entitled to commissions, broker must prove that he found a buyer ready, willing, and able to buy the property on the terms fixed, and procured from him a valid contract binding him to purchase the property on those terms, or that he brought the seller and buyer together so that seller might have secured such contract if he desired.

7. Brokers ⇨86(5)—That buyer procured by broker was not able, ready, or willing held shown by evidence.

Finding in broker's action for commission for negotiating sale that his customer was not able, ready, or willing to buy held supported by the evidence.

8. Brokers ⇨64(2)—Contract held conditional because of clause, "Buyers' inspection final."

A contract for sale because of clause, "Buyers' inspection final," is conditional, as respects broker's right to commission.

9. Brokers ⇨64(2)—Broker is not entitled to contract conditional on buyer's approval, not given.

Where contract of sale is conditional on buyer's approval on inspection, and samples thereafter offered are not accepted, broker is not entitled to commissions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by Alberto Barrios against E. Y. Foley. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Goldman & Altman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harris & Hayhurst and Rue C. Gibson, all of Fresno, for respondent.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff seeks a judgment against defendant for $3,450 for services as a merchandise broker, alleged to have been rendered in negotiating a sale of 600,000 pounds of dried grapes for the sum of $138,000 at an agreed compensation of 2½ per cent. of the purchase price. Defendant denied the indebtedness and set up as a special defense that the buyer, one T. Miwa Company, was at the time of the alleged sale financially irresponsible and without means, property or credit to pay for the goods agreed to be sold.

The court found that about November 15, 1920, defendant employed plaintiff as a broker to sell 10 carloads of dried black Zinfandel grapes, containing 600,000 pounds, at 23 cents per pound, and agreed to pay plaintiff as commissions 2½ per cent. of the selling price when plaintiff secured a valid and enforceable contract or a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the grapes on defendant's terms; that on November 17, 1920, plaintiff notified defendant he had sold the grapes and mailed defendant a paper termed a confirmation, executed by one R. H. Newman, as agent for the T. Miwa Company. That defendant executed a written contract and sent it to plaintiff, who presented it to R. H. Newman, who signed the name of T. Miwa Company thereto, by R. H. Newman. That R. H. Newman had no authority from T. Miwa Company to sign the confirmation or contract, and that no contract binding on T. Miwa Company was ever procured by plaintiff. That the T. Miwa Company was not at any time mentioned in the complaint ready, able, or willing to buy the grapes, and that defendant at all times was ready, able, and willing to furnish the grapes in accordance with his contract. Judgment was awarded defendant, and this appeal is taken from the judgment on a bill of exceptions.

Plaintiff contends for a reversal of the judgment on three grounds: First, that the finding that R. H. Newman had no authority from T. Miwa Company to execute the confirmation and contract is not supported by the evidence; second, that the finding that T. Miwa Company was not able, willing, and ready to buy the grapes is not supported by the evidence; and, third, that the finding that plaintiff was to receive his brokerage when he had received a valid and enforceable contract is not strictly in accordance with the contract of employment.

The dealings between the parties began with the sending of a postal card some time prior to November 15, 1920, by plaintiff to defendant seeking a purchase of 10 cars of dried grapes. Plaintiff was a resident of San Francisco, Cal., and defendant resided at Fresno, Cal. Several telegrams and letters passed between the parties, which finally resulted on November 20, 1920, in the execution of the contract sued upon, which, like the confirmation, was signed, T. Miwa Company, by R. H. Newman. At the request of plaintiff, after defendant had signed and mailed the contract, there was inserted in the same with the consent of defendant these words: "1920 crop stemmed and cleaned. Buyers' inspection final." The contract was signed "T. Miwa Company, by R. H. Newman."

Defendant objected to the introduction of the confirmation and contract in evidence unless a showing was made that R. H. Newman had some written authority authorizing him to make a binding contract on T. Miwa Company, and the court allowed the introduction of the instruments conditionally on its being shown that Newman had the authority to act for the T. Miwa Company.

[1] That Newman had no authority in writing to execute the confirmation or contract is clearly shown by the evidence. He himself says:

"I was employed by Mr. Wolfsohn to work for T. Miwa Company. He gave me authority to buy and sell merchandise for the company. My authority was verbal."

The Mr. Wolfsohn referred to was a partner in the T. Miwa Company. He testified that Newman was not an employee of the firm, that he worked on a commission basis for it, was to receive certain profits from the sale of these goods, had no written agreement in that regard, that his arrangement was entirely verbal, that at the time the contract was signed he was busily engaged in other duties, and that on Newman saying to him, "I bought 10 cars of grapes, Mr. Wolfsohn," he, Wolfsohn, said, "Very well, I give you full power to sign T. Miwa Company's name, by yourself, to this transaction."

Under section 1624 of the Civil Code, a contract such as the one in question, being for a sale of goods at a price exceeding $200, is not valid unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or by his agent, and, under the provisions of section 2309 of the Civil Code, the authority to sign such instrument as agent can only be given by an instrument in writing.

[2-6] The relation between a broker and his principal is of a confidential nature and imposes upon the broker the duty of acting in the highest good faith towards his principal. In order to recover commissions on a sale made by him, he must show that he was duly authorized to perform the services for which he seeks compensation, and that he performed the services according to the terms of his contract of employment. His right to commissions does not accrue until he has brought the minds of the buyer and seller to an agreement for a sale, and the price and terms on which it is to be made. He must be the procuring source of the transaction, and to be adjudged such he must prove that he found a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy the property on the terms fixed and procured from that person a valid contract binding him to purchase the property on those terms, or that he brought the vendor and purchaser together so that the vendor might have secured such contract if he desired. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 P. 1105; Sill v. Ceschi, 167 Cal. 698, 140 P. 949; Jauman v. McCusick, 166 Cal. 517, 137 P. 254; Carrington v. Smithers, 26 Cal. App. 460, 147 P. 225; Mattingly v. Penne, 105 Cal. 514, 39 P. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87; Douglas v. Spangenberg, 23 Cal. App. 294, 137 P. 1103; Cone v. Keil, 18 Cal. App. 675, 124 P. 548.

[7] The finding that the T. Miwa Company was not at any time able, ready, or willing to buy the grapes in question finds ample support in the evidence offered. Both Newman and Wolfsohn testified that the partnership did business with the American National Bank of San Francisco. The bank balance sheet of this bank shows that for the month of November, 1920, the most T. Miwa Company had on deposit during that month was $267.25. Wolfsohn testified that T. Miwa Company had no property, and that he had made no arrangements with any bank or other institution for credit relative to the purchase price of the grapes. While he stated that he had letters of credit from clients in the Orient which he could have used, he could not give any of the particulars concerning the letters of credit.

[8] The contention of respondent that the contract with T. Miwa Company is conditional because of its containing the clause, "Buyers' inspection final," must be sustained. This clause was inserted in the contract at the special instance and request of the plaintiff made to defendant on November 20, 1920.

No contract was completed concerning the sale of these grapes until November 20, 1920, and under the contract as completed no grapes would be considered as finally sold until T. Miwa Company had inspected and approved the same. That samples of grapes were thereafter offered by defendant to the T. Miwa Company and not accepted by it, is clearly shown by the evidence.

[9] That a broker is not entitled to recover a commission merely for negotiating a sale of goods where the memorandum of sale upon which the broker relies for recovery especially provides that the goods must meet the buyers' approval, and that contracts of this sort are executory in character, making the commissions depend upon their execution, is clearly decided in the late decisions of Ball v. California Conserving Co., 189 Cal. 326, 207 P. 1011; McAdoo v. Moore, 70 Cal. App. 408, 233 P. 391.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

83 Cal. App. 183

RANDOLPH v. WISE et al. (Civ. 4840.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 18, 1927.

1. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 299(2)—Before tendering deed, vendor, unable to give perfect title, cannot bring ejectment against vendee refusing to pay purchase price.

Plaintiff agreed to sell defendant land. Defendant took possession. Plaintiff had only one-half interest in the land. Plaintiff refused defendant's offer of one-half price. Defendant refused to pay full price or surrender possession. Held, that plaintiff could not bring ejectment without tendering deed conveying such title as she had.

2. Evidence $\S$ 413—Parol evidence that, when plaintiff contracted to convey land, defendant knew she had only partial title held inadmissible.

In ejectment action, parol evidence to effect that, when plaintiff executed written contract providing for conveyance of complete title to land, defendant knew that plaintiff had only partial title held inadmissible, all prior understandings being merged in the written contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Ejectment by Mary Randolph against Frederick W. Wise and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John C. Miles and Donald R. Peck, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Melville P. Frasier, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Action in ejectment. Plaintiff appeals from an order granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

It appears from the evidence that plaintiff was the owner of an interest in certain real property held in the possession of the defendant. The property was conveyed by deed to the plaintiff, a married woman. On June 17, 1921, plaintiff entered into a written agreement wherein plaintiff agreed to sell lot 6, block 7, of C. S. Miles' addition to Huntington Park, for the sum of $950, and to execute and deliver a good and sufficient deed of grant, bargain, and sale therefor. Plaintiff's husband having disappeared, she was unable to secure his signature to the deed and could not deliver title on which the title company would issue a certificate. On February 23, 1922, plaintiff was granted a decree of divorce, the court holding that the property involved was community property, and awarding the plaintiff an undivided one-half interest therein. Defendant paid no part of the purchase price of $950, but remained in possession of the property, having made some improvements thereon after plaintiff had deposited with defendant the sum of $300 as a guaranty that she would give clear title. Some time during the fall of 1922, defendant tendered to plaintiff's attorney one-half of the contract price of the property for a deed to a one-half interest in the property. This offer was not accepted. Plaintiff served upon defendant a written notice demanding possession of the premises and offering to allow defendant any offsets or credits to which he might be entitled to the extent of $300, any additional claims to be submitted to her attorney. Plaintiff at no time offered to comply with the terms of the agreement by tendering a deed for the premises to be conveyed. Defendant neither rescinded the contract nor offered to carry out the terms of the contract by offering to pay plaintiff the sum of $950 and accepting such title to the property as she was able to give. Instead, he offered her the sum of $475 for her half interest in the property and refused to give up possession of the property to the plaintiff.

Appellant's first contention is that the court erred in holding that the evidence introduced by plaintiff failed to make out a cause of action in ejectment, citing cases which hold as follows: A purchaser of land in possession thereof under a contract of sale, by the terms of which the vendor is to execute and deliver to the vendee a good and sufficient grant, bargain, and sale deed to the property, together with an acceptable certificate of title showing the property to be free and clear of all incumbrances, cannot, upon the failure to convey a good and perfect title, retain both the land and the purchase money until a perfect title shall be offered to him. He must pay the purchase price according to the contract and receive such title as the vendor is able to give, if he chooses to retain the possession of the land. Luther v. Clark, 58 Cal. App. 59, 207 P. 1033; Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 526, 91 P. 498; Haile v. Smith, 128 Cal. 415, 60 P. 1032; Worley v. Nethercott, 91 Cal. 512, 27 P. 767, 25 Am. St. Rep. 209. If a perfect title was to be conveyed and the vendor is unable to give such a title, the vendee has appropriate remedies, but he cannot keep both the property and the purchase money. Garvey v. Lashells, supra. Under such a contract, if the vendee surrenders possession he may recover the value of his improvements, after deducting the fair rental value of the land. Haile v. Smith, supra; Worley v. Nethercott, supra; Garvey v. Lashells, supra. If the vendee fails and refuses to pay the purchase price, or to rescind the contract and restore the possession to the vendor, he is liable to an action in ejectment by the vendor. Garvey v. Lashells, supra; Haile v. Smith, supra. The foregoing rules are well settled, but under the proof plaintiff is not entitled to the benefit of these rules. In all of the above cases, the plaintiff had tendered a deed before suit brought.

[1] In the instant case, if the plaintiff had tendered a deed to defendant before suing in ejectment, the action would lie. Not having first offered to comply with the contract by offering to perform the same, plaintiff did not put the defendant in default by demanding possession of the premises. Defendant would not be in default for failure to pay the purchase price until plaintiff had first offered to comply with the contract by tender of deed. If defendant had refused the deed so tendered, then under the authorities defendant must either pay the purchase price according to the contract, or surrender possession. But here no deed was tendered and defendant was entitled to remain in possession until plaintiff offered to comply with the contract.

[2] Appellant insists that the court erred in refusing to allow plaintiff's witnesses to testify to transactions and conversations had prior to the execution of the contract on June 17, 1921, on the ground that parol evidence is admissible to show the situation of the parties and the circumstances surrounding the execution of the instrument. Plaintiff offered to show that the deal between plaintiff and defendant had its inception in January, 1921; that escrow instructions were placed with the title company during the latter part of January, 1921; that the plaintiff received word from the title company that they would not issue a certificate of title to the property, and that she was the owner of but an undivided one-half interest therein; that the plaintiff immediately communicated this fact to defendant. The trial court sustained defendant's objection to this testimony. We find no error in this ruling, since, notwithstanding the fact that both plaintiff and defendant, according to this offer of proof, had received notice that the title company refused to issue a certificate, yet subsequently they entered into the written contract received in evidence, which provided for a conveyance of the property from plaintiff to defendant and wherein plaintiff agreed to sell and convey and defendant agreed to buy the premises; the consideration to be paid through the title company, upon delivery to them of an acceptable certificate of title showing the title to be vested in the defendant as trustee, free and clear of all incumbrances. We fail to see how the testimony offered could have affected the absolute liability of the plaintiff under the terms of the contract of June 17, 1921; and if such testimony had been received, it would not have affected the decision, there being no allegation of mistake or fraud in the complaint. Such testimony would not have assisted the court in determining the intention of the parties, which is so clearly stated by the instrument itself.

It is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 290

BADOSTAIN v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (four cases). (Civ. 5197.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 23, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 22, 1927.

1. Railroads ⚡350(7)—Whether signals were given by interurban car striking automobile held for jury.

In actions for injuries sustained by collision with interurban electric car with automobile at grade crossing, whether signals were given held for the jury.

2. Evidence ⚡586(3,4) — Negative evidence held to sustain finding of negligence of electric car in failing to give warning signals.

In actions against railway for injuries sustained from collision with electric car, negative evidence of witnesses, that they heard no signals given, held to sustain finding of negligence in not giving warning signals.

3. Railroads ⚡350(11)—Whether electric car approached crossing at excessive speed held for jury.

In actions against railway for injuries from collision of automobile with electric car, whether car approached crossing at excessive speed held for jury.

4. Railroads ⚡327(4)—One approaching railway track is bound to look and listen.

A railway crossing is in itself a sign of danger, and one intending to cross must look and listen to ascertain whether cars are approaching.

5. Railroads ⚡327(7)—One approaching railway crossing must use ordinary care in selecting time and place to look and listen, and should stop if necessary.

One approaching railway crossing in automobile must use ordinary care in selecting a time and place to look and listen for approaching cars, and should stop if necessary; it not being sufficient that he rely on belief that those operating car will sound warning.

6. Railroads ⚡350(13)—Negligence of person crossing railway becomes question of law, where facts are undisputed and but one conclusion can be drawn.

Whether a person struck at railway crossing was negligent is ordinarily a question for the jury, and becomes a question of law only when the facts are undisputed, and even then only when reasonable minds can draw but one conclusion from them.

7. Railroads ⚡350(21)—Contributory negligence of travelers in automobile colliding with electric car held for jury.

Whether persons in automobile, injured in collision with electric car at railway crossing, were guilty of contributory negligence, held for jury.

8. Trial ⚡296(3)—Instruction not based on evidence held not prejudicial, in view of other instructions.

Instruction that railroad was negligent in maintenance of station or platform, obscuring view of persons approaching crossing in automobile, held not prejudicial because not based on evidence, in view of other conditions around station and instructions as to care required of both railroad and occupants of automobile approaching crossing.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by Martina Badostain, two actions by Bernabe Badostain, and an action by Frank Badostain against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. Judgments for plaintiffs in all actions, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; CURTIS, J., dissenting.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and C. W. Cornell, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wm. Jennings Bryan, Jr., and Dockweiler, Dockweiler & Finch, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. Appeals from the judgments entered against appellant, Pacific Electric Railway Company, a corporation, upon verdicts returned by a jury in four separate actions. The actions were tried together, and the appeals are presented on the same transcript.

Three of the actions were brought by Martina Badostain, Frank Badostain, and Bernabe Badostain to recover for personal injuries suffered by them, and the fourth, by Bernabe Badostain, to recover for the death of Jose Badostain, his minor son, and it was averred in each complaint that the damages alleged were caused by the negligence of appellant. Respondents Bernabe and Martina Badostain are husband and wife; Frank Badostain being their son, as was also the deceased.

At about 3:30 p. m. on September 25, 1921, respondents and the deceased were traveling in an automobile owned by Bernabe Badostain, and driven by his son Frank, in a southerly direction along Bloomfield avenue, a public highway in Orange county. At Crescentia Station the highway, which runs north and south, crosses the double-tracked electric railway operated by appellant, which at this point is laid in the direction of south-east-northwest. The station, which was situated east of the highway and northeast of the railway, in the angle made by their intersection, was a one-story frame building, unboarded on the sides facing the south and east, and built upon a loading platform above the level of the tracks. The length of the platform along the tracks was 40 feet; its distance from the first rail being 8 feet. Along the highway its length was 20 feet, and its height above the center of the highway, which slopes from the crossing to the north, varies from 3½ to 5 feet. At a point about 20 feet southeast from the platform was a cattle guard, from which to the northwest across the right of way a fence was maintained. According to the testimony and as shown by photographs in evidence there were growing along the east side of the highway, but not upon appellant's property, several eucalyptus trees, the branches of which, with a growth of weeds on the right of way north of the platform, tended to a certain extent to obscure the view to the southeast. It was further testified that certain of the branches were removed after the accident and before the photographs were taken, and it may fairly be inferred from the evidence that these overhung the right of way.

The complaints alleged that the death and injuries complained of were caused by appellant's negligent operation of its electric car which approached the crossing from the southeast; that the car was operated at an excessive rate of speed; that no warning of its approach was given nor were the brakes applied, and that appellant was also negligent in the construction and maintenance of the platform and station and in permitting branches of the trees and the weeds mentioned to obscure the view of the track from the highway. These averments were denied by appellant, which alleged that the negligence of respondents was the sole proximate cause of the accident.

It was testified by the latter that the automobile was stopped at a point 45 feet north of the crossing; that from that point, with the exception of about 500 feet of the tracks, which were obscured by the platform and station, they were afforded a view to the southeast for approximately a mile; that, seeing no car approaching and hearing no warning signals, they proceeded at a speed between 8 and 9 miles per hour, but that, after proceeding a few feet, their view was then obstructed by the buildings mentioned; that, when they reached a point about 9 feet from the track they first observed the approaching car, which was then, according to their various estimates, between 15 and 60 feet away; that at this point the brakes were applied and the course of the car turned to the right, too late, however, to avoid a collision, which resulted in the death and injuries alleged. According to their testimony none of the occupants of the automobile had previously seen or passed over the intersection with the exception of the driver, who on one occasion had crossed at night. It appears from the photographs that from the point where the automobile was stopped, which was a few feet below the level of the track, no direct view along the railroad to the southeast could be obtained. The speed of the electric car as it approached the crossing, according to the testimony of the several witnesses, was from 30 to 50 miles per hour, the estimate of the motorman being 40 miles. According to the testimony of the latter and the trainmaster of appellant, who was a passenger, the power had been turned off about 1,000 feet east of the crossing, and at the time of the accident the car was coasting, the noise from the car when so running being less than when the power is applied. The witnesses differed as to whether signals of its approach were given, those called by respondents testifying that they heard none.

Appellant contends that the only conclusions reasonably to be drawn from the evidence were that the car was operated with due care, that respondents were guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to the damage alleged, and that certain of the court's instructions were prejudicially erroneous.

[1, 2] As stated, the evidence that the motorman was negligent in failing to give proper warning of the approach of the car was negative, consisting of testimony of witnesses that they heard no signals; but, as held in the following cases, this testimony, even as opposed to positive testimony that signals were given, presented a question for the jury, and was sufficient to sustain a finding of negligence. Thompson v. Los Angeles & San Diego, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 P. 709; Keena v. United Railroads, etc., 197 Cal. 148, 239 P. 1061.

[3] The further question whether the speed in approaching the crossing was so dangerous or excessive, in view of the conditions shown to exist, as to constitute negligence, was also one for the jury (Bilton v. Southern Pac. Co., 148 Cal. 443, 83 P. 440; Tousley v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 457, 137 P. 31), and we cannot say that a finding adverse to appellant on either of these issues would be unsupported.

[4-6] A railway track is in and of itself a sign of danger, and one approaching such track with intent to cross is bound to exercise his faculties of sight and hearing in order to ascertain whether cars are approaching. Herbert v. Southern Pac. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 P. 651. It is his duty to use ordinary care in selecting a time and place to look and listen for approaching cars, and he should stop for the purpose of making such observations when necessary, it not being enough that he merely listen, believing that those operating the car will give warning of its approach (Griffin v. San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842); but whether a person struck in crossing a railroad track was guilty of negligence is ordinarily one of fact for the jury, and it becomes a question of law for the decision of the court only where the facts are undisputed, and even then only where on those facts reasonable minds can draw but one conclusion on the issue of plaintiff's negligence (Loftus v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 464, 137 P. 34). If, however, the established facts and conditions are such as to make it plain that a person looking and listening must have seen or heard, his testimony that he looked and listened but did not see or hear is not enough to support a verdict in his favor. Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513.

[7] In the instant case it was sufficiently shown that respondents were not apprised of the danger by warning signals from the car until too late to avoid the accident, and that, as operated, the noise of its approach was thereby lessened; and it does not appear from the testimony, in view of the conditions shown, that respondents, by looking from the spot where they stopped, must necessarily have seen its approach, nor that by again stopping before reaching the point where the car was first seen its approach would have been discovered. The facts are similar to those in Cooper v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 137 Cal. 229, 70 P. 11, and Loftus v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., supra; and under all circumstances the inference was not unreasonable that respondents, in approaching the crossing after making the observations shown, were exercising the degree of care which an ordinarily prudent man so situated would have exercised, and that the car could have been neither seen nor heard by them until too late to avoid the collision; and we cannot say but that the sole proximate causes of the injuries and deaths were the excessive speed of the car and appellant's failure to give timely warning of its approach.

[8] Appellant assigns as error an instruction stating, in substance, that if the jury believed from the evidence that appellant at the time of the accident was negligent in maintaining a platform and station which obstructed the view of the plaintiffs as they approached the crossing, and they further believed that weeds, brush, and the overhanging branches of trees growing adjacent to and along its right of way prevented plaintiffs from seeing the approach of the car in time to avoid being struck, and also prevented the motorman from seeing the automobile in time to avoid colliding with it, and the plaintiffs were free from negligence, their verdict must be for the latter.

The jury was further instructed as follows:

"The plaintiffs in this action have claimed that the defendant was negligent in maintaining the loading platform on its right of way. The court instructs you that the defendant not only had the right to, but should, maintain suitable and necessary stations and platforms for the use of itself and the patrons of the railway along its right of way. This was not negligence, and you cannot consider the defendant negligent in maintaining this loading platform. There was no negligence whatsoever in having this loading platform at the place that it was. Not only must the plaintiffs prove that the defendant was negligent, but they must prove that the negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause of the collision and injury to the plaintiffs; if from all the evidence you were to believe that the occupants of the automobile were so conducting themselves as they approached this track that they would not have noticed the approach of the car or heeded the approach of the car, regardless of weeds or limbs on the right of way between the car and themselves, then the presence of weeds and branches, if you believe there were such to the extent that the defendant was negligent in this respect, would not be a proximate cause of the accident, but the inattentiveness of the occupants of the automobile would be a proximate cause of the accident. In other words, if you believe from all the evidence that the occupants of the automobile were so conducting themselves that it would have made no difference whether or not the right of way was filled with weeds and branches, then, even if you believe the defendant was negligent in this respect, still this negligence would not be the proximate cause of the collision. In other words, one cannot complain of a condition which would have made no difference to him."

Although a growth of weeds on appellant's property north of the intersection was shown and that the limbs of trees growing on adjacent land overhung the right of way, all of which appellant might have removed (Grondona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 21 P. 366, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121), and did partially remove after the accident and before the photographs were taken, and that these obstructions to a certain extent obscured the view from the highway, there was no evidence sufficient to support a finding that appellant was negligent in the maintenance of either the station or platform. While the giving of an instruction which finds no support in the evidence is improper (Boone v. Oakland Transit Co., 139 Cal. 490, 73 P. 243; Idemoto v. Scheidecker, 193 Cal. 653, 226 P. 922), and, if prejudicial, is ground for reversal (Eppinger v. Kendrick, 114 Cal. 620, 46 P. 613; Bosqui v. Sutro R. R. Co., 131 Cal. 390, 63 P. 682; Wallis v. Southern Pac. Co., 184 Cal. 663, 195 P. 408, 15 A. L. R. 117; Griffith v. Oak Ridge Oil Co., 190 Cal. 389, 393, 212 P. 913), in the instant case, in view of the conditions north of the station, the instructions quoted, with others by which the jury was fully advised as to the care required of both appellant and the occupants of the automobile in approaching the crossing, were sufficient to remove the effect of an otherwise misleading instruction, and it cannot reasonably be said that the error was prejudicial.

Other instructions with respect to the care required in approaching a railway crossing and of one suddenly placed in a position of peril are also criticized by appellant. Such instructions, in view of the evidence, were proper, and those in question correctly stated the general rules applicable thereto, and were not, as claimed by appellant, misleading. We are satisfied from an examination of the entire record that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict in each case, and that no error is shown which can fairly be said to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgments are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

83 Cal. App. 356

WHITE v. WHITE et al. (Civ. 4850.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 24, 1927.

Divorce — §332—Where foreign divorce decree awarded child to mother, father held not liable for support, where need of father's assistance was not shown.

Where a divorce decree obtained in another state awarded the custody of a minor child to its mother with no provision for its support by father, the father was not liable for support, where it was not shown that the child had any need of the father's assistance, and there was some evidence to the contrary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action by Lauretta O. White, Jr., a minor, appearing by her guardian ad litem, Lauretta O. White, against Kenneth White and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank C. Prescott and Frank G. Falloon, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wetherhorn, Hoyt & Jones, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff, as guardian of a minor child, from an order in a proceeding instituted for the purpose of compelling defendant (the father of the child) to pay a certain sum of money for the support of the child.

It appears that the child is the minor daughter of defendant and his divorced wife; that the divorce between the father and the mother of the child was obtained by the father in the state of Texas; and that, without any provision being made in the decree for the support of the minor child of the parties, the court awarded the absolute custody of the child to the wife.

In such circumstances it appears to have been ruled directly by the higher courts of this state that a separate action by the child against the father to compel him to furnish support for the child will not lie. Lewis v. Lewis, 174 Cal. 336, 163 P. 42; Matter of McMullin, 164 Cal. 504, 129 P. 773; Ex parte Miller, 109 Cal. 643, 648, 42 P. 428. See, also, People v. Hartman, 23 Cal. App. 72, 137 P. 611; In re Perry, 37 Cal. App. 189, 174 P. 105.

There is, however, later authority to the effect that, because in a divorce proceeding the custody of a minor child of the parties has been awarded to the mother, this does not relieve the father from his duty to support the child who has no other source of maintenance. Pacific Gold Dredging Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 184 Cal. 462, 194 P. 1, 13 A. L. R. 725; Svoboda v. Superior Court, 190 Cal. 727, 214 P. 440; Llewellyn Iron Works v. Industrial Acc. Com., 191 Cal. 28, 214 P. 846; Federal Mutual L. I. Co. v. Indus. Acc. Com., 195 Cal. 283, 233 P. 335.

The rule as announced in the case of Davies v. Fisher, 34 Cal. App. 137, 166 P. 833, is that the mother of a minor child whose custody was awarded to the mother in a decree of divorce granted in a sister state, and which decree made no provision for the support by the father of the minor child, may bring an independent action in this state to compel the father to support the minor child, where it is made to appear that both parties are residents of this state, and the wife is without means to contribute to such support.

On the hearing of the instant matter, which resulted in the order to which exception is taken by appellant, no evidence was introduced which showed that the child was in need of support from the defendant. To the contrary, the evidence was to the effect that the child was a remainderman of a one-fourth interest in an estate of the value of $250,000. Nor, aside from testimony that the wife was the owner of a one-fourth interest in the "Octagon Drop Forge Company," was any showing made regarding the financial ability of the wife to provide the child with the necessities of life.

In the face of the record and the law as hereinbefore noted, it was legally impossible that the relief for which plaintiff prayed be granted.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 352

SONDERGARD v. BREAU. (Civ. 5806.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 24, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 21, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇐76(1)—Judgment disposing of all material issues is appealable.

Judgment disposing of all material issues is final and appealable.

2. Appeal and error ⇐101(1)—Appellate court cannot hold that there is no evidence supporting finding, where conflicting evidence authorized decision either way.

Where trial court could have decided either way on conflicting evidence as to existence or nonexistence of partnership, appellate court cannot hold that there is no evidence supporting finding that partnership was created.

3. Partnership ⇐53—Evidence held to support finding, in suit to dissolve partnership, that partnership existed.

In action for dissolution of partnership, evidence held sufficient to support court's finding that partnership existed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by J. C. Sondergard against Rudolph Breau. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Anson Hilton, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. W. Bingaman and Ralph W. Arnot, both of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant has appealed and has brought up a bill of exceptions. The judgment dissolved an alleged partnership and ordered a sale of the property owned by the partnership and a division of the proceeds after the payment of the debts. No accounting was ordered, because one had already been made and filed, and the same was adopted by the trial court.

[1] The respondent makes a preliminary objection that the alleged judgment is an interlocutory decree which is not appealable. The appellant replies that the judgment appealed from disposes of all the material issues and therefore comes within the rulings in such cases as Zappettini v. Buckles, 167

Cal. 27, 138 P. 696, and Guaranty Trust, etc., Bk. v. Los Angeles, 186 Cal. 110, 199 P. 35. We think the reply is sufficient.

[2, 3] On the appeal the appellant presents one point, that the finding that a partnership existed between the parties is wholly unsupported by the evidence. J. C. Sondergard, the plaintiff, alleged, and the trial court found, that he, Paul J. Rasmussen, and Rudolph Breaum, were copartners, and as such the owners of the parcel of land situated in the city of Oakland and described in the complaint. J. C. Sondergard and Margaret Sondergard are husband and wife. Rudolph Breaum and Margaret Sondergard are brother and sister. Paul J. Rasmussen, if not related to, is a boarder in the family of, Rudolph Breaum. Carl O. Breaum is a nephew of Rudolph Breaum and of Mrs. Sondergard. Commencing in June, 1923, the parties discussed buying a piece of real estate, building on it, and selling off parcels as so improved. Rudolph Breaum is a carpenter. Rasmussen is a plasterer. Mrs. Sondergard keeps a store. Mr. Sondergard has various business connections. All of the parties are of Danish birth and more or less unfamiliar with the English language, but the Sondergards are more familiar with English, and, throughout the proceedings in making the purchase, they acted as spokesmen. Before any property was purchased, all seemed to be on friendly terms. Soon after the purchase was made, the friendly relations became strained. The testimony taken at the trial discloses the existence of a family quarrel. For the purpose of proving his case, the plaintiff took the stand, and later he called as witnesses his wife, Paul J. Rasmussen, Carl O. Breaum, and S. C. Hunt. Each and all gave at least some testimony supporting the claim of the plaintiff. The only witness called by the defense was the defendant himself. All of the witnesses agreed that at least at one time they discussed the matter of buying, building, and selling as above stated. The witnesses for the plaintiff testified an agreement was reached to the effect that they should proceed to buy a parcel known as 2576 Twenty-Fifth avenue; that the defendant, with the assistance of Sondergard and Rasmussen, was to do the carpenter work; that Rasmussen was to do the plastering; and that Sondergard was to be the business agent. The witnesses for the plaintiff then testified that later it was decided not to buy the property last mentioned but to buy instead the parcel of land described in the complaint which is also known as the Fruitvale avenue property. Speaking of the time when they examined the latter property, the appellant testified that he remarked, "This looks better than the other, and I believe we will buy this." It is not disputed but what the latter property was bought, and that the title was taken in the name of the defendant. It is not disputed that the total cost was $8,014.94; that of that sum $6,000 was borrowed on a mortgage; that $1,200 was borrowed by the defendant on his promissory note indorsed by a stranger; that the remaining moneys were received partly from J. S. Sondergard, partly from Mrs. Sondergard, partly from Rasmussen, and partly from the appellant. At this point all else rests in conflict. The defendant claims that he was the sole purchaser and that the moneys paid by the others were loans made to him, whereas both Rasmussen and Sondergard claim that the advances were not loans to the appellant but were part payments in liquidation of the pro rata obligations of Rasmussen and Sondergard. We have carefully read the record many times in an attempt to obtain a full understanding of the story. After having done so, we think it is clear that the case is one which the trial court could have decided either way; that the record presents a conflict of evidence as to the existence or nonexistence of the partnership; and that we are not entitled to hold there is no evidence supporting the finding that a partnership was created as alleged in the plaintiff's complaint. All of the parties testified that a partnership was discussed. Sondergard and Rasmussen testified that one was agreed upon; whether it was agreed upon regarding the property located on Twenty-Fifth avenue or the property on Fruitvale avenue is not clear; but there is no evidence in the record that the agreement once formed was thereafter wholly canceled or abandoned. Mr. S. C. Hunt, an official of the Oakland bank which granted the mortgage loan, testified: That he waited on Sondergard and Breaum when they called regarding the loan. "Sondergard said that they were to purchase the property together, and to cut it up into lots, and contemplated building. They did not mention any name, but spoke of it as 'we,' and that their brother and brother-in-law who were present at the time were to be in on the deal." As Mr. Hunt was a disinterested outsider, it is difficult to ascertain why his testimony should not be given full weight. No doubt the trial court did give it full weight, and we may not say that it erred in doing so.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

83 Cal. App. 276

PINE v. HIGGINS et al. (Civ. 3274.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 20, 1927.

1. Partnership ⚡217(3)—Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding that purchaser of goats had knowledge of partnership therein, in suit to foreclose mortgage on goats, executed by one partner.

In suit to foreclose mortgage on goats as partnership property, where mortgage was executed by only one of alleged partners, evidence held insufficient to sustain finding that purchaser of goats had knowledge of partnership.

2. Partnership ⚡142(1)—Record of chattel mortgage is constructive notice only of what mortgage contains.

Where record of chattel mortgage of partnership property showed only an individual mortgage of one of the partners, it was constructive notice only of what mortgage contained.

3. Chattel mortgages ⚡278—Evidence held to sustain finding that property redelivered to seller was sufficient to satisfy both seller's indebtedness and plaintiff's mortgage.

In suit to foreclose mortgage on goats, evidence held to sustain finding that at time goats were redelivered to seller their value was sufficient to cover buyers' indebtedness to seller and the indebtedness of plaintiff.

4. Appeal and error ⚡177(2)—Foreclosure judgment, directing sale of partnership property when only one partner's interest was mortgaged, requires reversal where mortgaging partner's interest was not shown.

Foreclosure judgment directing sale of goats as partnership property, when only one partner's interest was mortgaged, held to require reversal where the record did not disclose the extent of the mortgaging partner's interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Foreclosure proceeding by A. J. Pine against Guy S. Higgins, J. D. French, and Floyd E. Hendricks. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants French and Hendricks appeal. Reversed with directions.

James T. Matlock and M. J. Cheatham, both of Red Bluff, for appellants.

W. A. Fish and W. P. Johnson, both of Red Bluff, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment of foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, dated the 29th day of April, A. D. 1920, from which judgment the defendants French and Hendricks appeal.

The transcript shows that on or about the 20th day of April, 1920, the defendant J. D. French sold and transferred to Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins a certain band of goats comprising about 1,400 head and a certain tract of land covering about 160 acres, all in the county of Tehama, state of California; that the total selling price of said property was the sum of $9,000; that $2,707 of the selling price of said property was unpaid, and to secure the payment of the same by the said Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins to the said J. D. French, Guy S. Higgins, Ashley E. Higgins, Mary A. Higgins, and Delia M. Higgins executed and delivered to the defendant J. D. French a certain promissory note in the sum of $2,707, payable on or before three years after date, and to secure the payment of said note, the said Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins executed and delivered a chattel mortgage upon all of the goats hereinbefore referred to and a mortgage covering the real estate theretofore sold by the said J. D. French to said Higgins, the real estate mortgage being executed by all of the signers to the promissory note hereinbefore mentioned.

That after the execution of the instruments herein referred to, the defendant Guy S. Higgins executed and delivered to the plaintiff, A. J. Pine, a certain chattel mortgage, bearing date of the 29th day of April, 1920, covering the band of goats mentioned in the mortgage, just mentioned as executed and delivered to the defendant J. D. French. This chattel mortgage was executed and delivered first to secure the payment of a certain promissory note for $156, dated March 29, 1920, payable one day after date, executed and delivered by the defendant Guy S. Higgins to the plaintiff. Said mortgage executed and delivered by the said Guy S. Higgins to the plaintiff, A. J. Pine, and for the foreclosure of which the decree was entered in this case also contained the following provision:

"And also to secure the payment of all future loans, balances of account, other indebtedness or advances made by the mortgagee to the mortgagor not to exceed for the principal secured of such loans or advances the sum of eight hundred and 00/100 dollars."

The complaint in the action alleges that after the execution of the mortgage just referred to the plaintiff sold and delivered to the defendant Guy S. Higgins of Red Bluff, Tehama county, goods, wares, and merchandise amounting to the sum of $806.77; that the last of said advances was made on the 30th day of April, 1921. Nonpayment of the note and the advances is alleged.

The transcript further shows that the instruments herein referred to were all recorded in the county recorder's office of the county of Tehama. Thereafter, and on or about the 19th day of October, 1921, for the purpose of satisfying the indebtedness mentioned in the promissory note executed and delivered by Guy S. Higgins, Ashley E. Higgins, Mary A. Higgins, and Delia M. Higgins, Guy S.

Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins executed and delivered a deed conveying the real property included in the real estate mortgage hereinbefore referred to, and, also, turned over to the defendant French all of the band of goats theretofore bought by the said Higgins from the defendant French, and included in the chattel mortgage executed to pay the $2,707 note, and upon said reconveyance of said real estate being made and redelivery of said band of goats, the said J. D. French satisfied both the chattel and real estate mortgages theretofore given to him by the Higgins to secure the unpaid portion of the purchase price of said property; that no foreclosure sale was had, nor was any sale had of any of said property under the mortgages executed and delivered by the Higgins to the defendant French, and the property was turned back to him in the manner above stated; that at a period of time about one and one-half years after the real estate referred to had been reconveyed to the defendant French and the band of goats redelivered to him, the defendant French sold and conveyed to the defendant Floyd E. Hendricks the real estate referred to herein, and also all that was remaining of the band of goats redelivered by the Higgins to the defendant French, and the increase thereof during the period of time said goats were in the possession of the said French. After these transactions had taken place the plaintiff began this action to foreclose the chattel mortgage on the band of goats referred to, executed and delivered to him solely by Guy S. Higgins. Guy S. Higgins made default, and judgment went against the defendants French and Hendricks for foreclosure of the mortgage and sale of the band of goats.

The transcript contains testimony to the effect and the court found that the advances made under the chattel mortgage executed to the plaintiff by Guy S. Higgins alone consisted of an account made up of the selling prices of goods, wares, and merchandise used by the defendant Guy S. Higgins and his family and Ashley E. Higgins and his family during the time they had possession of and were caring for said band of goats, and in the caring for and "running of the same." There is also testimony to the effect that the defendant J. D. French knew of the execution of the second mortgage of the alleged purposes for which it was executed, and consented thereto, and the court found that the defendant French knew thereof and consented thereto. The court also found that at the time the defendant French became repossessed of the property herein referred to without any foreclosure sale, the value of the property was sufficient to cover not only the indebtedness then due to him, but also the indebtedness evidenced by the mortgage executed and delivered to the plaintiff by Guy S. Higgins.

There is, however, not a scintilla of evidence in the transcript showing that the defendant Floyd E. Hendricks knew of any of the transactions had between the parties referred to, or of the purposes for which the mortgage was given, other than such constructive notice as is conveyed to a subsequent purchaser by the record of plaintiff's mortgage herein mentioned.

As to the existence of a partnership between Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins, the transcript shows the following:

Testimony of the witness A. J. Pine:

"Q. You understood that Guy Higgins and A. E. Higgins were partners in the business out there? A. Not exactly partners; no. They put their goats together and had one camp.

"Q. And they were running the bands together as one band? A. Yes; and he had it put under that name (Guy Higgins) so he would join in and help pay it—help pay for the merchandise."

Testimony of Guy S. Higgins:

"Q. How did you arrange with Mr. Pine for the account—how were they to be charged? A. Under the name of A. E. and G. S. Higgins.

"Q. You made those arrangements with Mr. Pine yourself? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And when you opened this account at Mr. Pine's, you opened that account as the account for this business of your brother and yourself? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And in which you say you intended and agreed to share the profits equally and the losses equally? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And that account was not your individual account? A. No, sir."

Testimony of Ashley E. Higgins:

"Q. When you opened the account at Mr. Pine's it was a partnership account, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. The groceries bought there were used in the partnership business for your family, and for your brother's family, while you resided out there running the goats? A. Yes, sir."

Upon this testimony the court found that Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins were partners in the goats and the land hereinbefore referred to. The court also found that, at the time the mortgage on the goats in question was given by Guy S. Higgins to the plaintiff, Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins were the owners of the goats described therein.

[1] In none of the conveyances herein referred to was the property described as purchased for a partnership, or by a partnership, or mortgaged as a partnership, or reconveyed to the defendant French as partnership property, and, while the testimony may be sufficient to show a partnership in the use of the property as between Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins and as to the plaintiff, A. J. Pine, it is absolutely insufficient to sustain any such finding as to the defendant Floyd E. Hendricks. The record of which the defendant Floyd E. Hendricks must be held to have had constructive notice shows only a cotenancy or tenancy in common, both as to the band of goats and the real estate mentioned in the conveyances. Oral testimony as to any other matters cannot be considered in the determination of the rights of the defendant Floyd E. Hendricks in and to the band of goats purchased by him from the defendant French, for the reason that there is not a scintilla of evidence in the record, as we have said, showing that the defendant Floyd E. Hendricks had any knowledge whatever of any of the transactions now appearing in the record. The trial seems to have been had and the findings made upon the theory that if the seller of the goats had knowledge the purchaser was chargeable also with such knowledge. It requires no citation of authority to controvert such a conclusion.

[2] As said in 5 California Jurisprudence, p. 56, § 14:

"Though there are no provisions in the Codes which expressly make the recordation of a valid chattel mortgage constructive notice of its contents, yet it is well settled that such recordation is notice to all the world of the contents of the mortgage, and consequently subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers take subject to the lien of the mortgage since they are charged with notice thereof" (citing a number of cases).

The same section also contains the rule well supported by authority that the "record imparts constructive notice only of what the mortgage contains."

The mortgage executed by Guy S. Higgins to the plaintiff does not upon its face purport to be anything but his individual mortgage. It does not purport to mortgage partnership property. It does expressly, however, purport to secure the payment of an individual note of Guy S. Higgins due at the date of the execution of the mortgage and advances that might be made to him. In this particular we may state that the advances made by Pine to Guy S. Higgins were not made by Pine under a view that Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins were partners. They were advanced to Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins as two persons running their goats together. Under such circumstances, the advances made to Guy S. Higgins the court might properly find as advances contemplated and included within the terms of the mortgage.

As we have said, the court found ownership of the goats at the time the chattel mortgage was executed and delivered to the plaintiff to be in Guy S. Higgins and Ashley E. Higgins, from which, under the circumstances which we have set forth, and the terms of the mortgage, mortgaged only the interest of Guy S. Higgins. The record is silent as to the extent of that interest.

[3,4] The finding of the court, that the value of the property at the time it was redelivered to the defendant French was sufficient to cover the indebtedness to him and also the indebtedness to the plaintiff, is attacked as not being supported by the testimony. The only testimony there is in the record is to the effect that the property was once sold to the Higgins for $9,000 and subsequently sold to the defendant Floyd E. Hendricks for $4,000. This testimony, having been admitted without objection, we think, sustains the finding of the court. As there is nothing in the record showing the extent of the interest of Guy S. Higgins at the time of the execution and delivery of the chattel mortgage on the band of goats to the plaintiff, we have nothing upon which to base an order directing a modification of the judgment, and as the judgment directs the sale of the band of goats as though it were partnership property, and property mortgaged as a whole against the defendant Floyd E. Hendricks, the rights of the parties can only be determined by sending the case back to the trial court for further consideration and determination of the extent of the interest of Guy S. Higgins actually mortgaged, and to direct foreclosure and sale of such interest. The judgment of foreclosure is reversed and the trial court directed to proceed further in the case in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 245

AUGUST v. GONSALVES et al. (Civ. 4745.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 20, 1927.

Receivers  212—Where attorneys made no separate charges for vacating receiver's appointment, fees cannot be recovered on bond to indemnify defendant for wrongful appointment.

Where attorneys in receivership action made no separate charges for vacating the appointment of the receiver, but only a charge for the entire services rendered in the whole action, attorney's fees cannot be recovered in an action on a bond given to indemnify the defendant in the receivership action for damages for the wrongful appointment of a receiver.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by John August against Manuel Gonsalves and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. Scott Jacobs and Chas. E. Watkinson, both of Hanford, for appellant.

Clark Clement, of Lemoore, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of defendants in an action on a bond for damages arising out of the alleged wrongful appointment of a receiver in a former action between the same parties, the position of the parties therein being reversed; that is to say, the plaintiff herein was the defendant in the former action and the plaintiff in that action is the defendant in this action.

The specific damages claimed by plaintiff herein were for attorney's fees in the sum of $1,300, alleged to have been paid by him to counsel representing him in the action in which the receiver was appointed.

On the trial of the present action, among other things, the court found:

"That the said Manuel Gonsalves did not procure the appointment of said receiver wrongfully, maliciously, and without sufficient cause; that said John August has paid to his attorneys as aforesaid the sum of $1,300, but that said sum was not paid for the purpose of procuring a dissolution of the receivership in said action No. 4771; that said sum of $1,300 was not and is not a reasonable sum for attorney's fees in said action for obtaining the discharge of said receivership; that the sum of $1,300 was a gross sum charged by said attorneys in connection with said action No. 4771; and that no separate charge was made by said attorneys for any work in connection with the receivership."

The record herein shows that on the day on which the receivership action was commenced the defendant employed attorneys to represent him generally therein, and that no receiver was appointed in such action until one week thereafter. In the case of Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611, 624, 22 P. 327, 331, it is said:

"* * * In the first place, the liability of the sureties commences with the giving of the undertaking. They are not liable for counsel fees or loss of profits previously expended or incurred. * * *"

See, also, Curtiss v. Bachman, 110 Cal. 433, 42 P. 910, 52 Am. St. Rep. 111; Black v. Hilliker, 130 Cal. 190, 62 P. 481.

Moreover, the appointment of a receiver was incidental only to the main question in the action in which the receiver was appointed. No question having been raised by appellant regarding the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, it conclusively appears that the attorney's fees charged the defendant in the action covered the entire case, and that there was no segregation in the charge of the attorneys showing what sum was charged in connection with that part of the action which dealt exclusively with the question of the validity of such appointment—which question was tested in the court below by a motion to vacate the order appointing the receiver, but which motion was denied.

While the attention of this court has been directed to no California case involving the question of whether bondsmen are liable for general attorney's fees paid or incurred by the defendant in defense of an action where a part of the relief sought by the plaintiff was by and through the appointment of a receiver, authorities are not lacking which in principle clearly indicate that attorney's fees paid generally in defense of a suit in which a receiver is appointed are not recoverable; but that such fees only (if any) are recoverable as were paid or incurred for the purpose of obtaining the discharge of the receiver.

As showing the similarity of the basis for an action on a bond given on the appointment of a receiver and an action founded on an undertaking given on the issuance of an injunction, it may be noted that section 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure lays a foundation for the recovery of damages where a receiver is appointed "wrongfully, maliciously or without sufficient cause"; and that by section 529 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that an injunction bond must contain the undertaking that the plaintiff will pay to the party enjoined "such damages, * * * as such party may sustain by reason of the injunction, if the court finally decides that the applicant was not entitled thereto." The basis for the present action was that the receiver in the former action was appointed "without sufficient cause."

In the case of Bustamente v. Stewart, 55 Cal. 115, it was held that (syllabus):

"The amount recoverable, on account of attorney's fees, in an action upon an injunction bond, is limited to fees paid counsel for procuring the dissolution of the injunction, and does not extend to fees paid for defending the entire case."

In the case of Curtiss v. Bachman, 110 Cal. 433, 42 P. 910, 52 Am. St. Rep. 111, the question was thoroughly considered. Among other things, it is said therein (page 438 [42 P. 912]):

"* * * It is well settled that the services of counsel rendered in the trial of a cause are not a portion of the damage sustained by reason of the injunction. * * *"

Referring again to Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611, 624, it will be found that, in addition to the language already quoted herein from that case, the opinion contains the following statement:

"In the second place, the counsel fees for which the sureties may be held are not those expended for the defense of the suit, but only those which have been expended solely or principally in procuring a dissolution of the injunction [citing cases]. And the evidence must show a case within the rule. It is not sufficient to show the value of service rendered in the case generally."

The syllabus in the case of Mitchell v. Hawley, 79 Cal. 301, 21 P. 833, contains the following:

"In a suit on an injunction bond in a case where a gross counsel fee was paid for the defense of a suit, and no separate or distinct amount of money was paid to the attorneys for an unsuccessful attempt to procure a dissolution of the injunction, and no special charge was made therefor, and there is no sufficient showing in the evidence of a segregation and apportionment of the services, no counsel fee can be allowed as damages, though the court finally decided by dismissal of the action that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction. The allowance of counsel fees as damages is exceptional, and should not be carried beyond the point to which former decisions have taken it."

To the same effect, see the following cases: San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 101 Cal. 216, 35 P. 651; Black v. Hilliker, 130 Cal. 192, 62 P. 481; Porter v. Hopkins, 63 Cal. 53; Spooner v. Cady, 5 Cal. Unrep. 357, 44 P. 1018.

[1] As hereinbefore stated, by the findings of the trial court it conclusively appearing that the attorney's fees in the action for the appointment of a receiver were for the entire services rendered by the attorneys therein, and that no separate charge was made by the attorneys for their services in connection with their efforts to have vacated the order appointing the receiver, it follows that the action could not be maintained and consequently that the judgment should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

TUBBY v. TUBBY. (Civ. 5787.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 19, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court July 18, 1927.

1. Motions ⇨21—Where written notice of motion is required, grounds of motion must be stated (Code Civ. Proc. § 1010).

In instances where a written notice of motion is required, the grounds of the motion must be stated, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1010, providing that the notice of a motion other than for a new trial must state the grounds upon which it will be made.

2. Motions ⇨30—Failure of notice of motion to state grounds thereof can be cured by affidavit setting forth grounds only if affidavit is served with notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 1010).

In order for the failure of a notice of motion to state the grounds thereof to be cured by the fact that the affidavit sets forth the grounds, the affidavit must be served with the notice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1010, providing that notice of motion other than for new trial must state grounds thereof and papers, if any, on which it is based, and that, if such paper has not previously been served on party to be notified and was not filed by him, a copy must accompany the notice.

3. Divorce ⇨164—Attorney who has appeared for party in divorce action is entitled to notice of motions to modify final divorce decree until substitution of attorney has been made (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 284-287, 1015).

Where an attorney has appeared for a party to a divorce action, he is entitled, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1015, to notice of other party's motions to modify final decree of divorce until valid substitution of attorneys has been made as provided in sections 284-287.

4. Appearance ⇨9(5)—Appearance of attorney solely to ask continuance is not "general appearance."

Where an attorney appears for the sole purpose of asking for a continuance, he is not deemed to make a "general appearance."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, General Appearance.]

5. Appearance ⇨19(3)—Plaintiff's attorney's request for continuance of hearing on defendant's motion was not waiver of objections to jurisdiction.

Plaintiff's counsel of record did not waive all objections to court's jurisdiction to hear motion to modify final decree of divorce on the merits by asking for a continuance of the hearing; an appearance for the sole purpose of asking for continuance not being a general appearance.

6. Divorce ⇨309—Defendant procuring reassignment to another department of motion to modify final decree of divorce was bound to give notice thereof.

Where defendant procured reassignment of his motion to modify, as respects support of child, final decree of divorce to another department for hearing, he was bound to give notice to plaintiff or his counsel of such reassignment.

7. Divorce ⇨309—Notice to office of plaintiff's counsel by telephone of reassignment of motion to modify final decree of divorce was insufficient.

Notice to office of plaintiff's counsel over the telephone that defendant had procured reassignment to another department of his motion to modify, as respects support of child, a final decree of divorce was insufficient, even if the impression was given that plaintiff's counsel had withdrawn from the case.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Benjamin K. Knight, Judge.

Divorce action by Oliver G. Tubby against Leah Rodman Tubby. From an order modifying a final decree of divorce, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. L. McNab, of San Francisco (R. H. Countryman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Clara Shortridge Foltz, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. On June 8, 1923, the defendant obtained an order modifying a final decree of divorce which had been granted to the plaintiff upon the ground of the defendant's willful desertion. In the final decree the custody of the minor child of the parties was awarded to the defendant "by the consent of the plaintiff," but no order was made respecting the payment for the care or support of the child. The property rights of the parties were settled out of court, and, by agreement, the plaintiff paid to the defendant the sum of $35 a month for the child's support. This continued until May, 1923, when the defendant served upon plaintiff an order to show cause and notice of motion to modify "the order heretofore made * * * and for a further order commanding the plaintiff to pay the sum of $50 per month for the support and maintenance of the minor child." Neither the order to show cause nor the notice of motion stated the grounds upon which they were based, and neither was served upon plaintiff's counsel of record. An affidavit of the defendant was referred to in the notice, but this was not served on either plaintiff or his counsel.

On the day set plaintiff's counsel appeared in open court and arranged for a continuance, and this was granted without any hearing on the merits of the motion. On June 8, 1923, the day to which the matter was continued, defendant's counsel procured an order from the presiding judge transferring the cause to another department for hearing at 10 o'clock a. m. of the same day. No notice of this transfer, either written or oral, was given to plaintiff or to his counsel. At 12 o'clock noon of that day the matter was called and the absence of plaintiff and his counsel was noted by the court. Upon the representation of defendant's counsel that she had communicated by telephone with the office of plaintiff's counsel and had been informed by some one in the office that said counsel had withdrawn from the case, the court heard the motion and entered an order awarding to the defendant the sole custody of the minor child and fixing the sum of $50 a month as the sum plaintiff should pay for the child's maintenance.

The appeal from this order is based upon the ground that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the trial court. The argument is founded upon the failure to state any grounds of the motion, the failure to serve appellant's attorney with any notice of any character, the failure to serve on either appellant or his attorney a copy of respondent's affidavit, and the failure to serve upon either any notice of the reassignment of the cause to the department where it was heard. Respondent does not answer any of the points raised by appellant, but rests her brief on the argument that the welfare of the child demands that the mother should have its custody and that the father should pay a reasonable sum for its support.

[1, 2] It is elementary that when written notice of a motion is required the grounds of the motion must be stated. Code Civ. Proc. § 1010. If reliance is placed on the grounds set forth in the affidavit to excuse the omission of the statement of grounds in the notice (Savage v. Smith, 170 Cal. 472, 150 P. 353), the affidavit does not cure the defect unless served with the notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 1010).

[3] It would seem equally clear that when an attorney has appeared for a party he is entitled to notice of motions of this character until a valid substitution has been made. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 285, 1015. The process of changing an attorney of record is provided in sections 284 to 287, Code of Civil Procedure, and until a valid change has been made the other party must recognize the former attorney.

[4, 5] When an attorney appears for the sole purpose of asking a continuance, he is not to be deemed to have made a general appearance (Davenport v. Superior Court, 183 Cal. 506, 509, 191 P. 911), and so, when appellant's counsel of record asked for a continuance of the hearing, he cannot be said to have waived all objections to the court's jurisdiction to hear the matter on the merits.

[6, 7] The continuance until June 8 being regular, it was incumbent upon the respondent to notify appellant or his counsel that the matter had been assigned to another department, and notice to the office over the telephone is not sufficient, even if the impression is given that counsel has withdrawn from the case. The danger of practice of this kind is illustrated by this particular case. Respondent's counsel proceeded on information from some one in her adversary's office that counsel had withdrawn from the case, and the hearing was held and the order made in the absence of both appellant and his counsel, and this telephone information was the only excuse for the failure to give legal notice. This information afterwards proved to be incorrect; appellant's counsel had not withdrawn, but he failed to appear because he had no notice of the place of hearing.

Order reversed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

83 Cal. App. 334

BINGHAM v. DOUGLASS et al. (Civ. 3283.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 23, 1927.

1. Schools and school districts ⚡69—Vote of electors at mass meeting for change of school site held not vote to change location of schoolhouse, requiring two-thirds majority (Pol. Code, § 1611).

Majority vote of electors of district, at mass meeting to change school site chosen by trustees, though less than two-thirds majority, held sufficient, notwithstanding Pol. Code, § 1611, requires vote in favor of changing location of schoolhouse to be two-thirds of electors voting.

2. Injunction ⚡78—Injunction to prevent trustees' purchase of site previously selected for school held not warranted by electors' vote to change site (Pol. Code, § 1611).

Vote of electors of district at mass meeting under Pol. Code, § 1611, that site chosen by trustees for school should be changed, held not instruction to board of trustees as to site to be purchased, requiring injunction to restrain purchase of site which trustees had previously selected.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by C. W. Bingham against E. E. Douglass, F. D. Arnold, and Joseph A. Wilson, as members of the Board of Trustees of the Manteca Grammar School District, and others, for an injunction. From judgment dismissing action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louttit, Stewart & Louttit, of Stockton, for appellant.

Daniel V. Marceau and R. C. Pardoe, both of Stockton, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. By this action the plaintiff sought an order of the superior court restraining and enjoining the board of trustees of the Manteca grammar school district from purchasing a certain site mentioned in the complaint and also to prevent the delivery of a certain warrant, as a part of the purchase price thereof. The demurrer of the defendants to the complaint was sustained, and, the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment of dismissal was entered. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

After the formal parts of the complaint, not necessary to be set forth herein, it is alleged that on or about the 16th day of March, 1925, after proper proceedings taken and had therefor, an election was held authorizing the issue of bonds in the sum of $60,000 for the purpose of raising money for purchasing school lots, etc.; that, after the sale of said bonds and the receipt of the money therefor, and the deposit of the same with the county treasurer of the county of San Joaquin, the board of trustees, on or about the 25th day of March, 1925, at a meeting of the board of trustees of said Manteca grammar school district, at which meeting all the members thereof were present, and of which meeting due notice had been given, there was entered on the minutes of said meeting the following statement, to wit: "After some discussion as to a site, the one known as the Spreckels site was chosen as the place to erect the new building." The complaint then alleges that thereafter, and on the 11th day of May, 1925, a petition was filed with the board of trustees of said district, signed by 535 persons residing in the said school district, more than 300 of whom were heads of families; that there were not in said district at said time more than 500 heads of families. The petition was in the following words:

"The undersigned, being the heads of families and the majority of the heads of families in said district, hereby petition the board of trustees of said school district to call a meeting of the qualified electors of said district for determining the location of the new schoolhouse for the construction of which bonds have heretofore been voted, and said board is hereby requested to give the notice or notices of such meetings as required by law."

That on the said 11th day of May, 1925, the board of trustees of the Manteca grammar school district adopted the following resolution:

"Be it resolved that this board do call a meeting in the Manteca school auditorium, on Monday, May 25th, at 8 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of considering the change of the site already selected by the trustees."

Notice of this meeting was given by posting the following:

"Notice of Mass Meeting. Notice is hereby given that a mass meeting of the electors of the Manteca grammar school district will be held at the Manteca School auditorium on Monday evening, May 25, 1925, at 8 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of considering the change of the site of the proposed new school. No other business will be transacted at this meeting. [Signed by the board of trustees.]"

The board of trustees had not entered into any contract for the purchase of the site referred to, called the "Spreckels site." Thereafter, and on or about the 11th day of June, 1925, the board of trustees of the said Manteca grammar school district drew a warrant in favor of the Spreckels Sugar Company, a corporation, in the sum of $3,638.40 in payment of 4.54 acres of land for a school site, and that plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore alleges that the 4.54 acres of land proposed to be purchased is the same tract of land hereinbefore described as the Spreckels site. It is further alleged that, unless restrained, the defendants will deliver said warrant to the said Spreckels Company.

[1] Section 1611 of the Political Code authorizes and requires boards of trustees in school districts, not including districts having city boards of education, to call mass meetings of the qualified electors for determining or changing the location of a schoolhouse. The procedure to be followed in such mass meetings is specifically mentioned. After setting forth the necessary procedure in assembling such mass meetings, the section specifies: "A meeting so called shall be competent to instruct the board of trustees: 1. In regard to the location or change of location of the schoolhouse or the use of the same for other than school purposes; * * * 2. In regard to the sale and purchase of school sites; 3. In regard to prosecuting, settling or compromising any litigation," etc., and other matters not involved in this proceeding; the section concluding with the following proviso: "Provided that the vote in favor of changing the location of the schoolhouse be two-thirds of all the electors voting at said meeting upon the proposition to change the location."

At the mass meeting of the electors of said district called as aforesaid, the following question was voted upon: "Shall the site chosen by the trustees known as the Spreckels site be changed?" One hundred and thirty-three voted affirmatively and one hundred and twenty-five negatively.

The appellant, basing his argument upon the affirmative vote of 133 as against the negative vote of 125, calls our attention to the following cases, from which it is concluded that the court erred in sustaining the defendants' demurrer, the demurrer of the defendants having been sustained apparently on the theory that a two-thirds affirmative vote upon the proposition presented was necessary under the last proviso contained in section 1611 of the Political Code:

In the case of Landers v. Van Aukin, 77 Or. 479, 151 P. 712, the Supreme Court of Oregon had before it a somewhat similar question. It was there held that, under the school laws of that state, by majority vote of any legally called school meeting a schoolhouse site may be selected, but that it required a two-third vote to order the removal of a schoolhouse.

In Griebel v. School District No. 6, 110 Kan. 317, 203 P. 718, the Supreme Court of Kansas held that it is competent for a school district to acquire more than one site and locate additional school buildings thereon, where more schools are necessary in the district, and the purchase of such additional sites may be authorized by a majority of those voting at a regularly called meeting.

In the case of Lumijarvi v. School District, 112 Or. 344, 229 P. 684, under a somewhat similar statute, the Supreme Court of Oregon again held that, in order to purchase a schoolhouse site only a majority vote of the electors in mass meeting assembled was necessary, but that it required a two-third vote of those present to order a removal of a schoolhouse.

In Behrens v. Bechtel, 131 Wash. 508, 230 P. 426, it was held that a majority vote of the electors in mass meeting assembled only was necessary to authorize or direct the purchase of a site.

In the case of Jennings v. Clearwater School Dist., 65 Cal. App. 102, 223 P. 84, the Court of Appeals of this state held a majority vote of the electors present sufficient to adopt a resolution selecting a new school site and directing the erection of a schoolhouse thereon, where such resolution does not call for the sale or abandonment of the school already maintained.

In answer to the construction placed upon the Code provisions under consideration by the authorities above cited, the respondent calls our attention to the meaning of the word "location," some of which may be found in 38 C. J. 132, and argues the conclusion that the last proviso contained in section 1611 relative to the change of the location of the schoolhouse includes also a site selected by the board of school trustees. The section of the Code, however, sets forth the meaning of the Legislature in clear and unmistakable language. Subdivision 2, which we have quoted, specifies that the electors possess authority to instruct the board of trustees "in regard to the sale and purchase of school sites." In so far as this exercise of authority is conferred, the section makes no mention of the necessity of two-thirds of the electors at such mass meetings voting in favor of the resolution instructing the trustees in regard to the sale and purchase of school sites. It is only when the removal of the schoolhouse is to be had that two-thirds of the electors must vote affirmatively. There is a clear distinction between changing a location for a schoolhouse and the changing of the location of the schoolhouse. The proviso does not apply, unless the latter condition is involved. It is urged by respondent that the requirement of a two-third affirmative vote could not be had or would not be required until the last nail is driven or the last paint brush is swung on the building designated as a schoolhouse, unless it also applies to a site selected for the schoolhouse. In this particular we think the argument begins at the wrong end of the proposition. The court would look to the intent of the Legislature, which is to guard against an ill-considered sacrifice of public property, and that the application of the proviso would take place immediately upon any substantial portion of the schoolhouse being built upon or installed upon a site selected for the schoolhouse; that so long as the site remains the site it is subject to change, as stated, in the cases which we have cited, but the very moment it begins to be the location of the schoolhouse, the provision, as we have said, intended to guard against ill considered action and sacrifice of public property applies and requires a two-third vote.

[2] Does this conclusion necessitate a reversal herein? We think not. As heretofore stated, section 1611, Political Code, authorizes the electors in mass meeting assembled to instruct the board of directors. In the instant case there is no instruction as to the location of the school building. There is, of course, no instruction as to the change of the schoolhouse. The language of the proposition voted on was simply, "Shall the site chosen by the trustees known as the Spreckels site be changed?" That is not an instruction as to where the schoolhouse is to be located. It amounts simply to a meaningless gesture. The board of school trustees of the Manteca school district were given no information whatever as to where the school should be placed, nor were they directed as to the site to be purchased. Whether the language of the proposition submitted to the voters was purposely worded so as to make it meaningless is of no moment now. The electors simply did not instruct the board of trustees as to the site to be purchased, and that is conclusive in favor of the judgment of the trial court. In several of the cases which we have referred to, what is necessary to instruct as to the sites is set forth. In these instances the electors designated the sites to be purchased.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 298

PARRISH v. AMERICAN RY. EMPLOYEES' PUB. CORPORATION. (Civ. 5330.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 23, 1927.

1. Words and phrases—"Cash" in its ordinary sense is antonym of "credit."

"Cash" in its ordinary sense is an antonym of "credit" as generally understood and defined by the courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series. Cash; Credit.]

2. Corporations §99(1)—Corporation issuing stock in violation of permit authorizing sale at par for cash may not thereafter recover its value.

Where corporation issued stock without any payment of cash in violation of terms of permit authorizing sale of stock at par for cash, it may not thereafter recover value thereof, since it was in pari delicto in consummating the transaction.

3. Corporations §99(1)—Acceptance of corporate stock authorized to be sold for cash held not agreement to pay cash so as to make transaction legal (Civ. Code, § 1784).

Where corporate stock under terms of permit was required to be sold at par for cash, acceptance of stock and exercise of acts of ownership held not to constitute such an agreement to pay purchase price therefor in cash upon delivery, within meaning of Civ. Code, § 1784, sufficient to make transaction legal and serve as basis for recovery of value thereof by corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Action by R. L. Parrish against the American Railway Employees' Publishing Corporation, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William M. Morse, Jr., and Rosecrans & Emme, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Clark & Law, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by the defendant corporation from an adverse judgment given on a cross-complaint to recover from plaintiff the par value of 997 shares of defendant's capital stock issued to plaintiff while he was serving as an officer and employee of said corporation. The question presented for determination is whether the trial court erred in holding as it did that the issuance of said stock was violative of the permit granted by the corporation commissioner and therefore constituted an illegal transaction upon which no recovery may be had.

In February, 1921, defendant, being then engaged in the publishing business, entered into a written contract with plaintiff to manage and conduct its affairs for a period of five years for a stated salary and a percentage of the gross receipts. A year later, in February, 1922, plaintiff commenced the instant action to collect wages claimed to be due in the sum of $987.62; also an assigned claim for printing. Besides answering, defendant filed a cross-complaint containing three counts, the second of which was for the recovery of the par value of said stock. The circumstances relating to the issuance of said stock were as follows: After accepting the employment under said written contract, plaintiff was made a member of the board of directors, consisting of five members, and elected treasurer of said corporation. While acting in such capacities the corporation issued and delivered to him two certificates calling for an aggregate of 997 shares of its capital stock of the par value of $1 each, both certificates being regularly signed by the president and the secretary of said corporation. The permit granted by the corporation commissioner to defendant authorized the latter to issue and dispose of its stock "at par, for cash," and it is admitted that plaintiff did not pay or expressly agree to pay any cash or other consideration for said stock. It does not appear from the record why said stock was issued to or accepted by plaintiff, but does show that plaintiff signed no subscription agreement for the same; that the stock was not issued to him as a gratuity, by way of bonus, or on credit; and that, although the same was issued "by the president and secretary of defendant corporation in the regular course of business," plaintiff made no "arrangements of any kind whatsoever with the board of directors" with reference to the issuance thereof. The stock remained in plaintiff's possession or under his control, and was voted by him at corporate meetings, until the commencement of the trial of this action in October, 1922, at which time he offered to surrender the two certificates to defendant, who refused to accept them; whereupon the court ordered said certificates deposited with the clerk of the court.

In the case of Domenigoni v. Imperial Live Stock, etc., Co., 189 Cal. 467, 209 P. 36, a permit issued by the corporation commissioner authorized the sale of stock "upon subscription agreements providing for the payment of 25 per cent. of the subscription price in cash, and the execution of promissory notes bearing interest at 6 per cent., by the subscriber for the balance." In lieu of making the initial cash payment, a purchaser delivered to the salesman as agent for the corporation issuing the stock his promissory note for 25 per cent. of the purchase price, payable to himself in six months, and the note was then indorsed and delivered to said agent. Action was afterwards brought by the purchaser to cancel said note and the others given for the balance of the subscription, upon the ground that the transaction was violative of the terms of the permit.

In reversing the judgment the Supreme Court held in substance that said note was delivered to the stock salesman as the agent of the corporation and not as his own, in payment of the initial installment due on the purchase price of said stock, and that it was plain that the transaction evidenced thereby was planned and executed in an endeavor to circumvent the statute and evade the requirements of the permit allowing the corporation to sell its stock, and was therefore illegal; but that the purchaser, having been equally guilty with the corporation in such circumvention and evasion, was entitled to no relief even if the point was not raised on appeal.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that the case just cited is decisive of the present appeal. Here the permit required the stock to be issued "for cash," which excluded the idea of credit (Philadelphia & Reading R. Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co., 36 Pa. 204; Berlaimsky v. Rosenthal, 104 Me. 62, 71 A. 69; Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253; State v. Woodward, 208 Ala. 31, 93 So. 826), and required payment concurrent with delivery (Mears v. Biddle, 122 Me. 392, 120 A. 181). In other words, "cash" in its ordinary sense is the antonym of "credit," and the courts have so generally understood and defined it. State v. Woodward, supra. Admittedly, the instant transaction was consummated without the payment of any cash to the corporation at any time. It was therefore violative of the terms of the permit; and the defendant corporation, being in pari delicto with plaintiff in consummating said transaction, is not entitled to any relief.

[3] Defendant advances the theory that because plaintiff accepted delivery of said stock and afterwards exercised acts of ownership over the same, the implication of law is that he agreed to pay the purchase price therefor in cash and that since no time of payment was fixed by the parties payment was due upon delivery. Gilfallan v. Gilfallan, 168 Cal. 23, 141 P. 623, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 784; Civ. Code, § 1784. There would be much merit in defendant's theory were we considering the question of a sale of personal property which was free from statutory regulations and control. But such is not the case. The subject of this controversy is corporate stock, which is required to be issued and disposed of in strict conformity with the permit granted for that purpose by the corporation commissioner, and this was not done. The transaction was therefore illegal and cannot serve as the basis of recovery.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

83 Cal. App. 173

REICHHOLD v. SOMMARSTROM INV. CO.
et al. (Civ. 5473.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 18, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 13, 1927.

1. Landlord and tenant §171(3)—Any disturbance of tenant's possession by landlord is constructive eviction if tenant so elects.

Any disturbance of tenant's possession by landlord or one acting under his authority rendering premises unfit for occupancy for purposes for which they are demised, or depriving tenant of beneficial enjoyment of premises, amounts to constructive eviction if tenant so elects, actual ouster being unnecessary.

2. Landlord and tenant §150(3)—Landlord's authority to enter and put premises in safe condition did not authorize improvements exceeding those ordered by city inspector; "trespass" (Civ. Code, § 1941).

Landlord's right to enter premises and put them in safe condition, under Civ. Code, § 1941, held not to warrant extensive improvements in addition to those ordered by city inspector, and making of such improvements constituted "trespass."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, "Trespass."]

3. Landlord and tenant §130(4)—In estimating tenant's damage by landlord's disturbance of possession, deprivation of use of premises, including profits of established business, may be considered.

In estimating damage to tenant due to landlord's disturbance of his possession, it is proper to consider enforced removal to another place of business and damage resulting from being deprived of use of premises abandoned, which would include actual profits from established business.

4. Landlord and tenant §80(4)—Tenant held not released from liability for landlord's interference with subtenant's possession by building wall requested by tenant.

In subtenant's action for damages for interference with possession by building of partition wall at request of tenant occupying part of premises, tenant was not released from liability on ground that act was that of landlord.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Henry Reichhold against the Sommarstrom Investment Company and others, in which Arthur Reichhold, administrator of the estate of Henry Reichhold, deceased, was substituted as plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant and another appeal. Affirmed.

H. W. Brunk and J. E. Pemberton, both of Berkeley, for appellant Witkow.

C. L. Colvin, of Oakland, for appellant Sommarstrom Inv. Co.

James M. Koford, of Oakland, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action for damages for disturbance of lease. Defendant Sommarstrom Investment Company, a corporation, was at the time of the commencement of this action the owner of a three-story building situated in the city of Berkeley. The two upper stories thereof were divided into apartments, which were occupied by some fifteen families. The lower story was divided into stores used for business purposes. These stores were leased by the company to one Witkow, codefendant herein, for a term of five years ending on December 15, 1924. The stores were not partitioned off one from the other, but constituted one large space with three entrances. From the 15th day of September, 1919, Witkow conducted and carried on a grocery in the premises, the business occupying about two-thirds of the space thereof. About April 17, 1920, he subleased to plaintiff the portion of the premises not used by him. The space so leased extended from the north wall of the building to a row of wooden pillars which supported the superstructure and formed a part of the wall dividing the stores. This lease was for a period beginning May 15, 1920, and ending September, 1924. The premises were to be used by plaintiff for the purpose of conducting a butcher shop, and this, together with the grocery business of defendant Witkow, constituted what was known as the "Sunkist Market." The complaint alleges, in substance, that plaintiff began operating his business under his lease, and built up and enjoyed a profitable trade as retail butcher and dealer in meats from the patronage of a large number of householders, residents of the vicinity and neighborhood, and also from the patrons of the grocery department of the market. That on January 10, 1923, and against his will and consent, defendants broke and entered into the premises so occupied by plaintiff as tenant, and forcibly and unlawfully began the alteration and change of the premises by tearing out the north and rear walls, and the ceiling and floor thereof, and erecting a solid wall and partition which cut off completely the space leased by plaintiff from the other part of the premises occupied by the market. That by reason of said action on the part of defendants dirt, plaster, and other foreign substances covered the meats handled and sold by plaintiff, and rendered the conduct of his business in said premises impossible; that in consequence of these acts, plaintiff was forbidden by the food inspector of the city of Berkeley from conducting his business in said premises; that said action of defendants rendered the premises totally unfit for his business, and as a result thereof he was compelled to and did move from the premises, thereby suffering the loss of his established trade, his leasehold interest, and damage to his fixtures by reason of such removal. Judgment was prayed for in the sum of $5,085.

Defendant investment company, answering, alleged, among other things, that its acts were warranted by law and under the terms of the lease with Witkow, the provisions of which were known to plaintiff. By way of special defense it further alleged that on or about the 10th day of January, 1923, the building of which the stores were a part became dilapidated, unsafe, and dangerous, and that the company and the lessees were notified by the building inspector of the city of Berkeley that it would be condemned and closed unless steps were immediately taken to place it in a safe and sound condition, and defendants and plaintiff were ordered to do certain work to accomplish this result. It is then charged that plaintiff and defendant Witkow neglected to make the repairs so ordered, and defendant thereupon, at the request and with the consent of the lessees, entered upon the premises for the purpose of complying with the order of the building inspector, and that all the changes made were necessary to render the building safe; that the partition, the erection of which is complained of by plaintiff, was reinstalled at plaintiff's request; that during the course of the alterations he, without any necessity therefor, voluntarily removed from the premises for the reason that his business had proved unprofitable. Defendant Witkow, after denying any loss on the part of plaintiff, set up the special plea that the work was done by his codefendant Sommarstrom Investment Company, or the city officials, and whatever injuries the plaintiff may have suffered were inflicted by them and not by him. It appeared in evidence that the improvements made were of an extensive character. The changes consisted in the removal of fourteen wooden pillars and the replacing of them with steel; the tearing up the floor completely and replacing it with cement and taking off and replacing the plaster of the ceilings, and all walls, and the erection of a solid partition cutting plaintiff's place of business entirely off from the adjoining space occupied by the grocery and fruit market. It also appeared that the city building inspector had found four of the wooden pillars decayed, and ordered them repaired, but that he did not order the extensive alterations which were made or any improvement other than the removal of the decayed pillars. It further appeared from the testimony of Witkow that upon the commencement of the work he had moved across the street for the reason that he could not conduct his business while the work was in progress; that it was at his request the partition wall was erected, as he did not want a butcher of plaintiff's type in the premises. From this and other evidence the trial court found, in effect, that all of plaintiff's allegations were true. It also found that the Sommarstrom Investment Company had consented, in writing, to the subletting by Witkow to plaintiff of the premises in question; that the extensive alterations made were not made necessary under the notice from the public authorities to put the building in a safe condition; and that plaintiff never consented thereto.

[1-4] Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,125 and costs of suit. As ground for reversal it is claimed that section 1941 of the Civil Code imposed upon the defendant investment company, as landlord of the building, the duty of keeping the leased premises in a condition fit for human occupation, and that in furtherance of this duty it had a right to enter upon the premises to do the work in question. It is further claimed that the lease of the company made with defendant Witkow contained a covenant that the lessor should not be responsible for any damage to persons or property upon the premises, and also that it might enter the same for the purpose of putting the building in a first class condition; that plaintiff took his sublease in subordination to these conditions in his immediate lessor's lease and subject to them, and was therefore bound equally with him by the conditions. We do not consider there is any merit in these claims. It is an established rule that any disturbance of a tenant's possession by a landlord or by some one acting under his authority, whereby the premises are rendered unfit for occupancy for the purposes for which they are demised, or the tenant is deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, amounts to a constructive eviction if the tenant so elects and surrenders his possession. Veysey v. Moriyama, 184 Cal. 802, 195 P. 662, 20 A. L. R. 1363; Agar v. Winslow, 123 Cal. 587, 56 P. 422, 69 Am. St. Rep. 84. It is not necessary that there should be an actual ouster to constitute such eviction. 15 Cal. Jur. p. 684, § 93. Conceding the right in the landlord to have entered the premises to put them in a safe condition, this authority did not warrant it in making the extensive improvements which it did. A right of entry for one purpose will not justify the performance of acts for another purpose; and the making of the improvements in question without the consent of plaintiff, beyond question constituted a trespass. Dwyer v. Carroll, 86 Cal. 298, 24 P. 1015. Here the evidence shows that the only improvement necessary to insure the safety of the building was the repair of four of the wooden pillars, an improvement which could be accomplished in a short space of time. This was all that the city inspector had ordered. The company therefore had no right to disturb plaintiff's possession beyond that reasonably necessary to comply with the demand, and, having done so, it was bound to compensate the tenant for the loss he suffered by reason of being compelled to abandon the leased premises for the unexpired term.

In estimating this damage it was proper to consider evidence concerning the enforced removal to another place of business and also evidence regarding damage which resulted from being deprived of the use of the premises abandoned, which would include actual profits from the established business. Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159, 25 P. 1114, 22 Am. St. Rep. 291; 15 Cal. Jur. 824. Such proof was properly presented and considered. Plaintiff's lease had twenty months more to run and he was doing business in excess of $2,000 per month, of which about $400 was gross profit, and his expenses were small. From a consideration and review of the entire case it clearly appears that the extensive improvements made by defendant company were not required or compelled by the public authorities. The contention that, in any event, Witkow cannot be held liable for the acts of his codefendant investment company is without merit. From his own testimony it appears that it was at his request that the partition wall was constructed which cut off plaintiff's space from the rest of the premises, and that he did so for the purpose of getting rid of plaintiff.

The judgment should be and it is hereby affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

83 Cal. App. 69

CALIFORNIA STEARNS CO. v. TREADWELL et al. (Civ. 4527.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 12, 1927.

1. Fraud §11(1) — Misrepresentation as to year model of automobile held material and actionable as "statement of fact."

False representation that automobile was 1922 model held material and actionable as a false "statement of fact," not to be considered as a mere expression of opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Statement of Fact.]

2. Fraud §66—Finding held to indicate that, had court found specifically, it would have found reliance on misrepresentation inducing purchase of automobile.

Trial court's finding that automobile buyers did not know that automobile was not 1922 model as represented held to indicate that, if the court had found specifically, it would have found that they relied upon the statement and were thereby induced to make the purchase.

3. Judgment §248—Admission of damage in answer to cross-complaint for deceit held binding on court.

Admission of $300 damage in answer to cross-complaint alleging fraudulent misrepresentation in sale of automobile held binding on court.

4. Appeal and error §916(1) — On appeal from judgment, not recognizing admission of damage made in answer, presumption is that no testimony was introduced contradicting such admission.

On appeal from a judgment which failed to recognize that the answer to defendant's cross-complaint admitted damage to the extent of $330, held presumption was that no testimony was introduced contradicting the admission.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by the California Stearns Company against A. W. Treadwell and another. Defendants brought a cross-action. Judgment for defendants on the complaint, from which a separate appeal was prosecuted. Judgment for plaintiff on the cross-complaint, and defendants appeal. Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

See, also, 256 P. 242.

Wright & McKee and Treadwell, Tompkins & Clark, all of San Diego, for appellants.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. An action was commenced by the plaintiff against defendants, to recover from defendants $2,000 of the purchase price of a Stearns automobile, and judgment went for the defendants. A separate appeal was prosecuted by the plaintiff from that part of the judgment denying it relief. The defendants and appellants A. W. Treadwell and E. L. Treadwell filed a cross-complaint alleging that, at the time of their purchase of the Stearns automobile for the sum of $2,770, made up of $2,000 in cash and a used automobile valued at $770, it was represented that the automobile being purchased was a 1922 year model; that in truth it was not a 1922 model, but a 1921 model; that plaintiff was well aware of the fact that it was a 1921 model; that defendants and cross-complainants relied upon the representation; and that, by reason of its purchase due to such reliance and inducement, they were damaged in the sum of $620 or the difference in the value and selling price of the two models. After the overruling of a general demurrer interposed by the plaintiff, it filed its answer to the cross-complaint, in which it denied that the representation was falsely made with intent to deceive or that plaintiff relied thereon, denied that the selling price or the value of the car sold and delivered was $2,150 or other than $2,350, and denied that defendants were damaged in any sum in excess of $330. Responsive to these issues the court found that plaintiff falsely represented to the appellant A. W. Treadwell that the automobile was a 1922 year model; that it was "a 1921 year model Stearns automobile, remodeled and refitted so as to bring it up to 1922 specifications"; that, while cross-complainants examined the automobile, "they did not know that it had originally been a 1921 model; that the price for which plaintiff was selling said 1921 year model Stearns automobile, brought up to 1922 specifications," and the value thereof, was $2,350; and that the price paid for the automobile by cross-complainants, aside from accessories and extras, was the sum of $2,350; and that cross-complainants had not been damaged in any sum. Judgment was entered for defendants upon the complaint and answer and for plaintiff and cross-defendant upon the cross-complaint and answer thereto. The appellants prosecute this appeal upon the judgment roll alone from that part of the judgment which declared that they take nothing by their cross-complaint.

[1] As reasons for a reversal, they urge that the court failed to find upon a material issue, to wit, whether cross-complainants relied upon and were induced to purchase by the misrepresentation found by the court to have been made, and also that the answer of plaintiff and cross-defendant admitted damage to appellants in the sum of $330, which relief was denied to appellants by the judgment. In reply to this the respondent urges that the cross-complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in this, that the cross-complaint fails to show wherein the misrepresentation was material or damaged the cross-complainants. That the misrepresentation was material we think satisfactorily appears from the allegations heretofore epitomized to the effect that the selling price and value of the two models differed in the sum of $620, and brings the case within the rule announced in the cases of Hodgkins v. Dunham, 10 Cal. App. 690, 103 P. 351, and Jones v. Grieve, 15 Cal. App. 561, 115 P. 333.

[2] With respect to the first contention of appellants, the court found that appellants "did not know that it" (the automobile) "had originally been a 1921 model." This indicates that, if the court had found specifically upon the issue, it would have found that appellants did rely upon the statement and were induced thereby to make the contract of purchase, so that we can agree with the appellants' language that, "had plaintiff's answer to the cross-complaint denied instead of admitted damages, the omission by the trial court to find as to the reliance and inducement might not have been of sufficient moment to warrant any disturbance of the judgment. * * *

[3, 4] The real question to be settled here, then, is whether the court was bound by the admission in the answer. The answer plainly admits that appellants were damaged in the sum of $330, and also that the value of the car actually delivered was $2,350, and, in fact, the prayer asks that cross-complainants take nothing by their cross-complaint "other than the sum of $330." The pleader himself was impressed with the fact that his admission was sufficient to entitle appellants to relief in the sum admitted. Under these circumstances the only issue as to damage upon which the court could pass or find was concerning the damages, if any, in excess of $330. As to this issue, of course, the finding of the court that there was no damage must be construed to mean that there was no damage in excess of $330. Respondent insists that the presumption obtains that the judgment is regular and supported by the testimony adduced at the trial, but this same argument was disposed of in the cases of Romer v. Wehner, 61 Cal. App. 411, 214 P. 993, and Welch v. Abbot, 185 Cal. 731-754, 198 P. 626, contrary to respondent's views. It is there stated that the presumption is that no testimony was introduced to contradict the admission in the answer. The appellants were entitled to have and recover from plaintiff the sum of $330, and the judgment should be modified accordingly.

The judgment is modified by allowing to cross-complainants A. W. Treadwell and E. L. Treadwell the sum of $330, and, after such modification, is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; MURPHEY, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 74

BROWN v. BROWN. (Civ. 3267.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 12, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 11, 1927.

1. Courts ⇨92—Dicta to effect that husband and wife after separation cannot contract as to disposition of property held not binding in subsequent case directly involving such question (Civ. Code, §§ 158, 159).

Dicta to effect that husband and wife, under Civ. Code, §§ 158, 159, after separation, cannot contract with each other concerning property interests, while worthy of consideration, is not binding on court in subsequent case in which such question was directly presented.

2. Husband and wife ⇨278(2)—Statute held not to prohibit husband and wife from contracting as to property after separation; "immediate separation" (Civ. Code, §§ 158, 159).

In view of Civ. Code, § 158, permitting husband and wife to contract, section 159, prohibiting them by contract with each other from altering legal relations except as to property and except where they agree in writing to "immediate separation," which means instantaneous, present act, something which has been completed, and not event to take place in future, involves public policy only as to maintenance of institution of marriage, and does not prohibit husband and wife from contracting with each other after separation as to their property interests.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Immediate.]

3. Husband and wife ⚡278(5)—Mutual consent of husband and wife to contract after separation as to property interest held sufficient consideration (Civ. Code, §§ 159, 160).

Mutual consent of husband and wife to contract under Civ. Code, § 159, after separation governing their property interests was sufficient consideration under section 160.

4. Husband and wife ⚡278(5)—Waivers of wife in contract with husband after separation relating to her property interest held valid consideration for contract (Civ. Code, § 159).

Waivers on part of wife as to her property interest in contract after separation in pursuance of Civ. Code, § 159, held to constitute sufficient consideration for contract.

5. Husband and wife ⚡278(1)—Contract between husband and wife after separation dividing property held not void for continuance in effect until death of wife (Civ. Code, § 159).

Contract of husband and wife after separation in pursuance of Civ. Code, § 159, relating to division of property, was not void because it purported to continue in full force until death of wife.

6. Husband and wife ⚡280—Provisions in separation agreement as to disposition of property and for support of wife for life held not abrogated by subsequent absolute divorce (Civ. Code, § 159).

Subsequent absolute divorce held not to abrogate separation agreement between husband and wife pursuant to Civ. Code, § 159, settling property interests and providing for support of wife for life.

7. Appeal and error ⚡837(2)—Files and pleadings of another case between same parties, not introduced in trial court, cannot be considered on appeal.

In divorce suit in which defendant husband in cross-complaint set up separation agreement, to have brought proceedings in former case between same parties to court's attention it would have been necessary to introduce in evidence files and pleadings therein, and, such not being done at trial, such papers cannot be considered on appeal.

8. Evidence ⚡43(3)—Rule that courts take judicial notice of their records is limited to proceedings in same case.

Rule that courts take judicial notice of their own records is limited to proceedings in same case.

9. Appeal and error ⚡1071(1)—Apparent conflict between finding that separation agreement covenanted to pay wife income for maintenance and support and finding that it was property settlement held not reversible error (Civ. Code, §§ 158, 159).

Separation agreement between husband and wife providing for payment to wife of certain income per month for her life, in which wife waived certain claims on husband's property, partook both of nature of property settlement and agreement for support and maintenance, sustainable under Civ. Code, § 158, or section 159, and fact that trial court in one finding referred to it as agreement for maintenance and support and in another as property settlement was not reversible error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Suit by Sarah M. Brown against George H. Brown for a divorce. Decree granting defendant a divorce on his cross-complaint, and from part of the decree relating to a property settlement, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dozier, Kimball & Dozier, of San Francisco, for appellant.

F. P. Tuttle, of Oakland, Raglan Tuttle, of Auburn, and Donald McClure, of Oakland, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. In this action the appellant was awarded an interlocutory decree of divorce upon his cross-complaint alleging extreme cruelty. The decree of divorce is not attacked. The only questions presented for consideration relate to a certain agreement entered into between the parties after separation and prior to the institution of this action.

The appellant, in his cross-complaint, after alleging the grounds upon which the interlocutory decree in his favor was rendered, sets forth the agreement just mentioned and alleges that said agreement is void in that it does not contain the written consent of the parties thereto to an immediate or other separation; that the written agreement attempts and purports to provide for the permanent support of the plaintiff by the defendant and to release the defendant and all of his property from any and all claims of inheritance and of marriage claims of plaintiff thereto, save and except that said agreement purports to provide a lien for the enforcement of these provisions for the support of the plaintiff, etc.

There is no allegation in the cross-complaint in reference to the agreement setting forth that the same was entered into either through mistake, fraud, duress, undue influence, or without a full and complete understanding of all its terms and provisions, nor is there anything in the cross-complaint tending to show that there was not a complete meeting of the minds and intentions of the parties entering into the same. The attack upon the agreement is based upon the allegations that it does not contain any stipulations providing for the immediate separation of the parties. The agreement itself, in so far as its provisions need to be considered, is in the following words and figures:

"This agreement, made and entered into this 19th day of March, 1923, by and between

George H. Brown, the party of the first part, and Sarah M. Brown, the party of the second part, witnesseth:

"Whereas, the parties hereto are living separate and apart and it is desirous that a settlement of property rights be had, it is mutually agreed as follows:

"That the party of the first part will pay to the party of the second part upon the execution of this agreement, the sum of $250, and the further sum of $150 per month from the date of this agreement, payable in advance, until the death of the party of the second part, said payments to be deposited in the Bank of Loomis, Loomis, county of Placer, state of California, each month to the credit of the party of the second part.

"It is further agreed and understood that the estate of the party of the first part shall be holden for said monthly payments until the death of the party of the second part; that to secure the payment of said $150 per month, the party of the first part has, concurrently herewith, executed a deed of trust on lot 8 of the Light tract, containing 21.80 acres, situated in the south half of section 7, township 11 north, range 8 east, M. D. B. & M., as per map or plan of said tract now on file in the office of the county recorder of the county of Placer, state of California; upon the death of the party of the second part hereunder, the trustees named in said deed of trust, to wit, Raglan Tuttle, W. J. Prewett, and J. J. Callison, shall thereupon reconvey all title vested in them by and under said deed of trust, to the said party of the first part. * * *

"The party of the first part agrees to pay to Raglan Tuttle, the attorney for the party of the second part, the sum of $150 in full compensation for his services in representing the party of the second part, and will also pay the costs thus far incurred, amounting to $10.25.

"In consideration of the foregoing, the party of the second part agrees to join with the party of the first part in executing and placing of record an abandonment of homestead placed on the property of the party of the first part by the party of the second part on the 1st day of September, 1920, which homestead is found recorded in Book 'E' of homesteads, at page 399, and the party of the second part does hereby agree that she will not in the future cause any of the property of the party of the first part to be impressed or subject to a homestead placed thereon by herself.

"The party of the second part does hereby waive, renounce, and relinquish all claim by reason of the marriage relation or by the laws of inheritance, to any and all property of the party of the first part, save and except as herein in this agreement provided, and she does hereby waive all right of inheritance to the property of the party of the first part in favor of the other heirs of the party of the first part.

"The party of the first part does hereby waive, renounce and relinquish all claim to the property of the party of the second part and does hereby waive, renounce and relinquish all right of inheritance to the property of the party of the second part in favor of the other heirs of the party of the second part. * * *

"It is mutually agreed and understood that at the time of the execution of this agreement, that the parties hereto have actually separated and that this is an agreement entered into after actual separation.

"This agreement shall bind the heirs, executors, and assigns of the parties to the same.

"In witness whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands this 19th day of March, 1923.

George H. Brown.

"Sarah M. Brown.

"Approved by Raglan Tuttle, Attorney for Sarah M. Brown.

"Approved by Prewett & Chamberlain, Attorneys for George H. Brown."

This agreement was acknowledged by both of the parties thereto and on the same day filed for record by the appellant in the office of the county recorder of Placer county.

As a preliminary statement, it is set forth that the parties are living separate and apart and are desirous of settling their property rights, and in the conclusion it is further affirmed that the parties have actually separated and the agreement is entered into after actual separation.

Two sections of the Civil Code are involved in the consideration of this agreement, to wit, section 158, Civil Code, which reads: "Either husband or wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with the other, or with any other person, respecting property, which either might if unmarried; subject, in transactions between themselves, to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other, as defined by the title on trusts"—and section 159, Civil Code, which provides as follows: "A husband and wife cannot, by any contract with each other, alter their legal relations, except as to property, and except that they may agree, in writing, to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them and of their children during such separation."

Basing his argument on the latter section, it is urged that the agreement is invalid and is an agreement prohibited by the terms of the section, in that to uphold such an agreement there must be a statement contained therein that the parties have agreed to an immediate separation and that if the separation has already taken place, then, and in that case, the parties possess no power to enter into an agreement adjusting their property rights, or for the purpose of making provision for the support of either of them. To support this contention, the cases of Pereira v. Pereira, 156 Cal. 1, 103 P. 488, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107; Rottman v. Rottman, 55 Cal. App. 625, 204 P. 46; Sanguinetti v. Sanguinetti, 51 Cal. App. 347, 196 P. 799; Marshall v. Marshall, 46 Cal. App. Dec. 1,¹ and a few others are cited.

With only a casual reading, it might appear that these cases establish the invalidity of the contract under consideration, but upon careful consideration, we think that the facts involved are so different that the ruling had in the principal case, to wit, the case of Pereira v. Pereira, and followed by the others, is distinguishable from that which should be had in the case at bar. In the Pereira Case, the agreement related to a future separation of the parties, to a future contemplated action for divorce, and provided that if at a subsequent time a divorce should be obtained, then, and in that case, a certain sum of money should be paid according to the terms of the agreement. The court refers to the two sections of the Civil Code, which we have here set forth, the one giving power either to the husband or wife to enter into any agreement with the other respecting property which they might do if not married, and the other concerning an agreement arranging for an immediate separation and making provision for support, etc., and then takes up the crucial point involved in the agreement under consideration, to wit, one relating to the payment of a certain sum of money in the event of the future dissolution of the marriage relation. The opinion then says, "The law does not countenance such agreements," and quotes from former opinions the following: "Any contract between the parties having for its object the dissolution of the marriage contract, or facilitating that result, * * * is void as contra bonos mores," citing Loveren v. Loveren, 106 Cal. 512, 39 P. 802; Beard v. Beard, 65 Cal. 354, 4 P. 229; Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 289, 61 P. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548—and then quotes from Seeley's Appeal, 56 Conn. 206, 14 A. 291, a paragraph from the opinion of the Connecticut Supreme Court giving the reasons why a contract having for its purpose the future dissolution of the marriage relation must be held void. The Pereira Case and those following the rule there laid down simply reiterate the well-established principle that the marriage relation can only be dissolved by a court of competent jurisdiction, and that agreements facilitating and having for their object the dissolution of the marriage relation are contrary to public policy. In the case of Rottman v. Rottman, 55 Cal. App. 624, 204 P. 46, we have an agreement entered into between husband and wife providing for a future contingency, or, as therein stated, the husband was placed in the position that he might at any time abandon the wife or commit any breach of the marriage covenant with impunity, except that respondent could secure a decree of divorce from him. "By the contracts he was granted complete immunity from any financial charge whatever, and that, too, whether he continued to live with his wife, either as a faithful or faithless husband, or whether he deserted her in whatever shameless a manner, and he was equally freed from liability to suit for separate maintenance, however flagrant his conduct." Irrespective of section 159, Civil Code, no other conclusion could have been reached except that the contract was void as against public policy.

¹ For opinion on hearing by Supreme Court, see 196 Cal. 761, 239 P. 36.

In the case of Sanguinetti v. Sanguinetti, 51 Cal. App. 347, 196 P. 799, no question of separation was involved, and the court held as follows:

"In view of the provisions of sections 158 and 159 of the Civil Code, a husband or wife without entering into an agreement in writing for an immediate separation may convey to the other all title and interest in the community property or the separate property of the other, and where a wife for a valuable consideration, and in the absence of any unfair advantage taken by the husband, waives and relinquishes to him all of her interest in the community property and in his separate property, she cannot thereafter declare a homestead on any of the property, although they continue to live together as husband and wife."

It is also pointed out in the Sanguinetti Case that while section 159 reads a husband, wife cannot, by any contract with each other, alter their legal relations, except as to property, and except that they may agree, in writing, to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them and their children during separation, "it is to be observed, however, that the clause permitting them to alter their 'legal relations' in reference to property is not connected with or modified by the provision relating to an agreement for a separation." The court then says:

"It might be a fair construction to hold that a contract for the support of either or of the children, in order to be valid, must be coupled with an agreement of separation, but to make this latter contingency a precedent condition for the validity of a contract for the disposition of the community property is to do violence to the language of the section. The law prescribes no such limitation. The plain terms of the statute authorize the husband or the wife to convey to the other all title and interest in either separate or community property."

The court in that case further says:

"As before indicated, in view of the duty imposed upon the husband by sections 174 and 175 of the Civil Code, there may be some doubt whether the waiver of support would be binding while the parties are living together, but that part of the agreement is not involved in this controversy, and it manifestly does not affect the legal integrity of the provisions in reference to the property."

[1] There is nothing in this case, nor in any of the cases cited, which would lead to the conclusion that it was in the mind either of the Supreme Court, or of the District Court of Appeal, to so interpret section 159, Civil Code, as to prohibit parties who have actually separated from entering into an agreement adjusting their property rights and making provisions for the support of either. This question was not before the court in any of the cases cited, and therefore any language in any of the opinions which might lend force to such an argument, while worthy of consideration, is not binding upon this court, and where the question is directly presented, we must give the section that interpretation which we think the law impels and which we find supported in other jurisdictions, and in practically all the cases where the validity of the agreement has not turned on the question of being against public policy or contrary to good morals.

[2] All of the cases cited having to do with contracts entered into between husband and wife in relation to their property rights and making provision for the support of either, or of the children of the parties, which have been upheld, when the question of good morals is involved, while the parties are living together, are those which contain an agreement for immediate separation, that is to say, an instantaneous, present act, without delay, or without any time intervening. 31 C. J. 245. The immediate separation referred to in the section means an actual present fact, that is, something which has been completed, and not an event to take place in the future. The whole theory of the law has been to prevent the execution and enforcement of agreements which have for their purpose the severance of the marriage relation in the future and not to invalidate agreements where the separation has already taken place or is an instant fact. Section 159, Civil Code, does not by its terms, nor do we think by any reasonable intentment that can be given to the language there used, purport to prohibit the execution of agreements for separation or invalidate agreements entered into between husband and wife adjusting their property rights after the separation has taken place. If a contract providing for immediate separation is not invalid as contrary to good morals, we do not very well see how it can be legally concluded that a contract made after the actual separation is contrary either to good morals or to any provision of the Civil Code. Section 158 allows the parties to enter into agreements and contracts which they might, if unmarried, subject to the rules relating to confidential relations, etc. Section 159, Civil Code, in its prohibitory terms, seeks only to prevent the parties from altering their legal relations, to wit, the marital duties and obligations arising from the marriage contract, that is really what is aimed at, and then under certain conditions while that relationship is existing and there has been no separation, it is enacted that they may make agreements which may alter their legal relations as to property, provided the circumstances are such that the agreement is not one denounced by the statute as against public policy. The public policy involved is the maintenance of the institution of marriage. Thus, if the contract is made by parties already separated, it cannot be said to be against public policy when an agreement providing for an immediate discontinuance of that relation is permitted by the Code. Irrespective of the interpretation that should be given to section 159, Civil Code, we are not without authority that agreements made after separation settling property rights and making provision for support are valid. In the case of Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 479, Justice Field, in an elaborate opinion, after referring to the cases in other states and to a number of English authorities, thus states the conclusion of the court:

"From these authorities, and others to the same effect [which] might be cited, it is clear that, by the settled law in the United States, such agreements are not invalid, because against sound principles of policy, and are upheld and enforced, when entered into through the intervention of a trustee, if followed by immediate separation, or, if separation has previously taken place."

In Walker v. Beal, 76 U. S. 743, 19 L. Ed. 814, the Supreme Court of the United States, considering an agreement settling property rights and providing for support, says:

"Deeds of separation between husband and wife, for the separate maintenance of the wife, through the intervention of a trustee, are legal; and equity will enforce them if made as to a separation immediately to occur, or that has already taken place."

In Galusha v. Galusha, 116 N. Y. 635, 22 N. E. 1114, 6 L. R. A. 487, 15 Am. St. Rep. 453, the Supreme Court of the state of New York, in considering an agreement of separation entered into between husband and wife, held as follows:

"Marriage is favored in the law, and, as a contract not to marry is against public policy and void, so, too, is a contract between husband and wife to be divorced, or in the happening of a future event to live apart. But, while a contract to separate in the future is void, it is now too well settled, both in England and this country, to admit of discussion, that after a separation has taken place a contract may be made, through the intervention of a trustee, which is effective to bind the husband to contribute the sums therein provided for the future support of the wife. 1 Bishop, Mar. and Div. §§ 637, 650; Carson v. Murray, 3 Paige [N. Y.] 483; Magee v. Magee, 67 Barb. [N. Y.] 487; Pettit v. Pettit, 107 N. Y. 677 [14 N. E. 500], 10 Cent. Rep. 265; Calkins v. Long, 22 Barb. [N. Y.] 97."

The case of Marshall v. Marshall, 46 Cal. App. Dec. 1, cited by appellant, cannot be considered as authority. A hearing in the Supreme Court was granted in that case. See 196 Cal. 761, 239 P. 36, where a different ruling was had and an agreement for the support of the children was upheld. In 9 Ruling Case Law, 524, § 344, the text-writer, in setting forth the law on the subject of agreements between husband and wife, states the rule in this language, "It may be stated generally, therefore, that such agreements, when they contemplate a separation in presenti or the continuance of an existing separation are generally upheld by the courts both in England and in this country," citing a large number of cases, and, further, "there is no objection to the separation agreement on the grounds of public policy if at the time there was an actual separation caused by the misconduct of the husband. Still, it is generally held immaterial whether the separation has already taken place, or is to take place immediately after the agreement, if an immediate and continued separation was contemplated when the contract was executed, and it did take place immediately," citing authorities. Only one conclusion can be reached from the authorities cited, to wit: That if the separation has already taken place, it stands upon the same footing as where the agreement provides for the separation to take place in presenti.

In the case at bar, in its provisions, the agreement under consideration is analogous to the first California case which we have cited, in that a trust has been created for the purpose to effectuate the agreement and accomplish the purposes intended thereby, and the rule is uniform that such agreements are valid.

[3] The agreement in question was entered into by the mutual consent of the parties, it was approved by the attorneys representing the respective parties, and by virtue of section 160, Civil Code, is adequately supported as to consideration. It is there said, "The mutual consent of the parties is a sufficient consideration for such an agreement as is mentioned in the last section," referring to section 159, Civil Code.

[4] The agreement also contains waivers on the part of the wife, which would constitute a valid consideration.

[5] It is further objected that the agreement is void in that it purports to continue in full force and effect until the death of the respondent. This question, however, is decided adversely to the contention of the appellant in the case of Higgins v. Higgins, 121 Cal. 487, 53 P. 1081, 66 Am. St. Rep. 57, where it was held that an almost identical clause as the one contained in the agreement under consideration was valid. We quote the clause from the Higgins Case:

"The payment of said annuity to be a binding and continuing obligation upon the said H. M. Higgins and upon his executors, administrators, and assigns, and to constitute a lien upon his estate during his lifetime, and after his death during the lifetime of the said Emily J. Higgins."

The legal effect of this clause is no different from that contained in the agreement under consideration which creates a lien upon the property conveyed to the trustee, binding upon the heirs, executors, and assigns of the respective parties.

In the case of McCahan v. McCahan, 47 Cal. App. 173, 190 P. 458, the agreement held invalid provided for paying the costs of a divorce action. In Beard v. Beard, 65 Cal. 354, 4 P. 229, the subject of the divorce was controlling in the decision. Likewise, in Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 289, 61 P. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548, and Loveren v. Loveren, 106 Cal. 512, 39 P. 801, the subject of divorce was involved. These cases were cited by appellant but are not applicable here.

[6] It is also urged that the subsequent divorce voids a previous agreement settling property rights or providing for support. This, however, is not supported by the authorities. Provisions in the separation agreement for the support of the wife during life are not abrogated by a subsequent absolute divorce. 9 Ruling Case Law, 536, § 356. The authorities there cited are numerous, and we do not need to set them forth herein.

There is nothing in the case of Sargent v. Sargent, 106 Cal. 541, 39 P. 931, which abrogates an agreement providing for the maintenance of either party until death. In that case, divorce was one of the contingencies under which by the terms of the contract its provisions were to terminate. The conditions being different, the agreement being different in its terms, the conclusion there reached necessarily was different from the conclusion that must be here had upon a contract differing in its terms as to its time of continuance.

[7, 8] Upon the hearing of this cause on appeal, the appellant produced and asked to have admitted as a part of the record, under a suggestion of a diminution thereof, copies of pleadings in a case numbered 6893, entitled Sarah M. Brown, Plaintiff, v. George H. Brown, Defendant, filed and dismissed in the office of the county clerk of Placer county, on the theory that the files in that proceeding were taken judicial notice of by the trial court in this action. In this, however, appellant is in error, as courts do not take judicial notice of the papers and files of other actions. As stated in Sewell v. Price, 164 Cal. 265, 128 P. 407, while courts take judicial notice of their own records, the rule is limited to proceedings in the same case. It is well settled that courts cannot in one case take judicial notice of other records in another and different case. 16 Cyc. 918; People v. De La Guerra, 24 Cal. 73; Lake Merced Water Company v. Cowles, 31 Cal. 214; Ralphs v. Hensler, 97 Cal. 297, 32 P. 243. In order to have brought the proceedings in a former case to the attention of the trial court in this case, it would have been necessary to introduce in evidence the files and pleadings sought to be admitted here as a part of the record. This not having been done, such papers constitute no part of the record in this, a distinct and separate action. The mere fact that the names are the same does not make the actions any the less separate and distinct. Being made no part of the record in the trial below, such papers cannot be admitted here.

[9] The appellant further contends that there is a conflict between finding No. 8 in that it sets forth that in the agreement the appellant covenants to pay the respondent $150 per month for her maintenance and support, and finding No. 10 in that in the latter finding the agreement is set forth and shows that it is a property settlement and not an agreement for maintenance and support. A reading of the agreement, we think, very clearly leads to the conclusion that the agreement partakes of both the elements of a property settlement and of an agreement for support and maintenance, and combines in its terms the provisions of both sections 158 and 159, Civil Code, and by the authorities which we have cited is sustainable under either section, and by a large number of the authorities sustainable as a trust agreement without the support of either section. The objection in this particular we think more technical than meritorious because whatever name the trial court may have given to the agreement in one of its findings, the setting forth of the agreement itself would show its full purpose without the purpose being named by the trial court, and if incorrectly named, such incorrect naming would be disregarded as surplusage.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 240

CITY CONST. CO. v. KENNY. (Civ. 5804.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 20, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 18, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 475—Special assessment, payable in installments, is not void for exceeding 50 per cent. of value of land (San Francisco City Charter, art. 6, c. 2, § 33).

Assessment for street improvement held not void under San Francisco City Charter, art. 6, c. 2, § 33, because it amounted to more than 50 per cent. of value of land as assessed for municipal purposes, where assessment was payable in installments.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 475—Provisions of street improvement ordinance, taking away right to pay in installments for noncompliance, held valid (San Francisco City Charter).

Provision of ordinance for street improvement, that failure to comply with certain provisions would deprive landowner of right to pay in installments, held not invalid as contrary to provisions of San Francisco City Charter.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 444—Failure to receive mailed notice held not to bar proceeding to foreclose lien for street work, in view of ordinance.

In action to foreclose lien for street work, defendant's testimony that she did not receive mailed notice will not prevent recovery, where there was no evidence that notice was not mailed according to ordinance, which provided that mailing was nonjurisdictional, and that failure to receive notice should not affect validity of proceedings.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 465—Assessment for street improvement held not invalid for failure to set out district benefited by contemplated work.

Assessment for street improvement held not invalid for failure to set out district benefited by contemplated work, where it was not district assessment, in view of ordinance authorizing improvement.

5. Municipal corporations $\S$ 465—Assessment for street improvement held not invalid on ground that all lots were not assessed for each part of work done.

Assessment for street improvement held not invalid on ground that all lots included were not assessed for each part of work done, where proceedings were not taken under section of ordinance providing for district assessment, or for front foot method, but were taken under section providing for different methods, including combination of methods.

6. Municipal corporations $\S$ 488,489(5)—Inequalities in assessment for street improvement will not invalidate assessment, in absence of appeal to board of supervisors.

Inequalities or injustices in spreading of assessment for street improvement will not be held to invalidate assessment, where landowner failed to appeal to board of supervisors.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by the City Construction Company to foreclose a lien for street work against Catherine Kenny. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fabius T. Finch and Paul F. Fratessa, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment foreclosing a lien on defendant's property for street work done under public contract and street proceedings had and taken under the provisions of the San Francisco street improvement ordinance of 1918, Ordinance No. 4720 (New Series).

[1, 2] It is claimed that the assessment is void in that it amounts to more than 50 per cent. of the value of the land as assessed for municipal purposes. San Francisco Charter, art. 6, c. 2, § 33. This charter provision, however, by its terms does not apply to any as-assessment made payable in installments. Appellant states that her assessment was not made payable in installments. This we take to mean that, although the resolution of intention stated that the assessment may be paid in installments, yet, because of the failure of appellant to comply with the provisions of sections 33 and 34 of the ordinance, she no longer has the right to pay in installments. It is claimed that these provisions of the ordinance are invalid because contrary to the charter provisions. These points have been considered by the Supreme Court and decided adversely to the contention of appellant. Fay Improvement Co. v. Hanlon, 193 Cal. 709, 227 P. 482; Eaton v. Hanlon, 193 Cal. 715, 227 P. 484; Federal Construction Co. v. Wolfson, 186 Cal. 267, 199 P. 512, 29 A. L. R. 1098.

Something is said in appellant's brief to the effect that the city engineer had promised appellant not to assess her land for work done in the alley when she conveyed the right of way to the city. The testimony on this point is meager and equivocal. We do not understand appellant to claim that this was an issue in the case. It was not. No way is pointed out how it could be an issue in this foreclosure proceeding nor how such a promise, even if made and broken, could invalidate the assessment for the public work done.

[3] Although appellant testified that she did not receive a mailed notice, there was no evidence that none was mailed according to the ordinance. But it is expressly declared in the ordinance, section 4, that mailing is nonjurisdictional and that the failure to receive the same shall in no wise affect the validity of the proceedings.

[4, 5] Appellant advances two other grounds against the validity of the assessment: First, that the resolution of intention fails to set out the district benefited by the contemplated work as required by the provisions of section 5 of the ordinance. Second, that all the lots included in the assessment were not assessed for each and every part of the work done, contrary to the provisions of section 5 and also subdivision 12 of section 21, which both state how a district assessment shall be spread.

The answer to these contentions is that the proceedings resulting in this assessment were not taken under section 5, which provides for a district assessment. Neither were they taken under section 21, subs. 1 to 8, which provide for the front foot method of assessment. They were taken under the provisions of subdivision 11 of section 21, which provides for several different methods, including a combination of several methods.

It was not necessary for the resolution of intention to describe or set out the district benefited by the work, because this was not a district assessment in whole or in part and was not made under section 5. The resolution of intention declared:

"That the lots, pieces, or parcels of land, contemplated to be made chargeable for the costs and expenses of the proposed work or improvement, are situated wholly or in part within the following described district."

Section 4 provides what the resolution of intention shall contain in general. Section 5 provides what it shall contain in case of a district assessment. There is no special requirement for the resolution of intention where an assessment is contemplated to be made under section 21, subd. 11, but it is required that the notice of improvement shall state that the method of assessment will be determined and declared at the time of taking action on the resolution. This was done in this case. The resolution also complied with the general provisions of section 4. The authorities cited by appellant interpret the Vrooman Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8194), provisions requiring the resolution to describe the district benefited. These may be germane for section 4, but not for section 21, subd. 11.

[6] The assessment was properly spread in accordance with the provisions of the ordinance. None of the lots mentioned in the resolution of intention escaped assessment considering the entire work as one unit. Considering the public improvement as three units assessed against three groups of lots, no lot in any group escaped assessment for any unit chargeable to its group. Authorities holding proceedings invalid for not assessing certain lots at all under the Vrooman Act are therefore not in point. When subdivision 11 of section 21 is followed, "then the costs and expenses of such work or improvement, or any portion thereof may be assessed and apportioned according to (assessed value) or according to (superficial area) or partly by each or any method * * * of this ordinance." The resolution of the board of public works, passed at the time fixed and according to the notice of improvement, exercised the power of determining the method of assessment by dividing the assessment into three parts. The main part was ordered assessed against all the lots fronting upon the street improved upon a uniform square foot basis; the crossings against property adjacent to the same upon the front foot basis in the manner usual for crossing work; the alley improvement work upon both sides of one-half block upon the square foot basis. The assessment was actually spread according to the resolution, and we see no irregularity in the method used. If there were any inequalities or injustices in the spreading of the assessment, that was a matter which appellant should have appealed to the board of supervisors under the provisions of section 27 and section 21, subd. 11, of the ordinance. Not having done so, such inequalities, if any, will not afterwards be held to invalidate the assessment. Buckman v. Landers, 111 Cal. 349, 43 P. 1125; Federal Construction Co. v.

Newhouse, 186 Cal. 284, 199 P. 519; Watkinson v. Vaughn, 182 Cal. 55, 186 P. 753; McSherry v. Wood, 102 Cal. 647, 36 P. 1010.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, NOURSE, JJ.

83 Cal. App. 25

SCOTT v. SUPERIOR COURT WITHIN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 5557.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 11, 1927.

1. Mandamus ☞189—Stipulation providing for filing of second amended petition in superior court held relevant on question of character of judgment entered therein.

Where petition for writ of mandate was denied by the superior court, in original proceeding for writ of mandate in the appellate court to be directed to the superior court, copy of stipulation providing for filing of second amended petition in the superior court, filed by respondent in support of its answer in the appellate court, was relevant and material as bearing on understanding of parties, and particularly as to trial court's intention as to character of judgment entered with reference to its finality.

2. Mandamus ☞189—Copy of judgment of superior court and motion to strike held admissible on question whether amended petition was properly stricken as sham.

Where second amended petition for writ of mandate in the superior court was, on motion of respondent, stricken, in original proceeding in the appellate court for writ of mandate, copies of petition, of motion to strike, and of judgment were admissible as bearing on question whether amended petition may have been properly stricken out as sham.

3. Mandamus ☞164(2)—Where petitioner made no motion to strike answer as half demurrer and half plea, law issues therein might be treated as surplusage (Code Civ. Proc. § 1088).

Even though criticism of petitioner for writ of mandate that answer was half demurrer and half plea were well founded, and therefore seeking decision on allegations of her verified petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 1088, in interest of justice, statements in answer which present issues of law might be treated as surplusage, and disregarded.

4. Mandamus ☞164(1)—Answer in proceeding in mandate may raise both questions of law and fact (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 589, 1088, 1089, 1091, 1094, 1109).

In view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1088, 1089, 1091, 1109, and section 1094, which indicates that, in mandate proceeding, question of law may be raised in different manner than is provided in section 589, answer in proceeding in mandate may be used to raise question of law as well as of fact.

5. Mandamus ☞189—Judgment sustaining demurrer to amended petition for writ of mandate denying remedy prayed for held final (Code Civ. Proc. § 1064).

Judgment of superior court sustaining demurrer to amended petition for writ of mandate, and ordering that petitioner take nothing, and be denied remedy prayed for, held final, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1064, and complete disposition of matter involved.

6. Judgment ☞219—Judgment should be simple sentence of law on material ultimate facts admitted by pleadings or found by court.

A judgment should be a simple sentence of the law on material ultimate facts admitted by pleadings or found by the court.

7. Mandamus ☞189—Judgment denying remedy prayed for held final, in view of stipulation that proceeding should be submitted for decision on amended petition.

Judgment that petitioner for writ of mandate take nothing, and be denied remedy prayed for, held final, in view of stipulation that proceeding should be submitted on amended petition, and that, on filing of last of briefs, the proceedings should be submitted for decision.

8. Mandamus ☞189—Where judgment of superior court denying writ of mandate was final, petitioner had remedy by appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 963; Pol. Code, § 1609).

Where, in proceeding by school teacher for writ of mandate to compel board of education to reinstate her as a permanent teacher, in view of Pol. Code, § 1609, final judgment was entered that petitioner take nothing, and that she be denied remedy prayed for, petitioner, under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, had remedy by appeal.

9. Mandamus ☞162—It was within superior court's discretion to rule that second amended petition for mandamus was sham, and thereafter enter final judgment.

In proceeding for writ of mandate in the superior court, where demurrer was sustained to amended petition, it was within the discretion of the superior court to order second amended petition stricken from files, if it was of opinion that it was sham, and thereafter enter final judgment.

Original application by Izelle Emery Scott for a writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court within and for the County of Los Angeles and another, to require respondent to hear and determine a petition for writ of mandate to compel reinstatement of petitioner as a public school teacher. Writ denied.

William A. Alderson, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett M. Mattoon, County Counsel, and Pierce Works, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The present proceeding is one by which it is asked that a peremptory writ of mandate be directed to the superior court of Los Angeles county. The proceeding in the superior court was one of a similar character, by which it was sought to compel the board of education to reinstate the petitioner as a teacher in the public schools of the city of Long Beach.

The petition before us alleges that petitioner is a permanent teacher in the public schools of said city, as defined in section 1609 of the Political Code; that she was wrongfully dismissed from that position by the board of education of Long Beach, and that she thereafter began the proceeding in mandate above mentioned in the superior court of Los Angeles county; that an amended petition was filed in that proceeding, and a demurrer interposed thereto by the respondent board of education, which was on October 25, 1926, sustained, no other order being made; that there was then in effect a rule of the superior court allowing ten days within which to amend any of certain pleadings upon the sustaining of a demurrer thereto, unless otherwise ordered by the court; that the petitioner, relying upon this rule, on October 28, 1926, filed a second amended petition, which was, on motion of respondents, stricken from the files; that the ground of this motion was that the petition was filed without authority of law, without leave of court, and without notice to the respondent; that the motion to strike the second amended petition was granted on the 22d day of December, 1926, and thereupon judgment in favor of the respondent was entered by the court.

[1, 2] The answer raises certain issues both of law and of fact. Concerning matters of fact it is alleged that, at the time of the service and filing of the first amended petition in the superior court proceeding, it was stipulated that such proceeding should be submitted for decision upon the pleadings as filed, and that such decision should be final, subject to the usual right of appeal; that the order sustaining the demurrer was a final adjudication of the matter, and that it was made on October 20 and entered on October 25, 1926, and that the judgment in favor of respondent was signed on October 28, 1926, by a judge of the superior court, and was on that day forwarded to the county counsel for filing. The answer further alleges that the motion to strike the second amended petition was not only based upon the ground alleged in the petition, but also upon the further ground that such petition was sham, and an attempt to evade the ruling of the court upon the demurrer theretofore sustained to the first amended petition; also it is denied that the petitioner in filing her second amended petition in the superior court relied upon the rule allowing an amended pleading to be filed as heretofore recited, but alleges that on October 27, 1926, said petitioner prepared and served a notice of motion for leave to amend her first amended petition, which motion was later argued, submitted, and, on December 3, 1926, was denied. The respondent, in support of the allegations of its denials and allegations of its answer wherein it conflicts with the allegations of the petition, filed copies of certain pleadings and papers offered in the superior court proceeding, to which the petitioner objects on the ground that they are immaterial and irrelevant. One of these exhibits is a copy of the stipulation providing for filing of a second amended petition. This, we think, is both relevant and material as bearing upon the understanding of the parties, and particularly the intention of the trial court as to the character of the judgment entered with reference to its finality. Another exhibit which obviously is admissible upon the same issue is a copy of the judgment itself. Also a copy of the motion to strike is admissible as indicating the ground upon which the motion may have been granted, as are copies of the petitions as bearing upon the question as to whether or not the second amended petition may have been properly stricken out as sham.

[3, 4] At the outset the sufficiency of the answer is challenged because it is said to be half demurrer and half plea. An examination of the pleading in question shows that, in addition to joining issue upon certain allegations of fact contained in the petition and alleging others constituting new matter, it also raises issues of law. Although no motion to strike has been presented, we are asked to hold that the answer is wholly bad, and to disregard it, and to decide the case upon the allegations of the verified petition under section 1088 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Even if petitioner's criticism of the answer were well founded, we would not consider such harsh treatment as that sought by the petitioner to be consistent with the liberal tone of our law as applied to pleadings, nor as conducive to a judicial determination on the basis of exact justice. Some of the averments of the answer raising issues of law are in response to allegations in the petition stating conclusions of law. These and other statements in the answer which appear to present issues of law might be treated as surplusage and disregarded, were this necessary to preserve the rights of the respondent where, as here, the petitioner has made no such attack upon the answer as if resolved in her favor would permit of an amendment thereto. But the claim is earnestly made by petitioner that a proper answer in a proceeding in mandate cannot, if it is to be maintained as an answer, raise both questions of law and of fact. The respondent asserts with equal assurance that our Code of Civil Procedure in the chapter dealing with proceedings in mandate has expressly authorized pleading of both classes of issues in the one return of the respondent. The question is squarely presented, probably for the first time in this jurisdiction. It is, we think, entitled to the expression of our opinion, although, as we have indicated, our decision might be based upon other grounds. Section 589 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an issue of law arises upon a demurrer to a complaint or answer or to some part thereof. But section 1094 of the Code of Civil Procedure clearly indicates that in mandate proceedings a question of law may be raised in a different manner than as provided in section 589 of the same Code. Section 1094, referring to proceedings in mandate, provides:

"If the answer raises only questions of law * * * the court must proceed to hear or fix a day for hearing the argument of the case."

We think the language is susceptible of no other fair construction than that the answer may raise questions of law, and that it may also raise questions of fact. While it is true that generally the rules of practice are the same in proceedings in mandate as in civil cases, this being expressly provided in section 1109 of the Code of Civil Procedure, still that very section provides that such rules may not be identical, and anticipates exceptions where they are not the same, for it reads:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, the provisions of part two of this code are applicable to and constitute the rules of practice in the proceedings mentioned in this title."

Apparently the pleadings of the parties in mandate constitute an outstanding exception to the rule above mentioned. Special provisions are made for such pleadings. These are contained in chapter 2, title 1, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the whole scheme is set up in sections 1089, 1091, and 1094 thereof. From this it is apparently contemplated that the pleadings shall be as follows: A petition for the writ similar to a complaint in a civil action; an answer by the adverse party; and a demurrer or replication to the answer of the respondent. It is significant that, although express provision is made for the demurrer to the answer, no provision is made for a demurrer to the petition. If this were all, the conclusion that no demurrer to the petition was intended might be in doubt, for it might be contended that it could not well have been the intention of the Legislature to exclude all means of raising questions of law. But we find in section 1094 evidence that such was not intended, and that the necessity for a vehicle through which to present questions of law was not overlooked, for here we have a definite authority for the raising of this kind of an issue by an answer to the petition. We are not required in deciding the issues now before us to say that a demurrer to the petition in mandate is not permitted, but we do hold that the answer may be used to raise question of law as well as of fact, and that, although the answer filed by the respondents here raises both, it is a good pleading in so far as objection upon that ground is concerned.

We now proceed to consider the merits of this proceeding as presented by the petition, the answer, and the exhibits which we have ruled are properly before us.

[5] The judgment which was rendered in the superior court provides that:

"* * * The court being fully advised in the premises, and the court having duly made and entered its order sustaining the demurrer to said amended petition as presented and embodied in the said return. It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that petitioner take nothing; that the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate in the above proceeding be, and the same is hereby, denied, and that the alternative writ of mandate heretofore issued herein be, and the same is hereby discharged."

[6] Upon its face this is a complete disposition of the matter—a judgment as final in form as could have been rendered after a trial, and it is apparent that the court regarded the issue as joined by the demurrer to the amended petition. "A judgment in a special proceeding is the final determination of the rights of the parties therein." Code Civ. Proc. § 1064. It is "the decision or sentence of the law, given by a court or competent tribunal, as a result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury." Stearns v. Aguirre, 7 Cal. 443. Here the petitioner instituted a proceeding seeking redress and a certain remedy for an alleged injury. She sought a peremptory writ to compel the board of education of Long Beach to recognize her right as a regular teacher in the public schools and to reinstate her as such therein. The court, after being fully advised, and, of course, having assumed for the purposes of its decision the truth of every averment of her petition, decided as a matter of law that she possessed no such right, and therefore refused to render the redress which she sought. A judgment should be the simple sentence of the law upon material ultimate facts admitted by the pleadings or found by the court. Rankin v. Newman, 107 Cal. 602, 40 P. 1024, 41 P. 304; Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 280. Here the petitioner must be presumed to have pleaded the ultimate facts and the demurrer admitted them. The decision that petitioner take nothing, and particularly that she be denied the remedy prayed for, is a simple sentence of the law upon such admitted facts.

[7] If there were any doubt as to the intention of the court with respect to the finality of its judgment, the stipulation of the parties which was on file, and presumably in the mind of the trial judge when the judgment was rendered, we think clearly indicates that the parties had agreed that a final decision of the proceeding should be made when the court should pass upon the demurrer to the amended petition; and it may reasonably be inferred that the court intended to act upon this stipulation and decide the proceeding. This stipulation provides " * * * that said petition may be filed and this proceeding shall be submitted on said amended petition; * * * that on the filing of the last of said briefs this proceeding shall be submitted for decision." And so we think the order of the court in question is surely a final judgment.

[8] This being so, the petitioner has a remedy by appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 963. If the remedy by appeal provided by law is plain, speedy, and adequate, respondent insists that mandamus will not issue. This is undoubtedly the rule. 16 Cal. Jur. p. 787; Aldrich v. Superior Court, 135 Cal. 12, 66 P. 846; People v. Superior Court, 114 Cal. 466, 46 P. 383; Sheerer & Co. v. Hutton, 7 Cal. App. 524, 91 P. 849; Gutierrez v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 171, 39 P. 530; San Joaquin County v. Superior Court, 98 Cal. 602, 33 P. 482; Green v. Hebbard, 95 Cal. 39, 30 P. 202; People v. Pratt, 28 Cal. 166, 87 Am. Dec. 110.

Upon this phase of the matter both parties refer to Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 545, 18 P. 766, 9 Am. St. Rep. 249. In the opinion in that case the Supreme Court has reviewed the decisions of this and other jurisdictions. Upon the proper scope of the writ of mandamus and the limitations upon its use the rule is clearly epitomized in the following statement:

"The propriety of the issuance of the writ in any case must depend upon whether, under the law of the state where the litigation arises, the determination was intended to be final; and if not, upon whether the system of practice furnishes any other adequate remedy."

And again in this language:

" * * * If the determination of the tribunal was intended to be final, it is plain that it cannot be disturbed, either on mandamus or in any other way. If it was not intended to be final, but there is another 'plain, speedy, and adequate remedy,' the writ cannot issue; for it was not designed to usurp the place of other remedies. But if the determination was not intended to be final, and there is no other adequate remedy, the writ must issue. Otherwise, there would be an admitted wrong without a remedy. The writ issues in such case to prevent a failure of justice."

The cases cited by petitioner in support of the contention that her remedy by appeal is inadequate, and that mandamus will lie in this instance, do not uphold that claim. A number of them were cases where the writ was used to compel the trial court to render judgment, or take other affirmative action to which the petitioner was entitled, such as for a case to be dismissed, to have a commission issued to take a deposition, or to determine a motion to tax costs. We need not say more to distinguish these authorities from the proceeding before us.

[9] As we have said, an inspection of the exhibits, and particularly the copy of the notice of motion to strike petitioner's second amended petition in the superior court, shows that one of the grounds stated was that said petition was sham and an attempt to evade the ruling of the court on demurrer to the first amended petition. This fact was omitted from the petition. It should not have been left out of that pleading, for it is as conspicuous a part of the motion to strike as is the ground stated in the petition here, to wit, that said second amended petition "was filed without authority of law, without leave of court, and without notice to respondents, or any of them, as provided by law." The motion to strike was granted without specification by the court of the ground upon which its ruling was based. We need not here determine whether or not the second amended petition was objectionable on the ground stated in the motion. It is sufficient in that regard that both the first and second amended petitions were before the court. From our inspection of them we cannot say that, if the order was given upon the ground that the second amended petition was sham, in that it was not distinguishable in any material respect from the first amended petition to which a demurrer had been sustained, the ruling of the trial court in that regard would be an abuse of discretion. It was surely a matter well within its jurisdiction to pass upon the motion, and, if it was of the opinion that the pleading was sham, to order it stricken from the files, and thereafter to enter final judgment.

The stipulation heretofore discussed and the judgment thereon were certainly sufficient to take the proceeding out of the rule upon which petitioner relies, the operation of which is only of effect when not "otherwise ordered by the court."

Entertaining the views which we have expressed, it is not necessary to pass upon other points presented in the briefs. The application for a peremptory writ of mandate is denied.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 197

OGREN v. INNER HARBOR LAND CO.
(Civ. 4225.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 18, 1927.

1. Contracts ⚡303(2)—Statute excusing non-performance held not to cause abrogation of contract by operation of law (Civ. Code, § 1511).

Civ. Code, § 1511, excusing nonperformance of an obligation in certain cases, does not cause abrogation of contract by operation of law.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⚡112(1), 334(5)—Condemnation of lot, purchased under conditional sale contract, held to entitle vendee to rescind and recover down payment.

Where, after execution of conditional sale contract to convey a lot for specified price payable in monthly installments, vendor to furnish good and sufficient deed and certificate of title on full payment of purchase price, property was condemned by county flood control district in proceedings in which vendee was not a party, held that vendee was entitled to rescind contract and recover payment on price and was not required to accept vendor's offer to substitute for lot taken another of equal value.

3. Novation ⚡7—Vendor's offer to substitute another lot for condemned lot, covered by conditional sale contract, held merely offer of novation, and vendee was not required to accept.

Vendor's offer to substitute another lot for lot covered by conditional sale contract, which lot was condemned by county flood control district, held merely a proposed novation, and vendor could not compel vendee to accept such offer, since one may not compel another to contract with him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Ernest Ogren against the Inner Harbor Land Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Daly, Daly & Todd and J. E. Pawson, all of Long Beach, for appellant.

Randall, Bartlett & White and Walter J. Little, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This is an appeal upon the judgment roll, wherein it appears that the facts necessary to a consideration of the case upon appeal may be stated substantially as follows: On or about June 24, 1913, the defendant executed a conditional sale contract with the plaintiff, therein agreeing to sell to the latter a certain lot in the Inner Harbor Tract of Long Beach, Los Angeles county, for the principal sum of $900, $90 of which was paid on said date, installments of $10 each were to be paid each month, and the defendant agreed to furnish a good and sufficient deed and certificate of title upon full payment of the purchase price. Thereafter, and on April 20, 1919, the Los Angeles county flood control district instituted condemnation proceedings against the appellant and others, but without joining the respondent, by virtue of which proceedings the district acquired possession on May 14, 1919, of a large tract of land, including the land in question. On October 6, 1919, appellant notified Ogren that, in order that he might benefit by certain proposed improvements in that vicinity, appellant would exchange a lot or lots of like value "for the lot or lots which you hold under contract in the county flood control right of way." Between the date of the contract and November 22, 1918, Ogren had paid on account of the stipulated purchase price the sum of $751.68, and all taxes and assessments. He did not accept the appellant's offer to substitute other property, but on July 13, 1920, commenced this action praying for rescission of the contract and for the amount which he had paid thereon. The appellant interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. An answer was then filed and the case was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts. Thereafter the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff and respondent.

The ground here assigned for reversal is that:

"Recourse is either against the district, or against the fund upon equitable grounds. Performance by defendant being excused by operation of law, no rescission will lie, and plaintiff cannot recover the payments under the contract; in fact, no action under the contract will lie, the same having been abrogated by operation of law."

[1, 2] The appellant cites no authority which supports this theory, and we are aware of none. The provision of section 1511 of the Civil Code referred to by it, to the effect that want of performance of an obligation is excused by operation of law, falls far short of being an authority for the proposition that an abrogation of the contract results by operation of law. Without doubt, appellant would be excused from specific performance of the contract, because it is beyond his power to specifically perform or to comply with its terms, but the respondent has sought no such impossible redress. It may be conceded that the respondent might have appeared in the condemnation proceeding, asserted his interest, and secured an allotment of his proportionate share, which the county flood control district was required to pay for the lot in question. However, he did not choose to do so.

We know of no case in this jurisdiction directly in point, but several decisions involve a determination of the relative rights of parties to a contract where performance has been excused through the intervention of an irresistible superhuman cause, such as is specified by section 1511 of the Civil Code. Where buildings upon property contracted to be sold, but remaining in the possession of the vendor, are destroyed by fire, the latter cannot compel the vendee to complete the purchase, but the latter may rescind and secure the return of what he shall have paid on the contract. Conlin v. Osborn, 161 Cal. 659, 120 P. 755; Smith v. Phoenix Insurance Co., 91 Cal. 323, 27 P. 738, 13 L. R. A. 475, 25 Am. St. Rep. 191. To the same effect is Gould v. Murch, 70 Me. 288, 35 Am. Rep. 325.

Kares v. Covell, 180 Mass. 206, 62 N. E. 244, 91 Am. St. Rep. 271, was a case similar in principle to the one before us. There the vendor had perfect title when he entered into an executory contract to convey, but subsequently and before conveyance was made lost title to a part of the premises by the widening of a street. It was there pointed out that a covenant for title applies to the time of conveying rather than to that of the contract for sale, and that under the circumstances there involved the vendee might elect to take what the vendor could convey and hold the latter answerable in damages for the balance, or to rescind the contract and recover back the amount paid. In that case, as here, the vendee chose to rescind, and was held to be entitled to that remedy.

[3] Appellant's only offer was to substitute other property. This amounted to nothing more than a proposed novation. That one may not compel another to contract with him is elementary and needs no citation of authority.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; MURPHEY, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 201

FINKELSTEIN v. COSGROVE. (Civ. 5454.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 19, 1927.

1. Appeal and error §928(4)—Where record does not indicate who requested instructions complained of, judgment will not be reversed, since appellate court will presume appellant requested them.

A judgment will not be reversed on the giving or refusing of instructions where the record does not indicate at whose request they were given, since the appellate court will presume they were given at the request of the complaining party.

2. Appeal and error §934(1)—On appeal, every presumption favors the judgment.

On appeal, every presumption must be indulged in favor of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Action by Jacob Finkelstein against John E. Cosgrove. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 248 P. 704.

G. C. Ringole, of San Francisco (Samuel Hamburg, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Sloss, Ackerman & Bradley and Sloss & Ackerman, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment entered in favor of respondent upon the verdict of the jury. Appellant relies for a reversal of the judgment entirely upon alleged errors in the instructions of the court to the jury. It is not contended that the verdict of the jury is against the evidence.

Respondent has called our attention to the fact that the record does not indicate at whose request the instructions complained of were given and urges that appellant cannot be heard to complain of error in the instructions, since it is not shown that they were not given at his request, and cites us to a number of authorities to support his position. The latest expression in this state upon the question is Bognuda v. Pearson, 71 Cal. App. 105, 110-111, 234 P. 857, 859, in which the court uses this language:

"But there is still another obstacle in the way of reviewing the objections to the instructions in this case in the fact that there is nothing to indicate or show at whose request the instructions were given—whether at the request of the plaintiffs or the defendants. The presumption is, therefore, that they were given at the request of the defendants. Gray v. Eschen, 125 Cal. 1, 5 (57 P. 664); Sutter Butte Canal Co. v. American Rice & Alfalfa Co., 182 Cal. 549, 553, 554 (189 P. 277). A party cannot predicate prejudice on erroneous instructions submitted by the court to the jury by his request."

In Gray v. Eschen, 125 Cal. 5, 57 P. 667, the same rule is announced:

"It is presumed that the proceedings in the court below were regular, and where error is claimed it is incumbent upon appellants to show it affirmatively. Applying the rule to the instructions given in this case, we must presume that each and every one of the instructions were given at the request of plaintiffs' counsel."

And in Perry v. J. Noonan Furniture Co., 8 Cal. App. 35, 37, 95 P. 1128, 1129, the court says:

"The statement sets forth about twenty folios of instructions, but nowhere is it shown which were given at the request of the plaintiff, which were given at the request of defendant, or which were given upon the court's own motion."

And, after quoting from Gray v. Eschen, supra, the court concluded:

"For this reason we cannot say the court erred in the giving of the instructions."

In Skrocki v. Stahl, 14 Cal. App. 1, 110 P. 957, it is held:

"Even if liable to the objections urged by appellant, we should have to assume that the criticized instructions were given at his request in the absence of anything in the record to show to the contrary."

And in Sutter Butte Canal Co. v. American Rice & Alfalfa Co., 182 Cal. 549, 553, 554, 189 P. 277, 279:

"There is nothing, however, in either transcript [clerk's and reporter's] to show whether or not this instruction was given by the court of its own motion or at the request of the plaintiff or the defendant. As to the other instructions, each indicates whether or not it is given at the request of the plaintiff or defendant as set forth in the clerk's transcript. It is important for the record to show whether or not instructions complained of are given at the request of the party complaining, and this should be made clear by the judge. Code Civ. Proc. § 609. In default of such explanation a party complaining of such an instruction may find its objection precluded by the rule which favors the regularity of the proceedings of the trial court."

Appellant argues that, where the record fails to disclose at whose instance or request the instructions were given, the reviewing court may, if it so desires, presume that they were proposed by appellant—that this is only a presumption and may be disregarded; that in Gray v. Eschen the court indulged merely in a presumption that the instructions complained of were given at the request of plaintiff's counsel; that with respect to Perry v. J. Noonan Furniture Co. the language of the court was purely dictum, the judgment of the trial court being reversed upon another ground; that in Skrocki v. Stahl the appellate court did in fact consider the instructions and found them nonerroneous, and, similarly, in Sutter Butte Canal Co. v. American Rice & Alfalfa Co., the court also examined the instructions and found they contained no error; that in Shannon v. Calmus, 70 Cal. App. 652, 234 P. 107, the court holds that irrespective of the defect in the record showing at whose instance or request the instructions complained of were given, such instructions were proper and justified the judgment of the trial court.

In the cases in which the instructions were considered, the court found it unnecessary to observe the presumption, and since the instructions were not prejudicial and did not call for a reversal, it was not necessary to give effect to the presumption in order to affirm the judgment. Our attention, however, is not called to any authority in which the court reversed a judgment in the face of this presumption. "Every intendment and presumption not contradicted by or inconsistent with the record on appeal must be indulged, in favor of the orders and judgments of superior court." 2 Cal. Jur. 852.

[1, 2] There seems to be no question that in this state a judgment will not be reversed on the giving or refusing to give instructions where there is nothing to indicate or show at whose request the instructions were given—whether at the request of the plaintiff or the defendant; that, under the presumption that every intendment must be indulged in favor of the judgment, the presumption is that they were given at the request of the party complaining.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.; CASHIN, J.

83 Cal. App. 317

FOWLER et al. v. CARMEL CATTLE CO.
(Civ. 4669.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 23, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇐931(1)—All intendments favor judgment of court sitting without jury.

Where case is tried to court without jury, all intendments must be resolved in favor of judgment.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1)—Conflicts in evidence held for court sitting without jury.

Where case is tried to court without jury, conflicts in evidence are for determination of trial court, and appellate court will not disturb its determination unless there is no substantial testimony in record to support judgment.

3. Waters and water courses ⇐158½(1)—Evidence held to support finding that lessor did not promise sufficient water supply, which failed.

In action by lessees for lessor's failure to supply water for irrigation, evidence held sufficient to support finding that there was complete failure of water supply through no fault of defendant, and that no promises or representations had been made that sufficient amount of water would be furnished.

4. Waters and water courses ⇐158(4)—Estoppel cannot be founded on lessor's promises to furnish water for irrigation which court on conflicting evidence found were not made.

In lessee's action for lessor's failure to supply water for irrigation, argument that defendant was estopped to deny truth of promises and representations that such water would be furnished held inapplicable, where trial court found on conflicting testimony that such promises and representations were not made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; T. N. Harvey, Judge.

Action for damages for failure to supply water for irrigation by Charles D. Fowler and another against the Carmel Cattle Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

James H. Farraher, of Los Angeles (Moore & Farraher, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Goodwin & Morgrage, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. On or about October 31, 1918, the defendant corporation executed a 5-year lease to the plaintiff and appellant Charles D. Fowler of certain farm lands in Kern county, all of which the latter agreed to plant to wheat, milo maize, beans, rice, or other crops, and to keep the same sufficiently irrigated whenever water should be available therefor. It was also provided in said lease that—

"Whereas, the land described in this lease is entitled to water for irrigation from the canal system of the Buena Vista Lake Association, and through canals and ditches heretofore constructed to and across said land and owned and controlled by Miller & Lux, a corporation, and Carmel Cattle Company, a corporation, now therefore it is a condition of this lease that said lessee is to receive the water for irrigation of the land described in this lease, to which said land is entitled, without cost to said lessee, other than the upkeep of the canal and ditch system on said land."

It was alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff Fowler, with the defendant's consent, assigned a one-half interest in the lease to plaintiff, Arant, and that the plaintiffs thereafter planted about 210 acres of said lands to rice; that prior to and at the time of signing the lease the defendant represented to the plaintiffs that it would "see that there was made and kept available, when reasonably needed under said lease, sufficient water from said source of supply and through said system to properly irrigate said leased lands"; that the defendant was entitled to 9.94 per cent. of the water in said canal system, and could have supplied a sufficient amount to irrigate the crop, but that it failed and refused to do so, and the crop was a failure, to the plaintiffs' damage in the sum of $35,364.

Respondent answered, denying that it had at any time made any statements or representations with respect to a supply of water, or that it promised to furnish a sufficient or any amount of water, and alleged that the failure of the rice crop was due to the carelessness and negligence of the plaintiffs.

The case was tried by the court, without a jury, and judgment was rendered for the defendant, with costs, from which judgment the plaintiffs appealed.

Appellants first contend that the evidence was insufficient to warrant or support the findings and judgment, and argue that they were induced by P. H. Clark, a representative of the defendant, to lease the lands in controversy solely by statements and promises alleged in the complaint, and that the defendant was estopped to deny the truthfulness of such statements.

The plaintiffs introduced evidence tending to prove that Clark had at various times assured them that there was plenty of water, and that he would see that they were furnished a sufficient amount. However, Clark and four other witnesses testified on behalf of the defendant that the latter did not at any time promise to furnish or represent that there would be sufficient water, nor suggest that the plaintiffs plant rice or any particular crop, but that the plaintiffs, and especially Fowler, stated that they were sure to get enough water to make a crop of milo maize, and that, if there should be a doubt as to their ability to irrigate a rice crop, they would let that wait another year; that Fowler was informed that plaintiffs would receive their share; that, while the water had theretofore been ample for the lands of the defendant, the sources of its supply in 1919 were practically dry, and rendered it impossible to convey any water to plaintiffs' crop. Clark testified that from the outlet canal to the leased premises it was about 30 miles, the ditches were very dry, and any small amount of water that might enter the canals would not flow that distance. The witness Tazoli testified that 40 or 50 acres of the rice crop was at first fairly good, but that the rest was poor, and that he did not think the crop would have matured if there had been sufficient water to irrigate it. It appeared that the defendant's leased lands were entitled to but 9.94 per cent. of the water at its source, and that, although with dredging Miller & Lux did succeed in obtaining a small amount of water, by pumping, yet about 10 per cent. of such available supply would have been of no consequence to dry lands 30 miles distant. One witness testified that "the water was lower in the lake than I had ever seen it; it receded, I should think, more than 2 miles from the outlet canal." Appellants sought to show that, had defendant also resorted to dredging and pumping, the drought might have been averted, but Clark testified that Miller & Lux had entire charge of the physical management of the water coming to and owned by the Buena Vista Association. As we have seen, their efforts in this respect were fruitless.

[1-3] All intendments must be resolved in favor of the judgment, and conflicts in the evidence are for the determination of the trial court. Appellate courts have no power to disturb its determination except where there is no substantial testimony in the record to support the judgment. Valentini v. Gobbi, 60 Cal. App. 289, 212 P. 718; Mah See v. North American Acc. Insur. Co., 190 Cal. 421, 213 P. 42, 26 A. L. R. 123. We have here a sharp conflict in the evidence offered by the parties to this controversy, and upon the record before us we think the trial court may well have concluded that there was a complete failure of the water supply, through no fault of the defendant, and that no promises or representations had been made that a sufficient amount of water would be furnished.

[4] The argument that, having made such promises and representations, the defendant was estopped to deny their truth, is inapplicable, because it assumes that they were in fact made. As we have seen, the trial court upon conflicting testimony, found to the contrary. There was an abundance of evidence adduced which strongly tended to show that the plaintiffs had no cause of action for damages against their lessor, and, the trial court having accepted it as true, we would not be justified in holding, upon the record presented, that it erred in so doing.

Certain rulings upon the evidence are also challenged, but from the views herein expressed, after carefully reviewing the whole case, we think they were not improper.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 321

PEOPLE v. SHEARER et al. (Cr. 1440.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 23, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 21, 1927.

1. Conspiracy ⚡47—False pretenses ⚡49(1)
—Evidence held to support conviction of obtaining, and conspiring to obtain, money by false pretenses.

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction of obtaining, and conspiring to obtain, money by false pretenses.

2. False pretenses ⚡26—Information for obtaining money by false pretenses for interest in business, of which seller was not owner, held sufficient.

Information alleging that defendants, with intent to defraud, knowingly and feloniously represented that they had for sale an interest in business, in which one represented as owner had no interest, and that prosecuting witness paid money on faith of such representations, which were made for purpose of inducing him to do so, sufficiently averred intent to defraud, fraud actually committed, false pretenses used, and accomplishment of fraud by means thereof.

3. Indictment and information ⚡71—Information need only state facts enabling person of common understanding to know charge, and court rightly to pronounce judgment (Pen. Code, §§ 950, 959).

Information need only state facts in such manner as to enable person of common understanding to know what is intended, and enable court to pronounce judgment of conviction according to right of case, under Pen. Code, §§ 950, 959.

4. Conspiracy ⚡51—One convicted of conspiracy to obtain $400 by false pretenses was punishable as for grand larceny (Pen. Code, §§ 182, 487, 489, 532).

One convicted of conspiracy to obtain money in amount of $400 by false pretenses, which is punishable as larceny by Pen. Code, § 532, and, under section 487, constitutes grand larceny, which, being punishable under section 489 by imprisonment in state prison for not less than one nor more than ten years, is a felony, became subject to punishment as for grand larceny under first penal paragraph of section 182.

5. Conspiracy ⚡51—Only punishment for conspiracy to commit felony is that prescribed in first penal paragraph of statute (Pen. Code, § 182).

Only punishment authorized on conviction of conspiracy to commit a felony is that prescribed in first penal paragraph of Pen. Code, § 182; "other acts described in this section," as used in second penal paragraph, referring to offenses which are not felonies.

6. Criminal law ⚡995(4)—Indeterminate sentence for conspiracy to obtain $400 by false pretenses held not objectionable as leaving prison authorities to fix term (Pen. Code, §§ 182, 489).

Indeterminate sentence of imprisonment in state prison, on conviction under count charging conspiracy to obtain money in amount of $400 by false pretenses, held as definite and certain as that under third count, charging crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, and not objectionable as leaving prison authorities to determine length of term; conviction being for felony, punishable under first penal paragraph of Pen. Code, § 182, as for grand larceny under section 489.

7. Conspiracy ⚡43(6)—Information for conspiracy to obtain money for interest in plant, none of which was owned by seller, held sufficient, though not alleging representation that seller owned interest.

Information charging conspiracy to obtain money by purporting to carry out sale of interest in plant, no part of which was owned by person introduced as seller, with fraudulent intent to deceive and defraud prosecuting witness, and alleging that defendants made false representations to him in furtherance of conspiracy, and cheated him out of his money thereby, sufficiently charged criminal conspiracy, though not alleging that conspirators, as part of conspiracy, knowingly or falsely, or with intent to defraud, represented that seller owned interest in plant.

8. False pretenses ⚡20—Whether crime is larceny or obtaining money or property by false pretenses depends on whether owner intended to part with possession only or with title also.

If owner, in placing his money or property in hands of one defrauding him thereof, intended to part with possession merely, and not to transfer title, crime is larceny, but, if title is intended to pass at time, offense is that of obtaining money or property by false pretenses.

9. False pretenses ☞20—Defendants representing to prosecuting witness that he was buying interest in plant and taking his money as payment therefor held properly charged with obtaining money by false pretenses, not larceny.

Defendants representing to prosecuting witness that he was buying half interest in cleaning plant, and taking his money as payment therefor, having another make affidavit in purported seller's name that there were no debts, and using it as basis for immediate consummation of sale, held correctly charged with obtaining, and conspiracy to obtain, money by false pretenses rather than larceny by trick and device.

10. Criminal law ☞372(6)—Evidence of similar transactions with others held admissible in trial for conspiracy by false pretenses, showing system.

In trial for conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses, evidence of similar transactions with other parties who had had dealings with defendant held admissible to show criminal system of operation.

11. Conspiracy ☞48—Instruction in conspiracy trial that common design may be shown by steady pursuit of same object, though separately or by different means, if leading to same result, held not erroneous.

Instruction, in trial for conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses, that common design may be shown by conspirators' steady pursuit of same object, whether separately or together, or by same or different means, if all lead to same unlawful result, held not erroneous as giving jury to understand that defendant, though innocent, and acting separately with different means, must be convicted of conspiracy, if his acts lead to unlawful results, in view of instruction as whole and other instructions requiring proof of guilty participation of each defendant in criminal partnership.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

H. A. Shearer and R. J. Ellis were convicted of obtaining, and conspiring to obtain, money by false pretenses, and defendant Ellis appeals. Affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. The defendants Shearer, Thomas, and Ellis were jointly accused in an information charging them with certain offenses in four counts, all relating to the same transaction; the first charging grand larceny in stealing $400 on October 6, 1925, from Albert Loisel; the second charging conspiracy to commit grand larceny; the third charging the defendant with obtaining money by false pretenses in connection with the sale to Loisel of a half interest in an automobile steam cleaning plant; the fourth with conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses in the same matter. The defendant Thomas was not tried with the other two defendants, but was a witness for the state, and the case against him was dismissed. By the verdict of the jury the defendants Shearer and Ellis were found guilty on the third and fourth counts of the information; the first two counts having been dismissed at the close of the case for the prosecution. Shearer having been placed on probation, the appeal is by Ellis alone, who appeals from the judgment against him and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. He received an indeterminate sentence of imprisonment in the state prison on both the third and fourth counts; the two sentences running concurrently.

[1] The appellant admits that the evidence showed a conspiracy in which Shearer, Thomas, and an individual called Jeffries took part; but it is contended that there is no evidence showing Ellis himself to have been guilty on either count. Appellant makes also certain technical objections to the information and to one of the court's instructions, which will be considered later. In a study of the evidence careful scrutiny has been made, pursuant to the request of appellant's counsel, of the typewritten record of the testimony, comprising 550 pages. While the evidence in its relation to appellant is in some ways circumstantial, yet much of it connects him directly with the offenses charged; and we are of the opinion that the evidence as a whole reasonably justified the inference of guilty participation on the part of appellant, and that the verdict against him is therefore not without adequate support.

The salient facts of the case are as follows: Ellis was a licensed broker, who for about four years had been carrying on business in Los Angeles as an investment broker engaged in negotiating sales of business interests. He had a number of salesmen working under him, each of whom, as he brought a transaction to completion, received from Ellis a share of the commission or profit realized. Shearer was one of Ellis' salesmen who gave attention particularly to transactions relating to "automobile washing and greasing stands"; and it was in connection with such a transaction that the offenses here under review were committed. The complaining witness, Albert Loisel, had been a seaman in the United States navy, but was not in the service at the time of his dealings with Ellis' office, though he was again in the navy at the time of the trial. Loisel was led to visit Ellis' office by a newspaper advertisement stating that a partner was wanted to buy a half interest in an automobile steam cleaning plant. On that visit Loisel met Shearer, who introduced him to a man called Jeffries, whom Shearer brought in from the outside, and who was represented to be the owner of a steam cleaning business and in search of a partner. The three then drove together to a plant situated at No. 4300 South San Pedro street, which really belonged to a man named Levy, who owned all the equipment and had a ten-year lease of the land. After a brief examination, Shearer, Loisel, and Jeffries returned to Ellis' office, whereupon Jeffries, without stopping, walked out at the rear entrance, leaving Shearer and Loisel together. Shearer then introduced Loisel to Ellis, stating that Loisel was going to buy a half interest in the cleaning plant, the price of which had been named to Loisel as $400; and, as Loisel tells the story, Ellis' first question to him was as to how much money he had for a deposit. Loisel was not prepared at the moment to pay more than $5, and this amount was paid over to Ellis, either directly by Loisel himself or by Shearer, after having previously received it from Loisel; the evidence being in conflict on this point. The deposit was delivered to Ellis about 11 o'clock in the morning, and early in the afternoon Loisel returned with $400, as he had promised Ellis. He then paid this amount directly to Ellis, who at the same time repaid to him the deposit of $5 previously received, and promised to hurry the completion of the necessary papers. In the course of the next couple of hours Ellis himself prepared, and had Loisel sign, a deposit agreement, offering to buy on the terms therein named, and stating that a deposit of $5 had been made on account of the purchase price of $400; also articles of co-partnership between Jeffries and Loisel, specifying that each of them should be entitled to an undivided half interest in the automobile cleaning business located at 4300 South San Pedro street. At the time when Loisel signed there was no signature by or in the name of Jeffries. Ellis made ready also a form of affidavit, in the name of Jeffries, according to the language of which Jeffries was to make oath that the business was free of debt, and that he so deposed to avoid waiting seven days after recording notice of intended sale, and in order to obtain immediate payment of the purchase price. To this form was appended a consent to the immediate payment of the money, which Ellis had Loisel sign, though there had not as yet been affixed to the affidavit the signature of any affiant or of any notary. In addition, Ellis caused Loisel to acknowledge receipt of one of Ellis' forms reciting that Loisel was acting on his own initiative and judgment, and not on any representations made by Ellis or his agents. This all took place on October 6, 1925.

After paying Ellis the $400 and signing the papers which Ellis presented to him, and without any papers requiring the signature of Jeffries having yet been signed, Loisel was directed to come to Ellis' office the next morning, October 7th, and go with Shearer to the plant. At about 6 o'clock in the afternoon of October 6th Thomas, who was an employee in the Los Angeles fire department, known to Shearer and, according to certain testimony, to Ellis also, presented himself at Ellis' office, posing as Jeffries, and there found both Ellis and Shearer. Ellis asked Thomas, "What is your share?" to which Shearer answered, "One hundred dollars." Thereupon Ellis, who insists that he believed Thomas to be really Jeffries, told Thomas that he would first have to sign some papers, and that one, the Jeffries affidavit, would have to be signed before a notary. Accordingly, Thomas signed, in the name of Jeffries, the partnership agreement, as well as the other papers already prepared by Ellis which called for the signature of Jeffries, and likewise, in the name of Jeffries, Thomas made oath to the effect that the business was free from debt. Thomas testified that he had been sent to Ellis' office by Jeffries to get the sum of $100 for Jeffries, and that Jeffries had told him to sign his name to any papers necessary. When Thomas had completed the signatures, he received from Ellis $100, and was accompanied by Shearer to where Jeffries was waiting, delivered the money to Jeffries, and left him and Shearer together. The rest of Loisel's money remained in Ellis' hands, except perhaps $150, which was delivered by Ellis to Shearer, but the final disposition of which was not shown. During the day, and apparently after Loisel had paid his $400 to Ellis, Shearer had procured from Levy, the owner of the cleaning plant, and not otherwise involved in the transaction, a lease of the plant for two years, running to Jeffries and Loisel, at a rental of $75 per month; the lease specifying that the first and last month's rent was to be paid on execution of the lease. This lease had also been signed by Loisel at Ellis' instance before any other signatures were affixed. Levy insisted on the payment of the $150 before he would sign the lease, and Shearer therefore gave Levy a check drawn by Shearer on an account in his wife's name. The check was dishonored, however, on presentation at the bank next day.

Loisel received none of the papers which had been signed on October 6th; but on the following morning he was taken by Shearer to the plant. Jeffries was there doing some cleaning, but stepped aside at Shearer's request to talk with Shearer, and a few minutes afterwards left, and was never again seen by Loisel. That same afternoon Levy, having learned of the dishonor of Shearer's check, ordered Loisel out of the plant, declaring that the lease was at an end because of failure to comply with the condition of payment of the first and last month's rent. Loisel immediately went to Ellis' office, and on that visit, as well as on subsequent occasions, had interviews with Ellis and Shearer in which he demanded the return of his money, but without avail; Loiselles saying that on one occasion Ellis said to him, "You lost your money automatically, you might as well beat it." Finally the matter was brought to the attention of the district attorney, and resulted in the prosecution of this proceeding, in which Ellis and Shearer were adjudged guilty, both of conspiring to obtain, and of obtaining, money from Loiselles by false pretenses.

Believing from the evidence as a whole that the jury were justified in rendering a verdict against Ellis as well as against Shearer on both counts, we will proceed to consider the objections made to the information.

[2] The third count of the information alleges that Shearer, Thomas, and Ellis, with the intent to defraud Loiselles, knowingly and feloniously pretended and represented to Loiselles that they had for sale, and could sell, a half interest in the designated cleaning plant, and that Jeffries was the owner of a half interest therein, which he would sell to Loiselles for $400. It is further alleged that "while" said defendants were seeking to induce Loiselles to pay $400 as the purchase price of said half interest, Jeffries did not own any interest in said plant, but that it was the sole property of H. Levy. The information continues with certain averments customary in such cases, and among other things states that Loiselles was deceived by the representations, and paid his money on the faith of them, and in consideration of the grant then and there to him of an undivided half interest in the plant; and that the defendants made their false representations for the purpose of inducing Loiselles to deliver to them said $400 in return for the pretended half interest.

[3] It is urged that the only time to which the false representations are relegated was "while" the defendants were seeking to induce payment by Loiselles, and that the information does not negative the representation that defendants did have a half interest for sale, and that Jeffries would sell a half interest; and, further, that there is no allegation that either Jeffries or Levy did not in fact do so. In addition it is urged, on the one hand, that, since it is alleged that Loiselles made his payment "in return and in consideration for a grant then and there to him of a one-half interest," it must be presumed that he received such grant; yet, on the other hand, appellant says there is no direct allegation that Loiselles actually purchased the half interest, and hence there is a failure of any causal connection between the alleged false pretenses and the payment of the money. A reading of the third count discloses, however, to the ordinary mind that what defendants were pretending to sell was a half interest belonging to Jeffries, whereas in fact Jeffries had nothing to sell, and Loiselles was thus induced to pay his money to defendants for something that Jeffries did not own, and could not, and did not, deliver, and that defendants knew such to be the fact, and acted as they did with intent to cheat and defraud Loiselles out of the sum of $400, of which defendants did in fact feloniously deprive him. There is a natural connection between the representations described and the parting with the money; and the information sufficiently sets forth the requisite elements by averring the intent to defraud, the fraud actually committed, the false pretenses used, and the accomplishment of the fraud by means of those pretenses. People v. Wasservogle, 77 Cal. 173, 19 P. 270. It is sufficient that an information contains a statement of the facts in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, and likewise to enable the court to pronounce judgment of conviction according to the right of the case. Sections 950 and 959. Pen. Code. It cannot be successfully maintained that the information in this instance did not sufficiently apprise the appellant and the court of the offense for which appellant was put to trial, and for which judgment was to be pronounced upon the verdict of guilty.

[4] Appellant likewise engages in a critical analysis of the fourth count, which is in much the same form as the third, except that it alleges that the defendants conspired to do, and in furtherance of their conspiracy did, the things there set forth, being the things done according to the averments contained also in the third count. In discussing the fourth count, a large portion of appellant's brief is devoted to a dismemberment of section 182 of the Penal Code. The portions of that section which particularly concern us are subdivision 1, under which the offense designated may consist of a conspiracy to commit any crime, whether a felony or a misdemeanor, and the first penal paragraph, prescribing the punishment for conspiracy to commit any felony. The conspiracy of which appellant was found guilty was one to obtain money, in the amount of $400, by false pretenses. The crime of obtaining money by false pretenses is subjected to the same punishment as larceny by section 532 of the Penal Code; and under section 487 one taking property exceeding $200 in value is guilty of grand larceny, which, being punishable under section 489 by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one nor more than ten years, is a felony. It follows then that, when appellant was found guilty of a conspiracy to commit such a felony as was charged, he became subject to punishment as for grand larceny under the first penal paragraph of section 182. Doble v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 556, 241 P. 852.

[5, 6] It is contended, however, that the sentence under the fourth count left it doubtful whether it was the intention of the court to mete out punishment for a felony or only for a misdemeanor, and that it may not be left to the prison authorities to determine how long appellant's prison term should last. The trial judge might with propriety have specified that the crime of which the appellant was convicted was a felony. At the same time it must be borne in mind that, when there is a conviction upon a charge of conspiracy to commit a felony, as in this case, there is no other punishment authorized than that prescribed in the first penal paragraph of section 182, for the reason that "the other acts described in this section," as that phrase is used in the second penal paragraph, must be taken to refer to offenses which are not felonies. In this instance the judgment is just as definite and certain as if appellant had been charged with, and convicted of, a conspiracy to commit grand larceny. If the offense had not been grave enough to constitute a felony, and appellant had been found guilty of a misdemeanor only, he would have been brought within the purview of subdivision 4 of section 182; and the punishment would have been that prescribed by the second penal paragraph, which makes such a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment not exceeding two years or a fine not exceeding $5,000, or both. But, having been convicted of a felony as charged, appellant must bear the punishment fixed by the first penal paragraph, which is here the same as the punishment for grand larceny. Consequently, the sentence under the fourth count is just as definite and certain as that under the third count, which charged the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses; and the prison authorities are left in no quandary in respect of the sentence imposed under either count.

[7] Pursuing the discussion of the fourth count, appellant's counsel insists that that count does not sufficiently charge a criminal conspiracy, because there is not an allegation that as part of the conspiracy the conspirators knowingly or falsely, or with intent to defraud, made any representation that Jeffries owned a half interest in the cleaning plant; and because, also, there is no sufficient allegation of any overt acts. The count does allege, however, that no part of the plant was owned by Jeffries, and proceeds to state that the conspiracy charged was one to obtain money by purporting to carry out a sale from Jeffries to Loiselle with the fraudulent intent to deceive Loiselle and defraud him of his money. The information then sets forth that, in furtherance of the conspiracy, the defendants did make their false representations to Loiselle, and did cheat him out of his money by such false pretenses. We think that the information in the fourth count, as well as in the third, sufficiently meets the legal requirements, and, if put to the test, would protect appellant from being subjected to another prosecution for either offense. People v. Steelik, 187 Cal. 361, 372, 203 P. 78.

[8, 9] Still another contention advanced on behalf of appellant is that, if any crimes were committed, they did not relate to obtaining money by false pretenses, but constituted respectively larceny by trick and device and conspiracy to commit larceny by trick and device. In distinguishing between the two classifications the determining factor is the intent with which the injured person places his money or property in the hands of the accused. If the owner intended to part with possession merely, and not to transfer title as well, the crime is larceny; but, if title is intended to pass at the time, then the offense is that of obtaining money or property by false pretenses. People v. Edwards, 72 Cal. App. 102, 113, 236 P. 944. It must be remembered in this case that Loiselle was given to understand that he was buying an undivided half of the plant, then and there; and Ellis purported to be representing the seller, and took Loiselle's money as payment for a half interest. Loiselle expected the papers to be ready for him when he returned on the afternoon of October 6th with his money. He was minded to sign at that very moment; and in fact he waited for Ellis to complete the papers, whereupon he affixed his signature at once. The evidence leaves no doubt that Loiselle was making no distinction between the title and the possession of the money; and that, when he put the money into Ellis' hands, he regarded it as money paid for a purchase thereby effected. On the other hand, there can likewise be no doubt that Ellis received the money as payment for a half interest in a business of which the pretended owner was Jeffries, whom Ellis was supposed to represent; and, instead of following the prescribed procedure by recording a notice of intended sale and waiting seven days, Ellis had Thomas make an affidavit in Jeffries' name that there were no debts, and used that affidavit as a basis for the immediate consummation of the pretended sale. When it came to application of the money, Ellis, within a few hours after he received it, parceled out $100 to Thomas posing as Jeffries, and dealt with the residue pursuant to some private understanding between himself and Shearer. We conclude that the information correctly defined the offenses with which the defendants were chargeable.

[10] In the course of the trial, evidence of three other similar transactions with other parties who had had dealings with Ellis was received to show a criminal system of operation; and the admission of such evidence is now specified as error. In our opinion, however, such evidence related to transactions sufficiently near in time and similar in character to be receivable within the rule discussed and applied in People v. Gray, 66 Cal. 271, 274, 275, 5 P. 240; People v. Ruef, 14 Cal. App. 579, 604, 114 P. 48, 54; People v. Arnold, 17 Cal. App. 68, 74, 118 P. 729; and People v. Cory, 26 Cal. App. 735, 741, 148 P. 532.

[11] The only criticism directed at any of the instructions of the court relates to the final sentence in an instruction on the subject of conspiracy. Among other things, the court first told the jury that they must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the formation and existence of a conspiracy, and were to determine from all the facts and circumstances in evidence whether a conspiracy did in fact exist, and whether it was illegal in its inception or became illegal at any subsequent time. The court then proceeded to say:

"The purpose of the combination is usually known only to those who enter it, and their guilt can generally be proved only by circumstantial evidence. The common design is the essence of the fact, and this may be shown by the steady pursuit of the alleged conspirators of the same object, whether they act separately or together, or by the same or different means, provided all lead to the same unlawful result."

The criticism of this part of the instruction is that it gave the jury to understand that Ellis, even though innocent, and acting separately and using different means, must be pronounced guilty nevertheless as an alleged conspirator if his innocent acts led to the unlawful result of defrauding Loisel. We cannot believe that, as the words of the court fell upon the ears of the jury, those words received the interpretation now put upon them by the ingenuity of counsel. The instruction from which the quotation is taken, when read as a whole, gives a correct statement of the law; and other instructions to which no exception is taken made it clear to the jury that under the charge of conspiracy there must be proof beyond a reasonable doubt of guilty participation in a criminal partnership on the part of each defendant before he could be found guilty.

The judgment against appellant and the order denying his motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

PEOPLE v. RICHARDSON. (Cr. 1316.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 23, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 21, 1927.

1. Criminal law §1144(1) — That defendant convicted of robbery was legally committed by magistrate prior to filing of information held presumed on appeal, where record was silent.

Although it did not appear in the record on appeal that defendant, convicted of robbery, was legally committed by a magistrate prior to the filing of the information, held regularly in this respect would be presumed where the record was silent.

2. Criminal law §1044—Defendant not moving to set aside information because filed before his commitment by magistrate cannot raise point on appeal (Pen. Code, §§ 995, 996).

Under Pen. Code, §§ 995, 996, defendant convicted of robbery, not making motion at trial to set aside the information because it was not filed before his commitment by a magistrate, may not raise that point on appeal.

3. Criminal law §395—In robbery prosecution personal property taken from defendant's room at time of arrest held competent evidence though taken without search warrant.

In prosecution for robbery, articles of personal property taken from the defendant's room at the time of his arrest held competent and admissible evidence, though they were taken without a search warrant.

4. Criminal law §369(2)—Testimony of owner that automobile used in robbery had been stolen held admissible.

In prosecution for robbery, where an automobile was an instrumentality in its commission, testimony of the owner identifying the automobile and asserting it had been stolen held admissible, notwithstanding it tended to prove another crime for which defendant was not on trial.

5. Criminal law §1136—Appellant convicted of first degree robbery cannot complain because codefendant was only convicted of second degree robbery (Pen. Code, §§ 970, 1157).

Under Pen. Code, §§ 970, 1157, a defendant convicted of first degree robbery cannot complain because his codefendant was only found guilty of robbery in the second degree.

6. Criminal law §793—Instruction in double robbery prosecution that jury should consider each defendant separately held proper (Pen. Code, §§ 970, 1157).

Instruction to jury in robbery prosecution against two defendants that they should consider each defendant separately held proper, under Pen. Code, §§ 970, 1157.

7. Criminal law §813—Abstract instructions concerning admissibility of evidence held properly refused.

Requested instructions which were merely abstract statements concerning the admissibility of evidence held properly refused.

8. Criminal law ⚡665(2)—In robbery prosecution district attorney's request, after order excluding witnesses, that two officers be permitted to remain, held not error; no objection being made.

In robbery prosecution, after an order excluding witnesses, the district attorney's request that two officers be permitted to remain held not error or misconduct; no assignment or objection being made.

9. Criminal law ⚡721(4)—Comment on defendant's failure to deny crime when accused held not "comment on failure to testify."

District attorney's comment at robbery trial on defendant's failure to make a denial when confronted with an accusatory statement under circumstances calling for a reply and affording an opportunity to reply held no error; not being a comment on defendant's failure to testify in his own behalf.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Comment.]

10. Criminal law ⚡781(7)—Instruction in robbery prosecution that defendant's failure to reply when accusation called for reply might be taken as admission held proper.

Instruction in robbery prosecution that defendant's failure to reply when confronted with an accusatory statement under circumstances calling for a reply and affording a reasonable opportunity to reply might be taken as an admission held proper.

11. Criminal law ⚡1206(1)—Indeterminate sentence law held constitutional (Pen. Code, § 1168).

Indeterminate sentence law (Pen. Code, § 1168), held constitutional.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Floyd Richardson was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Floyd Richardson, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KOFORD, P. J. Defendants were jointly charged by information, tried and convicted of the crime of robbery. Appellant was found guilty of robbery in the first degree and his codefendant (not appealing) in the second degree. The appeal is from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial.

The prosecuting witness testified that appellant and his codefendant driving a Chevrolet touring car crowded him into the curbing of the street upon which he was driving in his Ford car and that they then beat and robbed him by means of pistols. The defendants were arrested in their rooms two days later. A search of the apartment resulted in finding two pistols and also articles identified by the owner of the Chevrolet as having been in the car when it was stolen shortly before the robbery.

[1, 2] Appellant, who appears for himself raises numerous points upon this appeal, many of which have been previously settled. The record on the appeal from this judgment does not show whether or not defendant was legally committed by a magistrate prior to the filing of the information. The record upon this appeal properly enough does not include proceedings prior to the information. It is claimed that the record must affirmatively show this or we must hold upon this appeal that the trial court was without jurisdiction. Const. art. 1, § 8. The point is not well taken. The superior court is a court of general jurisdiction, and there are many things which might affect its jurisdiction which are presumed where the record is silent. This is one of them. Western Meat Co. v. Superior Court, 9 Cal. App. 538, 99 P. 976. In order that this point may be raised on appeal it is necessary to make an appropriate motion at the trial. Pen. Code, §§ 995, 996; People v. Bomar, 46 Cal. App. Dec. 966, 967.]

[3] The articles of personal property taken from defendants' rooms were competent evidence, even though they were taken without a search warrant at the time of defendants' arrest. People v. Mayen, 188 Cal. 252, 205 P. 435, 24 A. L. R. 1383.

[4] The owner of the Chevrolet car was permitted to testify that he was not operating it at the time and place of the robbery, that it had been taken without permission by some one just prior to the robbery, and that the articles of personal property found in defendants' room at the time of his arrest were in the car at the time of its disappearance. This is assigned as error in that it tends to prove another crime by defendant for which he was not on trial. The evidence was material and relevant upon the robbery charge, and it was not necessary to exclude it merely because it incidentally proved more. People v. Booth, 72 Cal. App. 160, 166, 236 P. 987. The jury was fully informed and instructed not to consider whether the defendant was guilty of any other crime or offense than the one charged.

[5, 6] The evidence was sufficient to justify a verdict of robbery in the first degree as to both defendants jointly tried. This appellant has no valid complaint arising from the fact that his codefendant was found guilty in the second degree. The jury had the undoubted power to make this distinction between the two defendants. Pen. Code, §§ 970, 1157. The court properly instructed the jury that they should consider each defendant separately.

[7] The court properly refused to give the three instructions requested by defendant. They were abstract statements concerning the admissibility of evidence.

[8] After an order had been made excluding witnesses the district attorney requested that two officers instead of one be permitted to remain in court and stated: "I want one right with me and another to remain in court. * * * Officer De Matel will testify later in the case, but I feel I want two officers connected with the case." Defendants' counsel stated, "Well; we won't object to that." The record is not clear as to whether the request was for the purpose of assisting with the evidence or for the purpose of exhibiting personal fear of the defendant as claimed by appellant. No assignment or objection being made, it was not error or misconduct.

[9, 10] The conduct and argument of the district attorney was within proper bounds. He did not comment on the failure of defendant to testify in his own behalf, but referred to his failure to make a denial when confronted, accused, and identified by the complaining witness. The court did not err in instructing the jury that if the defendant was confronted with an accusatory statement under circumstances calling for a reply and affording a reasonable opportunity to reply, his failure to reply may be taken as an admission, but that they should not consider the facts in the accusatory statement except to consider the defendant's conduct on being so confronted if he remained mute. People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 66 P. 794.

[11] Appellant attacks the constitutionality of the indeterminate sentence law (Pen. Code, § 1168). The constitutionality of the section in all the respects urged by appellant has been upheld in People v. Hale, 64 Cal. App. 523, 222 P. 148; People v. Sama, 189 Cal. 153, 207 P. 893; In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 P. 958; In re Collins, 198 Cal. 508, 245 P. 1089.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

83 Cal. App. 249

CHRISMAN v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON CO. (Civ. 4847.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 20, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 18, 1927.

1. Contracts ⇨10(1)—Consideration of $1 supplies mutuality of obligation to option contract for purchase of water (Civ. Code, § 1605).

Consideration of $1 supplies mutuality of obligation to contract in nature of option to purchase water for irrigation, in view of Civ. Code, § 1605, defining good consideration.

2. Evidence ⇨21—It is common knowledge that where consideration of $1 is mentioned in contract other considerations usually pass.

It is matter of common knowledge that where consideration of $1 is mentioned in contract other considerations usually pass between parties to agreement.

3. Contracts ⇨53—Trifling consideration will sustain contract if promisor is not otherwise entitled thereto.

Where promisor is not otherwise lawfully entitled to amount of consideration, it is sufficient to sustain contract, though of trifling amount; question of its adequacy being determined by contracting parties.

4. Contracts ⇨10(1)—Option agreement for purchase of water, although unilateral, is binding when supported by valuable consideration.

Option agreement for purchase of water for irrigation although in its nature unilateral is as binding on part of optioner as is a bilateral contract upon parties thereto, when supported by valuable consideration, whether such consideration is adequate in amount or not.

5. Contracts ⇨10(1)—Doctrine of mutuality of obligation is inapplicable to unilateral contract.

Doctrine of mutuality of obligation is inapplicable to unilateral contract, since such contract is not founded on mutual promises.

6. Waters and water courses ⇨254—Option for purchase of water for irrigation was no longer unilateral contract after demand for water, and plaintiff became liable to pay.

Option contract for purchase of water for irrigation, supported by consideration of $1, binding defendant to deliver water on demand, was no longer unilateral on demand being made, and plaintiff became liable to take and pay for all water demanded.

7. Waters and water courses ⇨254—Contract to furnish water for irrigation held not void for uncertainty.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, contract pleaded, providing that user of water agrees to pay for it at rate of 25 cents per inch each 24 hours, and defining inch as 13,000 gallons, held not void for want of certainty.

8. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Allegation of defendant's control or possession of water available for distribution held sufficient.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, allegation that defendant owned water appurtenant to land described in amount sufficient to supply demand for irrigation held sufficient, as against motion for judgment on pleadings, to allege that defendant controlled or possessed appurtenant water available for distribution.

9. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Allegation of ownership of water appurtenant to land in amount sufficient to supply demand for irrigation implies water supply was developed.

Allegation of ownership of water appurtenant to land in amount sufficient to supply necessary and convenient demand for irrigation and in amount more than sufficient to supply such land pro rata of acreage in order of which such land was entitled to water necessarily implies that such water supply had already been developed.

10. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Complaint held not demurrable for failure to show whether defendant assumed obligations of agreements to furnish water.

In action for failure to supply water for irrigation, amended complaint containing allegations as to agreements between predecessors in interest of plaintiff and of defendant, and as to defendant's purchase of predecessors' property and property rights, held not demurrable as being uncertain and unintelligible for failure to show whether defendant assumed obligations of agreements.

11. Waters and water courses ⇨254—Purchaser of water distributing system must continue to serve customers previously receiving service, although obligation was not expressly assumed.

Defendant company by purchasing all property and property rights of power company, including water appurtenant to land of plaintiff, purchased such water subject to any existing rights to use thereof, and purchased water distributing system with obligation to continue to serve customers previously receiving service therefrom even though such obligation was not expressly assumed.

12. Waters and water courses ⇨249—Right to water for irrigation is "right in real property."

Right to water to be used for irrigation purposes is right in real property.

13. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Complaint held to sufficiently allege distributing system sold to defendant was one used by predecessor in supplying water under plaintiff's contracts.

Complaint for failure to furnish water for irrigation, alleging agreement to furnish water by defendant's predecessor in interest and defendant's purchase of predecessor's property and property rights, including distributing system, held to sufficiently allege that distributing system sold to defendant was one used by predecessor in supplying water under such contracts.

14. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Evidence held to support finding that defendant purchased and owned water appurtenant to plaintiff's lands.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, evidence held sufficient to support finding that defendant purchased and owned water appurtenant to plaintiff's lands, notwithstanding that use was reserved to benefit of purchasers of lands from plaintiff's predecessor in interest.

15. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Evidence held to support finding defendant purchased distributing system serving plaintiff's lands and assumed obligation under predecessor's agreements to furnish water.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, evidence held sufficient to support finding that defendant purchased from predecessor in interest distributing system serving plaintiff's lands, and rights and obligations under predecessor's agreements to furnish water, notwithstanding that it did not expressly assume obligation to continue to serve customers previously receiving service.

16. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Evidence held to support finding that there was available to defendant sufficient appurtenant water for irrigation of plaintiff's land under agreement.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation under contract, evidence held sufficient to support finding that there was available to defendant sufficient appurtenant water to use in irrigation of plaintiff's land.

17. Waters and water courses ⇨254—One agreeing to deliver water for irrigation for 50 years had right to maintain and develop water supply.

Under agreement by defendant's predecessor in interest to deliver "all the water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of and being appurtenant to" certain lands for period of 50 years, it had right to develop and maintain existing water supply, since such contracts were not limited to flowing waters.

18. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Evidence held to support finding that defendant could develop sufficient water for irrigation at certain well site.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, evidence held sufficient to show that defendant could have developed water at certain well site in amount sufficient to supply necessary and convenient demands for irrigation of plaintiff's land and more than sufficient to supply such land pro rata of its acreage, where defendant failed to show it had attempted to develop such amount of water without success.

19. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Defendant failing to furnish water for irrigation held not entitled to object to sufficiency of evidence of existence of appurtenant water.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, defendant held not in position to urge objection that evidence was insufficient to justify finding that there was any appurtenant water, where predecessor in interest entered agreement providing that certain well site and all subterranean waters were appurtenant.

20. Waters and water courses ⇨263—Damages for failure to furnish water for irrigation held loss of crops, less cost of production and value of crops produced.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, proper measure of damages held to be loss of crops as result of lack of irrigation, less cost of production and net value of crops produced, notwithstanding that plaintiff had 150 inches of water of his own, where defendant refused to distribute such water, since under circumstances such water was not available to plaintiff.

21. Waters and water courses ☞263—Evidence of value of crop plaintiff might have raised held admissible in action for failure to furnish water for irrigation.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, admission of evidence of value of crop plaintiff might have raised under irrigation held not error.

22. Waters and water courses ☞263—Evidence that well site could have furnished sufficient water for irrigating plaintiff's land held admissible.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, admission of evidence that certain well site could have furnished sufficient water for irrigating lands described in agreement sued on held not error, where such water was appurtenant to plaintiff's land and there was no testimony of demands by other owners for such water.

23. Waters and water courses ☞263—Findings held to support judgment for failure to furnish water for irrigation.

In action for failure to furnish water for irrigation, findings held sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff as against contention that there was no finding with reference to what amount of water was necessary or convenient for irrigation of plaintiff's lands.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Clarence L. Chrisman against the Southern California Edison Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Roy V. Reppy, E. W. Cunningham, and Robert M. Clarke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bowker & Sheridan and W. H. Barnes, all of Ventura, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff brought suit for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the failure and neglect of the defendant to furnish necessary water for the irrigation of certain lands of the plaintiff. Defendant appeals from a judgment rendered for plaintiff.

Before any evidence was taken defendant moved for judgment on the pleadings and for dismissal of the action on the ground that the amended complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that the agreements attached to and made a part of the amended complaint are each of them void for want of mutuality and void for want of certainty. The obligation to deliver water under the four separate agreements sued upon is typified by the language used in the contract set up as Exhibit A attached to the amended complaint, and is as follows:

"That the party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar to it paid and of the covenants and agreements on the part of the party of the second part hereinafter contained, agrees to deliver through its distributing system, to the party of the second part, when demanded, on 15 days' notice, pro rata of the acreage, in the order of distribution to which the land is entitled to water, under the rules and regulations of the party of the first part, all the water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of and being appurtenant to the following described land."

The undertaking with reference to the taking of and payment for the water is as follows:

"The party of the second part hereby agrees to pay to the party of the first part for all water delivered to him from the distributing system of the party of the first part, at the rate of twenty-five (25) cents per inch of thirteen thousand (13,000) gallons of water each twenty-four (24) hours, all payments for the distributing of water to be made within thirty (30) days from and after the delivery thereof, in gold coin of the United States."

The agreement provides that it shall continue in full force for 50 years from January 1, 1906, and shall apply to and bind the successors and assigns of the respective parties thereto. Appellant asserts that the contracts lack mutuality in that the seller is obligated to furnish water, but there is no corresponding obligation on the buyer to take any water. The case of Schimmel v. Martin, 190 Cal. 429, 213 P. 33, is cited, where the court says:

"The contract is lacking in mutuality. Considered as a contract for the sale of personal property, as the parties to the action treated and considered it, and as the trial court in effect found it to be, there is clearly no mutuality in the absence of an agreement by the plaintiffs to buy the water offered for sale by the contract."

[1] But the foregoing case is to be distinguished from the case at bar in that no consideration whatever is mentioned in the contract then before the court. In the present case, a consideration of $1 is named in the agreement. Consideration supplies mutuality of obligation to the contract. Section 1605 of the Civil Code defines a good consideration as follows:

"Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise."

[2-4] In the instant case there was a valuable consideration for the making and entering into the contract. It is a matter of common knowledge that where a consideration of $1 is mentioned in a contract, other considerations usually pass between the parties to the agreement. A consideration of $1 is ordinarily sufficient to support a contract at law. Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 104 P. 689, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522. It has been decided that an option given for 25 cents is not without adequate consideration. Marsh v. Lott, 8 Cal. App. 384, 97 P. 163. The benefit may be trifling, but if the promisor is not otherwise lawfully entitled to it, it is sufficient to sustain the contract as a matter of law. The law does not weigh the quantum of the consideration. 6 Cal. Jur. p. 169. If the amount named is not adequate the vendor should so determine in his own mind before he signs the contract, but, having signed it, he must live up to his agreement. Any other rule would make the contract worthless and mere waste paper. 6 Cal. Jur. p. 189; Bird v. Potter, 146 Cal. 286, 79 P. 970. The contract in the present case is in the nature of an option to purchase personal property. The rule seems to be that any money or other valuable thing, however small, moving from the optionee to the optioner for an option to purchase property at its adequate value, is sufficient to render the option binding upon the optioner for the time specified. An option agreement, although in its nature unilateral, is as binding upon the part of the optioner as is a bilateral agreement upon the parties thereto, when supported by a valuable consideration, whether such consideration is adequate in amount or not. Braserton v. Vokal, 53 Cal. App. 582, 200 P. 670.

[5, 6] As a unilateral contract is not founded on mutual promises, the doctrine of mutuality of obligation is inapplicable to such a contract. Nevada Bank v. Steinmitz, 64 Cal. 301, 30 P. 970; Mathewson v. Fitch, 22 Cal. 86. In the case at bar the complaint alleges an option given by defendant's predecessor in interest to plaintiff's predecessor in interest, agreeing to deliver water for irrigation purposes, when demanded, at a certain price, and that plaintiff made demand for said water for irrigation purposes as provided in said contract. Upon demand being made, the contract was no longer unilateral, and plaintiff became liable under the contract to take and pay for all the water necessary for irrigation purposes, as demanded. All that was required of plaintiff to exercise the option and accept the offer contained in the option contract was to make the demand for water as provided in the contract. In Flickinger v. Heck, 187 Cal. 111, 200 P. 1045, the court says:

"An option contract may be regarded as embodying an offer. When the optionee, or person to whom the offer is made, signifies his desire to accept in accordance with the terms of the option, the optioner, or person making the offer, becomes obligated to perform. This acceptance of the offer contained in the option contract is called 'election' and it gives rise to a subsequent contract between the parties to buy or sell, or perform whatever other acts have been specified in the option contract. Pennsylvania Min. Co. v. Smith, 207 Pa. 210, 56 A. 426. 'The particular act or acts which constitute an election may be fixed by the terms of the option, as also the time when, the place where, and the person to whom it shall be made.' James on Law of Option Contracts, §§ 801, 817. The language of the contract itself controls as to what act or acts constitute an election. Under the terms of one option, election may consist of a tender of the property to be sold or purchase price to be paid; under the terms of another option, it may consist of a mere notice of election to purchase or sell, leaving payment of the price and delivery of the property as subsequent matters in performance of the executory contract raised by the election. Breen v. Mayne, 141 Iowa, 399, 118 N. W. 441; Byers v. Denver Circle R. Co., 13 Colo. 552, 22 P. 951; James on Law of Election Contracts, § 817. If the tender of property or purchase price constitutes an 'election,' it must be performed in order to turn the offer contained in the option contract into a contractual obligation, and, if not performed as provided in the option contract, no subsequent contractual liability arises; if the tender is merely in performance of the contract created by a notice of election, it is controlled by the terms of that contract, and 'in the absence of anything in the contract itself, the obligation of the parties in the performance of the contract is governed by the law applying generally to bilateral contracts for the purchase and sale of property. * * * Cates v. McNeil, 169 Cal. 697, 147 P. 944."

In Feisthamel v. Campbell, 55 Cal. App. 774, 205 P. 25, it is said:

"An option agreement, supported by sufficient consideration, is an enforceable contract, notwithstanding its unilateral character, and the question of want of mutuality of remedy does not affect it. 'If mutuality, in a broad sense, were held to be an essential element in every valid contract, to the extent that both contracting parties could sue on it, there could be no such thing as a valid unilateral or option contract, or a contract evidenced by a subscription paper, or a contract to enforce a reward offer, or a guaranty, or in many other instances readily put in ordinary business affairs. * * * An option, supported by a consideration, furnishes another illustration of a contract which is valid, notwithstanding the lack of mutuality. It is no objection to the validity of the contract that the holder of the option is under no obligation to exercise it.' 6 Ruling Case Law, p. 687, and decisions shown in footnote. See, also, Pittsburgh Vitrified P. & B. Co. v. Bailey, 76 Kan. 42, 90 P. 803, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 745."

Since the contract pleaded in the complaint was an option agreement supported by sufficient consideration, it was, in our opinion, an enforceable contract and was valid, notwithstanding the lack of mutuality.

[7] Appellant's contention that the contract pleaded is void for want of certainty is without merit. Under the terms of the contract, the user agrees to pay for water at the rate of 25 cents per inch each 24 hours, and an inch is defined as 13,000 gallons.

[8, 9] Appellant claims there is no allegation in the complaint that defendant had in its control or possession appurtenant water available for distribution under the agreements mentioned. The complaint alleges:

"That at all times herein mentioned said defendant was the owner of water appurtenant to the land hereinbefore described in an amount sufficient to supply the necessary and convenient demand for the irrigation of said land, and in an amount more than sufficient to supply said land pro rata of its acreage in the order of distribution to which said land was entitled to water."

Since an owner is ordinarily entitled to control and possession, we think that the foregoing is a sufficient allegation, as against a motion for judgment on the pleadings, that the defendant had in its control or possession appurtenant water available for distribution under said agreements. As opposed to this allegation, defendant's authorities to the effect that an agreement to deliver water does not include an agreement to develop water are beside the point. It remains to be determined by the proof offered whether development of additional water was necessary. Ownership of water appurtenant to land in an amount sufficient to supply the necessary and convenient demand for irrigation of said land and in an amount more than sufficient to supply said land pro rata of the acreage in the order of which said land was entitled to water, necessarily implies that such water supply had already been developed.

[10-12] Defendant demurred specially to the amended complaint and each cause of action therein on the ground that they were uncertain and unintelligible for the reason that it cannot be ascertained whether the defendant assumed any of the obligations referred to in the agreements. The complaint alleges that plaintiff is the owner and in possession of certain lands; that certain agreements in writing were executed and delivered by and between the Ventura County Power Company and plaintiff's predecessor in interest; that said agreements were duly recorded; that in and by said agreements the Ventura County Power Company agreed to furnish water to plaintiff's predecessors in interest for the purpose of irrigating said lands, as set forth in the agreements attached thereto and made a part thereof; that plaintiff was the owner of and entitled to all the benefits under said contracts; that defendant purchased of and from the Ventura County Power Company all of its property and property rights, including the water appurtenant to said land and all the water and water rights in and to the Ventura river, together with its distributing system, including said agreements between Ventura County Power Company and plaintiff's predecessors in interest; that defendant is the successor in interest of Ventura County Power Company in and to said water rights, distributing system, and the contracts referred to. We think that the demurrer was not well taken. When defendant purchased, as alleged, all of the property and property rights of Ventura County Power Company, including the water appurtenant to the land of plaintiff, it purchased said water subject to any existing rights to the use of said water. The right to water to be used for irrigation purposes is a right in real property. Schimmel v. Martin, 190 Cal. 429, 213 P. 33; Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 93 P. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359; Copeland v. Fairview Land etc. Co., 165 Cal. 148, 131 P. 119. The purchaser of a water distributing system is under obligation to continue to serve the consumers previously receiving service therefrom, even though he does not expressly assume that obligation. Hunt v. Jones, 149 Cal. 297, 86 P. 686; Telander v. Tujunga Water & Power Co., 43 Cal. App. 492, 185 P. 504.

[13] Appellant contends that it does not appear from the complaint that the power company ever had a distributing system by means of which water was delivered to plaintiff's land, or that this distributing system, if it existed, was sold by the power company to defendant. In other words, that there is nothing in the complaint to justify the inference or conclusion that the distributing system sold to defendant was the one used by the power company in supplying water under these contracts. We cannot agree with this contention. It expressly appears from the foregoing analysis that the complaint alleges that the power company agreed to furnish and distribute "all the water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of and being appurtenant to" said lands. The complaint further alleges that the defendant purchased from the power company all of its property and property rights of every nature, kind and character, together with its distributing system, including said agreements to distribute water. This necessarily included the distributing system which served the plaintiff under these contracts.

It appears from the evidence that on October 31, 1906, an agreement was made between the San Miguel Company and the Ventura County Power Company wherein it was recited that a resolution had been adopted on the same date at a meeting of the board of directors of the San Miguel Company, stating it to be the purpose of the San Miguel Company to improve by irrigation the lands now owned by it and described as the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel in Ventura county, Cal.; and to that end it reserved and retained unto itself all the water and water rights lying beneath the surface of said lands for the purpose of distribution of said water to the said lands as appurtenant thereto; and to apportion and distribute such water as may be necessary for the irrigation from a common source of wells or works of such subdivisions of land as may be conveyed by the corporation from time to time, and for the benefit of all of said land. The resolution further recited that it was necessary to apportion and distribute to purchasers of parcels of said land the water to which they were entitled as appurtenant to the land purchased. The resolution provided that the San Miguel Company should sell to the Ventura County Power Company such land as might be determined upon by the board of directors of the contracting corporations, "together with the wells now constructed and being upon said lands, reserving and retaining unto the San Miguel Company, and to its successors, assigns and grantees, all the right, title, property and interest in and to all the water and water rights lying and being beneath the surface of the land that will be conveyed by authority of this resolution, together with all the water flowing from and to hereafter flow from said wells, and to all the water that may flow from any and all wells that may hereafter be constructed upon said lands, as a water right appurtenant to all that certain parcel of land situated in Ventura county, Cal., known and designated as the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel." It was further resolved that the San Miguel Company transfer to the Ventura County Power Company "all the pipe lines now constructed upon the land above described, with the electric motors, pumps, fittings and belongings, as now existing, granting to the Ventura County Power Company the right, and the Ventura County Power Company accepting the obligation, to distribute to the San Miguel Company, its successors, assigns and grantees, all the water appurtenant to the land as hereinbefore declared, when demanded for the irrigation of said land, under such agreements and conditions as will make the distribution of said appurtenant water fair and equitable to all the land herein described." The resolution further authorized the officers of the San Miguel Company to execute to the Ventura Company "a deed of the land purchased, or such agreement of sale as may be determined upon, and, further, to sell, assign, transfer, and convey all the right, title and interest to this corporation in and to the pipe lines, electric motors, pumps, fittings and belongings above named, upon the Ventura County Power Company executing a proper agreement that it will distribute the water appurtenant to the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, as hereinabove stated." Pursuant to the foregoing resolution, the agreement further provides, in consideration of the sum of $10, and in consideration of a certain agreement of sale and purchase between the parties of certain land situated in the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, together with the wells constructed upon said land, and of the covenants and agreements therein set forth, "said agreement bearing even date herewith," the San Miguel Company does sell to the Ventura County Power Company all of the pipe lines now constructed upon the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, with the electric motors, pumps, fittings and belongings, with the rights of way for said pipe lines, as now situated upon said ranch, and the right of way for pipe lines along the roads now delineated upon the map of the land hereinbefore mentioned; also the right to lay water conduits beneath the surface of the land. The San Miguel Company reserves unto itself, its successors and assigns, "all the right, title, property and interest in and to all the water and water rights lying and being beneath the surface of that tract of land known as the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, as hereinbefore described, together with all the water flowing from and hereafter to flow from the wells now constructed and being upon said ranch, and hereby declares such water and water rights appurtenant to the land above described." The San Miguel Company further granted to the Ventura Company "the right to distribute through pipe lines and conduits water from (for) the irrigation of said land, under such agreements, rules and regulations as will make the distribution of said appurtenant water fair and equitable to all the land herein described, whether as a whole or in subdivisions of whatever area, at such price as may be determined upon." The Ventura County Power Company agreed for itself, its successors and assigns, to "accept the property above mentioned, with the privileges and rights of way particularly described, and upon the conditions and reservations above set forth; and does, for itself, its successors and assigns, hereby agree that it will at all times distribute the water flowing from the wells above mentioned to the land hereinabove described for purposes of irrigation of said land, and as appurtenant thereto all the water flowing from said wells, as demanded by the holders of land within the boundaries above set forth, under such agreements, rules and conditions as will apportion the distribution of said appurtenant water fairly and equitably to all the land herein described, at such price as may be determined upon." The instrument concludes:

"To have and to hold all and singular the above-described property, rights of way and privileges, unto the said Ventura County Power Company, and to its successors and assigns, for the term of 50 years from and after the date hereof."

This instrument was recorded November 7, 1906, in the Ventura county recorder's office.

On November 1, 1906, the Ventura County Power Company entered into an agreement with the Buena Ventura Company whereby the power company, "in consideration of the sum of $1 to it paid and of the covenants and agreements on the part of the party of the second part hereinafter contained, agrees to deliver, through its distributing system, to the party of the second part, * * * when demanded, on 15 days' notice, all the water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of and being appurtenant to the following described land, situate in the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, county of Ventura, state of California, being a part of subdivision No. 1 of said ranch, * * * and containing 42.46 acres of land." The power company "reserves the right to furnish to the party of the second part, for purposes of irrigation of the land above described, the water appurtenant to said land from the wells or works situate and being on the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, or from any other source of water supply owned and controlled by the party of the first part, when water from such supply may be had." The party of the second part "agrees to pay the party of the first part for all water delivered to it from the distributing system of the party of the first part, at the rate of twenty-five (25) cents per inch of thirteen thousand (13,000) gallons of water each twenty-four (24) hours." The agreement was to continue in force for the term of 50 years from and after January 1, 1906, and was to bind the successors and assigns of the respective parties.

On November 20, 1906, an agreement similar in terms was entered into between the power company and C. L. Chrisman covering a portion of the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, containing 77.12 acres. On July 25, 1907, the power company entered into a similar agreement with Mark McLoughlin covering a parcel of land in the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, containing 140 acres. On August 1, 1907, the power company entered into another agreement with G. J. and Thomas Mullis, which in substance was the same as the other agreements, covering a parcel of land containing 25 acres in the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel.

At the time of the execution of the agreement between the San Miguel Company and the Ventura County Power Company two wells were located on the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel on a parcel of land containing 3.44 acres, referred to as the Beach well site. The Beach well site remained the property of the San Miguel Company until July 15, 1916, on which date it was conveyed to the power company. The conveyance was unqualified in terms, making no reservation of any water or water rights. This conveyance also included all pipe lines upon the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel together with all necessary right of entry and of way to repair, renew, and maintain said pipe lines. This deed recited that it was made pursuant to a resolution of the board of directors of the San Miguel Company. The resolution was passed September 22, 1906, and authorized the officers of the company to sell all or any part of the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel for such prices and upon such terms and conditions as they might deem proper for the benefit and advantage of the corporation. On November 19, 1917, the power company conveyed all of its property to the defendant for valuable consideration. Prior to the year 1920 the plaintiff had become the owner of the Buena Ventura tract and the Mullis tract, and was occupying the Chrisman tract under a lease. He had also entered into a contract to purchase the McLoughlin tract and the McLoughlin agreement with the power company. Plaintiff also showed that he had received an assignment of the Buena Ventura and the Mullis agreements.

In the year 1920 the plaintiff planted lima beans on the Chrisman, Buena Ventura, Mullis, and McLoughlin tracts. The rainfall for the season of 1919-1920 had been short, and it was necessary to irrigate the lima beans in order to produce a full crop. On or about the 2d day of June, 1920, plaintiff caused written demands to be served upon the defendant, in which he claimed to be entitled to receive water under the Chrisman, Mullis, McLoughlin, and Buena Ventura agreements, and requested and demanded water for irrigation purposes to be delivered on the lands described in those agreements; the demand being for "all water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of the within described real property." The defendant furnished no water from the Beach well system to plaintiff in response to these demands. It did, however, furnish from the Mound system, from water not appurtenant to the lands herein mentioned, to the Chrisman tract of 77 acres an amount of water described by the plaintiff as 210 inches. Plaintiff stated that he should have had 1,200 inches more on the 77-acre tract, 2,400 inches on the McLoughlin tract of 140 acres, 500 inches for the Mullis tract of 25 acres, and 600 or 700 inches for the Buena Ventura tract of 40 acres. He testified that it would take at least 12 inches to the acre, if not more, at the very minimum. Plaintiff testified that in 1920 he had two wells on the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel which would have produced a flow of 150 inches; that he offered to allow the defendant to take this water for the purpose of supplying his demands for water on the four parcels of land upon which he was raising lima beans, but that the engineer of the water department of the defendant company, sent by the vice president of the defendant to investigate and report on the matter, said that "he was afraid that might complicate matters with them, and it might make them under obligation to furnish it in the future, and they might recognize the contracts in question here by doing so."

The Beach wells were originally artesian flowing wells and had been in existence some time prior to the date of the execution of the agreement between the San Miguel Company and the power company. The flow from these wells is estimated to have been about 75 inches in 1903, but in 1908 and 1909, even when pumped, produced from 45 to 50 inches, according to the testimony offered by defendant. Plaintiff testified that he received water from the Beach wells when these contracts were first made, and that the last water received from the Beach wells was possibly in 1914 or 1915. James P. McLoughlin testified that water from the Beach wells was delivered on the McLoughlin tract for four or five years after the making of the contract. G. J. Mullis testified that water was furnished to the plaintiff as his tenant to the year 1908. C. F. Zapf, who was in charge of operation of the water properties of the power company and of the defendant, testified that he pumped water from the Beach wells in 1908, but that in 1909 a futile attempt was made to clean out the wells, and that to his knowledge no further attempt was made to get water from the wells. The meter readings of the electric meters of the power company show no consumption of electricity by the motor operating the pump at the Beach well site after August 25, 1909. According to Mr. Zapf, the supply of water at the Beach well site in 1908 was fairly good the first part of the season, but during June and July it gradually diminished and the wells were gradually sanding up. The books of the Ventura County Power Company show charges for the delivery of water to the owners of the lands covered by this suit in the years 1907, 1908, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916. After deliveries from the Beach wells had ceased, water was delivered by the power company and the defendant on the lands described in the agreement sued upon through the Mound water system.

Testimony was offered by the plaintiff tending to show that numerous wells had been drilled in the vicinity of the Beach well site, producing water more than sufficient to irrigate the plaintiff's land properly, although defendant's testimony tended to show that the water level would be affected by the pumping of other wells in the same district.

[14] Under this state of the record defendant asserts that the findings are not supported by the evidence in five different respects: First, defendant claims that it did not purchase nor at any time own water appurtenant to the plaintiff's lands. The record shows that defendant purchased the Beach well site from the power company, which had purchased the same from the San Miguel Company in 1916, ten years after the power company and the San Miguel Company had entered into an agreement providing for the distribution of this water over the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, which the San Miguel Company proposed to subdivide, and in which agreement the San Miguel Company reserved all of said water as appurtenant to such land. During the interim the land was subdivided and sold, and the power company entered into contracts with the buyers to distribute the water to the lands so sold. The power company could not escape its liability under these contracts by permitting the wells to sand up and the pipes to become in a disusable condition so that it was necessary to supply water from another source of supply, as it had the right to do under the agreements with the landowners, and then accept an absolute deed to the well site and claim it was freed from all obligations to deliver water when there was a shortage of supply from the additional source so substituted. Defendant says that it is impossible for defendant to own water appurtenant to plaintiff's land. Defendant owned the Beach well site and the distributing system, subject to all the obligations of the power company to distribute the water to said lands. Hunt v. Jones, supra; Telander v. Tujunga Water & Power Co., supra. Defendant thus had the obligation to distribute and owned the right of possession and control of said water appurtenant to said lands. It had the control and possession of these waters, although their use was reserved to the benefit of the purchasers of the land from the San Miguel Company, notwithstanding the fact that the San Miguel Company attempted to convey the well site to the power company by absolute deed in 1916.

[15] Defendant next attacks the findings on the ground that the evidence shows that the defendant did not purchase from the power company the distributing system serving plaintiff's lands, nor the power company's rights and obligations under the agreements sued upon, and is not the successor in interest of the power company. As already stated, the defendant purchased the Beach well site, and in so purchasing all the property of the power company, including the distributing system, the defendant was under obligation to continue to serve the consumers previously receiving service therefrom, although it does not expressly assume that obligation. Hunt v. Jones, supra; Telander v. Tujunga Water & Power Co., supra.

[16, 17] Defendant further criticizes the findings in that the evidence shows that there was not available to defendant sufficient appurtenant water to use in the irrigation of plaintiff's lands. Plaintiff offered evidence tending to show the existence of a sufficient supply of appurtenant water for the irrigation of plaintiff's lands by showing the existence in 1920 of other wells in the vicinity of the Beach well site. Defendant now argues that defendant was under no obligation to develop water at the Beach well site for the reason that the only duty under the agreements made between the power company and the landowners was "to deliver through its distributing system" the appurtenant water. This brings us to the crucial question at issue, whether the power company, or the defendant as its successor, was obligated to develop water or to maintain the existing water supply. Under the terms of the agreements made between the land purchasers and the Ventura County Power Company, the power company (italics ours) "agrees to deliver through its distributing system, to the party of the second part, when demanded, on 15 days' notice, pro rata of the acreage, in the order of distribution to which the land is entitled to water, under the rules and regulations of the party of the first part, all the water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of and being appurtenant to the following described land, situate in the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, county of Ventura, state of California." It will be observed that the water to be delivered under the terms of these agreements is not limited to the water from flowing or artesian wells. The power company could not possibly deliver "all the water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of and being appurtenant to" the said land without at least maintaining the existing water supply, either by sinking new wells or pumping, if necessary. Such was the construction placed upon the contract by the power company, as the evidence shows that the power company continued to pump the existing wells on the Beach site to and including the year 1909. Besides, water was furnished to the landowners under these agreements up to the year 1920, both by the power company and by the defendant company, without any denial on the part of either company of the obligation to furnish such water when demanded. True, this water was furnished from another source owned by the power company and the defendant, as such right had been reserved in the agreement, but this right to furnish water from another source was reserved by the power company under the terms of the agreement only "when water from such other source of supply may be had." This right to supply such other water did not destroy the obligation of the power company and the defendant company to supply from the original source at the Beach well site when no other source of supply might be had. Neither was the obligation to deliver water limited to water supplied from the Beach well site, but the agreement of the power company was to deliver all the water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of and being appurtenant to the said land. There is sufficient testimony in the record to justify the conclusion that there was a supply of water underlying the entire west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel which was appurtenant to said lands. In support of the argument that the agreement of the power company was limited to water flowing from existing artesian wells and did not extend to water that might be obtained by pumping, appellant refers to the agreement of October 31, 1906, made between the San Miguel Company and the Ventura County Power Company wherein the San Miguel Company sold to the power company, for a term of 50 years, all its pipe lines, together with the electric motors, pumps, fittings, and belongings, with the right of way for said pipe lines, reserving to itself all water and water rights lying and being beneath the surface of the west one-half of the rancho, "together with all the water flowing from, and hereafter to flow from, the wells now constructed and being upon said ranch, and hereby declares such water and water rights appurtenant to the land above described." The power company agreed to accept the property so conveyed. There is no definite provision in this agreement requiring the power company to sink additional wells, or to do any pumping. All the parties in interest concede that the agreements made between the land purchasers and the power company should be construed in the light of the contract between the San Miguel Company and the power company, providing for the distribution of water to said lands. These agreements were all part of one whole transaction, and the land buyers are entitled to the benefits of the agreement between the San Miguel Company and the power company. A clear analysis of this agreement will disclose the intention of the parties to provide a water supply for the lands being sold by the San Miguel Company. The agreement recites a resolution of the board of directors of the San Miguel Company wherein it is resolved that (italics ours):

"It is the purpose and intention of the San Miguel Company to improve by irrigation" the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, and "to that end it has reserved and retained unto itself all the right, title and interest in and to all the water and water rights lying and being beneath the surface of said land, for the purpose of distribution of said water to the said land as appurtenant thereto, and to apportion and distribute such water as may be necessary to the irrigation, from a common source of wells or works, of such subdivisions of land as may be conveyed by the corporation from time to time and for the benefit of all of said land; and whereas, it has become necessary to apportion and distribute to purchasers of parcels of said land the water to which they are entitled as appurtenant to the land purchased; therefore, be it resolved, by the board of directors of the San Miguel Company that this corporation sell and convey to the Ventura County Power Company such land as may be determined upon by the board of directors of the contracting corporations, and at such price as may be determined upon, together with the wells now constructed and being upon said lands, reserving and retaining unto the San Miguel Company, and to its successors, assigns and grantees, all the right, title, property and interest in and to all the water and water rights lying and being beneath the surface of the land that will be conveyed by authority of this resolution; together with all the water flowing from and to hereafter flow from said wells, and to all the water that may flow from any and all wells that may hereafter be constructed upon said lands, as a water right appurtenant to all that certain parcel of land situated in Ventura county, California, known and designated as the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel."

It was further resolved that the San Miguel Company sell and transfer to the power company—

"all the pipe lines now constructed upon the land above described, with the electric motors, pumps, fittings, and belongings, as now existing, granting to the Ventura County Power Company the right, and the Ventura County Power Company accepting the obligation, to distribute to the San Miguel Company, its successors, assigns and grantees, all the water appurtenant to the land as hereinbefore declared, when demanded for the irrigation of said land, under such agreements and conditions as will make the distribution of said appurtenant water fair and equitable to all the land herein described."

It was further resolved that upon the agreement of terms and receipt of the purchase price, the president or any vice president, and James R. Martin (secretary of both corporations) be authorized to execute and deliver to the power company—

"a deed of the land purchased, or such agreement of sale as may be determined upon, and, further, to sell, assign, transfer and convey all the right, title and interest of this corporation in and to the pipe lines, electric motors, pumps, fittings, and belongings above named, upon the Ventura County Power Company executing a proper agreement that it will distribute the water appurtenant to the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, as hereinabove stated."

The agreement is made "in pursuance of the resolution aforesaid," in consideration of the sum of $10, and "in consideration of a certain agreement of sale and purchase between the parties hereto of certain land situated in the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, * * * together with the wells constructed upon said land, and of the covenants and agreements therein set forth." The agreement provides that the San Miguel Company does sell and convey to the power company—

"all the pipe lines now constructed upon the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, with the electric motors, pumps, fittings and belongings, with the rights of way for said pipe lines, as now situated upon said ranch, and the right of way for pipe lines along the roads now delineated upon the map of the land hereinbefore mentioned; also the right to lay water conduits beneath the surface of the land, in such manner as not to interfere with the use of said land by the owner thereof, and such right is reserved by the party of the first part in conveying the land to the purchasers thereof."

The contract further provides:

"The party of the first part herein hereby reserves, withholds and retains unto itself, and to its successors and assigns all the right, title, property and interest in and to all the water and water rights lying and being beneath the surface of that tract of land known as the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel, as hereinbefore described, together with all the water flowing from, and hereafter to flow from the wells now constructed and being upon said ranch, and hereby declares such water and water rights appurtenant to the land above described. The party of the first part hereby grants to the Ventura County Power Company the right to distribute through pipe lines and conduits water from (for) the irrigation of said land, under such agreements, rules and regulations as will make the distribution of said appurtenant water fair and equitable to all the land herein described, whether as a whole or in subdivisions of whatever area, at such price as may be determined upon. The party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to and with the party of the first part that it does for itself, its successors and assigns, accept the property above mentioned, with the privileges and rights of way particularly described, and upon the conditions and reservations above set forth; and does, for itself, its successors and assigns, hereby agree that it will at all times distribute the water flowing from the wells above mentioned to the land hereinabove described for purposes of irrigation of said land, and as and appurtenant thereto all the water flowing from said wells, as demanded by the holders of land within the boundaries above set forth, under such agreements, rules and conditions as will apportion and distribute said appurtenant water fairly and equitably to all the land herein described, at such price as may be determined upon. To have and to hold all and singular the above described property, rights of way and privileges, unto the said Ventura County Power Company, and to its successors and assigns, for the term of fifty years from and after the date hereof."

It can scarcely be denied that under the terms of the foregoing contract the power company was not only obligated to distribute the existing waters flowing from the wells on the land conveyed to it, but also, in order to accomplish the purpose as recited in the resolution embodied in said contract "to improve by irrigation" said lands, it is clear that the power company had the right to distribute all of said appurtenant waters, whether flowing or underground, and to sink new wells and pump old and new wells, as appears from the fact that it is recited in the resolution that the San Miguel Company reserves to itself, its successors, assigns and grantees all the right to all water that may flow from any and all wells that may hereafter be constructed upon said lands; in fact, the purpose and intention of the agreement between the San Miguel Company and the power company to provide an adequate water supply to said lands is so positive that it might well be contended, in the absence of any definite provision therefor, that the power company was obligated by the whole tenor of said contract to develop and maintain the water supply from the lands agreed to be conveyed to the power company. But without so deciding, we find that the contracts between the power company and the land purchasers were not limited to flowing waters but said contracts provide that the power company "agrees to deliver * * * all the water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of and being appurtenant to" said lands. The fact that the power company did not see fit to insert a clause in these later contracts limiting its obligation for delivery of water to flowing waters only, together with the fact that the power company continued pumping the wells to and including the year 1909, point to the conclusion that the power company and the San Miguel Company recognized not only the right of the power company to maintain and develop a water supply, but also the implied obligation of the power company so to do. Under all the circumstances in the case it is impossible to conceive how the San Miguel Company and the power company intended to limit the source of supply to the then existing flow of artesian water. The term of the contract was for 50 years, and it was clearly the intention to provide irrigation from all appurtenant water, including the underground supply. We find no fault with the authorities cited by appellant, holding that flowing waters do not include pumped water, or additional water thereafter developed from underground sources; but we do not believe the agreements in this case were limited to flowing water as the wells then existed, or to water to flow thereafter from those wells. In the cases cited by defendant (Mayberry v. Alhambra, etc., Co., 125 Cal. 444, 54 P. 530, 58 P. 68; Jones v. Van Nuys, 161 Cal. 158, 118 P. 541), the contracts sued upon were contracts to take "flowing" waters and "water hereafter to flow"; and it was rightly held that these words denote the natural flow and do not reasonably denote waters to be in the future artificially developed. In the case at bar there was no limitation to flowing waters in the contracts sued upon; but "all water necessary and convenient for the irrigation of and being appurtenant to" the lands described therein, "from the wells or works situate and being on the west one-half of the Rancho San Miguel," was included in the contracts sued upon.

[18] Defendant questions the sufficiency of the evidence to show that it could have developed water at the Beach well site either "in an amount sufficient to supply necessary and convenient demands for the irrigation" of plaintiff's lands, or "in an amount more than sufficient to supply said land pro rata of its acreage." We have examined the evidence offered by the plaintiff and believe this evidence sufficient to support the findings of the trial court. It was incumbent upon the defendant to meet this evidence by affirmative evidence showing that the defendant had attempted to develop such amount of water on the Beach well site and that such amount of water could not be developed.

[19] Defendant's next objection to the findings is that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the finding that there was any appurtenant water. Defendant is in no position to urge this objection, since the power company, as its predecessor in interest, entered into the agreement with the San Miguel Company and accepted the provisions thereof, wherein it was declared that the Beach well site and all subterranean waters underlying the rancho were appurtenant thereto and for the benefit of all said lands. Subsequent purchasers would derive the benefit of this reservation as against the power company.

[20] Finally, defendant asserts that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that plaintiff was unable to secure water from any other source for the purpose of irrigating his land, for the reason that plaintiff had water of his own, and therefore that the proper measure of his damages herein was not the damage to his crops. Plaintiff testified that he had 150 inches of water which he offered to deliver to the defendant if the defendant would distribute it to him, but that defendant's agent refused to distribute the water for the reason that the defendant company did not recognize an obligation so to do and did not wish to accept liability. Under these circumstances this supply of water was not available to the plaintiff. Hence the proper measure of damages is the loss of crops of plaintiff as a result of the fact that his crops were not irrigated, less the cost of production and less the net value of the crops actually produced. The plaintiff fulfilled the active duty of using all ordinary care and making all reasonable exertions to render the injury as light as possible, as such duties are imposed by the law as declared in the authorities cited by the defendant.

[21] Appellant advances the objection that the court improperly admitted evidence of the value of the crop plaintiff might have raised under irrigation, and cites the cases of Crow v. San Joaquin, etc., Irr. Co., 130 Cal. 309, 62 P. 562, 1058, Pallett v. Murphy, 131 Cal. 192, 63 P. 366, and Fresno Canal & Irr. Co. v. Perrin, 170 Cal. 411, 149 P. 805, as authority for the rule that the proper measure of damages in such a case in this state is the difference in rental value of the land, with or without water. However, upon examination of these cases we find the rule so stated where the crops had not already been planted. In the case at bar the bean crop had been planted before the demand for water was made. In such case the proper rule of damages for the destruction of a growing crop is the rule followed by the trial court. In Lowe v. Yolo County, etc., Water Co., 157 Cal. 503, 108 P. 297, it was held that the damages were measured by the net profits of what an alfalfa crop would have been for the season if properly irrigated. In Auchmoody v. City of Manhattan Beach, 53 Cal. App. 726, 731, 200 P. 803, damages were allowed for depreciation and destruction of growing crops by failure to deliver water. The court said, page 731 (200 P. 805):

"Appellant relies upon certain decisions which have held that where damages are claimed for refusal to furnish water upon land the true measure of damages must be determined by ascertaining the difference between the rental value of the land with water and its rental value without water. Crow v. San Joaquin Irr. Co., 130 Cal. 309, 62 P. 562, 1058; Fresno Canal & Irr. Co. v. Perrin, 170 Cal. 411, 149 P. 805. These were cases in which the plaintiff attempted to prove that he would have raised certain kinds of crops and that he would have obtained certain profits therefrom if he had received the supply of water to which he was entitled. As was said by the court in Pallett v. Murphy, 131 Cal. 192, 63 P. 366: 'Evidence as to the value of a possible crop that might be grown with the use of water would be as purely speculative as could well be imagined.' But in the present case the losses incurred consist in the depreciation or destruction of value of property actually in existence. These losses were capable of ascertainment by direct evidence, and were not at all speculative in their nature. Under these circumstances, the loss of chickens which died, and the loss of the growing crops which were destroyed, were of such a nature that recovery can be had therefor. Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 90 P. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779."

In Rystrom v. Sutter Butte Canal Co., 72 Cal. App. 520, 249 P. 53, it was held that the damages to growing crops are to be ascertained by first determining from the evidence the market value of the probable yield of the growing crop if the water had been furnished as agreed, and then deducting therefrom the reasonable cost of marketing and producing such crop, and also deducting therefrom the net market value of the crop actually produced. The foregoing rule for ascertaining the damages to growing crops was followed in Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 212, 214, 90 P. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779; Stewart v. Erskine-Bolst, 66 Cal. App. 461, 471, 472, 226 P. 644; Chambers v. Belmore I. & W. Co., 33 Cal. App. 78, 82, 83, 164 P. 404; Barlow v. Frink, 171 Cal. 165, 152 P. 290; Harrison v. Spring Valley H. G. Co., 65 Cal. 376, 4 P. 381; Telander v. Tujunga Water & Power Co., 43 Cal. App. 492, 497, 185 P. 504; Allen v. Los Molinos Land Co., 25 Cal. App. 206, 211, 143 P. 253.

[22] Appellant's objection that the court improperly admitted evidence that the Beach well site could have furnished sufficient water for irrigating the lands described in the agreements sued upon is not well taken. This water was appurtenant to plaintiff's land, and there is no testimony in the record of demands being made by other owners for such water.

Appellant's statement of the respects in which the judgment is not supported by the findings is based primarily upon the same reasons in respect to which defendant alleges that the complaint does not state a cause of action. Our ruling that the complaint does state a cause of action disposes of this objection.

[23] Appellant further objects that there is no finding with reference to what amount of water was necessary or convenient for the irrigation of the plaintiff's lands. No such allegation appears in the first three causes of action. On special demurrer, the fourth cause of action was amended to state the amount of water necessary for the irrigation of the lands described in said cause of action. Plaintiff testified that about 4,700 inches of water would have been required for irrigation. The court in making its decision indicated that the cost of production, including water, was being deducted from the total value of the crop that would have been grown under irrigation. The court in its findings stated that at all times mentioned in the complaint defendant was the owner of water appurtenant to said lands in an amount sufficient to supply the necessary and convenient demands for the irrigation of said lands and in an amount more than sufficient to supply said land pro rata of its acreage in the order of distribution to which said land was entitled to water; that defendant did not deliver any water for irrigation of the lands described in the first three causes of action, and that said lands were not irrigated; and that defendant delivered 210 inches only for irrigation of the land described in the fourth cause of action, which was not sufficient properly to irrigate said land; that said lands were properly cultivated and harvested; that there were grown and harvested from each of said parcels a certain quantity of beans and straw; that if defendant had provided the plaintiff water for irrigation of said lima bean crop at the time and in the quantity demanded, said parcels of land would have produced a certain greater amount of beans and straw; and that by reason of and as a result of the failure and refusal of defendant to furnish plaintiff water for the irrigation of said lima beans, the plaintiff was damaged in a certain sum as to each of said parcels. We believe the evidence sufficient to support the findings and the findings sufficient to support the judgment.

There being no prejudicial error, it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

201 Cal. 267

BAUER et al. v. BAUER et al. (L. A. 9021.)

Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1927.

1. Courts ⚡200½—Superior court sitting in probate may not try title to property between representative of estate and strangers thereto.

Superior court, sitting in probate, is without jurisdiction to try title to property as between representative of estate and strangers thereto.

2. Courts ⚡200½—Superior court sitting in probate may determine title of representative of estate in individual capacity.

Superior court, sitting in probate, has jurisdiction to determine validity of claim of title to property by representative of estate in his individual capacity on settlement of final accounts.

3. Courts ⚡472(4)—Superior court sitting in probate has exclusive jurisdiction of heir's action to establish trust in real property against executrix.

Superior court, sitting in probate, held to have exclusive jurisdiction of action by heirs against executrix to establish trust in real property, alleged to have been retained by her as her individual property.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by Hamilton A. Bauer and others against Lily M. Bauer individually and Lily M. Bauer and another as executors of the last will and testament of Emile Bauer, deceased, to establish trust. Judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint and dismissing the action, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 196 Cal. 757, 239 P. 49, 40 A. L. R. 1457; 199 Cal. 98, 248 P. 507.

Hamilton A. Bauer, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, amici curiae.

J. W. Morin and Morin, Newell & Brown, all of Pasadena, for respondents.

Hubbard & Johnson and T. W. Hubbard, all of San Francisco, amici curiae.

SEAWELL, J. By reason of the importance of the issues presented by this appeal, and the bearing that our conclusion would have upon the administration of estates of deceased persons and the duties and rights of executors and administrators thereof, we deemed it expedient to grant a petition for a rehearing in this cause, in order that a most thorough investigation and consideration of the questions might be had. The opinion rendered upon the first presentation was prepared by the late Mr. Justice LENNON and concurred in by all the members of this court participating therein. A petition for rehearing was filed and, for the reason above stated, was granted. The case has since been elaborately argued orally and carefully briefed by counsel in the case, and also by amici curiae, and submitted for our consideration. After full and careful consideration we find ourselves brought to the adoption of the conclusion reached upon the first presentation of the cause. We are of the view that such cases as In re Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 P. 734, Estate of Hall, 154 Cal. 527, 98 P. 269, Stevens v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 148, 99 P. 512, Estate of Fulton, 188 Cal. 489, 205 P. 681, and numerous other cases, bearing more or less directly upon the question, which might be cited to the same point, sustain the conclusion reached in the first instance. A few cases have been cited, which seem to give some color to the appellants' claims; but they are entirely overcome by what appears to us to be the better considered line of cases. The latter are also more in consonance with a logical interpretation of the various Code sections establishing our system of probate procedure and tend to bring litigation to a close.

We are satisfied that no constitutional right was invaded by the decision first handed down by this court, and that the rule announced would have the effect of preventing a state of confusion which would inevitably follow if appellants' views should be declared to be the law. Our former opinion, which was set aside upon petition for rehearing, and which we adopt as the law of the case, follows:

"This appeal is from a judgment made and entered on October 16, 1925, in favor of the defendants after the making of a certain order by the trial court sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend and granting a motion to dismiss said action.

"The complaint of the plaintiffs herein, after alleging the qualifications of certain of said plaintiffs to maintain this action, proceeds to aver that on the 25th day of October, 1921, Emile Bauer, deceased, was the owner and in possession of a certain piece of real estate situate in Pasadena, Cal.; that on said date there was in the safe deposit box of said Emile Bauer a deed to said property which he had theretofore subscribed and by which said deed, in consideration of love and affection, he had granted to Lily M. Bauer, the defendant herein, said property; that said Lily M. Bauer, on or about the 26th day of October, 1921, took said deed from said safe deposit box without the knowledge of said Emile Bauer and without his having made any delivery of said deed to her, and caused the said deed to be recorded; that said Emile Bauer died on the 4th day of June, 1923, in the city of Pasadena, leaving his last will and testament, which was, on or about the 12th day of July, 1923, duly admitted to probate, and said Lily M. Bauer and one Lloyd C. Bauer were granted letters testamentary as the executrix and executor named therein; that the plaintiffs herein are legatees of said Emile

Bauer under said will; that during the month of September, 1923, said Lily M. Bauer sold said real estate for the sum of $12,000, which she then received and has since retained and claims the same to be her individual property; that said Lily M. Bauer and Lloyd C. Bauer, as executrix and executor, respectively, of said estate, have refused to include in the inventory of said estate the said property, or any portion thereof, or the money derived from the sale thereof; that by reason of the failure and refusal of Lily M. Bauer and Lloyd C. Bauer, as the executrix and executor, respectively, of said estate, to include the said property and money in said estate and in the inventory of the estate, the said plaintiffs, who are legatees under the said will of said deceased, are being deprived of their respective shares and interests in said state as fixed by the terms of said will; that said Lily M. Bauer and said Lloyd C. Bauer, as the executrix and executor of said estate, are acting in collusion with each other in refusing to maintain any action against Lily M. Bauer in her individual capacity to recover for said estate said property or the proceeds thereof. The prayer of said complaint is that said defendant be adjudged to be a trustee for the benefit of the plaintiffs herein and of said estate in respect to the said sum of $12,000 derived by her from the sale of said real estate and for such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

"To the foregoing complaint the defendant Lily M. Bauer presented her demurrer upon the general ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against said defendant and upon the further ground that it appears therefrom that there is another action pending between the parties for the same cause, to wit, a proceeding in probate, and upon the further ground that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this action, the exclusive jurisdiction of the same resting with the court in probate, and also certain grounds of special demurrer which it is not necessary to consider. The said defendant also presented at the time of the filing her said demurrer a notice of motion to dismiss said action upon the ground that there is another action pending between the parties in reference to the same subject-matter, to wit, the estate of Emile Bauer, deceased, No. 62632, in probate, and upon the further ground that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this action. Prior to the hearing had upon said motion the plaintiffs presented a motion to said court for permission to add the names of Lily M. Bauer and Lloyd C. Bauer, as executors of the last will and testament of Emile Bauer, as parties defendant in said action.

"The hearing upon the demurrer and also upon each of the foregoing motions came on for hearing before the court on the 13th day of October, 1925. Whereupon it was stipulated between the parties that the last-named motion of the plaintiffs might be granted, joining Lily M. Bauer and Lloyd C. Bauer in their official capacities as parties defendant, and that the demurrer of Lily M. Bauer theretofore filed might stand as the demurrer of each and all of said defendants. The demurrer and motion to dismiss said action were then presented and submitted to the court for decision, and thereafter and on October 14, 1925, the trial court made its order sustaining said demurrer without leave to amend and also made its further order dismissing said action. The judgment followed from which this appeal has been taken.

"The main question presented upon this appeal is as to whether the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, for the reason that there was pending in the probate court the proceedings for the administration of the estate of Emile Bauer, deceased, and that, this being so, the probate court was the proper forum for the presentation and determination of the issues sought to be tried in this action.

"The facts as they appear upon the face of the complaint herein show that whatever individual rights the defendant Lily M. Bauer claimed to the real estate described therein and to the proceeds thereof arose prior to the death of Emile Bauer. The question, therefore, presented by the complaint for determination, was whether or not the defendant was the owner, in her individual capacity, of said property. In short, the complaint seeks an adjudication of the title as between said defendant Lily M. Bauer and the estate of Emile Bauer.

[1] "It is undoubtedly the rule that the superior court, sitting in probate, is without jurisdiction to try the question of title to property as between a representative of the estate and strangers to the estate. Ex parte Casey, 71 Cal. 269, 12 P. 118; Estate of Haas, 97 Cal. 232, 31 P. 893, 32 P. 327. This is necessarily so, for the reason that either the person initiating the attack or the person resisting the attack is lacking in privity to the probate proceedings.

[2] "It has, however, been held that when the title to property is claimed by a representative of an estate in his individual capacity the superior court, sitting in probate, is vested with the jurisdiction of determining the validity of such claim upon the settlement of the final accounts of such representative. Stevens v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 148, 99 P. 512; Estate of Fulton, 188 Cal. 489, 205 P. 681; 2 Woerner's American Law of Administration (3d Ed.) note, p. 1007; 3 Woerner's American Law of Administration, p. 1769.

[3] "Appellants attempt to distinguish the cases cited by respondents upon the ground that the cases holding that the probate court has jurisdiction to determine the title to property claimed by the representative of an estate in his individual capacity were cases wherein the possession of the property was acquired by the representative by virtue of his official capacity. This may be conceded to be true of several of the cases cited by respondents. The case of Stevens v. Superior Court, supra, cannot, however, be so distinguished. The facts are practically identical. In that case the executor alleged that the testator had transferred certain money to him in his individual capacity prior to the testator's death and claimed the property as his individual property. Upon objections being filed to his final account upon the ground that said executor had failed, neglected, and refused to account for the sum of money claimed by him, he sought a writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court, sitting in probate, from determining the validity of his title. The writ was denied upon the ground that the probate court did have the power to determine the title. The court said:

"It seems clear to us that the probate court must necessarily have the power to incidentally try and determine such an issue between the executor or administrator and the estate in the matter of the settlement of his exhibits and accounts. * * * We think there can be no doubt that the superior court, sitting in probate, has jurisdiction to determine as against an executor the amount of money or property of the estate that has come into his hands, for the purpose of charging him therewith, and in determining that question to determine all issues necessarily incidental thereto."

"It is self-evident that this is not a case where extrinsic fraud practiced upon the probate court has conferred jurisdiction upon the superior court as a court of equity to interpose and furnish relief from a final order of the court in probate. Silva v. Santos, 138 Cal. 536, 541, 71 P. 703; Aldrich v. Barton, 138 Cal. 220, 71 P. 169, 94 Am. St. Rep. 43.

"The order of the trial court sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend and granting the motion to dismiss the action was therefore proper."

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

201 Cal. 770

HAMILTON A. BAUER, Charlotte Bauer, as Guardian of the Estate of Hambla C. Bauer (a Minor), Walter J. Dyer, as Guardian of the Estate of Beatrice W. Dyer (a Minor), and Ivy F. Linecum and Charlotte Bauer, Individually and as Legatees under the Last Will and Testament of Emile Bauer, Deceased, Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. Lily M. BAUER and Lloyd C. Bauer, as Executors of the Last Will of Emile Bauer, Deceased, Lloyd C. Bauer and Occidental Life Insurance Company (a Corporation), Defendants and Respondents. (L. A. 8866.)

Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1927.

In Bank.

Appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Hugh J. Crawford, Judge, in an action to recover certain stock.

See, also, 196 Cal. 757, 239 P. 49, 40 A. L. R. 1457; 199 Cal. 98, 248 P. 507.

Hamilton A. Bauer, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, amici curiæ. J. W. Morin and Morin, Newell & Brown, all of Pasadena, for respondents.

Hubbard & Johnson and T. W. Hubbard, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

PER CURIAM. The preliminary statement made in Hamilton A. Bauer et al. v. Lily M. Bauer et al. (L. A. No. 9021) 256 P. 820, is applicable in all respects to the instant case. We therefore adopt the decision formerly rendered in this case, which was vacated upon the order granting the petition for rehearing, as our decision in the instant case. It follows:

"This is an action on behalf of certain heirs and legatees of Emile Bauer, deceased, to recover to his estate certain stock of the Occidental Life Insurance Company, which plaintiffs allege was procured by Lloyd C. Bauer, one of the defendants, from Emile Bauer in his lifetime by fraud and undue influence. The principle involved in this case is identical with the principle involved in the case of Hamilton A. Bauer et al. v. Lily M. Bauer et al. (L. A. No. 9021) 256 P. 820. On the authority of that case, therefore, the judgment in this case is affirmed."

201 Cal. 771

HAMILTON A. BAUER, Charlotte Bauer, as Guardian of the Estate of Hambla C. Bauer (a Minor), Walter J. Dyer, as Guardian of the Estate of Beatrice W. Dyer (a Minor), and Ivy F. Linecum and Charlotte Bauer, Individually and as Legatees Under the Last Will and Testament of Emile Bauer, Deceased, Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. Lily M. BAUER, Union Oil Company (a Corporation), Union Oil Associates (a Corporation), and Lily M. Bauer and Lloyd C. Bauer, as Executors of the Last Will and Testament of Emile Bauer, Deceased, Defendants and Respondents. (L. A. 9022.)

Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1927.

In Bank.

Appeal by Plaintiffs from a Judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Hartley Shaw, Judge, in an Action to Recover Certain Stock.

See, also, 196 Cal. 757; 239 P. 49; 40 A. L. R. 1457; 199 Cal. 98; 248 P. 507.

Hamilton A. Bauer, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, amici curiæ. J. W. Morin and Morin, Newell & Brown, all of Pasadena, for respondents.

Andrews & Andrews, of Los Angeles, for defendant Union Oil Associates.

Hubbard & Johnson and T. W. Hubbard, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

PER CURIAM. The preliminary statement made in Hamilton A. Bauer et al. v. Lily M. Bauer et al. (L. A. No. 9021) 256 P. 820, is applicable in all respects to the instant case. We therefore adopt the decision formerly rendered in this case, which was vacated upon the order granting the petition for rehearing, as our decision in the instant case. It follows:

"This is an action on behalf of certain heirs and legatees of Emile Bauer, deceased, to recover to his estate certain stock of the Union Oil Company and Union Oil Associates, which the plaintiffs allege was procured by Lily M. Bauer, one of the defendants, from Emile Bauer in his lifetime by fraud and undue influence. This case is identical in principle with the case of Hamilton A. Bauer et al. v. Lily M. Bauer et al. (L. A. No. 9021) 256 P. 820. On the authority of that case, therefore, the judgment in this case is affirmed."

83 Cal. App. 280

SHIRLEY v. SHIRLEY et al. (Civ. 5310.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 26, 1927.

1. Limitation of actions $\S$ 148(1)—Writing relied on to show agreement to pay debt barred by limitations must contain express promise or acknowledgment from which promise may be inferred (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 360).

Writing relied on as evidence to show agreement to pay debt barred by statute of limitations must contain express promise or acknowledgment from which present promise may be inferred, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 360.

2. Limitation of actions $\S$ 196(4)—In action on promise to pay debt barred by limitations, parol evidence held admissible to show that payment evidenced by one debtor's note was made by both debtors.

In action on promise to pay debt barred by statute of limitations, in which creditor had given receipt showing that one debtor's note had been received as part payment, parol evidence held admissible to show that payment was in fact made by both debtors.

3. Limitation of actions $\S$ 148(4) — Writing, showing debtor regards barred indebtedness as subsisting, constitutes promise to pay barred debt.

Writing executed by debtor is sufficient to constitute promise to pay debt barred by statute of limitations, if it shows that writer regards or treats indebtedness as subsisting, since from acknowledgment of subsisting indebtedness law implies promise to pay based on consideration of old debt.

4. Pleading $\S$ 18—In action on promise to pay debt barred by limitations, pleading, seeking to show that debtor signed indorsement, held demurrable for uncertainty.

In action on promise to pay debt barred by statute of limitations, allegation that debtor "then and there signed his 'Lake,'" and that it was agreed that time for payment was extended, and that indebtedness should continue, by which pleader sought to state that debtor sign indorsement, held demurrable, as being uncertain.

5. Limitation of actions $\S$ 179(3)—Complaint, in action on promise to pay debt barred by limitations, held to state cause of action.

In action on promise to pay debt barred by statute of limitations, complaint, alleging that note given by one debtor was applied as payment, and that the other debtor signed indorsement on original note showing such payment, held to state cause of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Charles W. Shirley against R. R. Shirley and another. From a judgment of dismissal, entered on an order sustaining the demurrer of defendant Frank W. Lake, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

James M. Robinson; of Los Angeles, and J. W. Robinson, of Seattle, Wash., for appellant. W. H. Thomas, of Los Angeles, for respondent Lake.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered upon an order sustaining the demurrer of respondent, Frank W. Lake, to a complaint upon an alleged promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations.

The original complaint, which appears to have been filed during the latter part of the year 1922, the date not being shown by the record on appeal, alleged that respondent and R. R. Shirley, on January 25, 1912, at Rockford, Ill., executed to appellant their promissory note for $1,600, which by its terms was there payable one year after date, with interest; that between the date of the note and October 23, 1915, various installments of interest thereon were paid; that on November 6, 1919, there was executed by Shirley a new note for $800, which was accepted by appellant as payment to that extent on the original note, and that Shirley paid at the same time the interest then due on the latter note in the further sum of $133.34; that the payment on the principal evidenced by the new note was indorsed on the original note in words and figures as follows:

"Rockford, Ill., Nov. 6, 1919. Paid by R. R. Shirley on within note the sum of $800 by new note for that amount."

It is further averred that—

The "said defendant Lake wrote upon the back of said promissory note the foregoing payments of $800 and $133.34, and that each of such payments were made for and behalf of each of the defendants, * * * that the said memorandum in writing written upon the back of said promissory note with pen and ink by said defendant Lake and then and there signed his 'Lake,' and it was then and there agreed between said plaintiff and defendant Lake that the payment of the principal of said note was then and there and thereby extended, and that said indebtedness so represented by said note was to continue to be paid at Rockford, Ill."

It sufficiently appears that it was the intention of the pleader to aver that respondent signed his name as part of the indorsement alleged.

Respondent's motion to strike certain allegations of the complaint was granted, and his demurrer which, in addition to grounds both general and special, alleged that the original note was barred by the provisions of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that the indorsement under the provisions of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure was insufficient to evidence a new promise, was sustained without leave to amend.

Appellant contends that the indorsement taken in connection with the attendant circumstances sufficiently evidence a new promise by respondent, and that the court erred in striking the allegations that the payment therein acknowledged was made on behalf of respondent and in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

[1] The purpose of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as held in Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 374, is to establish a rule not with respect to the character of the promise or acknowledgment from which a promise may be inferred, but with respect to the kind of evidence by which the promise or acknowledgment shall be proved, and the writing relied on as evidence must contain an express promise or an acknowledgment from which a present promise may be inferred. As the rule is stated in Clunin v. First Fed. Trust Co., 189 Cal. 248, 207 P. 1009, the acknowledgment from which the promise is to be inferred must be made to the creditor, and no writing is sufficient as an acknowledgment under section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, unless it contains some reference to the debt which, either by itself or with the aid of competent evidence of extrinsic facts in explanation, amounts to an admission that there is a debt existing to the creditor for which the debtor is liable and willing to pay; the rule stated being approved and followed in Searles v. Gonzalez, 191 Cal. 426, 216 P. 1003, 28 A. L. R. 78, where it was held that, while the memorandum must express the essential elements of a contract with reasonable certainty, these may be gathered either from the memorandum itself or from other writings therein referred to.

In Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 60, 15 P. 371, a receipt for a sum paid by the debtor Naglee upon an account rendered was indorsed thereon by the latter in the following words:

"Received Dec. 8, 1880, of Henry M. Naglee one thousand dollars on account of the within."

It was there held that a receipt in the handwriting of the debtor, referring to the debt, and containing his signature, was sufficient as a memorandum under the provisions of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure to bind the debtor.

[2, 3] While, according to the indorsement in the instant case, the payment evidenced thereby was made by Shirley, the debt was referred to therein, and it is alleged that the receipt was in the handwriting of respondent and subscribed by him, and that the note was executed and accepted as a payment by both of the joint debtors. With the exception that the indorsement does not acknowledge a payment by respondent, the facts are in effect the same as those in the case last cited. The receipt, however, was but an admission by the creditor that a note executed by Shirley had been received as payment to that extent on the original note (Jenne v. Burger, 120 Cal. 444, 52 P. 706; Cal. Packers Co. v. Merritt Fruit Co., 6 Cal. App. 507, 92 P. 509), and parol evidence would be admissible to show that the payment was in fact made by both of the debtors (Hawley v. Badger, 15 Cal. 44). Moreover, the indorsement and subscription of his signature by respondent were equivocal acts which, with the fact being shown that the payment was made by both, would be sufficient within the decision in Auzerais v. Naglee, supra, and the rule stated in the cases cited above, to support the inference of an admission of liability for an existing debt which he was willing to pay. As held in Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 66 P. 40, it is sufficient if the writing shows that the writer regards or treats the indebtedness as subsisting, and from the acknowledgment of a subsisting indebtedness the law implies a promise to pay based upon the consideration of the old debt.

[4, 5] While the complaint contained redundant matter which was properly stricken therefrom, and the allegation by which the pleader sought to state that respondent signed the indorsement was uncertain and subject to demurrer on that ground, it appears that the demurrer on the grounds of uncertainty and ambiguity was directed with that exception to the portions of the pleading which were stricken out. We think that the complaint, as filed, was sufficient to state a cause of action; that the order striking therefrom the allegation that the payment evidenced by the indorsement was made by both debtors was erroneous; and that appellant should have been permitted to amend by alleging that the memorandum was signed by respondent.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that appellant be permitted to amend his complaint in the above particulars within 10 days after the filing of the remittitur in the superior court.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

83 Cal. App. 187

BROWN v. LAMB et al. (Civ. 4853.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 18, 1927.

1. Contracts ⚡212(2)—Contract with no date for performance must be performed within reasonable time.

If no time is set in contract for the exact date of performance, the contract must be performed within a reasonable time.

2. Contracts ⚡329—Date when performance of alternative agreement became due held time for suit.

Time of performance of alternative contract for interest in lease in consideration of $1,000, or to return the sum of $2,000 on or before certain date, in any event was date when performance of alternative agreement became due authorizing suit on such alternative obligation.

3. Usury ⚡37—Contract for interest in lease in consideration of $1,000, or with alternative of returning $2,000 on certain date, held valid (Civ. Code, §§ 1671, 3300, 3302).

Contract whereby a certain interest in lease was to be assigned in consideration of $1,000, with alternative of returning sum of $2,000 on or before certain date, held valid in that sum advanced under contract was placed in hazard because of difficulty to determine value of interest in lease, under Civ. Code, § 1671, and damages could have been figured in amount allowed under contract, whether measured under sections 3300 or 3302; alternative agreement for the payment of $2,000 being in nature of price for surrender of an investment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action by John F. Brown against Stacy C. Lamb and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Davis & Thorne, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Courtney A. Teel, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. The facts involved in this appeal are as follows: On the 18th day of January, 1921, plaintiff advanced to the defendants the sum of $1,000, and as evidence of said advancement, and in consideration therefor, defendants agreed, in writing, to give to said plaintiff a one twenty-fifth interest in a certain lease, or return to said plaintiff the total sum of $2,000, either of which obligations were to be performed on or before October 1, 1921. That neither of these obligations have been performed by defendants.

The contract is as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., January 18, 1921.

"In consideration of $1,000 to us in hand paid, we hereby agree to give to John F. Brown, one twenty-fifth interest in lease from P. B. Lehigh for working lime deposits of the Sheepshead Lime Company, in San Bernardino County, Cal., or to return to said John F. Brown the sum of $2,000 cash, on or before October 1, 1921.

"Lee Koeingheim.

"Stacy C. Lamb."

[1, 2] The complaint asked for what it designates as damages in the sum of $2,000 by reason of the defendants' failure to perform the terms of the contract and agreement. The answer admits that the plaintiff "advanced" the sum of $1,000 to defendants, and admits the execution of the contract, but denies that plaintiff has been damaged in any amount, or at all. The answer does not allege any prior tender of a one twenty-fifth interest in the lease held by defendants, but defendants in their answer tender a one twenty-fifth interest in a later lease, which they claim is on the same property, and set forth an affirmative defense wherein they allege that the demand of plaintiff for the payment of $2,000 is in violation of the usury act. They admit the cancellation of the lease mentioned in the contract. If no time was set in the contract for the exact date of performance, the contract of course, would have to be performed within a reasonable time. Brookings L. & B. Co. v. Manufacturers' Co., 173 Cal. 679, 161 P. 266. The time of performance or time to convey must have passed, at the latest, at the date when performance of the alternative agreement became due. After this period, in any event, plaintiff had the right to sue upon said alternative obligation to pay. Beckwith v. Sheldon, 168 Cal. 742, 745, 145 P. 97, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 963, and cases cited.

Civil Code of California, § 1449:

"If the party having the right of selection between alternative acts does not give notice of his selection to the other party within the time, if any, fixed by the obligation for that purpose, or, if none is so fixed, before the time at which the obligation ought to be performed, the right of selection passes to the other party."

"Where the obligation is in the alternative, that is, to pay in money or in property, the sum stipulated rather than the market value of the commodity has been considered the true measure of damages." 13 Cyc. 168, par. 11.

[3] Therefore, in the case at bar, the court could have figured the damages in the amount allowed, whether measured under section 3300 or 3302 of the Civil Code of California. The plaintiff having advanced the sum of $1,000 on a contract of that kind, he therefore by the very terms of the contract, put the whole sum thereof in hazard, for the reason that the contract could have been satisfied in full at any time before the 1st of October, 1921, by delivering to the plaintiff a one twenty-fifth interest in a lease from P. B. Lehigh for working lime deposits of the Sheepshead Lime Company, in San Bernardino county, Cal., the value of which interest in said lease, "from the nature of the case, it would be, impracticable or extremely difficult" to determine. Civ Code, § 1671. If its value was over $2,000, the plaintiff might receive $2,000 only. If under $2,000, or if in fact of no value at all, he would have to be content with a one twenty-fifth interest in said lease. The trial court from the evidence could have and probably did consider that the $2,000 agreed to be paid was in the nature of a price set for the surrender of an investment.

Therefore the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

I concur: CONREY, P. J.

I concur in the judgment: HOUSER, J.

83 Cal. App. 345

ROBERTS v. ROBERTS. (Civ. 5764.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 24, 1927.

1. Divorce ⇨255—Refusal of court to follow agreement relating to amount of maintenance did not prevent action thereon after divorce, where agreement's validity was otherwise sustained.

Conclusions of law in divorce decree holding maintenance agreement valid except as to clauses providing for incorporation of maintenance agreement in decree permitted action thereon after divorce.

2. Divorce ⇨255—Decree holding provision for incorporation of maintenance agreement in decree invalid held mere limitation on parties' power to control fixing of alimony.

Decree holding clauses in maintenance agreement for incorporation of amount agreed upon in decree void as against public policy held to invalidate agreement only in so far as parties were prevented from controlling court's action in fixing alimony.

3. Contracts ⇨111—Law favors marriage and will not sanction agreements for divorce.

Agreement for divorce or collateral contract permitting dissolution of marriage is void and will not be enforced, as law favors marriage.

4. Divorce ⇨249(3)—Court's authority to dispose of community property on divorce is unlimited.

In divorce actions, trial court has unlimited authority to make disposition of community property.

5. Divorce ⇨249(2)—Agreement of husband and wife settling property rights may be disregarded, where object is dissolution of marriage.

Court has jurisdiction to disregard spouses' agreement settling property rights as basis for divorce as contra bonos mores, where it has for its object dissolution of marriage.

6. Divorce ⇨249(2)—Court may sustain property settlement of spouses in contemplation of divorce, where free from illegal objects (Civ. Code, § 158).

Agreement entered into between husband and wife for settlement of property rights, under Civ. Code, § 158, in contemplation of divorce will be sustained, where free from illegal objects and influences.

7. Husband and wife ⇨280—Application for divorce did not invalidate property settlement agreement between spouses.

Property settlement agreement between husband and wife, where valid, was not abrogated or rendered ineffectual by subsequent application for divorce.

8. Divorce ⇨258—Husband and wife ⇨279 (6)—Payments to divorced wife should be credited to amount due under property settlement agreement and divorce decree.

Where divorced wife has concurrent remedies under property settlement agreement and divorce decree, payments made under one should be credited to amount due under the other.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Emilie Roberts against Elmore W. Roberts. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 253 P. 1112.

James Donovan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John L. McVey, of Oakland, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. This is defendant's appeal from a judgment rendered against him in an action to recover money claimed to be due under a written agreement entered into between defendant and plaintiff as husband and wife.

The agreement in question was executed on August 26, 1924, about six weeks after the parties had separated, and provided, among other things, for a property settlement, including the payment to plaintiff by defendant of the sum of $100 a month as maintenance. Shortly after the execution of said agreement, plaintiff commenced an action for divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty, alleging in her complaint that there was no community property; that the property rights had been settled between them by the written agreement of August 26, 1924, as a part of which settlement defendant promised and agreed to pay her the sum of $100 a month as maintenance; and she therefore asked that the decree of divorce which she was seeking embody a provision directing such payment to be made. One of the several defenses interposed by defendant was that said agreement was void, as contra bonos mores, but upon trial that defense was not sustained, the court making findings upholding the legality of said instrument except as to two clauses thereof which will be hereinafter referred to. Thereupon an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted, but the court, refusing to be bound by the two clauses above mentioned, which related to the amount of maintenance which the parties had agreed should be allowed plaintiff in case of divorce, awarded plaintiff monthly maintenance in the sum of $65 instead of $100 as stipulated in said agreement. The interlocutory decree was entered on November 14, 1925, and no appeal was taken therefrom.

Subsequently, and on May 8, 1926, plaintiff commenced the instant action to collect the accrued payments claimed to be due under said settlement agreement, minus the amount of alimony granted by the court under the divorce decree, which the defendant had paid. Defendant urged as one of his defenses that the agreement upon which plaintiff's action was founded had been declared void by the decision in the divorce action, and that, therefore, its terms were not afterwards enforceable. The trial court expressly negatived this defense, and held affirmatively that the decision in the divorce action established that said agreement was "a valid, subsisting, and legal agreement between the parties thereto" except as to the two clauses above mentioned, and that no appeal having been taken, the decision and decree therein became final and conclusive against the parties in the present action "as to the questions involved herein respecting said agreement." Whereupon plaintiff was given judgment for $910, of which sum $700 represented the full amount of the monthly allowance called for under said agreement from the date of its execution up to the time of the entry of the interlocutory decree of divorce, the balance representing the difference of $35 a month between the amount of the monthly maintenance fixed by said agreement and the amount awarded by the court and paid by the defendant in the divorce action, from the date of the interlocutory decree to the date of judgment herein; and the court further declared in its decision:

"That said plaintiff has concurrent remedies against defendant, one under said interlocutory decree for the payment of alimony and one upon said written agreement; that any moneys paid by said defendant to plaintiff for her maintenance and support over and above the sum of $700, which was due upon said agreement at the time of the giving and making of said interlocutory decree of divorce, shall be credited both upon said judgment for alimony and upon said agreement."

[1] The principal question presented is whether the refusal of the trial court in the divorce proceeding to follow the two clauses of said agreement relating to the amount of maintenance, upon the grounds therein stated, constituted an adjudication that the portion of the agreement now being sued upon was void as contra bonos mores. Defendant contends that it was, and, upon the assumption that the adverse finding on that issue in the instant action is not supported by the facts, has devoted much of his brief to a discussion of the question of the invalidity of that portion of said agreement upon the grounds mentioned.

The record in the divorce action discloses that the issue as to the validity of the entire agreement was brought squarely before the trial court for determination under the affirmative allegations of defendant's answer to the effect that said agreement was void as being against public policy, and the court found specifically against those allegations, its finding being:

"That it is not true that said contract is or that all the terms thereof are against public policy in violation of the express provisions of law relating to domestic relations between husband and wife or otherwise. * * *

Following this finding, the court set forth said agreement in full, which, in part, provided as follows:

"Now therefore, the party of the first part (defendant) hereby agrees to pay to the party of the second part, as and for her maintenance and support, the sum of $100 per month, and in addition thereto agrees to turn over and deliver to the second party" certain shares of corporate stock and household furnishings.

In its conclusions of law, however, the court quoted again the two excepted clauses of said agreement above referred to, which provided that "in any action for divorce which may be filed by either of the parties against the other, the court may award to the party of the second part [plaintiff] in the event that any decree of divorce is given or made in her favor, the sum of $100 per month as and for maintenance and alimony, and may incorporate in any such decree the provisions of this agreement respecting the property rights of the parties hereto," said monthly maintenance to terminate if plaintiff should remarry; and with reference to these latter clauses found that the same were void as against public policy, but that in all other respects the agreement is a valid, subsisting, and legal agreement between the parties thereto." [Italics ours.] Thereupon, refusing to be bound by the provisions of the two clauses above mentioned, the court awarded plaintiff alimony in the sum of $65 a month only. There was no finding whatever, however, as defendant seems to contend, that the agreement made by defendant to pay plaintiff the said sum of $100 a month was void for any reason.

[2] From the foregoing we conclude that the trial court correctly held in the instant action that its decision in the divorce proceeding definitely disposed of the question of legality of said agreement adversely to defendant's contention, and that in the absence of an appeal the decision and judgment therein has become final. The language used by the court, in the divorce action, in declaring the two clauses above referred to "void as against public policy," when reasonably construed in the light of the entire decision, means simply that so far as the enforcement of the terms of said two excepted clauses were concerned the parties could not presume to control by agreement the action of the court in fixing the amount of alimony in a divorce proceeding, nor to interfere with its powers in that respect; and to the extent that they had attempted to do so, those clauses of said agreement were void as against public policy.

[3-5] Any agreement for divorce or any collateral bargaining promotive of it is considered unlawful and void; and, furthermore, in divorce actions the trial court has unlimited authority to make disposition of the community property. Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 283, 61 P. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548, citing Bishop on Marriage, Divorce and Separation, § 696; Greenwood on Public Policy, 490. Consequently, whenever an agreement is presented to and urged upon the court for acceptance as basis for a decree settling the property rights of the parties, the court necessarily has jurisdiction to consider the agreement and to disregard the same as contra bonos mores if it finds that the same has for its object the dissolution of the marriage or the facilitating that result, such as an agreement by the defendant in a pending action for divorce to withdraw his or her oppositions and to make no defense. Newman v. Freitas, supra; McCahan v. McCahan, 47 Cal. App. 174, 190 P. 458. The doctrine stated is founded upon the proposition that the law favors marriage, and cannot therefore sanction contracts intended to promote its dissolution by lending itself to their enforcement. Muckenburg v. Holler, 29 Ind. 139, 92 Am. Dec. 345; Newman v. Freitas, supra.

[6] But it is also the law that either husband or wife may enter into any agreement or transaction with the other respecting property which either might if unmarried (Civ. Code, § 158); and, therefore, if after scrutinizing the agreement entered into between them for the settlement of their property rights and the circumstances under which it was made, the trial court ascertains and determines that the same is free from the illegal objects and influences above mentioned, it may affirm the agreement (McCahan v. McCahan, supra), and the force given thereto derives its sanction from the decree made by the court with a knowledge of the facts (Loveren v. Loveren, 106 Cal. 509, 39 P. 801).

[7] In the divorce action here the trial court determined upon the evidence adduced before it, and after considering the text of the agreement, that said agreement was not entered into in violation of the policy of the law or contrary to good morals, and was therefore valid, but in the exercise of its power as a court of equity it declined to follow the two clauses thereof relating to the matter of fixing the amount of plaintiff's maintenance. It is apparent, however, that this latter action on the part of the court in no way affected its express general finding that otherwise said agreement was valid; and, being valid, its executory terms were not abrogated or rendered ineffectual by plaintiff's subsequent application for a divorce, and she was therefore entitled to enforce the same in the present action. Carey v. Mackey, 82 Me. 516, 20 A. 84, 9 L. R. A. 113, 17 Am. St. Rep. 500; Galusha v. Galusha, 116 N. Y. 635, 22 N. E. 1114, 6 L. R. A. 487, 15 Am. St. Rep. 453; Pryor v. Pryor, 88 Ark. 302, 114 S. W. 700, 129 Am. St. Rep. 102; Chamberlain v. Cuming, 37 Misc. Rep. 815, 76 N. Y. S. 896; Van Horn v. Van Horn, 196 App. Div. 472, 188 N. Y. S. 98; Clark v. Fostick, 118 N. Y. 7, 22 N. E. 1111, 6 L. R. A. 132, 16 Am. St. Rep. 733; 9 R. C. L. 536.

[8] The portion of the decree declaring that plaintiff was entitled to concurrent remedies under both the agreement and the divorce decree, and that payments under the former of any sum over $700 should be credited on both, is in conformity with the ruling in the case of Newell v. Newell, 28 Cal. App. 784, 154 P. 32. There the husband entered into an agreement to pay the wife $75 per month as maintenance and subsequently a divorce was granted in her favor with a provision for the payment of $75 per month as alimony. It was contended by the husband that the granting of such alimony by the court required him to pay $75 a month under the decree, and that he was also obliged to pay an additional $75 per month under the agreement. The court held this contention to be without merit, saying:

"Conceding that he may be bound by both the order and agreement to pay said sum, and upon default plaintiff might have concurrent remedies in enforcing payment, nevertheless the payment of $75 per month would not only satisfy his obligation existing by virtue of the agreement made with plaintiff, but at the same time satisfy the obligation imposed upon him by the order and decree made in accordance with the terms of the agreement and pursuant to the prayer of the complaint."

For the reasons hereinabove stated, we are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

83 Cal. App. 190

PEOPLE v. KELLER. (Cr. 1353.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. May 18, 1927.

- 1. Criminal law ⚡543(2)—Evidence held to show due diligence to procure complaining witness, rendering testimony on former trial admissible (Pen. Code, § 686).

Evidence held to show due diligence, within Pen. Code, § 686, to secure attendance of complaining witness at second trial and to authorize reading in evidence of his testimony at former trial, in view of complaining witness' letter to district attorney evidencing eagerness to be present.

- 2. Criminal law ⚡1144(12)—District Court of Appeal would assume sheriff inquired at address on subpoena for complaining witness.

The District Court of Appeal would assume sheriff inquired at address given on subpoena issued for the complaining witness and returned showing he could not be found.

- 3. Criminal law ⚡543(2)—Showing of diligence to procure attendance of complaining witness need not be as extreme as otherwise, where letter indicated absence from state (Pen. Code, § 686).

The district attorney would not be required to make as extreme a showing of due diligence as would otherwise be necessary to render admissible in evidence, under Pen. Code, § 686, the complaining witness' testimony at former trial, where the witness in letter promising attendance had stated he was going out of state.

- 4. Criminal law ⚡543(2), 1153(6)—Admitting testimony on former trial on showing of diligence is discretionary and not reviewable unless discretion abused (Pen. Code, § 686).

Determination that due diligence to secure attendance of complaining witness has been exercised to render admissible, under Pen. Code, § 686, his testimony on former trial is within trial court's discretion and will not be disturbed on appeal, in the absence of abuse of discretion.

- 5. Criminal law ⚡547(4)—Reporter's testimony of accuracy of transcript of evidence on former trial held sufficient (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15).

The reporter's testimony that he dictated shorthand notes of complaining witness' testimony taken by him at former trial, carefully examined the transcript, and compared any doubtful portions with his notes held sufficient foundation for introduction, though reporter had not compared all of transcript; the burden being on defendant to show error, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15, relating to presumption that official duty has been performed.

- 6. Criminal law ⚡1036(7), 1169(2)—Any error in admitting transcript of testimony at former trial held harmless, in view of other testimony and lack of objection (Pen. Code, § 686).

Error, if any, in permitting reading, at second trial for larceny, of bank teller's testimony respecting check cashed for complaining witness, over objection on ground of failure to show due diligence to procure him as required by Pen. Code, § 686, held harmless, in view of testimony's unsubstantial character and lack of objection that it was inadmissible for any purpose.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

Agnes Keller was convicted of grand larceny and she appeals. Affirmed.

Richard Kittrelle, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Some time ago an opinion reversing the judgment in this action was filed by us (254 P. 580). Thereafter, upon a suggestion of diminution of the record, a petition for rehearing was granted. Upon this hearing we have before us a record very different from that upon which our former opinion was based. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

Appellant was convicted upon a second trial. At the first trial the jury disagreed. The complaining witness was not present at the second trial, but the trial judge, over the objection of appellant, permitted the district attorney to read to the jury his testimony given at the earlier hearing. The objection of appellant was that the prosecution had not shown due diligence in an attempt to produce the absent witness, and the same point is now made here. Section 686 of the Penal Code provides, in part, that a defendant in a criminal action "is entitled: * * * to be confronted with the witnesses against him, * * * except that * * * the testimony on behalf of the people * * * of a witness * * * who cannot, with due diligence, be found within the state, given on a former trial of the action in the presence of the defendant who has, either in person or by counsel, cross-examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, may be admitted."

On August 31, 1925, the cause having been tried and the jury having failed to agree upon a verdict, it was set for the second trial on September 15. When that date arrived the complaining witness was not present in court, and on motion of the district attorney the court ordered a bench warrant to issue forthwith for him, and the trial was continued to September 21. On the last-mentioned date a further continuance was granted to September 29, upon motion of the district attorney, supported by affidavit. The affidavit showed that on September 6 the prosecutor received from the complaining witness a letter, dated at Los Angeles, September 5, in which he said:

"Your favor of the third instant received in reference to Keller case. I will be there with Mr. Cook if possible. I have learned he is in Yuma, Ariz. * * * I am going to Yuma Sunday morning to have a talk with Cook. * * * I also hope to locate a fellow by the name of Young who is a material witness for me. * * * I will be there in advance to read my former testimony over."

The letter also gave the district attorney information concerning several witnesses other than Cook, and ended, "Hoping to see you September 13, I am, Yours sincerely," with the signature of the complaining witness. Owing, apparently, to the state of facts disclosed by this letter, the district attorney caused no subpoena to issue for service in the county of San Diego before September 15, the date set for the second trial of the action. He did, however, take the precaution to have subpoenas, returnable September 15, issued and transmitted to the sheriffs of San Bernardino, Ventura, Kern, Riverside, Orange, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, and Imperial counties. These were all issued on September 4. Returns on all but two of them were filed on September 14. One return was filed on September 15 and one on September 18. The returns were dated variously from September 9 to September 17, and showed that the complaining witness could not be found in any of the counties named. A subpoena was issued for service in San Diego county of September 15, returnable September 29, and on October 1 the sheriff made return that the complaining witness could not be found in that county. The return was filed on the same day.

In addition to the circumstances detailed above, when the district attorney was called upon at the trial to prove due diligence in his attempt to serve the complaining witness, he put a witness on the stand who testified that he was a detective sergeant in the San Diego police department; that he had made an investigation to determine whether the complaining witness could be located in the city of Los Angeles; that he went to that city on September 16 for that purpose, but that he began his investigation at a certain hotel in San Diego, where he ascertained from the register that the witness had checked out on the afternoon of September 3 and had left as a forwarding address the name of a certain hotel in Los Angeles; that he, the investigator, then went to Los Angeles, arriving there on the evening of the day he had examined the San Diego hotel register; that he immediately went to the hotel mentioned on the San Diego register and found from it that the complaining witness had registered there on the evening of September 3 and had checked out on September 5, leaving no forwarding address; that he remained in Los Angeles four days, being engaged all that time in his investigation; that while he was there he went "to the newspaper offices in Los Angeles" and to the post office, but that he found no trace of the witness in that city except that he got some information, without stating the nature of it or from whom it was obtained, to the effect that the witness might be in Long Beach; that he then went there and "just made a search of the city," for he "had no specific place to go there outside of checking the post office"; that he did not go to the "newspaper offices at Long Beach"; and that he found no forwarding address at the post offices at Long Beach and Los Angeles.

[1] We think due diligence was shown in the endeavor of the district attorney to serve the complaining witness. It is only under unusual conditions that a prosecutor can justify his course in not causing the issuance of subpoena for service in the county in which an action is to be tried, if that has been the county of the residence of a witness, merely because he has promised to be present at the trial, but we think those conditions existed here. The complaining witness had already been through one trial of the cause, and his desire further to prosecute might reasonably be inferred from that fact and from the nature of the case, which will be disclosed later. Moreover, in addition to the quotations we have made above from his letter, the missive showed in other passages his evident eagerness to be present at the second trial.

[2] The testimony of the complaining witness, as read to the jury, showed that he was a newspaper reporter by occupation, and that at the time of the first trial, which had occurred as late as July or August, he was employed by a certain San Diego newspaper, and that he had been with the publication for three years. The subpoena which was issued on September 15 for service in San Diego county gave the office of this newspaper as the address of the witness, and we must assume that before making his return the sheriff of the county made inquiry at the office as to the whereabouts of the absentee. The investigator who went to Los Angeles on September 16 inquired about the witness at the newspaper offices there, but he did not make similar inquiry of the newspapers in Long Beach. This failure was an oversight, but we think it not of sufficient weight to interfere with a determination that due diligence was exercised.

[3, 4] After the complaining witness had failed to put in an appearance before the court on September 15, the district attorney was justified to some extent, taking what the witness had said in his letter about a trip to Arizona, in assuming that he had departed the state and had determined to remain without its borders. The trial court, of course, was entitled to take the same view. In such a circumstance, under the decided cases, a prosecutor is not required to make as extreme a showing of due diligence as is expected of him when there is nothing to indicate a possibility that a witness has left the state. The determination of the question as to due diligence rested in the discretion of the trial court, and we think the discretion was not abused.

[5] The official stenographer, who took the testimony of the complaining witness at the first trial of the cause, was called to the witness stand for the purpose of laying a foundation for the reading to the jury of a transcript of that testimony. The reporter testified that a transcript handed him was his transcript of the testimony taken at the former trial; that he dictated to a dictaphone his shorthand notes of the testimony taken by him at the trial, which he caused to be transcribed by the regular transcriber, and that "afterwards I examined the transcript, this transcript, very carefully, and correcting any errors that appeared therein"; and that "I read the transcript over very carefully, and, in case where any doubt arose as to the correctness of it, I compared it with my shorthand notes taken at the trial." On cross-examination, the witness was asked if he compared the entire transcript of the testimony of the complaining witness with his shorthand notes. He answered, "Not entirely; no, sir." Appellant then objected to the reading of the transcript of the testimony to the jury, the objection was overruled, and the reading proceeded.

Appellant now contends that the ruling was error on the ground that it was necessary to have been shown that the reporter had compared the entire transcription of the testimony of the complaining witness with his shorthand notes. We know of no rule which required such a showing, and appellant cites no authority in support of her contention. There having been no evidence as to the length of time which intervened between the time when the reporter took the testimony in shorthand and the time when he read the transcript and compared it with his notes, although "not entirely," we think his testimony that the transcript shown him was a transcript of the testimony taken by him at the trial, and that he had corrected it, furnished a sufficient foundation for the reading of the testimony to the jury. The situation here presented is not one which comes within the rule as to the method of proving that an offered paper is a copy of an original lost or destroyed. The testimony of the complaining witness was matter which went through the mind of the reporter when he reduced it to shorthand, and again when he dictated from his notes. As it is incumbent upon an appellant to show error, we may assume that the reporter read and corrected the completed transcript, with such aid from his notes as he deemed necessary to his purpose, while the testimony of the witness was still fresh in his recollection. The presumption of that "official duty has been regularly performed" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15) aids to the conclusion at which we arrive. As having some bearing on the question here presented, see People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 P. 169.

[6] The larceny with which appellant was charged was testified by the complaining witness to have been committed not far from midnight between the 11th and 12th days of a certain month. The information charged that on or about the 11th appellant and another woman took from the complaining witness the sum of $530. The testimony of the complaining witness, a man, was to the effect that he was despoiled of his money during a visit, upon which he arrived late at night, at a house in which appellant lived. At the former trial a bank teller testified that on or about the 10th or 11th of the month, at the bank at which he was employed, he cashed for the complaining witness a check for $300, and that a $100 bill was part of the money which then passed over the counter. The time of this occurrence was stated by the teller without reference to the books of the bank, or to other memoranda, or without reference to any other event which fixed the time in his mind. The complaining witness testified that the check was cashed for him three or four days before the 11th. The bank teller was not present at the second trial, and, over the objection that due diligence had not been shown in any attempt to procure his presence, his testimony at the first trial was read to the jury.

We think it unnecessary to decide the point now made, that the trial court erred in permitting the reading. In addition to his relation of the events directly surrounding the larceny, the complaining witness testified that prior to that occurrence he had marked two $100 bills which were a part of the money taken from him. After the larceny two bills of the denomination named, marked as the complaining witness testified that he had marked his, turned up under circumstances which, according to some of the evidence, indicated that they had come from the possession of appellant. The testimony of the bank teller had a highly attenuated, if any, probative value. It contributed in a negligible degree to aid the story of the complaining witness that he had marked two $100 bills, and that he had on his person $530 when he called at the house of appellant. Of course, it furnished no proof whatever that any amount had been stolen from the complaining witness. No objection was made to the testimony of the teller except upon the ground that due diligence had not been shown in an effort to procure his presence in court. The testimony afforded no substantial corroboration of the evidence given by the prosecuting witness, and that it was read to the jury was a circumstance in the case which is utterly innocuous, especially in view of the fact that no objection was made that it was inadmissible for any purpose.

It is contended that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict, but it was so plainly sufficient that we think it not worth while to marshal the testimony which supported the case of the prosecution. There was a decided conflict in the evidence, undoubtedly, but with such a situation we have no concern.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; MURPHEY, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 283

HARRIS v. HENSLEY. (Civ. 4532.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 21, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 18, 1927.

1. Trusts ⇨372(3)—Finding that husband converted entire funds received from wife's separate property held not supported by evidence.

Finding that entire amount of funds coming into husband's hands from sale of wife's separate property was converted by him to own use held not supported by evidence, in divorced wife's suit to establish trust.

2. Trusts ⇨372(3)—Evidence held to show husband's use in business of wife's separate property was with her consent.

Evidence held to show that husband's use of wife's separate property in business conducted by him and copartner was with her consent.

3. Trusts ⇨86—Husband in presumed trustee for wife of her separate property used in his business.

Husband will be held trustee for benefit of wife to extent of use with her consent of her separate property in business conducted by himself and his brother as copartners, in absence of proof of wife's intention to make gift sufficient to overcome the presumption of trusteeship.

4. Trusts ⇨89(2)—Evidence held to sustain finding that wife's money entered into land purchased by husband.

Evidence held sufficient for finding that former wife's money, used and invested together with community interest in conducting and managing husband's business, became part of land subsequently purchased by him.

5. Trusts ⇨374—Divorced wife whose money was used by husband in business held not entitled to all realty acquired by him in course of years, notwithstanding impossibility of segregating interests.

Trial court's award to former wife of all real property purchased by divorced husband, as result of community interest and investment of her separate property in his business conducted for 8 or 10 years, held inequitable, notwithstanding her separate interest could not be segregated.

6. Trusts ⇨374—Purpose of law is not punishment, in proceeding to establish trust in divorced husband's realty, purchased with proceeds of business using former wife's money.

In proceeding to establish trust in favor of divorced wife in regard to property purchased by former husband with proceeds of business in which during marriage he invested her separate property, the purpose of the law is not to punish him in his capacity as trustee.

7. Trusts ⇨374—Divorced wife held entitled to principal of her money invested in husband's business and fair portion of profits.

Divorced wife held entitled to principal of separate property invested by former husband during marriage in his business, together with a fair proportion of profits acquired through its use under his direction.

8. Trusts ⇨374—Divorced wife held entitled to lien to extent of trust interest on realty purchased by former husband.

Divorced wife held entitled to lien on former husband's interest in real property purchased by him as result of her separate property invested by him during marriage in his business, where the original investment and its results could be fairly traced into the specific realty.

9. Trusts ⇨375(1)—Divorced wife held entitled to personal judgment for separate property received by former husband which could not be followed.

Divorced wife held entitled to personal judgment against former husband for proceeds of sale, with interest from date of sale of property purchased by him during marriage with her separate money, where the money received by him after divorce could not be traced into specific property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Daisy Lee Harris against W. J. Hensley to establish a trust in real property. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Thomas Scott, Sr., Thomas Scott, Jr., Kaye & Siemon, and L. E. Nathan, all of Bakersfield, for appellant.

P. C. Rentfro, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. The plaintiff and respondent and defendant and appellant were formerly husband and wife and were such at the inception of the transaction resulting in the pending litigation. They were married in Oklahoma in 1902, where they resided until 1906, when they came to California, where they resided until 1917, when they were divorced. The plaintiff was an American Indian, and as such succeeded with her children by defendant to certain land allotments in the state of Oklahoma. The property so allotted to plaintiff was manifestly her separate property. Early in the year

1911 the defendant and appellant disposed of his business interests in the city of Bakersfield and made a trip to Oklahoma, and while there, with the consent of the plaintiff, disposed of the land hereinbefore mentioned belonging to her, for which he received $2,100 in cash and a lot and house at Tulsa, which he subsequently, and after the parties were divorced, sold for the sum of $500. In addition to these sums he received several hundred dollars, the exact amount of which is uncertain, through the sale of some portions of the land allotted to their children. The marital relationship of the parties after the return of the defendant to California in the fall of 1911 was, to say the least, quite tempestuous. They lived together at times and lived separately at other times from that date up to the date of the divorce, which was granted some time in the year 1917. The circumstances and conditions under which they lived prior to 1911 is not disclosed by the record. The evidence clearly discloses that the plaintiff was completely dominated by the defendant. On the return of the defendant from his trip to Oklahoma, the family made a trip to the Northwest and on the return trip remained in Tacoma for a considerable period of time, where a lodging house business was purchased and conducted by them, whether profitably or unprofitably may not be accurately ascertained from the record. This business was sold and the parties returned to Bakersfield, Cal., their original place of residence in this state, where the defendant purchased a meat market business, taking in with him as his partner a brother. The bone of contention in this litigation centers around the capital invested in this enterprise, its source, and the circumstances and conditions surrounding the investment. It may be stated, in passing, that none of the money received by defendant for the sale of the plaintiff's property in Oklahoma was ever delivered directly to her; however, it is the contention of the defendant that this money was largely, if not totally, consumed in expenses in Oklahoma and to pay the expenses of the trip of the family to the Northwest and their return. There is no doubt, and the record we think fully establishes the fact, that at the time of the purchase of this meat market business in Bakersfield the defendant had no funds or other property belonging to him, and there is evidence in the record from which it may reasonably be concluded that the partner brother of the defendant was also broke. A cash payment of $1,500 was made on the purchase price of the business and installment notes were given by the brothers for $3,000 additional, payable at stated times in the amounts of $500 at each payment.

[1] Assuming that the evidence before the court satisfactorily establishes the bankrupt condition of the brother, and in view of the undisputed fact that the defendant himself had nothing, it may be reasonably and logically held that the initial cash payment of $1,500 was made up entirely from the separate funds of the plaintiff. The trial court made no specific finding on this point, but does find that the entire amount of $2,100 and $500 was appropriated and converted by defendant to his own use. This finding is not supported by the evidence in the case. It clearly appears that a considerable portion of the original $2,100 that came into the possession of the defendant as the result of the sale of plaintiff's separate property in Oklahoma was expended, with the consent of the plaintiff, on the trip that was made to the Northwest, and the evidence also discloses that the $500 received from the sale of the Tulsa property did not come into the possession of the defendant until some six or seven years subsequent to the purchase of the Bakersfield meat market business. It is the defendant's contention that the money used as an initial payment on this property was borrowed by him from his brother, a contention that apparently had little weight with the trial court. This business enterprise was successful and profitable. The $3,000 indebtedness against the property at the time of the purchase was entirely paid off and during the succeeding eight years the profits of the business were such that the defendant purchased the several parcels of real property described in the complaint, and which the plaintiff demanded should be impressed with a trust in her behalf to the extent of the entire interest of the defendant, and such was the holding and judgment of the trial court. It is manifest that the trial court paid little attention to the evidence of the defendant and was slightly impressed thereby. The brother of the defendant was not called as a witness. Notwithstanding the denials of the defendant, his conduct as a witness and the unconscionable contracts he extorted from his wife (as found by the trial court) may well have justified the trial court in discrediting him on all points wherein his testimony was in his own favor if the conditions were such that contradictory evidence could not be produced. The plaintiff seriously objected to the defendant's taking his brother in as a partner in the Bakersfield business.

[2, 3] This, however, was the only objection that she made to the purchase of the business and to the investment of her funds therein, and we are satisfied that the evidence amply justifies our conclusion that the use of the plaintiff's capital in the business conducted by the defendant and his brother was with her consent, and that by accepting and using this fund in his business he became a trustee to that extent for her benefit. As was well said by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Ingersoll, 158 Cal. 474, at page 481, 111 P. 360, 363:

* * * "The mere acquirement of the possession of the wife's separate property by the husband and his subsequent management and control of the same, all with her consent, do not necessarily show an intent on her part to make a gift thereof to the husband, or to change its status to community property, but that the effect of these facts, without explanation, was to raise a presumption that it continues to be her separate property and that the husband takes it in trust for her; that it devolves on the husband who claims that it is a gift or loan, to prove the fact, but that this may be done by a showing of the nature of the transaction and the circumstances as well as by proof of an express agreement. 153 Cal. 5, 94 P. 94. These propositions are well supported by the authorities.
* * *

It may be said in this case, as it was in the Ingersoll Case, that the defendant was the husband of the plaintiff, that he received, invested, managed, and controlled her property in his own name and with her consent, and that under such circumstances a trust relationship arises unless there was some evidence of sufficient force and weight to overthrow this presumption. It may be said that in the case at bar there was no such evidence presented to the trial court, and there was no evidence whatever nor are there any facts or circumstances from which any inference may be drawn that it was the intention of the wife to give to the defendant the money owned by her and invested in the business. In view of the circumstances of this case, the humility of the wife, her complete subservience to the will of the husband, her entire want of knowledge of business affairs, "being such a fool," as stated by the husband, that he would not discuss money matters with her, we have no hesitancy in saying that this case falls squarely within the rule laid down in the Ingersoll Case. The court further says, in the Ingersoll Case:

"The fact that the trust money was in part commingled with the community property so as to destroy its specific identity does not necessarily destroy the trust as to that part, nor prevent its enforcement."

[4] In the case at bar, it may reasonably be concluded that the plaintiff's money, together with the community interest created by the activities of the defendant in conducting and managing the business, runs through and becomes part and parcel of the subsequent land purchases set out in the complaint in this action. It is, however, equally true that it would be impossible to accurately or probably at all segregate this trust fund.

[5-8] Upon this state of facts, the trial court awarded to the plaintiff all the property acquired by the defendant and comprising all the real property purchased from the net proceeds of the meat market business. This we deem unjust and inequitable, and we know of no law to support this conclusion of the trial court, which, in effect, decrees to the plaintiff the net result of the defendant's services over a period of eight or ten years. In proceedings of this character it is not the purpose of the law, nor of courts of equity, to punish the trustee. The plaintiff is entitled to and should receive the principal of the trust fund and a fair proportion of the profits acquired through its use under the direction and business sagacity of the defendant. As the trust property involved in this litigation is the result of the capital invested by the plaintiff, and considering the community interest resulting from the services of the defendant until the marital relationship was severed by divorce, and the subsequent individual interest acquired by the defendant through his services in the management of the trust property, we feel that the ends of justice would be best subserved by awarding to the plaintiff such sum as the court shall definitely find was contributed by her as an initial payment on the business, together with what the court shall find to be a fair proportion of the accrued profits, and, in view of the fact that these amounts may be fairly traced into the purchase price of the several tracts of land described in the complaint, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff would be entitled to a lien on the defendant's interest in these tracts of land to secure the payment of the amount so found to be invested in the business.

[9] As to the $500 secured from the Tulsa property by the plaintiff after the marital relationship of the parties hereto was severed, there is no evidence in the record from which it may be deduced that this money was used in the purchase of any of the tracts of land described in the complaint. That it is the separate property of the plaintiff there can be no doubt. That the defendant obtained the title to it in his own name through force and coercion is specifically found by the trial court, and the finding is amply supported by the evidence. We are of the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to a personal judgment against the defendant for the amount of this money, with interest at 7 per cent. from the date of the sale of the Tulsa property by him, which date may be determined by the trial court in the further proceedings in this action.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, with directions to proceed in accordance with the suggestions contained in this opinion and to take such evidence as may be necessary to determine the matters therein indicated.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

83 Cal. App. 227

CONOVER v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 5461.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 20, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 18, 1927.

1. Corporations ⇨151—Agreement for division of profits, made in contemplation of incorporation, where others are not affected, controls corporation, and corporate fiction will be ignored, if necessary.

An agreement made by persons interested, in contemplation of incorporation, where the interests of others are not affected, controls the conduct of corporation's affairs, and corporate fiction may be ignored, if necessary, for the purpose of enforcing the portion of the agreement for a division of profits; corporation being a mere agency of the associates to carry out the agreement.

2. Contracts ⇨147(1)—Mutual intention at time of contracting controls.

A contract must be so interpreted as to give effect to mutual intention of the parties as it existed at time of contracting.

3. Contracts ⇨156—Specific provisions of contract control general ones on same subject-matter (Civ. Code, § 3534).

Where specific provisions of a contract and general provisions dealing with the same subject-matter are inconsistent, the specific provisions are controlling, under Civ. Code, § 3534.

4. Contracts ⇨153—Entire contract must be given effect, unless contrary to manifest expressed intent.

In interpreting a contract, all parts of it are to be given effect, if this can be done without doing violence to the manifest expressed intent of the parties.

5. Contracts ⇨152—Language of contract is read in ordinary and usual acceptance, unless contrary intent plainly appears.

In interpreting a contract, the terms are to be construed according to the ordinary and usual acceptance of the language, unless a contrary intent plainly appears.

6. Corporations ⇨151—Under contract for division of profits of corporation, giving defendant option to purchase plaintiff's stock at par or at option of plaintiff by returning investment with interest, plaintiff held entitled to par, plus proportion of profits earned but not divided as dividends; "par" (Civ. Code, § 1638).

Under contract made prior to incorporation between parties who became sole stockholders, providing that the profits made by the corporation were to be divided between first party and second party in proportion to shares of stock held by each as dividends on the stock, and that first party should have the right to purchase the stock of the second party at par, or at the option of the second party at the amount invested therein, together with 10 per cent. interest annually after deducting dividends received, on the exercise of the option to purchase, second party held entitled to insist on payment of par, plus a proportionate share of profits of corporation, though profits were not yet divided as dividends, under Civ. Code, § 1638; "par" being the face value of the stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Par.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by W. Lloyd Conover against Stuart S. Smith and others to recover profits of corporation. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Livingston & Livingston, and Sapiro, Levy & Hayes, all of San Francisco, for appellant. E. L. Stockwell and Redman & Alexander, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an action to recover profits made by a corporation in which appellant, W. Lloyd Conover, and respondent Stuart S. Smith were the sole stockholders. The action is founded on a contract executed by appellant and respondent Smith providing for the organization of the corporation and for the division of the profits between the parties on the basis of their respective stock interest. The trial court held against appellant on his claim for profits, and appellant has appealed. The appeal has been taken on the judgment roll alone.

From the findings of fact the following history of the case appears: Prior to May 1, 1920, respondent Smith was engaged in the business of dealing in road machinery. He needed capital. Accordingly he interested appellant, Conover, and, on May 1, 1920, a contract was executed providing substantially as follows: The organization of a corporation to take over respondent Smith's business; the transfer of the business to the corporation in exchange for the issuance to respondent Smith of 100 shares of stock of the par value of $10,000 subject to a valuation of the net worth of the business; the purchase by appellant for cash of 20 shares of the stock at par or $2,000; and an additional block of 80 shares at par value when further capital was required; the division of the profits of the corporation between appellant and respondent in proportion to the number of shares held by each, this clause, being article VI of the contract, reading:

"It is further understood and agreed that the profits made by said corporation are to be divided between the party of the first part and the party of the second part in proportion to the shares of stock held by each in said corporation as dividends on said stock."

Other material provisions of the contract have to do with the terms upon which respondent Smith acquired the interest of appellant, Conover, in the company. These provisions are contained in article VIII, and are as follows:

"It is further understood and agreed that the party of the first part (respondent Smith) shall have the right at any time before the amount of stock purchased by the party of the second part (appellant, Conover) equals the amount of stock purchased by the party of the first part, to purchase the stock of the party of the second part at par or at the option of the party of the second part at a price that will return the party of the second part the amount invested in said stock, together with ten (10) per cent. interest annually on the purchase price of said stock from the date of the purchase of said stock, after deducting dividends received on said stock from said corporation."

Pursuant to the contract, the corporation was organized under the name of Stuart S. Smith & Co., and appellant and respondent Smith became the principal directors and officers; the remaining directors were dummies, having no financial interest in the company. The board of directors authorized the sale and issuance of stock, and 100 shares were issued to respondent Smith in purchase of his business at the par value of $10,000, and 70 shares—20 at one time and 50 later—were issued to appellant, Conover, for which he paid the par value of $7,000.

The corporation engaged in business, and earned profits. The amount of the profits was not found; the amount being of no importance under the construction placed upon article VIII of the contract by the trial court.

On September 29, 1920, respondent Smith wrote appellant exercising his option to purchase appellant's stock, stating, "I have decided to exercise the option under my contract," and inclosed a check for $7,191.66, describing it as "the amount of money invested by you, with ten per cent. interest." Appellant refused the check, returned it to respondent Smith, and demanded his share of the profits and that the par value of the stock be paid to him. Pending negotiations, as the controversy was over the question of whether appellant was entitled to his share of the profits earned by the corporation, or was obliged to take the amount he had invested, with 10 per cent. interest, it was agreed that appellant should transfer his stock to respondent Smith without prejudice to the position of either party. Upon these terms the payment of $7,000 was made and stock transferred. The negotiations were of no avail, and this action resulted.

Appellant urges as grounds for reversal the following points:

"(a) The corporation was a mere form through which Conover and Smith, the sole parties in interest, did business. The law disregards the corporate fiction. Hence the corporation was bound by the provisions of the contract pursuant to which it was organized, and the covenant for division of profits was valid and enforceable not only as to the individuals, but also as to the corporation; (b) the fact that profits were earned by the business gives Conover a complete right to the recovery of his share. The right has never been waived, lost, or abandoned. The transfer of Conover's stock to Smith was—by express agreement—without prejudice to Conover's claim to profits. (c) Conover exercised his option to receive as the purchase price of his stock the par value thereof. Therefore the alternative method of computing the price—investment plus interest, minus dividends—is utterly immaterial to the case."

[1] It seems to be the settled rule that an agreement made by the persons interested in contemplation of incorporation, where the interests of others are not affected, controls the conduct of the corporation's affairs, and that, if necessary to enforce the provision in the agreement for division of profits, the corporate fiction will be ignored. An agreement made by persons interested or who really represented the interests of those afterwards incorporated, and whose agreement was in anticipation of the formation of the corporation, and was carried out by it and recognized by it, bound the parties to the agreement. The corporation, under our system, following such an agreement would be the mere agency of the associates created for the sake of convenience in carrying out the agreement as between those who made the bargain. Chater v. S. F. Sugar Refining Co., 19 Cal. 220, 240, 247; Shorb v. Beaudry, 56 Cal. 446; Cornell v. Corbin, 64 Cal. 197, 30 P. 629; Hunt v. Davis, 135 Cal. 31, 66 P. 957; Wise Realty Co. v. Stewart, 169 Cal. 176, 146 P. 534; Hocking Valley Ry. Co. v. Toledo Terminal Ry. Co., 99 Ohio St. 35, 122 N. E. 35; In re Wilson's Estate, 85 Or. 604, 167 P. 580; Griffin v. Brody (Sup.) 167 N. Y. S. 725.

Equity will look through form to substance where corporations are but the mere instrumentalities through which the associates acted. Wise Realty Co. v. Stewart, supra.

Counsel for respondents do not question the principles upheld in the foregoing authorities. In their closing brief they concede that in a special contract such as the one in this case the corporate fiction should be ignored and the agreement of the parties should control. Both appellant and respondents agree that there is only one issue in the case, and that is the construction of articles VI and VIII of the contract.

The construction placed upon the contract by the trial court is that appellant is not entitled to any of the profits earned by the corporation, as no dividends had been declared prior to respondent Smith exercising his option to purchase appellant's stock under article VIII of the contract, and that appellant was entitled only to the return of the $7,000 invested, together with 10 per cent. interest from the date of the payment for the stock amounting to $288.88. With this construction we cannot agree.

It was contemplated that Smith and Conover would each have $10,000 in the enterprise. Conover's investment, however, was to be gradually made as the corporation required additional capital. So the contract provided alternative terms upon which Smith could acquire Conover's interest. If at any time after the stock held by Conover should equal that held by Smith, and Conover desired to withdraw from the enterprise, he was entitled to do so, and to receive from Smith the book value of his (Conover's) stock, which would naturally include appropriate provision for appreciated value of the stock in trade, for good will and similar assets. In addition, the contract gave Smith the right to buy out Conover's interest. If Smith chose to do so after Conover's stock became the equivalent of his, he was to pay him the book value, plus 10 per cent. In point of fact Conover's stock never did equal Smith's, and therefore the controlling provisions of the contract are those which concern Smith's acquisition of Conover's stock prior to the time Conover's interest was equal to that of Smith.

Article VIII of the contract provides that, before the interest of Conover equals that of Smith, Smith shall have the right to purchase the stock of Conover at par or at the option of Conover at a price that will return Conover the amount invested, with 10 per cent. interest after deducting dividends received.

It will be observed that upon Smith's decision to buy Conover's stock he could do so by paying him par therefor; that is, the face value of $100 per share for his 70 shares, totaling $7,000. Conover, on the other hand, was given two methods of fixing the price; (1) taking par, $7,000, and the earned profits not theretofore received, or (2) the amount invested, together with 10 per cent. interest, less dividends theretofore received.

The theory of this alternate is obvious. Conover, who was investing money in an enterprise in advance of going into it with the option given Smith to buy him out at will and which might turn out to be greatly against his (Conover's) wish, was given two alternatives to choose from in the event Smith exercised his option to buy. Conover would naturally choose the one which netted him the larger price. If the amount of earned profits was less than the interest, he would take his investment with interest and vice versa.

[2] If Conover chose to take par—which he did—the dividends or profits were not to be deducted. It is difficult to see how the contract permits of any other interpretation. The insertion of the words "or at the option of" between the description of the two alternatives demonstrates that they are completely separate and distinct and that the provision for the deduction of dividends is concerned only with its immediate context. The logic of the situation confirms this view. "Par"—the face value of the stock—was the same amount invested, because under the contract Conover must originally buy at par. If Conover is not entitled to dividends under article VI, which provides that the profits made by the corporation are to be divided between Conover and Smith in proportion to their shares of stock, then Conover's option would mean: (1) $7,000 "par" minus dividends; or (2) $7,000, "amount invested," plus interest, minus dividends. The sole difference between the two alternatives would be that one includes interest and the other does not. A contract must be so interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time of contracting so far as the same is ascertainable. 6 Cal. Jur. 252. The parties here certainly did not intend the contract to be that, if Smith desired to exercise his option to buy Conover's stock, and no dividends had been declared or paid, he should say to him, shall I pay you $7,000 with 10 per cent. interest for your stock, or will you have your $7,000 without interest? "The language of a contract is to govern its interpretation, if the language is clear and explicit and does not involve an absurdity." Civ. Code, § 1638.

The right of Conover to share in the profits of the corporation is governed by article VI of the contract that the profits are to be divided between the parties in proportion to the shares of stock held by each in the corporation as dividends on their stock.

The trial court decided that Conover was compelled to accept as the purchase price of his stock the amount he invested, plus interest, minus dividends, and, as no dividends had been declared, did not find as to the amount of profits earned by the corporation.

Respondents admit that, if Conover had received any profits during his connection with the enterprise, he would have been entitled, to receive them. Thus respondents say in their brief:

"If the venture prospered and Conover was bought out, he would receive back the amount of his investment, plus dividends previously collected."

Counsel for respondents argues that Conover's right to profits depends upon the declaration of a dividend prior to Smith's exercise of his option to buy Conover's stock; that paragraph VI provides that the profits made by the corporation should be divided between the parties in proportion to the shares of stock held by each "as dividends on said stock"; that there was no obligation on the part of the corporation to declare dividends until in the directors' discretion it was advisable to do so; that the paragraph in question adds nothing to the contract, for it is merely a declaration of the general law that dividends shall be shared by the stockholders in proportion to their shares of stock. According to the contention of respondents, if Conover had permitted the surplus to remain in the treasury as operating capital, or that Smith had successfully resisted Conover's effort to secure a distribution of the profits according to the contract, then Smith could destroy Conover's right to profits by electing to buy Conover's stock, and Conover would be forced to ask for his stock the amount invested by him, plus interest. Thus he would lose an amount which, if the business had been exceptionally successful, might be comparable with his investment, simply because the distribution of the profits which the contract required had not been enforced. Such a construction is not tenable, and does violence to the plain language of the contract.

[3-5] In support of their position that the specific language of the contract upon the "buy and sell" feature controls and general language used elsewhere, respondents cite us to Civil Code, § 3534, "particular expressions qualify those which are general," and to Scudder v. Perce, 159 Cal. 429, 114 P. 571, wherein the courts says:

"When general and specific provisions of a contract deal with the same subject-matter, the specific provisions, if inconsistent with the general provisions, are of controlling force. If, therefore, it is said that by the general provision accounts are to be taken and the properties of the partnership, including the book accounts, are to be divided between the partners equally, this must be considered as controlled by the specific provision that upon the payment of $1,000 all assets of the partnership, including the book accounts, shall become the property of the defendant."

The case is not in point, as the facts do not parallel the instant case. The Scudder-Perce contract provided that, on dissolution of the partnership, Perce should pay Scudder $1,000, and the Scudder should transfer to Perce his interest in the furniture fixtures, and good will of the property "and all gains of said business other than moneys earned and collected."

We are in perfect accord with what the court says in that case and with this language used in the opinion, which has special application here:

"The second consideration is that all parts of the contract are to be given effect if this may be done without doing violence to the manifest expressed intent of the parties and that the terms of a contract are to be construed according to the ordinary and usual acceptation of the language unless an intent that they should be construed otherwise plainly appears."

[6] Here we have one article of the contract specially providing for the division of the profits. The profits had already been earned before respondent Smith exercised his option to buy appellant's stock, and appellant's right to these profits cannot be defeated because of the failure or refusal of the directors to declare a dividend in a corporation, which under the authorities cited, is a mere agency created for the convenience in carrying out the contract, and which is a mere corporate fiction. The other article provides that Smith shall have the right to purchase the stock of Conover at par or at the option of Conover at a price that will return him the amount invested, with interest, less dividends already received.

The contract is very plain, and each clause can be given effect without doing violence to the others. Article VI gives Conover the right to his profits in the enterprise earned up to the time Smith should exercise his right of purchase. When Smith exercised this right given him under article VIII, Conover was given the option of demanding par for his stock and retaining the profits, which at the time of the execution of the contract it must have been expected he would have collected before a demand was made upon him by Smith, exercising his right to purchase his stock, or, if it were more advantageous to him, he could demand the amount invested, with 10 per cent. interest, less the profits he had received. This clause was evidently inserted in the contract for Conover's benefit as a protection to him, should Smith desire his retirement from the business. The learned trial judge in his decision has reversed the conditions and given Smith the right to decide which alternative Conover must choose—has transferred the option from Conover to Smith.

We are of the opinion that appellant is entitled to his proportionate share of the profits earned by the corporation prior to respondent Smith exercising his right to purchase his stock.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to determine the amount of profits to which appellant is entitled, and to award him his proper share.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.; CASHIN, J.

53 Cal. App. 339

RHEE v. L. K. SMALL CO. (Civ. 5321.)*

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California. May 24, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 21,
1927.

1. Factors ⇨1—Contract concerning production and marketing of lettuce held to create relation of principal and factor (Civ. Code, § 2026).

Under Civ. Code, § 2026, contract for production and marketing of lettuce held to create relation of principal and factor, notwithstanding fact that factor was required to pack lettuce for shipment.

2. Factors ⇨23—Marketing contract held to require factor, although it made advances on crop, to obey instructions of principal (Civ. Code, § 2027).

Contract concerning production and marketing of lettuce to be delivered to factor to be packed and marketed on commission basis, although it created exclusive agency, held not to create one coupled with interest, and factor thereunder had duty to obey instructions of principal under Civ. Code, § 2027, although factor had made advances on crop.

3. Factors ⇨22—Factor held liable for loss proximately caused by its negligence or deviation from principal's instructions to sell to certain purchaser (Civ. Code, § 2027).

Law imposed duty on factor to use reasonable diligence in performance of undertaking to market lettuce crop, rendering it liable in damages for loss proximately caused by its negligence or deviation from instructions of its principal to sell to certain purchaser, in view of Civ. Code, § 2027, even though it acted prudently for what appeared to be principal's best interests.

4. Factors ⇨43—Evidence held to support implied finding that factor negligently failed to follow principal's instructions to sell to certain purchaser to principal's damage (Civ. Code, § 2027).

In action against factor on contract relating to production and marketing of lettuce, evidence held to support implied findings that factor negligently failed to follow instructions of principal to sell to party who made certain offer, contrary to Civ. Code, § 2027, to damage of principal.

5. Principal and agent ⇨79(5)—Ratification of agent's act is matter of defense, and burden of proof rests on one alleging it.

Although, as general rule, ratification by principal relieves agent from liability, and acts and silence of principal are evidence of ratification, ratification is not to be assumed, but is matter of defense, burden of proving which rests on one alleging it.

6. Trial ⇨142—Where inferences to be drawn as to whether principal ratified agent's act are such that men may reasonably differ, question is for jury.

Where inferences to be drawn from facts as to whether principal ratified agent's act are such that men may reasonably differ, question is one for jury, especially where ratification is sought to be implied from conduct or deduced from acts of alleged acquiescence.

7. Factors ⇨43—Principal's complaint for factor's breach of marketing contract to sell to certain purchaser held sufficient.

In principal's action against factor for breach of contract relating to marketing lettuce, complaint, alleging bona fide cash offer for crop by offeror ready, willing, and able to pay, and that defendant neglected to accept offer as directed by plaintiff, causing loss, held sufficient.

8. Factors ⇨43—Damage for factor's breach of marketing contract held difference between principal's net profit, if offer factor refused contrary to instructions had been accepted, and net profits derived from later sale.

In principal's action against factor for damages for breach of contract for marketing lettuce, proper measure of principal's damages held difference between what net profits principal would have received had factor accepted offer as directed by principal, and principal's net profits from subsequent sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by B. U. Rhee against the L. K. Small Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

LeRoy M. Edwards, of Los Angeles, and James W. Glassford, of El Centro, for appellant.

Dayton L. Ault and C. Sherman Anderson, both of Calexico, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a part of a judgment entered on a verdict in an action to recover for a breach of contract by an agent.

Appellant corporation, which was engaged in the business of packing and shipping produce, entered into a written contract with respondent by which the latter agreed to plant 20 acres of lettuce and deliver the crop to appellant to be packed and marketed. The grower further agreed to pay, in addition to the cost of packing, a commission of 15 per cent. of the amount of the gross sales of all lettuce delivered and accepted for shipment. It was further agreed that appellant should make certain advances as the crop was delivered, and it appears from the testimony that money was advanced and seed furnished before the crop was grown. The contract also contained the following provisions: "The grower hereby appoints the above-named distributor (appellant) his exclusive selling agent for the selling and distributing of all lettuce owned and controlled by the grower for the season of 1922, * * *" and "the distributor agrees to use his best efforts and endeavors in the marketing of said lettuce in order to procure the best possible returns. * * *"

The complaint alleged that there was received from the Southwestern Fruit Company a bona fide cash offer for the crop as it stood in the field, which the offeror was ready, willing, and able and promised to pay; that plaintiff was willing to accept, and demanded of defendant that it accept the price offered, but that the latter refused and neglected to do so, and the offer was withdrawn; that, by defendant's failure to exercise reasonable care and diligence in marketing the crop, plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $6,296.61.

These allegations were denied by defendant, which pleaded by way of counterclaim and cross-complaint causes of action arising out of two separate contracts for the delivery and sale of crops of cantaloupes under which it sought to recover the total sum of $3,429.33. The jury awarded to each party the amount claimed, and the appeal is from that part of the judgment which was entered against the corporation. It appears from the testimony that the lettuce was grown as agreed, and within a few days before the time when ready for delivery an offer of $8,000 for the entire crop in the field was made by a certain Japanese who was doing business under the name of Southwestern Fruit Company. Respondent testified that he wished to accept the offer, and so informed appellant's agent, but that the latter refused to sell for less than $8,500, stating that the Japanese were not financially responsible. According to the testimony of the agent, respondent, who was then indebted to appellant, stated at the time the offer was made:

"You know I am heavily indebted to you people, and I would like to get straightened out on this thing, and at the same time it is a fair margin for you people to get your commissions. * * * We are willing to pay just the same."

The agent then raised the question as to the ability of the Japanese to pay, stating:

"In my opinion Fujimoto hasn't $8,000, and I wouldn't trust him overnight. * * * I have every reason to believe we could not trust him. * * * The only way we will sell that lettuce is to get the cash here, and they pay $8,500, and we will give them the lettuce."

The evidence was conflicting as to the ability of the Japanese to pay the price offered as well as to the terms of the offer, respondent testifying in the latter connection that the buyer offered $4,000 in cash and the balance when the harvesting of the crop commenced, and the agent that payment was to be evidenced by a postdated check. After the rejection of the offer, the crop amounting to 2,872 crates was packed and sold by appellant, the gross returns therefrom being the sum of $4,052.03.

It is undisputed that there was advanced and paid to respondent in cash the sum of $1,751.33, and that, in addition, he was furnished 67 pounds of lettuce seed valued at $117.50, of which 15 pounds, of the value of $37.50, was returned. He received the further sum of $118.18 upon the completion of the sales; the net amount received by him from the crop being the sum of $1,949.51. It was further shown that the cost of cutting and delivering the crop to appellant was approximately $100. It is contended by appellant that the evidence was insufficient to show a breach, or that appellant was wanting in ordinary care and diligence in performing the contract; that the breach, if any, was ratified by respondent; that the verdict was unsupported; and that the court erred in instructing the jury.

[1-5] The relation between the parties was that of principal and factor (Civ. Code, § 2026; Betts v. Southern California Fruit Exchange, 144 Cal. 402, 77 P. 993), and this notwithstanding that appellant was required by the contract to pack the lettuce for shipment (Winne v. Hammond, 37 Ill. 99; Bank of Elgin v. Kilbourne, 127 Ill. 573, 20 N. E. 681; Shaw v. Ferguson, 78 Ind. 547; State v. Thompson, 120 Mo. 12, 25 S. W. 346; Kellogg v. Costello, 93 Wis. 232, 67 N. W. 24). The agency created by the contract, though exclusive, was not coupled with an interest (Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609-617; Roth v. Moeller, 185 Cal. 415, 197 P. 62; Chambers v. Seay, 73 Ala. 372; Woods v. Hart, 50 Neb. 497, 70 N. W. 53), and it was the duty of the factor to obey the instructions of its principal, although advances had been made on the crop (Civ. Code, § 2027). The law imposed the further duty to use reasonable diligence in the performance of its undertaking, and it would be liable in damages for a loss proximately caused by its negligence or a deviation from the instructions of its principal, even though in the latter connection it acted prudently, and for what appeared to be the best interests of its principal. Lem v. Wilson, 27 Cal. App. 512, 150 P. 641; Coyne Bros. v. Feazel, 129 Ark. 163, 195 S. W. 391; Cutter v. Powers, 200 Mich. 375, 166 N. W. 1029; Adams v. Robinson, 65 Ala. 586; Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676. In the instant case the evidence, though conflicting, was sufficient to support the implied findings that the Japanese was ready, willing, and able to pay the price offered, and that appellant negligently failed to follow the instructions of its principal, to the damage of the latter. It is urged by appellant that respondent, by continuing to perform the contract and by his acceptance of the net proceeds of the sale, ratified the refusal to accept the offer. While it is the general rule that ratification by the principal relieves the agent from liability, and the acts and silence of the principal are evidence of ratification, the fact is not one to be assumed, but is a matter of defense (Bank of Westhope v. Messner, 25 N. D. 263, 141 N. W. 999), and the burden of proof rests upon the one who alleges it (Dean v. Hipp, 16 Colo. App. 537, 66 P. 804; Brown v. Estate of Funck, 89 Kan. 601, 132 P. 202, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 174).

[6] And, where the inferences to be drawn from the facts are such that men may reasonably differ, the question is one for the jury, and this is especially true where ratification is sought to be implied from conduct or deduced from acts of alleged acquiescence. Ratification was not pleaded as a defense to the action, nor so far as appears was the question raised at the trial, and we cannot say that the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the evidence adduced supports appellant's contention.

[7, 8] We find no merit in the further claim that the complaint was insufficient or that the instructions of the court were prejudicially erroneous, but we are satisfied, in view of the evidence, that the verdict against appellant was excessive.

That respondent received in money and seed the sum of $1,949.51 and incurred an expense of $100 in harvesting the crop is undisputed. He concedes that in computing the damage appellant should have been allowed the commission amounting to $1,200, which would have been payable had the sale been made to the Japanese. Had his instructions been followed, respondent would have received, after deducting the commissions, the sum of $6,800. The return in fact was the amount first stated less the expense incurred, a net amount of $1,849.51, and his damage was the difference, namely, $4,950.49.

For the above reason, that part of the judgment appealed from is modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $1,346.12, and, as so modified, is affirmed. It is ordered that appellant recover its costs on appeal.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

CUNNING v. HUMBOLDT COUNTY. ★ (Civ. 3090.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 18, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court July 13, 1927.

1. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 139(1)—Directed verdict for defendant may be granted only when there is no substantial evidence supporting verdict for plaintiff.

Court's right to direct verdict for defendant on evidence is same as right to grant nonsuit, which may be granted only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving plaintiff's evidence all value to which legally entitled and indulging in every legitimate inference therefrom, there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support verdict for plaintiff.

2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 989—That directed verdict is for party having burden of proof should be considered in determining propriety thereof.

That directed verdict is in favor of party having burden of proof is fact to be considered in determining propriety of court's action, being sanctioned only in clearest cases.

3. Evidence $\hookrightarrow$ 83(7)—It will be presumed that peace officer, executed search warrant directed to him, and magistrate issuing it has power to enforce its execution (Pen. Code §§ 1523, 1528, 1530).

It is to be presumed that peace officer, to whom search warrant is directed, under Pen. Code §§ 1523, 1528, will do his official duty and execute warrant, under section 1530, and magistrate who issues it has ample power to enforce its execution.

4. District and prosecuting attorneys $\hookrightarrow$ 7(2)—District attorney has only discretion in first instance to determine necessity incurring expense in detecting crime and prosecuting criminal cases (Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 2).

District attorney's right, under Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 2, to incur necessary expenses in detecting crime and prosecuting criminal cases, is not arbitrary; statute merely giving him discretion in first instance to determine such necessity, which county board of supervisors, on presentation of claims for allowance, and superior court, in action brought after rejection of claims, must also pass on.

5. District and prosecuting attorneys $\hookrightarrow$ 7(2)—Whether expense of district attorney's employment of special agents to execute search warrants was necessary, so as to charge county therewith, held for jury (Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 2; Pen. Code, §§ 1523, 1528, 1530).

Whether expense of employing special agents to execute search warrants was necessarily incurred by district attorney, so as to charge county therewith, under Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 2, held for jury, in absence of evidence showing why execution thereof was entrusted to such agents instead of regular peace officers of county, under Pen. Code, §§ 1523, 1528, 1530.

6. District and prosecuting attorneys $\hookrightarrow$ 7(2)—Expenses of district attorney's employment of persons to perform other county officers' duties are not "expenses necessarily incurred by him" (Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 2).

Expenses of district attorney's employment of persons to perform official duties, enjoined by law on other officers of county, are not expenses necessarily incurred by him, within Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 2, making such expenses county charges.

7. District and prosecuting attorneys $\hookrightarrow$ 7(2)—Evidence that county provided automobiles for use of district attorney's employees held admissible to show that expense of hiring them was unnecessary (Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 2).

In action by employee of district attorney against county for use of plaintiff's automobile in performance of services, evidence that county had provided automobiles for use of district attorney and his employees, and that he had been so informed, would be material as tending to show that expense of hiring them was not necessarily incurred, within Pol. Code, § 4307, subd. 2, making such expenses county charges.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

Actions by John Cunning against the County of Humboldt. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

John F. Quinn, of Eureka, for appellant.
H. C. Nelson, of Eureka, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Six causes of action are stated in the complaint. The first is based on plaintiff's claim for alleged personal services performed by him, as an employee of the district attorney of the defendant county, in the detection of crime and the gathering of evidence to be used in the prosecution of criminal cases, and for expenses incurred, and the use of plaintiff's automobile in connection with the performance of such services. The other causes of action are based on similar claims of other employees of the district attorney, which claims were duly assigned to the plaintiff. The period of time covered by the claims is the month of July, 1925. Plaintiff's claim is for "wages for July 1st to 31st, $5 per day, $155;" expenses for July, $17.05; "mileage 1251, at 15 cents per mile, $187.65." The assigned claims are as follows: George Wentworth: "31 days at $5 per day, $155;" expenses, $26.10; "927 miles at 15 cents per mile, $139.35." C. C. Hill: "27 days * * * at $5 per day, $135;" expenses, $13; mileage 305, at 10 cents, $30.50. W. Hill: "23 days * * * at $5 per day, $115;" expenses, $24.60. L. G. Hannaford: "19 days * * * at $5 per day, $95;" expenses, $32.60. Stephen Hash: "1,196 miles at 15 cents per mile, $179.40." The claims were all duly presented to the board of supervisors for allowance as charges against the county.

Plaintiff's claim and that of Wentworth were allowed in the amounts claimed for services and expenses, but rejected as to the compensation claimed for the use of automobiles. The other claims were entirely rejected. The answer denies that any services were performed, expenses incurred, or automobiles used by the claimants, and denies that the employment or services of the claimants or the use of their automobiles were necessary or that the compensation claimed is reasonable. At the close of the evidence the court directed the return of a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount demanded in the complaint. This appeal is from the judgment entered upon the verdict, which the jury returned in compliance with such instruction.

[1, 2] The main question on this appeal is whether there is any substantial evidence which would warrant a verdict in favor of defendant or a reduction of the amount awarded the plaintiff. "It is now settled that the right of a court to direct a verdict is, with regard to the condition of the evidence, absolutely the same as the right of a court to grant a nonsuit; and also that a court may grant a nonsuit only when, disregarding, conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given." Perera v. Panama-Pacific Int. Exp. Co., 179 Cal. 63, 64, 175 P. 454, 455. In that case the court had directed a verdict for defendant. Like a judgment of nonsuit, the directed verdict was against the party having the burden of proof. In this case it is in favor of the party on whom rests the burden of proof, a fact to be considered in determining the propriety of the court's action. "There is a distinction * * * between directing a verdict against and directing a verdict for the party having the burden of proof." 25 Standard Proc. 1063. Instructions directing verdicts in favor of the party having the burden of proof have been upheld in this state, but it has been said that "the practice is hazardous, and can be sanctioned only in the clearest cases." O'Connor v. Witherby, 111 Cal. 523, 528, 44 P. 227, 229.

The district attorney testified that during the month of July, 1925, he employed eight men, including the claimants, to do the character of work for which the claims involved herein are made; that during that month these men were employed "principally" in "securing evidence in the detection of crime in regard to the violation of the liquor laws," but that "very usually there was other work they did during that time"; that they were employed "to detect the commission of crime and to secure evidence for the prosecution of criminal cases" generally; that "a big part of their work" was "raiding" places where intoxicating liquors were manufactured or sold; that the men were paid at the rate of $5 a day during the time they were actually working and the cost of their meals and their hotel expenses when away from their homes; that "they had to use automobiles, as their work took them all over the entire county"; that he agreed to pay each of them who used his own automobile at the rate of 15 cents a mile; that the supervisors had fixed that rate "for the use of what they termed 'dry squad cars'"; that from three to five of such employees would ride in each automobile; that the dangers of the work were such that it was necessary for the employees to travel in groups for their own protection; that "there wasn't a day or an hour outside of the time they had to sleep but what there was work there to do"; that "they would assemble in the morning and had their work outlined for them"; that "Mr. McKay is the county detective, and * * * he attended to the immediate detail himself, divided them up in squads, and sent some in one direction and some in another, filling any requests that came in"; that "invariably if they were to enter buildings they had search warrants"; that "sometimes if they know in advance of a car and person bringing it, they obtain search warrants of the courts" to search automobiles; that "generally one man carries the search warrant and the others assist him, * * * searching and procuring the evidence"; that he "made no requests for their appointment as deputy sheriffs"; that "as a small accommodation" to the sheriff he would send one of the employees for a few minutes to take a prisoner from the county jail to "the justice of the peace, or bring him across to the courthouse"; and that he did not "know of any cars whatever that had been assigned to the use of the district attorney's office either during the month of July or any other month." All the claimants were deputized by the sheriff of the county, and they all wore deputy sheriff's badges. Hannaford testified that the work for which he claimed compensation was performed "mostly in liquor cases"; that he did not recall having done "any work on any other class of cases"; that he acted "as a member of the dry squad, going out on raids and securing evidence and detecting crime in connection with the prohibition enforcement law"; that he participated in many raids during the month of July; that he assisted in making arrests in some of the raids; that "a typical case is we arrest some one, we go out and a man working would have to put somebody under arrest and take the man in to the county jail and the balance of the squad would get in the machine and go back to the jail. That is the only assisting I did." Wellesly Hill testified that "some days we had as high as eight or nine or ten raids; other days we had only two or three"; that he had taken prisoners from the point of arrest to the county jail and from the jail to the courts and back "as a deputy sheriff employed by the district attorney's office"; that his claim "covers not only going out and hunting up some evidence as a detective, but in addition covers the time * * * occupied as a deputy sheriff in getting out a search warrant and going out and serving it" in making a raid, but that it was all done under the direction of the district attorney. Cunning testified that he took squads of employees on various trips in his automobile to make raids; that he charged for the time he occupied in getting the search warrants and going to the places where they were to be served; that "it was all in the day's work"; that in making searches under authority of search warrants he "many times" broke open doors to gain entrance; that he was a deputy sheriff "for convenience in my work"; and that he was not paid as a deputy sheriff, but as an employee of the district attorney. Wentworth testified that the employees "never raided without a search warrant"; that "no raiding party is carried on without a search warrant held by some member of the squad"; that he assisted in breaking through doors "as a deputy sheriff and detective"; that during the month of July he assisted in making about seventeen arrests; that a part of his claim is for "taking prisoners * * * to the county jail," that prisoners were brought in on return from raiding trips, but that no extra charge was made therefor. Hash testified:

"I got $5 a day. It did not make any difference whether I am getting a search warrant or taking a prisoner down to the jail, no matter what I am doing, I got $5 a day, no more.

"Q. In the month of July was there any portion of your claim for time taken up in taking a prisoner arrested from the place of arrest to the county jail? A. Certainly, if I go out to Wildwood and get a prisoner I am not going to leave him out there. * * * If a prisoner is taken into town, I may take him to court and I get $5 a day, no more and no less. * * *

"Q. And serving a warrant and doing those things * * * and taking prisoners to court or taking him from the place of arrest was just as much a part of the work you were supposed to do as getting the evidence? A. Yes, sir. * * * I don't get anything for being a deputy sheriff. I take my orders from the district attorney. * * * I am a deputy sheriff just for courtesy.

"Q. When you arrested people though, you arrested them not as a detective, but as a deputy sheriff? A. Yes; but I did not get any pay as a deputy sheriff.

"Q. Do you remember of any prisoner you took from the county jail to the justice's court in that month? A. Yes, sir; I took several. * * *

"Q. And you made your charge upon a mileage basis for taking yourself and the other employees out to where you were directed to go, and for coming back? A. Yes, sir; and bringing the prisoner back.

"Q. If you did not bring the prisoner, you got the same price as if you did? A. Just the same. * * * I am getting my $5 a day no matter whether I am getting a search warrant or taking a prisoner or raiding. * * * I am getting fifteen cents a mile for my car if I haul one or if I haul six or seven, and if I haul the prisoner, it is not any different."

[3] It appears from the foregoing evidence that the services for which compensation is claimed were, to a considerable extent, the serving of search warrants and the making of searches thereunder. "A search warrant is an order in writing, in the name of the people, signed by a magistrate, directed to a peace officer, commanding him to search for personal property, and bring it before the magistrate." Pen. Code, § 1523. It is issued by the magistrate "to a peace officer in his county, commanding him forthwith to search the person or place named, for the property specified, and to bring it before the magistrate." Pen. Code, § 1528. "A search warrant may in all cases be served by any of the officers mentioned in its directions, but by no other person, except in aid of the officer on his requiring it, he being present and acting in its execution." Pen. Code, § 1530. It is to be presumed that a peace officer to whom a search warrant is directed will do his official duty and execute the warrant, and the magistrate who issues the warrant is clothed with ample power to enforce its execution.

[4] The authority of the district attorney to employ the claimants is found in section 4307, subdivision 2, of the Political Code, which provides that "all * * * expenses necessarily incurred by him in the detection of crime and prosecution of criminal cases" are county charges. "Of course, the right of a district attorney to incur expense is not an arbitrary one. All that the section [228] of the County Government Act (St. 1897 p. 452) [in the identical language of section 4307 of the Political Code] permits is to give to the district attorney, in the first instance, the discretion to determine whether it is necessary in the detection of crime, or the prosecution of a criminal case, to incur an expense chargeable against the county. Any such claim, however, must be presented to the board of supervisors for allowance, and that body reviews the action of the district attorney and determines whether the expense was a necessary one and acts accordingly. * * * Its determination that it was a proper and necessary expense is conclusive." County of Yolo v. Joyce, 156 Cal. 429, 432, 105 P. 125, 126. When the claims herein were rejected by the board of supervisors, however, "the foregoing considerations all became the subject of cognizance and determination in an action brought in the superior court." Thiel D. Co. v. Tuolumne County, 37 Cal. App. 423, 425, 173 P. 1120, 1121; Pol. Code, § 4078.

[5] Whether the expense was "necessarily incurred" by the district attorney was a question of fact for the determination of the jury. In the absence of evidence showing why the execution of the search warrants was intrusted to the special agents of the district attorney rather than to the regular peace officers of the county, it cannot be held that the necessity of employing such agents for that particular service is so conclusively established as to warrant a directed verdict.

[6] The expenses of employment by the district attorney of persons to perform the official duties which are enjoined by law upon other officers of the county are not "expenses necessarily incurred by him." The case of Cunning v. Carr, 69 Cal. App. 230, 234, 230 P. 987, 989, was decided in favor of the employees of the district attorney on the theory that they were employed as sleuths or detectives "to perform services outside of the duties cast by law upon the sheriff or a constable." Of course no one would contend that a person so employed would forfeit his right to compensation by the mere incidental performance of some act which falls within the official duties of a sheriff or constable.

[7] Counsel for defendant made some slight effort to show that the county had provided automobiles for the use of the district attorney and his employees and that the district attorney had been so informed, but the attempt to make such proof was apparently abandoned. Evidence to that effect would be material as tending to show that the expense of hiring automobiles was not necessarily incurred. The other contentions of the appellant are not considered of sufficient importance or merit to require discussion.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

83 Cal. App. 866

COACHELLA VALLEY STATE BANK v. WILSON. (Civ. 4845.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 25, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 21, 1927.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1010(1)—Trial judge's finding as to ownership of property in action for conversion held conclusive.

In action for conversion, finding by trial judge as to ownership of property, based on substantial evidence, is conclusive.

2. Sales $\S$ 482—Finding that plaintiff in trover acquired title to truck by assignment of conditional sales contract for value, subject to purchaser's rights to become owner on payment of amount due, held justified by evidence.

In action for conversion against sheriff, evidence justified finding that plaintiff, to whom conditional sales contract of truck and interest in truck was assigned on payment of amount due to owner of contract, acquired title to truck at time of assignment, subject to rights of purchaser to become owner of truck on payment of balance due under sales contract.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1010(1)—Findings of fact, made on evidence sufficient to support them, will not be disturbed.

District Court of Appeal will not disturb findings of fact, which are made on evidence sufficient to support them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; George R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by the Coachella Valley State Bank against F. P. Wilson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thomas T. Porteous, of Riverside, for respondent.

HAUSER, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action of conversion brought against defendant as sheriff. It appears that one Bellue bought an automobile truck on a conditional sales contract; that he failed to meet several of the installments when they became due, and as a consequence he was about to lose the truck; that thereupon he induced the plaintiff bank to help him out of his difficulty, which was done by having the assignee of the seller of the truck assign its interest in the truck and the conditional sales contract to the plaintiff. In addition thereto, Bellue gave to plaintiff his promissory note for the balance due on the truck, plus the amount of money paid by the plaintiff for an insurance policy thereon, for all of which Bellue deposited with and pledged to the plaintiff as collateral security for the payment of the note an automobile sales contract covering, not only the truck in question, but as well another truck described in the pledge. Thereafter, by virtue of a writ of attachment issued in an action brought by a third party against Bellue, the defendant herein as sheriff took possession of the truck which is the subject of this controversy. Judgment having been rendered in said action against Bellue, the truck was sold in execution of the judgment.

As is stated by appellant:

"The real question for determination in this matter is whether the title to the truck in question passed to Bellue or to plaintiff on or about the 29th day of August, 1921 (the date of the assignment to the plaintiff of the sales contract), and that whichever way that question is decided the entire case will follow."

The action was tried by the court without a jury, and among the findings of fact is the following:

"That on the 13th day of August, 1920, the said Gary South Coast Agency, Inc., sold, assigned, and transferred said contract and motor truck to the Merchants' Finance Company, and said Merchants' Finance Company, on the 29th day of August, 1921, sold, assigned, and transferred said contract and motor truck to the plaintiff, and plaintiff on the 29th day of August, 1921, became the owner of said motor truck, subject to the said contract of sale to said C. E. Bellue, and so continued to be and was, on the 7th day of June, 1922, and at the time the defendant took possession of same as hereinafter set out, the owner of said Gary truck described in paragraph II of plaintiff's complaint herein."

In support of such finding the record on appeal discloses that one of the witnesses, who was the cashier of the plaintiff bank, testified that in a conversation between Bellue and him "Mr. Bellue stated that he was behind in the payment on his truck, and that the Merchants' Finance Company were threatening to take the truck away from him and compel him to forfeit what he had already paid on it, and he asked me if the bank would take over that contract and extend the time of payments so he could meet them. I told him that I would have to take the matter up with the board." Later the witness told Bellue that "we could take care of the matter for him." The plaintiff then procured an assignment to itself of all "right, title, and interest in and to the within contract, and in and to all moneys due and to become due and payable thereunder, and also all right, title, and interest in and to the property therein described." The consideration for the assignment was paid directly by the plaintiff to the owner of the contract, and Bellue thereupon executed the note, etc., in favor of the plaintiff. The witness further testified:

"The whole matter was thoroughly gone into at the time of signing the note. I explained to him [Bellue] that the bank was taking an assignment of the contracts, and taking a note in its usual course of business, and extending the time on the payment of the contract. * * * I told him how much was due on each contract, and that he would have to have the truck insured. He had requested that the policy that was on the contract be canceled, and we place a new one on it, and I figured out what it would take to cover the insurance, and explained the whole matter to him in detail. * * * I explained to him that we were taking this contract or assignment from the previous holders, and that the note was taken by the bank in its usual course of business, to extend the payment on the contracts. I also stated to him at that time that I was doing it in that way, so as not to change the existing contract rights in any way whatsoever."

It also appeared that at the time Bellue signed the note no money was paid to him; neither was any credit extended to him by the plaintiff; nor was any entry made in Bellue's account with the plaintiff, showing the deposit therein "of that sum of money." At that time a policy of insurance was "taken out" on the truck.

Bellue testified:

"I was needing money on account of sickness, and I went in [to the bank], and the only way I could get the money was to have the bank buy the contract over for security. * * * The bank agreed to buy the contract and pay for it. * * * The purpose was, the note was given to the bank, so they should have something to show. * * * I told them [the assignee of the contract] to send my contract to the Coachella Valley State Bank, and the bank agreed to pay for it and take the contract, and indorse the contract to the bank, which I suppose he did."

[1-3] Appellant attacks the conclusion on the facts reached by the trial court, and argues that from the evidence the decision on the question of the ownership of the truck should have been that Bellue was the owner thereof. While from the entire record in the case, which includes the several documents relating to the transaction under consideration, it is possible that a finding of fact might have been made by the judge of the trial court in accord with the views urged by appellant, it is well-settled law that his decision in the matter, based upon substantial evidence, is conclusive in the premises. It sufficiently appears by the testimony of the cashier of plaintiff's bank, as well as by that of Bellue, that the trial court was justified in reaching the conclusion stated in the finding to which objection is made, to wit, that the plaintiff purchased the interest of the assignee of the seller of the truck, both in the sales contract and the truck itself, and was the owner thereof, subject only to the rights of Bellue to become the owner of the truck on the payment to plaintiff of the balance due on the sales contract, plus the premium on the insurance policy paid by the plaintiff for the insurance of the truck. It is not the function of this court to disturb findings of fact which are made on evidence sufficient to support them.

The sole point raised by appellant, as to "whether the title to the truck in question passed to Bellue or to plaintiff," having been decided on substantial evidence that the plaintiff was the owner of the truck, it follows that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

33 Cal. App. 403

SHERMAN v. REYNOLDS et al. (Civ. 4633.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 26, 1927.

1. Venue ⚡28—Residence can only be changed by union of act and intent.

As respects the venue of a transitory action, residence of defendant can only be changed by union of act and intent.

2. Venue ⚡68—Affidavit opposing change of venue, alleging that defendants agreed to hold possession of premises to grow and harvest crops, held to show defendants came into county for temporary purpose only (Code Civ. Proc. § 395; Pol. Code, §§ 52, 1239, subsds. 1, 4).

Where defendants moved for change of venue on ground that they resided in another county than that in which action was brought, plaintiff's counter affidavit, alleging that contract sued on was for sale of vegetable, melon, and fruit crops, and that defendants agreed to take possession of premises for purpose of growing and harvesting crops, held clearly to show that defendants removed to county in which land was located for temporary purpose only, entitling defendants to change of venue under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, and Pol. Code, §§ 52, 1239, subsds. 1, 4.

3. Appeal and error ⚡1024(3)—In absence of substantial conflict in evidence, trial court's erroneous conclusion as to defendants' residence, as respects venue, will be reversed on appeal.

Ordinarily, the conclusion of the trial court on a motion for a change of venue will not be disturbed on appeal, where there is a substantial conflict in the affidavits or evidence on the question of defendants' residence, but, where there is no substantial conflict, erroneous conclusion of the trial court from affidavits on file will be reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action by L. H. Sherman against F. E. Reynolds and another. From an order denying defendants' motion for change of venue, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Andreani & Haines, Robert P. Carrey, and John L. Bisher, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Hickox, Crenshaw & Trude, of El Centro, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Appeal by defendants from a judgment denying defendants' motion for change of venue from the county of Imperial to the county of Los Angeles.

The complaint was filed June 29, 1923. It alleged three causes of action—the first was for vegetables and produce sold and delivered; the second for fruit and produce sold; and the third for labor performed. The last two claims were assigned to plaintiff. Defendants filed an affidavit of merits and written demand that the trial be had in Los Angeles county. In support of their motion for change of venue, defendants made affidavit that at the time of the filing and commencement of the action on June 29, 1923, the defendants and each of them resided in the county of Los Angeles, had so resided for some time prior to the commencement of the action, and have ever since continuously so resided and do now reside in the county of Los Angeles. Plaintiff filed a counter affidavit that on May 22, 1923, plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement for the sale by plaintiff to defendants of certain vegetables, melons, and fruit then growing, and that the account sued upon is due under the terms of said contract; "that under the terms of said contract the defendants were to take and hold possession of said premises for the purposes thereof;" that on May 22, 1923, the defendants moved upon and took possession of the premises and resided upon the same; that defendant Reynolds, together with his wife, lived on said premises up to and including June 19, 1923; that defendant Aschenbrenner, together with his wife, resided thereon up to and including July 12, 1923; that said defendants and each of them moved certain of their furniture and household goods upon said premises and did live upon said premises as their home during all of the time aforesaid. Defendant Reynolds filed a reply affidavit, stating that he did not at any time, and does not now, reside in the county of Imperial; that it is not true that defendant moved upon or resided upon the premises located in the county of Imperial; that defendant went to the county of Imperial on June 2, 1923, for the purpose of harvesting a crop on premises leased by him, and returned to the county of Los Angeles on June 10, 1923; that defendant again went to Imperial county for the purpose of harvesting said crops, but not for any other purpose, on June 13, 1923, and returned to Los Angeles county on June 18, 1923; that defendant did not move upon said premises or any premises in the county of Imperial for the purpose of establishing a residence, but only for the purpose of harvesting his crops; that defendant did not move upon or live upon said premises from May 22, 1923, up to and including the 19th of June, 1923, or up to and including the 12th day of July, 1923, or at any other time, but only visited the said premises for the purposes hereinabove alleged; that defendant did not move any of his furniture or household goods upon any premises in the county of Imperial, and did not live upon such premises. The record contains no affidavit of reply filed by defendant Aschenbrenner.

It will be noted from plaintiff's affidavit that the contract sued upon was for the sale of vegetable, melon, and fruit crops, and that "defendants were to take and hold possession of said premises for the purposes thereof." It is self-evident from reading this affidavit that the only purpose of the defendants in moving onto the premises was in order to harvest the crop which had been produced by defendants. Plaintiff claims that the facts alleged in his affidavit are sufficient to establish the residence by the defendants in Imperial county. The action was transitory, and under the provisions of section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is required to be brought in the county where the defendants or some of them reside at the commencement of the action. In section 52 of the Political Code, residence is defined as the place where one remains when not called elsewhere for labor or other special or temporary purpose, and to which he returns in seasons of repose. Subdivisions 1 and 4 of section 1239 of the Political Code read as follows:

"1. That place must be considered and held to be the residence of a person in which his * * * habitation is fixed, and to which, whenever he * * * is absent, he * * * has the intention of returning; * * *

"4. A person must not be considered to have gained a residence in any precinct into which he * * * comes for temporary purposes merely, without the intention of making such precinct his * * * home. * * *

[1-3] In Chambers v. Hathaway, 187 Cal. 104, 105, 200 P. 931, 932, it is said:

"Where a person has two dwellings in different places and resides a part of his time in one place and a part of the time in another alternatively, the question which of the two places is his legal residence is almost altogether a question of his intent."

Residence can only be changed by the union of act and intent. Upon an examination of the affidavit filed by plaintiff, we do not find any facts alleged therein which show intent of the defendants to change their residence; to the contrary, it is clearly apparent therefrom that defendants removed to Imperial county for a temporary purpose only, that of growing and harvesting a crop of vegetables, melons, and fruit which they had purchased, and that defendants were to take and hold possession of plaintiff's premises for that purpose only. Ordinarily the conclusion of the trial court on a motion for change of venue will not be disturbed on appeal, where there is a substantial conflict in the affidavits or evidence on the question of defendant's residence; but, where there is no substantial conflict, an erroneous conclusion of the trial court from affidavits on file will be reversed on appeal. Younger v. Spreckels, 12 Cal. App. 175, 106 P. 895. In this case it is said:

"Within the contemplation and meaning of the statute a person can have but one bona fide residence. Residence depends upon intention as well as fact; and in its ordinary acceptation it is the place where one remains when not called elsewhere on business, pleasure, or for other temporary purpose. The mere inhabitancy of a summer home or country house at certain seasons of the year or at certain times would not make the party inhabiting said house a resident of the county in which such house is situated. The material question is the animo manendi. Although one may abide at times in a place for pleasure or health or repose it does not become his domicile unless it be his intention to remain there. The place of residence within the meaning of the statute is the fixed home of a party as understood by himself and his neighbors and friends."

We think the conclusion of the trial court erroneous in the case at bar.

It is ordered that the judgment be reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 204

HARKER et al. v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON CO. (Civ. 3261.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 19, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 18, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1170(3)—Overruling demurrer for misjoinder held not ground for reversal, where no prejudicial testimony was admitted which would not have been admissible in separate actions (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Overruling demurrer, on ground of misjoinder, to petition of lessor and lessees of mining property for damages from fire caused by defendant power company's negligence was, if error, not ground for reversal, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, where no prejudicial testimony was admitted in favor of either plaintiff that would not have been admissible in actions prosecuted separately.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1170(3) — Overruling demurrer for misjoinder was, if error, harmless, where no judgment was rendered for coplaintiffs or on cross-action against them (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Overruling demurrer, on ground of misjoinder, to petition of lessor and lessees of mining property for damages from fire caused by defendant power company's negligence was, if error, not reversible, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where no verdict or judgment was rendered for lessees or on the defendant's cross-action against them.

3. Trial ⇨330(5)—Verdict for plaintiff against defendant, silent as to coplaintiffs and cross-action against coplaintiffs, held to support judgment for plaintiff.

Verdict for lessor against power company defendant, silent as to claim of coplaintiff lessees and defendant's cross-action against the lessees, was sufficient to support judgment for the lessor.

4. Appeal and error ⇨218(1)—Defendant failing to apply for correction of verdict, silent as to coplaintiffs and cross-action against them, could not complain on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 619).

Defendant who failed to make application to have remedied defect in verdict, which was silent as to claim of coplaintiff lessees against the defendant and defendant's cross-action against them, and who in notice of appeal questioned only the judgment on the verdict, could not complain in the court of appeal of the verdict's insufficiency, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 619, authorizing correction of verdict.

5. Electricity ⇨19(6)—Negligence in grounding transformers causing fire held for jury.

Evidence in mine owner's suit against power company for damages from fire alleged to have been caused by negligent installation and maintenance of equipment, in that transformers were improperly grounded, held for jury.

6. Electricity ⇨19(6)—Evidence against power company for fire damage from inadequacy of fuses held for jury.

Evidence in mine owner's suit against power company for damages from fire alleged to have been caused by inadequacy of fuses held for jury.

7. Electricity ⇨19(6)—Evidence against power company for fire damage from closing circuit breakers held for jury.

Evidence in mine owner's suit against power company for damages from fire alleged to have been caused by negligence in holding current breakers at substation closed after they had kicked out, thereby causing overloading of wires, held for jury.

8. Electricity ⇨19(4)—Evidence of condition of soil held competent on question whether compressor plant was properly grounded for electricity hazard.

Evidence of character and condition of soil, where compressor plant was situated, held competent on issue, in suit against power company for damages from fire, whether plant was properly grounded for electricity hazard.

9. Evidence ⇨6—Jury need not be told that July 29th is in dry season, in Tulare county, Cal.

That the 29th of July is ordinarily a considerable period of time after the dry season has begun in Tulare county, Cal., is a commonplace matter of which the jury need not be told.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1064(1)—Instruction that jury was not bound by testimony against inference from evidence held not prejudicial, where evidence was controverting only on inferences (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2).

Instruction that jury was not bound to decide in conformity with testimony of witnesses, and "against a presumption or inference which you may draw from the evidence," instead of words of Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2, "against a presumption or other evidence," held not prejudicial error, where evidence was controverting not in character, but in inferences.

11. Trial ⇨234(7)—Trial court should follow language of statute in instruction on effect of testimony against presumption or evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061).

Trial courts, in giving instructions provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, relating to effect of testimony against presumption or other evidence, would do well to follow exactly the language of the Code.

12. Negligence ⇨121(2)—Instruction applying doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is erroneous where specific acts of negligence are pleaded.

Instruction applying doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, where plaintiff pleaded and relied on specific acts of negligence only, and not on negligence alleged in general language, is erroneous.

13. Trial ⇨295(6)—Erroneous instruction applying doctrine of res ipsa loquitur under pleading of specific negligence held not reversible, under instructions as whole.

Error in giving instruction applying doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, where plaintiff, suing power company for damages from fire, pleaded and relied on specific acts of negligence, held not reversible, as other instructions repeatedly advised jury the specific negligence alleged must be proved to permit recovery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by Ernest W. Harker and another, a copartnership doing business under the firm name of Harker & Hoff, and B. L. A. Barngrover, against the Southern California Edison Company, for damages for destruction of property by fire, in which the defendant filed a cross-action against the plaintiffs first named. Judgment for plaintiff last named, and the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. V. Reppy and E. W. Cunningham, both of Los Angeles, and Farnsworth, McClure & Burke, of Vasalia, for appellant.

Eugene U. Blalock, of Porterville, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiffs to recover damages from the defendant on account of the destruction of certain property by fire alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. Plaintiff B. L. A. Barngrover had judgment and defendant appeals.

The complaint sets forth that the respondent Barngrover is and was at all times mentioned therein the owner of certain real property and the buildings thereon situated in the county of Tulare, state of California, commonly known and designated as the Porterville Magnesite Mill; that the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff were at the times mentioned in the complaint in the possession and occupation of the premises referred to, as the lessees of the plaintiff Barngrover, and were engaged in mining of magnesite on the real property described in the complaint; that the buildings and machinery on said property comprised a compressor plant and a blacksmith shop; the compressor plant, as well as the shop, was inclosed in the building; that the compressor plant and blacksmith shop, together with the machinery and equipment therein were in use on or about the 29th day of July, 1923, and had been in use for some time prior thereto in the operation of magnesite mining, and were so operated by the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff; that the machinery and the compressor plant were operated by means of electric motors, the motive power for which was electricity furnished under contract by the defendant corporation; that for the purpose of transmitting electric power from the main lines owned by the defendant to the motors operated by the plaintiffs, the defendant corporation had installed certain transformers on a platform adjacent to and adjoining the building heretofore mentioned belonging to the plaintiff Barngrover and used and occupied by the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff, as her lessees; that the defendant corporation was charged with the exclusive duty of keeping its transformers, power lines, fuses, and connections between said transformers and power lines belonging to the defendant in first-class condition and repair; that the defendant corporation was on the 29th day of July, 1923, and prior thereto, charged with the sole and exclusive duty of installing and maintaining such fuses above said transformers as would adequately protect the property and equipment belonging to the plaintiff Barngrover in said compressor plant and blacksmith shop against the high voltage carried by the defendant corporation on its power lines, from which the electric power to supply plaintiffs' needs was drawn; that said defendant corporation was likewise charged with the exclusive duty of installing and maintaining proper grounding agencies from the transformers to the earth as a safeguard and protection against possible short circuits, etc.; that in constructing and installing said transformers the defendant corporation was guilty of gross negligence and carelessness in that, (1) the transformers were improperly and insufficiently grounded to safeguard plaintiffs' property against a possible short circuit in defendant's power lines and equipment, and (2) that the fuses installed by the defendant between the defendant's transformers and their electric power lines were of such size and strength as to afford inadequate or no protection to plaintiffs' property against the high voltage carried by the defendant's main power lines; that the 29th day of July, 1923, a defect occurred in the equipment of the defendant; that said defect caused the breakers to kick out in the substation maintained by the defendant; that an employee of the defendant in charge of said breakers in said substation negligently and carelessly closed the breakers and held them closed for several minutes; that by reason of and because of said carelessness and negligence on the part of the defendant, defendant's agents, and employees, a fire was caused which consumed and destroyed the said compressor plant and blacksmith shop, together with the equipment and machinery therein, to the loss and damage of the plaintiff Barngrover in the sum of $8,000 and to the loss and damage of the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff in the sum of $3,000.

To this complaint the defendant demurred on the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff, and also on the ground that the cause of action belonging to the plaintiff Barngrover was her cause of action exclusively and the alleged cause of action on the part of Harker & Hoff belonged to them exclusively, and also that two causes of action were united without being separately stated. Other grounds of demurrer were alleged, which need not be mentioned. The demurrer was overruled and the defendant answered, denying all the allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint, and, in addition thereto, filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff wherein it alleged that the fire was caused by reason of the negligent operation of the compressor plant and that its property was destroyed thereby, to the damage of the defendant in the sum of $1,500, and prayed judgment in the sum of $1,500 against the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff.

The cause was tried before the court sitting with a jury, and, upon the cause being submitted to the jury for determination, the jury returned the following verdict:

"Title of court and cause.

"We, the jury, in the above-entitled action, find a verdict in favor of plaintiff B. L. A. Barngrover, and against Southern California Edison Company, a corporation, in the sum of $3,800."

From the judgment entered upon this verdict the defendant appeals and files its notice of appeal in the following form:

"Title of court and cause.

"Notice of motion to plaintiffs.

"You and each of you will please take notice that defendant, Southern California Edison Company, hereby appeals from the judgment and from every part thereof entered against it herein on the 17th day of December, 1924, in favor of the plaintiff B. L. A. Barngrover, in the sum of $3,800 and costs."

Upon this appeal it is urged that the trial court committed reversible error in overruling the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiffs' complaint; also, that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict in that it fails to show that the fire was due to any negligence on the part of the defendant, or that the fire was the result of electrical causes; also, that the court erred in its instructions to the jury, necessitating an order of reversal.

A number of cases have been cited by counsel upon the question whether there was or was not an improper joinder of parties plaintiff in this action. Upon the part of the appellant, it is forcibly urged that the causes of action set forth are entirely and exclusively separate, and that, while the owner of the premises may have a cause of action and the lessees in the occupation and use thereof may also have a cause of action, their causes of action are not in any wise connected and the joinder thereof improper, irrespective of whether the court upon the trial of actions begun separately by the owner and by the lessees might or might not properly order them joined and tried as one, or at one time, for the reason that the evidence pertaining to the injury of one plaintiff would likewise be relevant and exactly the same testimony that would be introduced to support or controvert the claims of the other parties plaintiff. Upon the part of the respondent, it is urged that there is such a union of interest as entitles the owner and the lessee to join in one action for the alleged injuries suffered by the owner and lessee of the property, by reason of the alleged negligence of the defendant which caused the simultaneous injury. We do not follow the language of the respective parties, but simply summarize their contentions.

[1] Although the appellant in its brief asserts that the defendant was prejudiced by reason of the order of the trial court overruling its demurrer, there appears nothing in the record to substantiate this position. Our attention has not been called to a scintilla of evidence admitted in the trial court, admissible under the rules of evidence, tending to prove any of the issues that would not have been admissible in a case prosecuted for the alleged injuries by either the lessor or the lessee separately. No testimony, so far as we have been able to discover, was admitted in favor of either plaintiff in this action that would not have been admissible in actions prosecuted separately, save and except as to the value of the property destroyed. In one case it would be the value of the property destroyed as owned and leased by the plaintiff Barngrover, and in the other for the value of the use, or the value of the lease owned and possessed by the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff. Here, again, no question of prejudice is presented, as far as any suggestion that the damages awarded the plaintiff Barngrover are excessive.

[2] Under such circumstances, section 4½ of article 6 of the state Constitution directly applies, wherein it provides that no error of the trial court in its rulings as to any matter of pleading or error of procedure shall be sufficient to authorize a court to set aside a judgment, or grant a new trial, unless the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The application of this section of the Constitution to the case at bar is also enforced by the fact that no verdict or judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff against the defendant, nor upon the cross-complaint filed by the defendant against the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff. The case in its ultimate analysis and final result is as though a separate action were begun and prosecuted by the plaintiff Barngrover against the defendant. For this reason, any ruling by this court upon the correctness or incorrectness of the order of the trial court in overruling the defendant's demurrer would be mere dicta as not being necessary to a decision of this cause.

[3, 4] Though not in the order of presentation, it is here pertinent to consider the form and effect of the verdict which appellant alleges to be insufficient. In the case of Benson v. S. P. Co., 177 Cal. 777, 171 P. 948, the Supreme Court had before it a verdict which failed to mention all the parties. It was there held:

"A verdict against one of two defendants is not a verdict in favor of the codefendant as to whom it is silent, but as to the latter it is merely a failure of the jury to find upon the issues."

To the same effect is Benjamin v. Stewart, 61 Cal. 605. In the case of Asebez v. Bliss, 178 Cal. 137, 172 P. 595, it was held that under the provisions of section 619, Code of Civil Procedure, where a party failed to ask that the defect in the verdict be remedied, if any defect existed, the defect was waived, citing Van Damme v. McGilvray Stone Co., 22 Cal. App. 191, 133 P. 995. This case is also cited in Benson v. S. P. Co., supra. See, also, as to failure of a party to call the attention of the trial court to alleged defects and a failure so to do, City of Guthrie v. Thistle, 5 Okl. 517, 49 P. 1003, Vater v. Lewis, 36 Ind. 288, 10 Am. Rep. 29, and Bradley v. Bradley, 45 Ind. 67, 72. Again, the appeal which the appellant has taken in this case, as appears from the notice of appeal which we have hereinbefore set forth, raises only the question of the sufficiency of the judgment in favor of the plaintiff Barngrover, and being so limited, we have only to inquire as to whether the verdict is sufficient in form and substance to support the judgment for said plaintiff. That the other plaintiffs were not awarded judgment and that the defendant was not awarded any judgment upon its cross-complaint are not questions tendered to us upon this appeal. We have only to do with the judgment in favor of the plaintiff Barngrover, and, whatever the defects of the verdict may be as to the other parties litigant, it is certainly sufficient to show that the jury intended to and did bring in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff Barngrover and against the appellant for a sum of money covering the damages sustained by her, nowhere alleged or claimed by appellant to be excessive, and, therefore, not prejudicial to the appellant in any particular, if the testimony authorized a finding of the jury that the fire was caused by the defendant's negligence. A mistrial as to the other parties litigant does not compel a new trial as to the plaintiff Barngrover. Under the California cases which we have cited, if the appellant desired that the jury should also find a verdict upon the losses and damages alleged to have been inflicted and sustained by the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff, it should have made a timely request to the trial court. Likewise, if it desired a verdict or finding of the jury upon its cross-complaint against the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff, it should have made appropriate application to the trial court, but, not having done so and only appealing from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff Barngrover, we must hold that it is too late to raise the question here.

As stated in the beginning, an analysis of the proceedings in this cause show that in the final conclusion thereof it must be held simply an action begun and prosecuted by the plaintiff Barngrover to judgment, to the same effect as though the plaintiffs Harker & Hoff had not been named in the complaint, and to the same effect as though the appellant had not in the action filed and presented a cross-complaint against the plaintiffs Harker &

Hoff. For the purposes of this appeal we think all of these matters may be considered as surplusage and the rights of the plaintiff Barngrover and the responsibility of the defendant corporation considered as though Harker & Hoff had never been joined as plaintiffs and as though the defendant corporation had never filed a cross-complaint against them.

[5-7] This brings us to a consideration of the merits of the controversy between the plaintiff Barngrover and the defendant. First, does the evidence sustain the verdict? Before answering this question by setting out the substance of the testimony, we may preliminarily state that the buildings, in which the machinery referred to was situated, were built upon a high hill or mountain, which apparently was devoid of moisture near the surface; that in the installation and operation of the appliances necessary and requisite for furnishing power to the electrical motors operating the compressor plant, ground wires were necessary to be installed to afford protection against a possible overload of the defendant's wires; that in order to install the proper ground wires it was necessary to have the wires in some manner connected with moisture. In the instant case, it appears that the defendant installed its ground wire by placing a metal plate some two or three feet in the earth and connecting its ground wire therewith. The testimony is to the effect that the main power line maintained and operated by the defendant carried a voltage of 11,000 volts; that before this electric energy was delivered to the plaintiffs it was reduced to 220 volts. It also appears that it was necessary in preventing the 11,000 voltage carried by the main line from being communicated to the secondary line, or the line carrying only the lesser voltage, fuses were installed; that for these fuses to operate efficiently they should not be of greater strength than would admit of their blowing out before the high voltage on the primary line could be communicated to the secondary line intended only for a lesser voltage. The complaint sets forth that the fuses installed by the defendant were of too great strength to afford protection, or, to express it in other words and to convey the meaning, that they were of sufficient strength to admit of the carrying of a dangerous voltage from the main line to the secondary line, or from the main side of the transformers to the secondary side of the transformers. The transformers installed by the appellant were situated upon a platform slightly elevated and arranged in pairs of three on each side of the platform. All of these transformers were not used at one time, however. The plaintiffs operated a 30 horse power motor in the operation of the compressor plant. It is the contention of the plaintiffs that the starters would have to be switched over to what is called a running position before the compressor plant could be brought up to an 85 or 95 pound pressure; that it was necessary to maintain a pressure of this degree before the drills used in mining could be operated. It is the contention of the plaintiff that the fire started in the equipment owned and exclusively under the control of the defendant, by reason of defects therein, as alleged in the complaint, or, in other words, by reason of the installation of defective equipment. In the early stages of the fire there was only one witness, a gentleman by the name of E. S. Smith. This witness stated that he was going up to the compressor plant on the morning of the fire; that the first thing he saw was a cloud of smoke arising approximately 200 feet in the air; that when he got to the compressor plant house the roof of the compressor plant was on fire; that the transformers were afire and the electric pole was afire at the top; that he left his truck a short distance from the compressor house and went around the house into the tool shed; that he did not remember whether he first went into the tool shed or the compressor house, but that he thought he went into the tool shed first; that the walls of the compressor house were not on fire; that there was no fire inside; that the switchboard in the compressor house was not on fire; that the transformers were on fire and the electric pole was on fire; the electric pole was approximately 10 feet from the transformers. It may be here stated that the testimony shows the installation of fuses on the electric pole. The witness stated that he knew the whereabouts of the switchboard in the compressor plant; that he remained in the compressor house just a short time; that the partitions between the blacksmith shop and the compressor house were not on fire; that water was running through the compressor; that the compressor was not running at the time the witness entered the compressor house; that the transformers all lay on the ground after the fire; that they dropped away from the compressor house.

The plaintiffs' contention that the fire did not start in the compressor plant is supported by the cross-examination of one of the defendant's witnesses. We quote the following:

"Q. So in order for the fire to have started because of the handle of the switch being in the starting position, that switchboard must, necessarily, have been on fire before the transformer. Is that right? A. Not necessarily. The insulation on the wires could be on fire before the switchboard took fire.

"Q. It would be seen very readily? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Then repeating my question again: For the fire to have started in the equipment of the plaintiffs, it would necessarily—this board from the insulation from above this starter would have been on fire before the transformers were on fire? A. Yes.

"Q. If the fire did not start there, then the fire did not start in the plaintiff's equipment. Is that right? A. Yes, sir."

The testimony of the witness Smith just set forth was to the effect that the switchboard was not on fire, and that the switchboard in the compressor plant was not on fire, and that the transformers were at the time he entered the compressor plant buildings. There is also testimony to the effect that the transformers contained insulation and oil which would cause a very black smoke, as testified to by the witness Smith. There was also testimony to the effect that a short circuit tends to show either improper equipment of the defendant's appliances or of improper equipment of the plant. One of the witnesses, after testifying as to the possibility of an explosion in the transformers, testified as follows:

"Q. Isn't it a fact within your experience that transformers sometimes burn up without any defect occurring or without any short circuit occurring in the consumer's equipment? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How can those fires be caused? A. The insulation of the transformer itself burning.

"Q. Couldn't that have happened in this case? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And allow 11,000 volts to go into the starter? A. No; because I didn't see any evidence in there that it did get over there at all.

"Q. But it could do so? A. It could do it, sure.

"Q. You testified that the primary and secondary coils in one transformer were together? A. Yes, sir."

This testimony shows that one of the transformers was on fire on the inside; also, as we have said, it accounts for the color of the smoke being black. The burning oil in the transformers would necessarily give that color to the smoke.

Evidence was introduced by the plaintiff showing that on the morning of the fire and for a short time preceding, the compressor plant was running in a normal manner, that the drill being operated required an air pressure of at least 75 pounds. There was also testimony that the equipment of the compressor plant had been inspected a short time previous to the fire, just how long does not exactly appear, but the fact that the equipment was operating normally preceding the fire and that the plaintiffs' equipment was not on fire at the time the building was entered by the witness Smith, at which time the compressors were on fire and, also, a certain pole on which the wires were brought down to the compressor plant was on fire lays a sufficient basis for the jury to conclude that the fire was not the result of any defect in the electrical equipment of the compressor plant, even though the inspection referred to was made some little time preceding the fire. There is also testimony to the effect that approximately a month preceding the fire additional ground wires were put in connecting the compressor plant with water pipes, and that this connecting with moisture constituted a proper equipment or installation of ground wires. It may be here stated that all the testimony shows that a ground wire, to be efficient and to afford protection, must be connected with moisture. The testimony shows that the strength of the fuses employed were 30 amperes; that some time previous to the fire the fuses had been blowing out and the heavier or 30 ampere fuses were installed. There was also testimony to the effect that where 30 ampere coils or fuses were in use, the circuit breakers would be normally set at 30 amperes. The circuit breaker is supposed to kick out when an overload occurs, or a defect occurs in the system. It would appear from the testimony and the jury would be justified in concluding that if the fuses or coils installed are too large, the circuit breaker would kick out before the fuses would give way, or blow up, as the expression is used in the testimony.

The witness in general charge of the defendant's substation on the morning of the fire testified as follows: That after he saw the fire up on the hill, he went to the substation; that it was about 8:02 or 8:03 a. m., in the morning, by the substation clock; that when he got to the door, a bell was ringing, which indicated that the breaker was out; that the bell rings when the breaker is out of order, attracting the attention of the operator; that the operator was in the back yard; when he came in he said it was the magnesite circuit (meaning the circuit connected with the plaintiffs' plant). The witness further stated that the breaker kicked out twice, the operator stating that the first time it kicked out was 8:01; that the breaker was pushed back in place; that a short circuit would cause the breaker to kick out; that the closing of the breakers would shift the 11,000 volts back on the line.

This witness did not know at what amperage the breaker was set; that they had arranged for setting breakers; that there was a special man from the department who set the breakers; that they had what was considered about 30 ampere current coils; that if a transformer was overloaded and the fuses did not blow out, the current would go back to the substation and usually kick out the circuit breaker; that when the breaker kicked out, there would be no alternating current on the line. The witness stated that he was pretty sure the breaker kicked out that morning, as he saw a record of the station afterwards; that he did not remember whether the breakers opened more than once. There was testimony that 30 ampere fuses would carry approximately 400 horse power; that 50 horse power was all that plaintiffs used at any one time. There was further testimony that 30 ampere fuses would support between 430 and 440 horse power; that the compressor plant was equipped with two motors totaling 80 horse power. This testimony was presented to the jury in order that it might conclude that the fuses were from 2 to 2½ times as strong as necessary. There was testimony to the effect that the maximum starting horse power used was from 125 to 150, and, that if both motors were used the demand would be from 185 to 210 horse power. From this it is argued, and it appears that the jury would be entitled to conclude, that if the fuses installed and maintained by the defendant between their main power lines and their transformers had been of the correct amperage, the minute a short circuit occurred they would have blown out and the full power of 11,000 volts carried on the defendant's main lines would have been completely cut off, but that, instead of the fuses blowing out, the breakers set at 30 amperes in the substation were caused to kick out and that if the fuses had not been so great they would have blown out before the kick occurred, that the overload would not have been carried, in which case there would have been no fire.

[8] As heretofore stated, the first occurred on the 29th day of July. The scene of the plant was on the top of a mountain. That whether a plate ground was used or a driven ground in order to operate properly, moisture must be reached. There was also testimony that defendant's equipment was of such a character that a ground was necessary for the proper protection of their own and plaintiffs' plants. In this connection the witness Hamilton, heretofore referred to as having general charge of the defendant's substation, testified: The character of the soil on top of the hill was a rocky formation, dry on the surface; that he did not know how far down it was dry; that he dug down two feet; that it was dry for the two feet; that so far as he knew it was dry all the way down; that he stopped digging at two feet because the handle of the shovel he was using was burned and it was not easy to dig; that when it got down two feet he found the wire imbedded in the earth; a No. 2-0 strand wire; that he did not take up the anchor plate; that he did not know that there was a plate there; that, as a matter of fact, he did not know how the transformers were grounded. There was further testimony that it was a serpentine green rock, the same alternating to a brown color on the top of the hill; that there were but a few inches of soil on the top; that it was absolutely barren rock; that the plate to which the ground wire was attached was down approximately two or three feet. This evidence as to the character and condition of the soil on the top of the hill where the plant was situated on the 29th day of July was competent for the jury to consider in determining whether the defendant's plant was or was not properly grounded. In this connection we may revert to the argument of the appellant that the grounding system must have been efficient, else a fire would have occurred previously.

[9] This overlooks the well-known climatic conditions prevailing in the state of California and in the section of the country where the premises under consideration are located. The 29th day of July is ordinarily a considerable period of time after the dry season has begun in California, and we think from the facts stated that the jury had a right to consider that the location of the plant upon a high and dry hill would affect the character of the grounding system, and that as the moisture disappeared with the advance of the dry season, a grounding system depending upon a plate close to the surface, which would operate efficiently during the rainy season, would cease to be efficient when the soil became barren of moisture and the efficiency would lessen substantially with the advance of the dry season. These are commonplace matters which do not need to be told a jury and are elements entering into and to be taken consideration of in the installation of an effective grounding system. The evidence, so far as any exploration appears to have been made of the place where the defendant's grounding system was installed, is to the effect that there was no moisture, and we think justified the jury in coming to the conclusion that the plate to which the grounding wire was attached rested in dry ground.

There was also testimony to the effect that the motors in the plaintiffs' plant were not burned by electricity, but were burned by external heat. There was also testimony to the effect that by reason of the equipment maintained by the defendant the 11,000 volts were sent directly into the plaintiffs' starter; that this resulted from the primary and secondary wires coming into contact. There was also evidence to the effect that the wires from the transformers, which entered the plaintiffs' buildings, entered through the side, and that portion of the building which was first described as being on fire by the witness Smith, when he first reached the plant when it was on fire. There was also testimony to the effect that the starting switch or handle was in starting position in the plaintiffs' plant after the fire, and also that the springs which would hold the switch out of position were burned or weakened by the fire so as to permit the switch or handle to come back into a starting position. There was also considerable testimony introduced that the plate used by the defendant in its grounding system would be efficient if imbedded in moisture, but we have had our attention called to no evidence indicating the condition of the ground where the plate was imbedded, other than that to which we have referred, which we think justified the conclusion of the jury that the grounding system maintained by the defendant was not efficient and did not afford proper protection. A great deal of technical testimony was introduced which we have not set out, from which the jury might have reached a different conclusion, unless very carefully scrutinized, for, as it appears to us, it was based largely upon assumptions such as if the ground plate were in moisture it would afford the necessary protection; if the coils were of the proper size they would blow out; if the kick out occurred in the substation the current would be off the line and remain off unless the breakers were closed. There appears to be some difference as to the time when the fire occurred, the witness who first visited the plant and discovered the fire testified that he started toward the plant at about 20 minutes to 8 and consumed some minutes before he came in sight thereof. On the part of the defendant the testimony as to the time is that of the person in general charge, who was told the time of the first kick out in the breaker by the operator in charge, and that at the time of the second kick out, which was 2 or 3 minutes after 8, the plant was on fire.

A great deal of testimony was introduced concerning the condition of wires, evidence that the plant burned down and theories advanced based thereon, but it would serve no useful purpose to recount the same here, as it does not affect materially the testimony which we have hereinbefore referred to, and, while no actual witness saw the beginning of the fire, we think the testimony taken as a whole justified the jury in coming to the conclusion that the fire resulted from the improper equipment, as alleged in plaintiffs' complaint. The evidence in this case is really not conflicting in the true sense of the word; the opinions, theories, and conclusions drawn from the evidence show only a difference. There is no conflict as to the size of the fuses, no dispute as to the 11,000 volts carried, as to what would happen if the 11,000 volts on the main line were transmitted to the secondary wires, no controversy as to ground wires being necessary to afford protection, although there was testimony that the plant would operate without ground wires. The testimony introduced by the defendant concerning fuses, coils, and ground wires in the plaintiffs' plant was shown to be of no value when the witnesses testified to the condition of certain wires found after the fire started, that he did not know whether they were the wires used by the plaintiff, which testimony was followed by a witness on the part of the plaintiff, who testified that the defective coils and wires used by the plaintiff were discarded coils and wires and were not used at the time of the fire.

From the foregoing we must hold that the contention of the appellant that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict on the question of negligence of installation, maintenance, and operation of the defendant's plant is not well taken.

[10] It is finally contended that the court erred in the giving of certain instructions to the jury, and that this error on the part of the court resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The instruction, given by the court at the request of the plaintiff, first called to our attention is as follows:

"You are not bound to decide in conformity with the testimony of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in your minds against a less number or against a presumption or inference which you may draw from the evidence satisfying your minds."

Subdivision 2 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits juries to be instructed on all proper occasions that they are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in their minds against a less number, or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying their minds. The change in the instruction from the wording of the Code is in that following the word "presumption." In the instruction this language is used, "or inference which you may draw from the evidence satisfying your minds," instead of "or other evidence satisfying your minds." In support of this contention that the wording of the instruction as given to the jury is erroneous, appellant relies upon the case of Everett v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 45 Cal. App. 332, 187 P. 996, where it is said:

"Unless these presumptions were controverted by other evidence, the jury was bound to find according to the presumption. Section 1691, Code Civ. Proc. If controverted by other evidence the presumption itself is to be treated as evidence conflicting with the other evidence offered. Otherwise there would be no need of using the word 'other' in the Code section cited. Thus, the presumption of innocence of crime will support a verdict of acquittal in a criminal case though no evidence is offered to controvert the case of the prosecution. The rule differs as to an inference which can be drawn only from facts proved. Where evidence is offered controverting the inference which might ordinarily be drawn under the circumstances, the jury is bound to find according to the controverting evidence. The distinction is found in the Code. Section 1958 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines an inference as 'a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, without an express direction of law to that effect.' Section 1959 defines a presumption as 'a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts.'"

[11] Assuming, without deciding, that the foregoing is a correct statement of the law relative to the use of the word "inference" in the instruction, and that the court should have followed the wording of the statute, instead of using the language which it did, it does not follow that any prejudice has resulted in this case. The evidence in this case is such, as we have hereinbefore stated, is controverting not in its character so much as in the inferences which may be drawn therefrom. This case presents a situation where the question is as to the inferences which may be drawn from the facts found, or from the facts testified to, rather than a determination of what set of facts is established by conflicting evidence. Under such circumstances, it does not appear that any reversible error can result or has resulted from the giving of the instruction, as worded by the court. It would be well, however, for trial courts in giving instructions provided for by section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure to follow exactly the language of the Code.

[12] Appellant also argues that the court erred in giving to the jury the following instruction:

"If you find from the evidence adduced in this case that the fire started at a point in the electrical equipment owned and controlled by the defendant, outside of the plant owned by the plaintiff Blanche L. A. Barngrover, and that the equipment in said plant owned by said plaintiff was in good condition at the time of said fire, a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the defendant is shown and the burden of proving absence of negligence is cast upon the defendant."

The point is raised against this instruction that it applies the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" in a case where the appellant relies upon specific acts of alleged negligence, and not upon an allegation of general negligence or of negligence alleged in general language. The respondent supports this instruction by citing the case of Silva v. Northern California Power Company, 32 Cal. App. 139, 162 P. 412. In that case the allegations in the complaint were to the effect that the wires, appliances, and apparatus referred to, connecting with and extending from the power line to the place where the wires entered the tankhouse belonging to the plaintiff and used by the defendant in supplying power prior to the fire referred to, defendant "negligently and carelessly allowed the same to be and remain, and by reason of said negligence they became, and were, in such condition as to admit a dangerous amount of voltage of electricity to said wires in said tankhouse and thereby to render them dangerous and unsafe with respect to causing fire to said tankhouse."

In considering the question of negligence as to the installation and maintenance of the apparatus just referred to and of the office of insulators, the court said:

"The office intended to be performed by these circuit breakers and insulators on defendant's wires at the point of connection with the wires going inside, was to control the current or prevent its doing damage in passing into the building. It further appeared that after the wires fell to the ground the ends were brought together and caused a spark showing that the current was then passing from the transformer over these wires. It appeared that the wires were insulated where they passed through the walls of the building and were at the time in place, and, so far as known, in good condition. And the evidence was that the fire did not start elsewhere than on the outside and at the point of connection as already explained. The evidence was that the fire could not have been caused by any agency other than the electricity passing from the transformer. And as the fire started at a point on the wires admittedly owned by and in the control of defendant, we think sufficient was shown to make a prima facie case of negligence on the part of defendant and to cast upon defendant the burden of excusing its negligence."

In the case at bar the evidence is direct that there was no fire where the wires entered the side of the building covering the plaintiffs' compressor plant; it is also direct that there was no fire in the motors or in any part of the apparatus controlling the operation of the compressor plant or mechanism; that the fire then existing in the compressor plant was burning the paper roof of the building, and that the wires which went into the side of the building did not communicate or were not in contact with the paper roof that was on fire. The testimony is also direct that at the time of the arrival of the first witness, who reached the scene of the fire, that the transformers were on fire; that the smoke was mounting therefrom approximately 200 feet into the air; that the pole from which the wires were brought down to the compressor plant was on fire, and, also, there is sufficient in the testimony to justify the conclusion that the burning oil in one of the transformers was sufficient to spread the fire to the plaintiffs' buildings. In the case at bar it is not admitted by the defendant that the fire started in the transformers or on the pole down which the wires were brought and on which fuses were installed by the defendant, but the evidence which we have referred to amply justifies the conclusion that the fire started in that portion of the plant under the exclusive control and superintendence of the defendant, nor is there any evidence in the record indicating that the fire was caused by any other agency than the electricity carried on the defendant's power lines and conducted through the transformers. In the case of Marovich v. Central Cal. Traction Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 595, the question of whether an instruction applying the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should be given, we find the following:

"The general rule is that 'where the plaintiff in his complaint gives the explanation of the cause of the accident, that is to say, where the plaintiff instead of relying upon a general allegation of negligence, sets out specifically the negligent acts or omissions complained of, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply.'" Connor v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 189 Cal. 1, 207 P. 378, 22 A. L. R. 1462.

And, continuing:

"The foregoing statement of the rule in the cited case was followed by the qualification that 'where the explanation leaves it doubtful as to whether or not the ultimate cause of the injury is the negligence of the party charged, it is proper to instruct the jury as to the res ipsa loquitur doctrine.' Regardless of the effect of the foregoing qualification upon the general rule, it is clear that where the plaintiff in his complaint makes no general allegation of negligence, or no allegation of general negligence, instructions applying the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should not be given. This must be so for the reason that in such case the plaintiff can recover only upon proof of one or more of the specific acts or omissions alleged in his complaint," citing a number of cases.

[13] Had the case been submitted to the jury simply with the general instruction, which we have above quoted, we think reversible error would have been committed. Immediately following the giving of this general instruction, the court proceeded to carefully and specifically point out to the jury that no verdict could be rendered against the defendant unless they found the defendant guilty of the particular acts of negligence alleged, as shown by the following instructions, which we quote:

"Instruction No. 8. You are instructed that the mere fact of the accident and consequent injury to the property of plaintiffs raises no presumption of negligence, but the plaintiffs must show by independent evidence that the accident was due to want of ordinary care on the part of the defendant and without any contributory negligence on the part of plaintiffs or their employees.

"Instruction No. 12. The plaintiffs have charged that the defendant was guilty of negligence in three respects, namely:

"(1) In installing transformers improperly and insufficiently grounded.

"(2) In installing fuses between its transformers and power lines of such size and strength as to afford inadequate or no protection to plaintiffs' property against excessive voltage.

"(3) In holding closed the breakers at its substation for several minutes after they had kicked out.

"All of these charges of negligence defendant has denied.

"I instruct you that a recovery may be had by plaintiffs, if at all, only on the charges of negligence pleaded. No recovery can be had on acts of negligence, or upon negligent conduct not alleged, as a defendant in such an action is entitled to know by the pleadings just what he is called upon to meet." Brown v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 14 Cal. App. 651, 655 (114 P. 54, 74).

"Instruction No. 13. If you find it to be a fact that plaintiffs' property was set on fire by means of electric current on the 29th day of July, 1923, it does not necessarily follow therefrom that your verdict should be in favor of plaintiffs and against defendant. You should not return your verdict against the defendant in this case unless you find by a preponderance of evidence the defendant to have been guilty of some negligence charged in the complaint which contributed directly and proximately to the burning of this property. The defendant is not liable if the plaintiffs' property was set on fire by an electric current without negligence on the part of defendant.

"Instruction No. 14. In proving the cause of action set out in the complaint, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show, first, that said buildings were set on fire by means of an electric current; second, that the fire thus caused was the result of one or more of the acts or omission to act on the part of the defendant as set out in plaintiffs' complaint; and, third, that this act or acts or the omission to act by the defendant was negligence on its part.

"Instruction No. 15. If all of the evidence, fairly considered, leaves this matter in doubt, so that you are left to guess or conjecture as to whether the fire was caused by an act of negligence on the part of the defendant as set out in the complaint or in some other way, there can be no recovery by the plaintiffs and your verdict on the complaint of plaintiff and the answer of defendant must be for the defendant." Clifford v. M., St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 105 Wis. 618, 81 N. W. 143.

"Instruction No. 16. I instruct you that you will have no right to find a verdict against defendant and in favor of plaintiffs solely because the defendant was furnishing electricity to plaintiffs to be used by plaintiffs in their compressor house, even though you find as a fact that the fire that destroyed said buildings was caused by electricity. Defendant in supplying electricity to plaintiffs' buildings did not guarantee that said buildings would not be set on fire from the electricity."

In view of the rule that instructions must be considered as a whole and that the error in the instruction is cured if, when the whole charge is taken together, the law is accurately stated, we are of the opinion that the jury in this case was not misled by the giving of the instruction complained of. By reason of the fact that the jury was instructed over and over again that the specific negligence alleged must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence before the plaintiff was entitled to recover, the general language in the instruction alleged to be erroneous was limited and applied to instructions pertaining to the installation and maintenance of the particular portion or part of the equipment alleged in the complaint, as constituting the gravamen of the charge of negligence. It does not appear from the record that general negligence on the part of the defendant was urged before the jury either in the introduction of testimony or in the argument of counsel, and, therefore, the instructions which we have quoted, and especially No. 13, limits the general instruction alleged to be error to the specific acts alleged in the complaint, from which we conclude that no prejudice resulted to the defendant, even though measured by the rule announced in Marovich v. Central Cal. Traction Company, supra, the instruction should not have been given. Error is also alleged in relation to a few of the other instructions given by the trial court which we think untenable and not of sufficient importance to require a further discussion in this opinion.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

LONDON GUARANTEE & ACCIDENT CO., Limited, v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 5532.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 26, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court July 25, 1927.

1. Admiralty ⚓—Vessel need not be in commercial service to warrant admiralty jurisdiction.

It is not essential that, for the purpose of admiralty jurisdiction, a vessel should be in commercial service.

2. Admiralty ⚓—As regards admiralty jurisdiction, fishing vessels capable of going out to deep waters of Pacific with equipment for 500-mile cruise held "vessels," within statutory definition (U. S. Comp. St. § 3).

Fishing vessels maintained for the accommodation of the public seeking recreation in deep sea fishing and capable of going out to deep waters of Pacific ocean with equipment for a cruise of as much as 500 miles held "vessels," within meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 3 (U. S. Comp. St. § 3), as regards admiralty jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Vessel.]

3. Admiralty ⚓—Fishing vessels conveying passengers between anchorage and deep sea fishing banks held engaged in "commerce" and subject to admiralty jurisdiction.

Fishing vessels, maintained for accommodation of public seeking recreation in deep sea fishing and actually conveying passengers to and fro between anchorage and deep sea fishing banks, held engaged in "commerce" on navigable waters, subject to admiralty jurisdiction, since transportation of persons, even on short excursions, is commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Commerce.]

4. Admiralty §13—"Maritime contract" for personal service must relate to reparation or betterment of vessel in aid of navigation or employment directly connected with navigation.

A "maritime contract" for personal service must relate to reparation or betterment of vessel in aid of navigation, or to employment directly connected with the propulsion, or navigation of a ship capable of use in commerce or tending to enable ship to discharge its maritime duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Maritime Contract.]

5. Admiralty §21—Death of spare skipper while attempting to preserve employer's navigable vessel from marine peril held "maritime accident," subject to admiralty jurisdiction.

Where person employed as a spare skipper, and who was generally employed aboard ship in operative navigation, was drowned in attempting to preserve employer's navigable vessel from a marine peril while in navigable waters, the casualty was a maritime accident occurring in the performance of duty over which admiralty had exclusive jurisdiction.

6. Admiralty §20, 21—Rights and liabilities for maritime injury or death through maritime casualty are dependent on maritime law.

When one employed in work at sea under maritime contract directly affecting navigation or commerce receives a maritime injury or suffers death through maritime casualty, ensuing rights and liabilities are dependent, under Constitution, on general principles of maritime law.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Sarah Jane Brooke and another, claimants, for the death of James Uttley Brooke, a minor son, opposed by the Morris Pleasure Fishing, Inc., employer, and the London Guarantee & Accident Company, Limited, insurance carrier. To review an award by the Industrial Accident Commission, the insurance carrier brings certiorari. Award annulled.

E. R. Young, H. R. Kelly, and E. L. Williams, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Commission.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This is a proceeding in certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission for payment of $150 for the burial expenses of John James Uttley Brooke, an unmarried minor 19 years of age, who was drowned in Santa Monica Bay on April 8, 1926, while in the service of the Morris Pleasure Fishing, Inc. The petitioner was the insurance carrier of the employer; and the question presented is whether the case must be relegated to the exclusive cognizance of a court of admiralty, or may be brought within the purview of the Workmen's Compensation Act of this state (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended).

On a petition to the Industrial Accident Commission filed by the mother and the stepfather of the deceased, hearings were had on June 10 and September 13, 1926, before the commission, which on October 6th made its findings that Brooke, while employed as a spare skipper, met his death by drowning in an accident occurring in the course of and arising out of his employment; that he was not at the time engaged in maritime employment; and that both he and his employer were subject to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. The commission further found that neither the mother nor the stepfather of the deceased was dependent upon him; and, accordingly, the award was limited to the reasonable expenses of burial, which were fixed at $150. Application for a rehearing was filed by the employer and its insurance carrier, which was, however, denied.

The evidence taken at the hearings showed the facts to be as follows: The Morris Pleasure Fishing, Inc., is a corporation which carries on the business of maintaining and operating from Santa Monica Bay a small fleet of fishing vessels, for the accommodation of the public seeking recreation in deep sea fishing. In the fishing season its practice has been to have excursions daily from Santa Monica Bay to the ocean fishing grounds, a distance of three to five miles, with fixed charges both for half-day and full-day trips. For use in this business the company has several vessels, ranging from four to fourteen tons registry, equipped with gas engines and capable of cruising a distance of 500 miles. The business has been confined entirely to the maintenance of these pleasure fishing vessels and the transportation of patrons to and fro by water, except that excursionists have also been supplied with bait. As one of the necessary incidents of its business the company employs seamen to navigate its vessels; and before and at the time of the accident which occasioned Brooke's death, he was in the company's employ as an apprentice navigator and seaman. In that capacity he made daily trips as required with the company's vessels, and at times substituted as "spare skipper" for one of the regular skippers. On April 8, 1926, one of the company's fishing vessels called "W. K.," of about seven tons registry, was moored, with no one aboard, in Santa Monica Bay about three-quarters of a mile to a mile from the pier. A storm having arisen, the vessel broke from her moorings early in the afternoon, and began to drift toward the shore. In an effort to save the vessel from destruction, Captain Morris, as Brooke's superior officer, had Brooke and another employee, named Gregory, put off from the pier with the captain himself, in a boat about eighteen feet long, with the purpose in mind of boarding the W. K. and returning her to her anchorage. But as they neared the drifting vessel, their boat was capsized by a heavy wave and all three were drowned.

The petitioner here contends that Brooke's employer was engaged exclusively in a maritime industry; that its contract with Brooke was for maritime services alone; and that Brooke's life having been lost in such service in navigable waters of the United States, the rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined by the general maritime law, and hence there was no jurisdiction in the Industrial Accident Commission to conduct any hearing or to grant any award.

The commission does not dispute the fact that the casualty occurred in navigable waters; but it contends that as the business of the employer was a pleasure business, there was not a maritime contract touching rights and duties pertaining to commerce or navigation in a way to invoke the rules of maritime law and exclude the case from juridical competency of the state tribunals, and that the matter is one merely of local concern. In this connection it is argued that federal jurisdiction is not broadly conferred by reason of the navigability of waters, but is limited to a regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, in consequence of which admiralty takes cognizance only of those maritime controversies which have a commercial nexus, and that the exercise of its powers is conditioned upon the synthesis of navigable ships, engagement in commerce, and the law of the sea.

[1] It is not essential, however, that for the purpose of admiralty jurisdiction a vessel should be in commercial service. In Reppert v. Robinson, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,703, it was said by Judge Taney:

"The manner in which the vessel is actually employed cannot affect the question of jurisdiction. It depends upon her character; * * * and it did not rest with the owner to confer or take away the admiralty jurisdiction, at his pleasure, by the mode or trade in which he afterwards employed her."

And in The General Cass, 1 Brown Adm. 334, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,307, the rule is thus stated:

"The true criterion by which to determine whether any water craft, or vessel, is subject to admiralty jurisdiction, is the business or employment for which it is intended, or is susceptible of being used, or in which it is actually engaged, rather than its size, form, capacity, or means of propulsion."

[2, 3] The fishing vessels of the Morris Pleasure Fishing, Inc., were capable of going out to deep waters of the Pacific ocean, and their equipment was sufficient for a cruise of as much as 500 miles on occasions. They were therefore, vessels within the definition given in section 3 of the United States Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. St. § 3), which reads:

"The word 'vessel' includes every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water."

This statutory definition is construed in Charles Barnes Co. v. One Dredge Boat (D. C.) 169 F. 895, 896, to include "a navigable structure capable of being used for transportation whether intended to be or actually used for that purpose." In the case of these fishing boats, there was in the season a regular service, and each voyage had a place of origin and a place of destination, though the termini may not have been geographically constant. Since the ships did actually convey passengers to and fro between the anchorage in Santa Monica Bay and the deep sea fishing banks, they were not only capable of use, but were in real use, as vehicles of nautical transportation; and while performing their service to patrons they were in fact engaged in commerce upon navigable waters. For the transportation of persons, even on short excursions, is commerce. The City of Pittsburgh (D. C.) 45 F. 699, 702; County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 695, 702, 26 L. Ed. 238.

It is true, the vessels did not engage in the carriage of goods or passengers between fixed ports, but their use for purposes of recreation, sport, or pleasure did not detract from the character of the craft. In the case of The W. F. Brown (D. C.) 46 F. 290, a former ferry boat, propelling a floating circus from place to place on the Mississippi river for exhibition purposes, was held to be in maritime service. In like manner, a dismantled steamboat converted into a pleasure barge, without independent means of propulsion, and used, when towed, for picnic and excursion parties, was pronounced in The City of Pittsburgh (D. C.) 45 F. 699, to be a vessel subject to the maritime law. Again, in Reinhardt v. Newport Flying Service Corporation, 232 N. Y. 115, 133 N. E. 371, 18 A. L. R. 1324, a hydroaeroplane, though not utilized commercially, was declared, when in the water, as a seaplane, to be stamped by location and function as a means of water transportation, notwithstanding that while in the air it would possess no such character. And in The Public Bath No. 13 (D. C.) 61 F. 692, where a structure built on floats not permanently moored, and used as a transportable municipal bathhouse, had been swept adrift in a storm, Judge Brown, who was exceptionally well versed in admiralty law, in awarding salvage for the rescue of the contrivance, declared that use in trade and commerce was not essential to salvage, and remarked that if that were material there could be no salvage allowed upon yachts and other water craft for pleasure, which, he said, would be absurd.

It is thus not the use to which a craft is being put in navigable waters that fixes its status, but the use to which it is capable of being put; and there can be no doubt that the vessels owned by Brooke's employer were of a character and in a service rendering them amenable to the processes of admiralty.

In the present case, there is no charge of any delictual omission or commission. The death was due to a casualty occurring in navigable waters, and the accident, which was due to a peril of the sea, was one arising out of and in the course of Brooke's employment. The award of the commission is thus not predicated on any tort, but is based on the theory that the indemnification provided by the local statute became a legal incident of the relationship created by the contract of employment. The real test of jurisdiction, however, must be found in the nature of the employment itself. If the deceased met his death while performing maritime service under a maritime contract, then, according to the rule promulgated by the United States Supreme Court, neither his contract nor the rights and liabilities growing out of it could be affected by any local statute of indemnification for injury or death. To ascertain the character of the contract we must look to its subject-matter and determine the nature and class of service which Brooke was required to render. State Ind. Com. v. Nordenholt Corp., 259 U. S. 263, 42 S. Ct. 473, 66 L. Ed. 933, 25 A. L. R. 1013.

[4, 5] A maritime contract for personal service must relate to the reparation or betterment of a vessel in aid of navigation, or to an employment directly connected with the propulsion or navigation of a ship capable of use in commerce, or tending to enable the ship to discharge its maritime duty. Gurney v. Crockett, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,874. The services which Brooke was employed to perform were not those of a landsman. He was a spare skipper and was generally employed aboard ship in operative navigation, his labor contributing to the accomplishment of the ship's voyage. A vessel and its crew are considered a unit, whatever may be the stations of the respective members; and under Brooke's general employment he was to be classed as a seaman or mariner. On the fatal occasion he was called by his employer to assist in a maritime exigency, and to lend aid in preserving one of his employer's navigable vessels from a marine peril. He thus went to his death in navigable waters in the performance of a service peculiarly maritime, and the casualty was incontestably a maritime accident occurring in the performance of duty. The finding of the commission that Brooke was not at the time engaged in maritime employment is contrary to the evidence; and we thus face the question whether, under the facts of the case, the local law of California may have accorded to it primacy over the law of the sea.

[6] The rule by which we must be guided has been enunciated by the United States Supreme Court in Southern Pacific Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 37 S. Ct. 524, 61 L. Ed. 1086, L. R. A. 1918C, 451, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900. Though in that case there was vigorous dissent on the part of some members of the court, and the decision has not, in general, had a hospitable reception, yet, through reiteration in subsequent cases, the principle of the Jensen Case has been so firmly established that it must serve as the norm for resolving jurisdictional conflicts between courts of admiralty and tribunals deriving their powers under the compensation laws of the states. Under the doctrine promulgated by the august court whose arbitrament is final, when one employed in work at sea under a maritime contract directly affecting navigation or commerce receives a maritime injury, or suffers death through a maritime casualty, the ensuing rights and liabilities are dependent, under the Constitution, upon the general principles of maritime law, operating uniformly throughout the broad expanse of the nation by virtue of the grant to the federal courts of "exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." Hence, any local legislation which would be destructive of that uniformity is, to the extent of the conflict, unconstitutional, since it must tend to hamper and impede freedom of navigation between the states and with foreign countries. The central thought of the decision is thus expressed:

"And plainly, we think, no such legislation is valid if it contravenes the essential purpose expressed by an act of Congress or works material prejudice to the characteristic features of the general maritime law or interferes with the proper harmony and uniformity of that law in its international and interstate relations. * * * If New York can subject foreign ships coming into her ports to such obligations as those imposed by her compensation statute, other states may do likewise. The necessary consequence would be destruction of the very uniformity in respect to maritime matters which the Constitution was designed to establish; and freedom of navigation between the states and with foreign countries would be seriously hampered and impeded."

So in the Jensen Case the New York Compensation Act (Consol. Laws, c. 67) was held unavailable to the dependents of an employee killed by injury received aboard ship while performing the work of a stevedore in unloading cargo. The same rule was applied in Chelentis v. Luckenbach Steamship Co., 247 U. S. 372, 38 S. Ct. 501, 62 L. Ed. 1171, where a fireman on board a steamship, while performing duties on deck during a storm, received injuries necessitating amputation of his leg. Again, in Robins Drydock & Repair Co. v. Dahl, 266 U. S. 449, 45 S. Ct. 157, 69 L. Ed. 372, a workman making repairs for the betterment of a vessel lying in navigable waters was precipitated into the hold by the breaking of a defective scaffold, and brought suit in the state court of New York to recover damages for injuries sustained by reason of his employer's negligence. It was held that since the work directly related to navigation and commerce, the rights and liabilities of the parties depended on general maritime law, and could not be altered or impaired by a state statute prescribing the duty of the employer relative to providing scaffolding such as to give proper protection to workmen. Accordingly an instruction that the jury might consider the local law in determining whether or not the employer was negligent was pronounced erroneous, and the judgment in favor of the employee was reversed.

In Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, 253 U. S. 149, 40 S. Ct. 438, 64 L. Ed. 834, 11 A. L. R. 1145, a bargeman, while doing work of a maritime nature, fell into the Hudson river and was drowned. This case presented for consideration the amendment of October 6, 1917, to the Judicial Code (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 991, 1233), attempting to make compensation statutes applicable to maritime injuries. But the court, holding such attempt to be ineffectual and reaffirming the rule of the Jensen Case as to the dominance of the general maritime law, said (p. 164 [40 S. Ct. 441]):

"Considering the fundamental purpose in view and the definite end for which such rules were accepted, we must conclude that in their characteristic features and essential international and interstate relations, the latter may not be repealed, amended or changed except by legislation which embodies both the will and deliberate judgment of Congress. The subject was intrusted to it to be dealt with according to its discretion—not for delegation to others. To say that because Congress could have enacted a compensation act applicable to maritime injuries, it could authorize the states to do so as they might desire, is false reasoning. Moreover, such an authorization would inevitably destroy the harmony and uniformity which the Constitution not only contemplated but actually established—it would defeat the very purpose of the grant."

The rules so declared applies not only to cases of personal injury suffered in a maritime employment directly affecting navigation or commerce, but also to cases arising out of a breach of a maritime contract. In Union Fish Co. v. Erickson, 248 U. S. 308, 39 S. Ct. 112, 63 L. Ed. 261, there was an oral contract made with Erickson in California to proceed to Alaska, and after arrival there to serve for a year as master of a vessel at an agreed compensation. He was discharged, however, before the expiration of the term of his employment, and thereupon filed in admiralty a libel in rem for damages for breach of his contract. One of the defenses was that the contract, being oral, was invalid, under section 1624 of the Civil Code of California, the state in which the contract was made. In this case, as in the Jensen Case, the employment was held to have been in contemplation of the recognized principles of admiralty law, which no state law can be permitted to infringe or defeat. Accordingly, the defense based on the statute of frauds of California was declared to be untenable.

The rationale of these decisions being founded on the necessity of preserving unimpaired the harmony and uniformity of the characteristic features of maritime law, some mitigation of the rigor of the rule has been deemed permissible, in a limited class of cases, where the matter is one of mere local concern and the enforcement of the local enactments will work no material prejudice to maritime rules in general. A broad line of demarcation is thus drawn between rights and liabilities existing under employments having direct relation to navigation and commerce, and those arising under contracts of a nonmaritime character. In Grant Smith-Porter Co. v. Rohde, 257 U. S. 469, 42 S. Ct. 157, 66 L. Ed. 321, 25 A. L. R. 1008, a carpenter was injured while engaged in work on an uncompleted vessel lying in navigable waters; and both employer and employee having treated the Compensation Law of Oregon as governing their relations, and the contract being nonmaritime, it was deemed that no prejudice to the general maritime law would result by letting the rights and liabilities of the parties be adjudged in accordance with the local statute.

Not only is there this well-defined distinction between cases arising under maritime contracts and those in which the contracts are nonmaritime, but even where the contracts are maritime, cases in which injuries occur on land may have different treatment from those in which the injuries are suffered at sea. Thus in State Ind. Com. v. Nordenholt Corp., 259 U. S. 263, 42 S. Ct. 473, 66 L. Ed. 933, 25 A. L. R. 1013, a longshoreman was mortally injured while working on the deck and aiding in the discharge of a cargo of cement from a vessel lying alongside. The court there said (page 272 [42 S. Ct. 474]):

"When an employee, working on board a vessel in navigable waters, sustains personal injuries, there, and seeks damages from the employer, the applicable legal principles are very different from those which would control if he had been injured on land while unloading the vessel. In the former situation the liability of employer must be determined under the maritime law; in the latter, no general maritime rule prescribes the liability, and the local law has always been applied. The liability of the employer for damages on account of injuries received on shipboard by an employee under a maritime contract is matter within the admiralty jurisdiction; but not so when the accident occurs on land."

After reviewing the Jensen Case and others already cited, the court in conclusion ex pressed itself as follows (page 276 [42 S. Ct. 475]):

"The stevedore's contract of employment did not contemplate any dominant federal rule concerning the master's liability for personal injuries received on land. In Jensen's Case, rights and liabilities were definitely fixed by maritime rules, whose uniformity was essential. With these the local law came into conflict. Here no such antagonism exists. There is no pertinent federal statute; and application of the local law will not work material prejudice to any characteristic feature of the general maritime law."

Another instance of the application of the local law is afforded when death occurs in consequence of a maritime tort committed within the territorial limits of a state where a statute affords a right of action for damages. A case of this character is exemplified in Western Fuel Co. v. Garcia, 257 U. S. 233, 42 S. Ct. 89, 66 L. Ed. 210. In that case a stevedore was killed while at work in the hold of a vessel discharging cargo in San Francisco Bay. A suit in personam, based on allegations of negligence, was instituted in admiralty by the heirs of the deceased; but, the suit having been begun more than one year after the accident, the question arose whether the state statute of limitations could be interposed as a bar. It was held that, inasmuch as the alleged tort had been committed on navigable waters, admiralty could entertain jurisdiction, but nevertheless the right of action for a wrong committed within the territorial limits of the state was so far local in character as to be brought within the purview of the state statute without prejudice to the rule of uniformity, and hence the right to maintain the suit was subject to the bar of the local statute. The view that, in a suit in admiralty to recover damages for death due to a maritime tort committed on navigable waters of a state, the rules of maritime law may be supplemented by the local death statute is reaffirmed in Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co. v. Kierejewski, 261 U. S. 479, 43 S. Ct. 418, 67 L. Ed. 756.

Still another case of local concern is exhibited in Miller's Indemnity Underwriters v. Braud, 270 U. S. 59, 46 S. Ct. 194, 70 L. Ed. 470, in which, under the name of Miller's Indemnity Underwriters v. Boudreaux, there had previously been a decision by the Supreme Court of Texas, reported in 261 S. W. 137. There a diver employed by a shipbuilding company submerged himself from a small floating barge or pontoon at anchor in a navigable river, 35 feet from the shore, to saw off timbers of an abandoned set of ways once used for launching ships and which had become an obstruction to navigation. The Texas court states that he was not engaged in work upon or connected with the barge, and could not be considered a seaman. While he was at work on the submarine timbers, his air supply was in some way cut off and he was suffocated. Though the death occurred through a maritime tort, yet the work of this diver was not so directly connected with navigation and commerce as to fall exclusively within maritime jurisdiction, and since the state statute of Texas prescribed the only remedy that could be had, it was held that its exclusive feature superseded the right to resort to admiralty which would otherwise have existed.

An instructive contrast with this decision is furnished by a case possessing certain distinguishing features, which had previously arisen in New York—De Gaetano v. Merritt & Chapman Dock & Wrecking Co., 203 App. Div. 259, 196 N. Y. S. 573. In this case the diver was one of the regular crew of a vessel engaged at the time in laying a submarine cable, and was at work on the sea floor in the very service in which the vessel was being employed. He was, therefore, a seaman attached to the vessel, and engaged at work intimately connected with its operation. Upon that ground the New York court held that the state Compensation Law was not applicable.

The law as proclaimed in the cases cited has been applied, with regard paid to its distinctions, by the appellate courts of this state in several cases which have engaged their attention. The first case decided by our Supreme Court after the decision in the Jensen Case was Tallac Co. v. Pillsbury, 176 Cal. 236, 168 P. 17, where a mate, hired in San Francisco for a voyage to British Columbia, was injured on board the plaintiff's steamer while loading cargo in the port of New Westminster. Upon the return of the ship to San Francisco, the Industrial Accident Commission, on application of the injured seaman, made an award in his favor under the Workmen's Compensation Act, but upon certiorari the award was annulled upon the ground that the commission was wholly without jurisdiction.

In Sudden & Christensen v. Industrial Acc. Com., 182 Cal. 437, 188 P. 803, the court was called upon to review an award of death benefits to the dependents of a stevedore, killed while working on the deck of a lumber vessel discharging cargo at her dock. Here again the court, following the Jensen Case, declared that the award of the commission was an invasion of the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty.

In Alaska Packers Ass'n v. Industrial Acc. Com., 191 Cal. 763, 218 P. 561, a seaman was injured while working as a rigger on board a bark at her dock in the Oakland estuary, where she was being made ready for her next voyage. Quoting pertinent portions of the opinions in State Ind. Com. v. Nordenholt Corp., 259 U. S. 263, 42 S. Ct. 473, 66 L. Ed. 933, 25 A. L. R. 1013, and Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co. v. Kierejewski, 261 U. S. 479, 43 S. Ct. 418, 67 L. Ed. 756, the court denied jurisdiction to the Industrial Accident Commission and annulled its award.

A like conclusion was reached in Zurich General Accident & L. I. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 191 Cal. 770, 218 P. 563, which in its circumstances is not dissimilar to the case at bar. There an award had been made to the dependents of a deck hand employed on a dredger at Newport harbor, who was drowned in attempting to go ashore in a motor launch upon an errand connected with his employment. After a survey of the authorities, the court held that the employment was so directly connected with navigation and commerce as to require the application of the rule of the Jensen Case in the interest of uniformity, and again the award of the commission was annulled.

James Rolph Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 192 Cal. 398, 220 P. 669 (affirmed 264 U. S. 219, 44 S. Ct. 302, 68 L. Ed. 646), is another case in which the death of a stevedore occurred by reason of injuries received while working on a vessel discharging cargo at her dock. The court emphasized the distinction made in State Ind. Com. v. Nordenholt Corporation between work aboard ship and work ashore, and held that the commission acted in excess of its jurisdiction, and hence its award could not be sustained.

In Beyerle v. Industrial Acc. Com. (Cal. App.) 241 P. 894, injury was suffered in the waters of San Diego Bay by an employee of a lumber company, whose employment required him to aid not only in the operation of a motor boat used in towing, but also in work on rafts of logs lying at anchor. In this case the Industrial Accident Commission had denied compensation, and upon certiorari the order was affirmed upon the ground that the injury having occurred in navigable waters and in a maritime employment, the case was within the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty.

Thus whenever a case has been presented in which injury has been accidentally suffered in navigable waters or on board a completed ship by one engaged in maritime employment directly affecting navigation or commerce, our appellate courts have consistently maintained the exclusiveness of the admiralty jurisdiction. On the other hand, certain cases have arisen in which the circumstances have been such as to bring the cases within an exception to the general rule. In Los Angeles Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 57 Cal. App. 352, 207 P. 416, a marine machinist was injured while installing machinery in a vessel which had been launched, but was still under construction. The vessel being uncompleted, the employment was held to be of a nonmaritime character, as in Grant Smith-Porter Ship Co. v. Rohde, 257 U. S. 469, 42 S. Ct. 157, 66 L. Ed. 321, 25 A. L. R.

1008; and the injury was therefore adjudged compensable under the state law.

In City of Oakland v. Industrial Acc. Com., 198 Cal. 273, 244 P. 353, a civil service employee of the municipality was serving as a deck hand on a scow used as a tender to a municipal dredger operated by the city in deepening the channel of the Oakland estuary. The scow was tied to the wharf at the time, waiting to be towed to some point in the channel, and the employee was injured while cutting wood for a boiler on board. The Supreme Court held that there was nothing in the facts of this case indicating that either the general employment in the civil service, or the activities of the employee at the time of the injury had any direct relation to navigation or commerce; and hence the matter was one of mere local concern, wherein the maritime rules might properly yield to state regulations. The award of the commission was therefore affirmed.

The latest case from our Supreme Court is Alaska Packers Ass'n v. Industrial Acc. Com., 253 P. 926. In this case, an employee named Peterson, who had entered into a contract in San Francisco to render services as a seaman and fisherman for the fishing season in Alaska, was injured at the close of the season in work incident to the storage of fishing boats for the winter. He and a fellow employee had temporarily left their boat at anchor near the beach, and on returning found that because of the low tide the boat had become stranded in the mud and sand, though for the most part still in water. Standing on the bank, Peterson attempted with the aid of others to lift the boat sufficiently to float it, but in doing so suffered injury to his back and hip. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation; and in considering the question of jurisdiction the Supreme Court, while pronouncing the contract to be of a maritime nature, laid stress on the fact that the injury occurred while Peterson was standing on the beach, and took the view that his activity in pushing and lifting the boat was essentially land labor, and not maritime in character. The case was therefore placed in the category of those involving injuries sustained on land by dock and port employees working under maritime contracts, which may be governed by the local law without prejudice to the characteristic features of admiralty.

It can hardly be said that the body of judicial decisions is sufficiently diversified as yet to permit any broad generalization definitive of the class called cases of local concern. The law of the subject is still in a formative stage, and intervening between the dominant maritime class and the territorial class is a twilight zone which will doubtless narrow, little by little, as the marginal lines become more sharply delimited under the process of judicial paring. At present we may, however, make certain general deductions from the decisions of authoritative rank.

When a maritime injury occurs in navigable waters to one engaged in distinctive maritime work under a contract directly affecting navigation or commerce, the necessity of preserving the freedom of interstate and international navigation and commerce commits the case to the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty. Under such circumstances the maritime jurisdiction is established by the conjunction of the locus of the accident and the nature of the employment. When, however, such concurrence is wanting, the rule of uniformity may be relaxed, where the circumstances permit relief to be advantageously afforded by the local law without conflict with the tribunals of the sea. And particularly is this course allowable when the work, though performed on navigable waters, is under a nonmaritime contract; and likewise when, though the employment is maritime, the locus of the accident is so related to the territorial jurisdiction that antagonism will not be bred by according paramountcy to the local law rather than to the general maritime law as administered in admiralty.

In the present case there does exist the concurrence of maritime locus and maritime work under a maritime contract, which, in the interest of uniformity, renders the state Compensation Act inoperative. Brooke, under his employment as a seaman attached to navigable vessels, lost his life in navigable waters while engaged in an effort to save one of his employer's vessels from a peril of the sea. His contract of employment as a mariner contemplated submission to the dominant federal rule in all such perilous undertakings; and whenever under such circumstances casualties of that character occur, the attendant rights and liabilities are to be determined by the same general law, whether the place of the fatality is in the Bay of Santa Monica, or of San Francisco, or New York, or in the Gulf of Mexico, or in midocean. The controlling principle is aptly illustrated in the rather unique case of Reinhardt v. Newport Flying Service Corp., 232 N. Y. 115, 133 N. E. 371, 18 A. L. R. 1324. There a hydroaeroplane, while moored in the navigable waters of Gravesend Bay, dragged its anchor, and was drifting toward the beach in danger of being wrecked. The plaintiff, who was employed in the care and management of the craft, waded into the water to turn the plane about, and was injured by the propeller. Compensation was awarded him by the New York Industrial Accident Commission; but the Court of Appeals, holding both the employment and the injury to be maritime, asserted the supremacy of the general maritime law, and, reversing the award, dismissed the claim.

A similar disposition must be made of the case at bar, which, possessing no affinity with cases of mere local concern, must take its place in the realm over which admiralty reigns supreme.

The award is annulled.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

83 Cal. App. 449

PAINE v. KESZTHELYI. (Civ. 4341.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District.
Division 2, California. May 27, 1927.

1. Patents ☞216—Evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff was entitled to possession of workshop equipment under contract.

Evidence held to sustain trial court's finding that defendant, owner of patent rights, was entitled to possession of workshop and equipment under contract to provide him therewith as against claim, under transfer by the other party to the contract, of one who advanced money to that party for the purposes of the contract.

2. Replevin ☞8(4)—Plaintiff cannot have judgment in action for claim and delivery, unless entitled to immediate and exclusive possession of property.

Plaintiff is not entitled to judgment in action of claim and delivery, where defendant was entitled to the possession of the property at the time the action was commenced, since plaintiff, to recover, must have the right to immediate and exclusive possession.

3. Pleading ☞36(3)—In action of claim and delivery, court may find value of property as alleged and admitted in pleadings, notwithstanding testimony of lesser value.

Court may find value of property taken and sold, in action of claim and delivery, under the allegation of value in the verified complaint which was expressly admitted by the answer, notwithstanding testimony of lesser value introduced by the plaintiff without objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by Mary R. Paine against A. S. Keszthelyi. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

David Welts and C. C. Trott, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred Mansur, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, P. J. This is an action in claim and delivery. Judgment went for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

[1] It is contended, first, that there was no evidence to support the finding of the trial court that respondent was entitled to the possession of the property in controversy in the action, and that appellant was neither the owner nor entitled to possession. There was evidence of the following facts, which was practically undisputed: Respondent was the owner of patent rights protecting the manufacture and sale of certain sound-producing instruments. He entered into a written agreement with one Henriette Coon, which, construing it in a general way according to its context, was executed for the purpose of promoting the manufacture and sale of the instruments covered by the patents. Certain parts of the document, which was very lengthy, have a bearing upon the question of the title to the personalty which is involved in this action. For the purpose of carrying out the design of the parties to the instrument, it provided that, within a specified time, Miss Coon would form a corporation in accordance with the terms of a certain schedule attached to it; that upon the assigning of the agreement she would "place at the disposal" of respondent a certain sum of money and, "within a reasonable time thereafter the remainder of the money to be used by [respondent] as required for the purposes and to properly equip and maintain a workshop * * * with such machinery and material as may be required by [him] for his use in developing said instruments"; that Miss Coon "shall be given an option conferring exclusive rights to manufacture or sale of each and every of the said instruments developed and completed by" respondent; that, upon the failure of either of the parties to comply with the terms of the contract "in any respect," the other might give 60 days' notice of intention to cancel it, and that, at the expiration of such period after such notice, a cancellation should result unless the breach was remedied in the interim; that upon cancellation "all rights and titles of whatsoever nature in and to said patents and inventions, all models, samples and instruments made and developed by and under the supervision of" respondent, with exceptions as to articles already on the market, "shall belong and become the sole property of" respondent; and that "all rights and obligations of" Miss Coon "in this agreement shall inure to, and evolve upon, the proposed corporation when formed and organized by" her, "and this agreement will be ratified by said corporation by appropriate action spread upon its minutes." The "schedule" attached to the agreement, and, providing a scheme for the organization of the corporation referred to in it, recited that a part of its purposes should be to secure from respondent the rights "to manufacture or sell license rights on all instruments as perfected under patent"; that the corporation was to be capitalized at a certain figure; that 30 per cent. of the stock was to be issued to respondent, a certain amount was "to be sold for the first financial requirements of the company," and a part of this amount was to be sold "for emergency fund and expenses"; and that it was "proposed to develop workable, commercial models of the five instruments, and manufacture the instruments, and sell on royalty basis or lease rights to use."

Miss Coon took subscriptions from various persons for the purpose of carrying out the arrangement she had made with respondent, and assembled a considerable amount of money by that method. To some of these "investors," as they termed themselves on the witness stand when testifying in the trial court, although perhaps not to all of them, she issued receipts to the effect that the money paid in was "an investment in company now forming to develop instruments under patents of A. S. Keszthelyi, for which [the investor] is to receive stock when and as issued in accordance with incorporation proceedings." One investor testified that when she paid her money to Miss Coon the latter said she was "to receive stock in the corporation" for it, and others testified to the same effect. With the money thus acquired Miss Coon purchased and delivered to respondent a long list of machinery and tools, although payment for the highest priced articles thus purchased was made in installments under conditional sales contracts. Some of the tools were purchased for cash, under selection by respondent; Miss Coon paying the money. The machinery and tools thus bought were acquired in compliance with the provision of the contract between Miss Coon and respondent whereby she agreed to place money at his disposal "as required for the purposes of and to properly equip and maintain a workshop." They together constituted the property which was the subject of the present action. Collectively they will be referred to hereafter as the workshop equipment.

The conditional sales contracts covering the larger part of the workshop equipment, in value, were executed by Miss Coon as the purchaser. Appellant Mary R. Paine was the heaviest "investor" among those from whom Miss Coon procured subscriptions. Before the latter got from Mrs. Paine the money subscribed by her, she was having difficulty in making payments on the sales contracts, and she told Mrs. Paine that, if the latter would subscribe the amounts necessary to complete the payments she, Miss Coon, according to her testimony, "would have a bill of sale made in her name to protect her interest in it." Mrs. Paine then paid the necessary money, and, when the payments on the conditional sales contracts were completed, Miss Coon requested the sellers to issue receipted invoices covering the property purchased to Mrs. Paine, and this was done. Miss Coon, also, executed a bill of sale to Mrs. Paine for the entire workshop equipment.

The corporation referred to in the agreement between Miss Coon and respondent was organized, with a board of directors and officers, although not within the time specified in the agreement. The board held several meetings, and at one of them a resolution was adopted to the effect that the corporation accepted an assignment of all Miss Coon's right, title, and interest in the contract between her and respondent. The resolution and a copy of the contract were engrossed upon the minutes of the corporation. One of the directors who voted for the resolution was Mrs. Paine. Another was Miss Coon.

[2] Respondent contends that he was the owner of the workshop equipment, and the trial court so found, but it is not necessary for us to pass upon the point. If respondent was entitled to the possession of the property at the time the action was commenced, appellant could not have obtained judgment against him. To succeed in an action for the recovery of specific personal property a plaintiff must have the right to the immediate and exclusive possession of it. 5 Cal. Jur. 160, § 4. A mere perusal of the statement of facts which we have made demonstrates that respondent had the right to the possession of the workshop equipment at the time of its delivery to him. Nor can we perceive that the right was ever lost. As touching this particular question appellant relies upon a circumstance to which we have not before adverted, but have reserved for mention in this place. At a certain stage in the relations between respondent, Miss Coon, and the corporation which was organized pursuant to the contract between the two natural persons, respondent in writing notified Miss Coon and the board of directors of the corporation that he elected to cancel the contract. The notice pointed out certain particulars in which respondent asserted that the terms of the contract had not been fulfilled, and demanded that Miss Coon and the corporation take certain designated steps in order to repair the alleged breach. Toward the close of the paper respondent stated that, "unless all of the above stated demands and requirements as set forth in said contract are fulfilled, this will be your notice that sixty days from this date and thereafter said contract will be canceled and declared void." And immediately following this statement he said: "This is intended as a notice of cancellation as provided in said contract." Appellant takes the position that at the end of the 60 days the contract was canceled and set at naught, and that she at once became entitled to the possession of the workshop equipment. The corporation is not a party to the action, and we therefore do not decide whether appellant was the owner of the property involved in it. Laying aside that question, and also the question whether by their contract Miss Coon and respondent intended that either of them by this mere ipse dixit should have the right to terminate the obligations imposed by the instrument, we think there is at least one answer to the proposition advanced by appellant. There was no evidence that Miss Coon and the corporation did not comply with the demands made by respondent in his notice of cancellation, and we think it was incumbent upon appellant to make proof to that effect as one of the links in the chain of evidence showing her right to the possession of the property. If the demands were complied with, the notice of cancellation at once fell to the ground, and respondent's right to the possession of the workshop equipment was not interrupted or terminated. The trial court found that the contract was canceled, but we think the issue upon which the finding was based is immaterial, having decided that the evidence supports the finding that respondent was entitled to possession.

[3] Upon the commencement of the action, under appropriate proceedings, the sheriff took the workshop equipment into his possession, and delivered it to appellant, who sold it. The judgment in favor of defendant was for the value of the property. It is insisted by appellant that the finding of the trial court as to value is not supported by the evidence. Appellant herself alleged in her complaint that the value was as found by the court, and the allegation was expressly admitted by the answer. However, appellant at the trial, without objection by respondent, introduced evidence showing a lesser value than that established by the pleadings and found by the court. Appellant contends that the court must have found in accordance with this evidence, notwithstanding the state of the pleadings. The point is not tenable. Certainly, if the evidence could be considered at all, the most that can be said is that there was a conflict between the sworn allegation of the complaint, for the pleading was verified, and the testimony, and the court could have found either way. Upon the question whether the evidence could be considered at all, see Welch v. Alcott, 185 Cal. 731, 198 P. 626; Romer v. Wehmer, 61 Cal. App. 411, 214 P. 993.

The question as to what rights the corporation, or the "investors," may have in the fruits of the judgment in respondent's favor is not, of course, involved in the present action.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; MURPHEY, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 434

SCHWARTZ v. HANDLEY. (Civ. 5328.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 27, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 26, 1927.

1. Partnership ⚡49—Excluding evidence of partnership between owner and agent holding power of attorney to sell held error, in action for commission by broker, whom agent employed.

In action by broker to recover commission for sale of leasehold interest in apartment house under written contract of employment with owner's agent, to whom owner executed power of attorney to sell without expressly authorizing employment of subagent, excluding evidence as to partnership between owner and agent held error.

2. Partnership ⚡40—Holder of power of attorney to sell apartment house leasehold interest, if owner's partner, had authority to employ broker to effect sale.

Person holding written power of attorney to sell leasehold interest in apartment house from owner, if owner's partner, had authority to enter into binding contract as principal for employment of agent to make sale, notwithstanding power of attorney did not expressly authorize subagent's employment.

3. Brokers ⚡63(1)—Broker held entitled to commission on sale of leasehold, on refusal of principal to procure assignment of lease preventing sale's consummation.

Broker held entitled to commission on sale of leasehold to purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase, who had necessary funds to complete purchase, on principal's refusal to procure assignment of lease preventing consummation of sale.

4. Brokers ⚡54—Broker is entitled to commission on finding one ready, able, and willing to purchase on terms prescribed.

Broker, properly authorized in writing to make sale for commission, becomes entitled to commission when he has found and brought to his principal party ready, able, and willing to buy on terms prescribed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Hyman Schwartz against Elizabeth J. Handley, as administratrix of the estate of Lorin A. Handley, deceased, and individually. Judgment for defendant, individually and as administratrix, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. M. Swartz, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Newby & Palmer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action to recover services rendered in the sale of a certain apartment house.

The cause is based upon a rejected claim presented against the estate of Lorin A.

Handley, deceased. The complaint recites that on or about the 12th day of August, 1920, Handley, by his duly authorized agent, entered into an agreement in writing with the plaintiff, by the terms of which he was to receive any and all amounts over and above the sum of $15,000 for the sale of the leasehold interest and furnishings of the Murray Apartments on Orange street, in the city of Los Angeles; that on or about the 7th day of September following, he procured a purchaser ready, willing, and able to pay the sum of $19,000 for the same, and defendant agreed to sell the apartments to such purchaser for such sum and entered into a written contract for such sale; that the purchaser deposited the sum of $1,000 as part payment thereof; that subsequently, on October 4, 1920, defendant, the administratrix of the estate of Handley, notified plaintiff in writing that she refused to carry out and comply with the terms of the agreement; that by reason of such refusal on her part there is now due, owing and unpaid to plaintiff the sum of $4,000, less the sum of $1,000 deposit which plaintiff had retained. Then follows allegations of the presentation to, and the rejection by, the administratrix of the claim. Defendant, answering, denied the allegations of the complaint, and as a special defense by way of counterclaim averred that plaintiff had willfully and fraudulently appropriated the deposit of $1,000, and she prayed that it be adjudged that the sum was fraudulently converted, and that execution against the person of the plaintiff issue for the collection of any judgment that might be recovered. The trial court found, in substance, that all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were untrue. As conclusions of law it was adjudged that plaintiff take nothing by his action and that defendant recover the sum of $1,000, which sum was found to have been wrongfully appropriated by plaintiff. It was further adjudged that plaintiff was guilty of fraud in incurring the obligation on which the judgment upon defendants' counterclaim was based, and it was then further adjudged that execution issue against the person of the plaintiff for the collection of the judgment as well as against his property.

Plaintiff here claims that there has been a complete miscarriage of justice in depriving him of the compensation to which he is rightfully entitled, and in destroying his reputation without any evidence of bad faith on his part in any particular. Considering the nature of the judgment, we feel that the facts should be fully set forth in the opinion. During his lifetime, and up to the date of his death, which occurred on September 20, Lorin A. Handley held the title of the lease and furnishings of the Murray Apartments in the city of Los Angeles. He resided in San Francisco, and did not personally attend to its management. One Elizabeth Lamb was in charge of the property, and she also managed another apartment house which was likewise held by Handley. She collected the rents of the Murray Apartments and deposited the same in the bank under the name of "The Murray Apartments, Elizabeth Lamb," and she had power to and did check against this fund. What interest, if any, she had in the apartment, or the extent thereof, does not appear from the record, as the trial court rejected evidence upon this subject. That she had some interest is apparent from a reading of the entire record. Plaintiff resided at the said apartment house and was the friend and private counsel of both Handley and Mrs. Lamb. On July 28, 1920, Handley executed and delivered his power of attorney to Mrs. Lamb. It read as follows:

"San Francisco, July 28th, 1920. I hereby appoint Elizabeth Lamb, 1935 West Sixth street, Los Angeles, California, my attorney with full power to sell the Murray Apartments, all my interest therein, and with full power to sign all contracts conveying all rights possessed by me in the lease of said Murray Apartments. [Signed] Lorin A. Handley."

Upon receiving this power of attorney, Mrs. Lamb employed plaintiff to dispose of the lease of the apartments, and executed and delivered to him the following writing:

"Wilshire 3927; 50051. Mrs. Lamb, Proprietress. The Stratford Apartments, Sixth street at Burlington avenue. Los Angeles, Cal. Aug. 12, 1920. Mr. Hyman Schwartz: For your services, etc., in handling the sale and transfer of the lease on the Murray Apartments and for obtaining and handling the transactions with purchasers therefor, it is agreed that you shall have and receive any sum over and above the $15,000.00. It being the intention that the price over $15,000.00 received for the sale and transfer of said lease shall be retained by you, or paid to you for your services, etc. [Signed] Lorin A. Handley by Elizabeth Lamb."

Concerning this authorization, Mrs. Lamb testified that she had advised Handley that she had given it to plaintiff, and that he had agreed to the arrangement. After receiving this authorization, plaintiff procured the services of the Century Investment Company on a commission of 5 per cent. to assist him in procuring a purchaser. Thereafter, on September 7, 1920, plaintiff and the investment company obtained a written proposal of purchase from a Miss A. H. Martin, for the sum of $19,000, and a deposit of $1,000 was made by her as part payment of the purchase price, which deposit was paid to Mrs. Lamb. The amount of the deposit was thereafter paid by Mrs. Lamb to plaintiff on account of his services. On September 14, 1920, Mrs. Lamb executed and delivered to plaintiff the following writing:

"Mr. Hyman Schwartz: I herewith hand you assignment and transfer of lease covering the Murray Apartments, dated April 1, 1920, which you are to deliver to Miss A. H. Martin upon the compliance by Miss Martin of the terms and conditions of a certain offer and agreement to purchase the said lease executed by Miss Martin on the 7th day of September, 1920, and accepted of even date herewith. You are authorized to make the arrangements and do the things necessary to complete the deal. You may deduct your fees and other sums agreed upon for the consummation of the transaction and pay over the balance to me. [Signed] Lorin A. Handley, by Elizabeth Lamb."

Negotiations relative to the sale lasted up to the time of the death of Handley. Subsequent to the time the deposit was made, the Guaranty Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles, as executors of the estate of one John Murray, the owner in fee of the apartments, upon being requested to consent to the assignment of the lease, addressed a letter to Miss Martin, advising her that upon the payment to it of the sum of $1,500 as additional security for the lease it would consent to a transfer of the leased property. Miss Martin objected to this demand, claiming it was no part of her agreement of purchase, and she insisted that the parties of whom she was purchasing settle this difficulty. Plaintiff and Mrs. Lamb thereupon attempted to adjust the matter between themselves. Before the arrangements were concluded, Handley was killed. After his death, plaintiff, together with Mrs. Lamb and Miss Martin, continued to negotiate the assignment of the lease and to have defendant herein, the widow of Handley, settle the same. Plaintiff visited her and fully explained the transaction. He informed her that her deceased husband and Mrs. Lamb were indebted to him in a considerable sum for legal services, but that he, Mrs. Lamb, and Mr. Handley had agreed that this sum was to be waived in consideration of his receiving the amount of his fee as provided for in the written agreement for the sale of the apartments. He further advised her that the sale was a very profitable one, as it had been acquired for the sum of $7,000 a short time previously. On September 28, 1920, defendant wrote to plaintiff, advising him that the sale was satisfactory to her, and suggested that he close the same. On October 4 following she again wrote plaintiff, informing him that she withdrew her approval of the sale, and revoked any and all authority of plaintiff in the premises, and she demanded that plaintiff turn the matter over to her attorney. Acting upon this communication, plaintiff visited her representative and fully advised him of the transaction, and presented to him the various documents. He explained to him how the amount of his fees had been merged into his agreement with Handley and Mrs. Lamb. He suggested that Miss Martin was bound under her agreement of purchase. Defendants' attorney was of a like opinion, and he requested that plaintiff turn over to the estate the amount Mrs. Lamb had paid him on account of his services, and that he would close the transaction and then pay plaintiff the $4,000 due him. Plaintiff consented to this plan. He drew his check for the amount and delivered it to defendants' representative. Thereafter, on October 7, 1920, the defendant Mrs. Handley addressed a letter to Miss Martin, advising her of her appointment as administratrix of her husband's estate and informing her that she was ready to receive the amount due on account of the sale of the apartments in conformity with the terms of her contract, and that she desired to close the transaction. Miss Martin, who in the meantime had gone into possession of the premises, visited the bank to secure the assignment of the lease. Upon learning that the transfer had not been made and probably would not, she immediately notified Mrs. Handley in writing that she rescinded the contract of purchase and demanded the return of her deposit. It appeared in evidence that no steps had been taken by defendant or her attorney in the probate court to approve and dispose of the transaction. Thereafter plaintiff received a letter from defendants' counsel which indicated that he had doubts concerning the enforcement of the contract of sale with Miss Martin, as it was subject to the procurement of an assignment of the lease, which had not been obtained. Plaintiff, concluding that he was being unfairly dealt with, stopped payment of the check he had given to defendants' counsel, and the present suit followed. During the trial, evidence was offered to show the business relations of Mr. Handley and Mrs. Lamb, and also the interest that Mrs. Lamb had in the property. Evidence was also offered to show that Handley had orally ratified the contract of sale. The trial court was of the opinion that plaintiff's case rested entirely upon the power of attorney that Handley had given to Mrs. Lamb, and that it had to stand or fall upon that instrument. It concluded that under this authority Mrs. Lamb had no power to appoint a subagent to sell the property and that evidence of the oral ratification of the contract of sale was inadmissible, as to be effective, it should have been in writing to conform to the statute of frauds. It was of the further opinion that evidence of the relation of the parties or the interest that Mrs. Lamb had in the property was immaterial. Accordingly the evidence of ratification and all evidence going to show that Mrs. Lamb was a partner of Handley in the enterprises was rejected.

[1-4] Conceding the power of attorney was limited to a sale and conveyance by her of the property and that the language of the instrument was not broad enough to permit the employment by her of an agent, and conceding also that the rule of the trial court in rejecting evidence of the oral ratification of the contract to be correct, we are of the opinion that the court erred in rejecting all evidence concerning the relations of the parties and the interest that Mrs. Lamb had in the property. If, as she claimed in her testimony given by deposition, she was a partner of Handley, she had full power to bind him under her written contract with plaintiff. By the written power of attorney given her, Handley had consented to a sale of the premises, and, this being also her desire, she then had power, as a partner, to enter into a binding contract as a principal for the employment of an agent to accomplish this purpose, notwithstanding the power of attorney did not expressly authorize such employment. Plaintiff under this written contract was required to find a purchaser, able, ready, and willing to purchase. That he did so, there is no question. It was in evidence that Miss Martin had the necessary funds in bank to complete the purchase. The contract entered into by her during the lifetime of Handley was a binding one. That it was never consummated was through no fault of plaintiff. It was the duty of the defendant to have procured an assignment of the lease, which she refused to do. Having so refused, and plaintiff having completed his services and earned his commission, he was entitled to the same. A broker, properly authorized in writing to make a sale for a commission, becomes entitled thereto when he had found and brought to his principal a party who is ready, able, and willing to buy on the terms prescribed.

From what we have said, it follows that the action of the trial court in rejecting all evidence as to a partnership existing between the deceased and Mrs. Lamb constituted error justifying a reversal of the judgment. It is so ordered.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

83 Cal. App. 408

BEECHER v. STAFFORD et al. (Civ. 4531.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 26, 1927.

1. Highways §184(2)—Evidence held insufficient to support judgment against automobile owner whose car was forced off road and injured plaintiff.

In personal injury action against owner of automobile which struck plaintiff standing beside road, evidence held insufficient to support judgment for plaintiff, where defendant's car was forced off road by overtaking car.

2. Evidence §586(3, 4)—Negative testimony of occupants of third automobile was not evidence that defendant's car was not struck by overtaking car, as against positive testimony of occupants of defendant's car.

Where there was issue in personal injury action against automobile owner as to whether defendant's car was forced off road by overtaking car, negative testimony of occupants of third automobile was not evidence that overtaking car did not strike defendant's as against positive and direct testimony of occupants of defendant's car.

3. Highways §176—Negligence of motorist unlawfully passing car, if proximately contributing to accident, rendered him solely liable (Motor Vehicle Act, § 122).

Automobile driver attempting to pass car in violation of Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 557, § 122), where highway was not sufficiently clear ahead, was guilty of negligence which if proximately contributing to accident rendered him solely liable for injury caused by overtaken car forced from road.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Walter Beecher against John D. Stafford and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant named appeals. Reversed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward E. Gray, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. [1] This is an action for damages for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the plaintiff against both of the defendants, and, following the verdict, judgment was rendered against the defendants for a substantial sum of money. The defendant Reed made no appearance at the time of the trial, and the judgment against him, except as to the amount, was by default and by direction of the court. The defendant Stafford appeals from the judgment entered against him and bases his attack upon the grounds: First, insufficiency of the evidence to warrant the verdict; and, second, errors at law committed by the trial court. There is no claim that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence in any degree or at all. The circumstances surrounding the transaction are as follows: The plaintiff had parked his car on the roadside on Whittier boulevard near the outskirts of the town of Whittier; the car was standing about 2 feet clear of the traveled highway; plaintiff was standing close to his car and about 1½ feet from the traveled highway with his back to the east, talking to a friend who was standing at the front and west end of his car. An employee of the defendant Stafford, Miller by name, was driving the Stafford car westerly along Whittier boulevard, and with him were two other men who were also employees of Stafford, all returning home after a day's work. The defendant Reed was also driving his car westerly along the same road and immediately before the accident was following the Stafford car. At this same time and immediately prior to the accident, a car driven by a man named Kittle was approaching the scene of the accident from the west, traveling in an easterly direction along the boulevard. In this car with the driver Kittle was his wife and another lady. As these cars approached each other and when within less than 300 feet of each other, the Reed car turned out to pass the Stafford car. Seeing this, Kittle slowed down somewhat and proceeded with his car about two-thirds of its width off the traveled highway. When the three cars were opposite each other and almost abreast the Stafford car suddenly swerved to the right and struck the plaintiff, Beecher, carrying him from 20 to 35 feet, after which he fell to the roadside, the car proceeding for from 20 to 35 feet farther before it was brought to a stop. The evidence is substantially as follows: It is not disputed that either the plaintiff Beecher or the witness Anderson, the man to whom he was talking, saw any of the cars until after Beecher was struck. Anderson testifies that the Stafford car carried Beecher about 35 feet before he was dropped and that it proceeded 35 feet thereafter before it was brought to a stop. Miller, the driver of Stafford's car, testified that he saw Beecher and Anderson near the Beecher car for a considerable distance before the accident, several hundred feet, and that he was driving along the right-hand side of the road and at a rate of speed under 25 miles an hour; that immediately before the accident the Reed car cut in on him and hit his fender and front wheel at a time when he was about 3 feet from the rear of the Beecher car, and it swerved his car off and knocked the steering wheel loose from his hand and he hit Beecher. Browne, an occupant of the Stafford car, testified:

"This Kittle car was coming east, and this Reed car pulled right around in front of us and jammed us—struck the front wheel. When we went back to look there was a mark in the tire. We looked on the Reed car, and the hub cap was bruised, and the first thing I knew was we hit this fellow that was standing beside the car, and he turned right over on the fender and bumped off the side. We carried him 25 or 30 feet, and we traveled 25 or 30 feet after he dropped off."

Olson, another occupant of the Stafford car, testified as follows:

"As we got up there the second car coming behind us, I should judge he was about 3 feet out in the street from our side of the car, and as he got up about the center of us, he turned into an angle of about 20 or 25 degrees and he hit us—he hit our fender with his center of the car, but in the meantime we hit Mr. Beecher. * * * He came up behind, and as he reached the middle of our car he changed his course and cut in on us. He struck our car. The center of his car struck our fender or thereabouts; something like that. As far as I remember it was the center of his car that struck us."

[2] There is no evidence in the record to show that prior to the accident the driver of the Stafford car had any knowledge that Reed was attempting to pass him. There is evidence that no horn was blown nor any warning given. It will be observed that these three witnesses testified positively that the Reed car struck the Stafford car and that its course was deflected toward Beecher. The testimony of the other eyewitnesses, the occupants of the Kittle car, is negative in character, and it is upon this negative evidence that the plaintiff must and does rely to sustain the verdict of the jury. No one of these witnesses contradicts the testimony given by the witnesses in the Stafford car, these witnesses in effect saying that they did not see the Reed car strike the Stafford car. Kittle, the driver says: "I did not look at the cars as they were passing, I was watching my own tracks." Mrs. Kittle testified: "We were all almost abreast when the boy was struck, our car was perhaps a little to the east." And Mrs. Walker, the other occupant of the Kittle car, testified that they were almost abreast and that she did not know whether they struck or not. The above is substantially all the evidence as to the happening of the accident except a diagram drawn by the witness Miller to which we will advert later. Under the circumstances above set out it is not strange that the parties in the Kittle car did not see the cars strike. The driver, as he says, was attending to his own business, and if the body of the Reed car was between the Stafford car and the point of contact it would be practically impossible for the other occupants of the Kittle car to see what occurred as between the Reed and the Stafford cars. In addition to this negative character of evidence the respondent relies upon a diagram made by the driver of the Stafford car. An inspection of this diagram, however, gives little comfort to the plaintiff and in no wise negatives the meeting of the cars. The Reed car as drawn is pointed directly toward the course of the Stafford car. A projection of the lines of the courses of travel of these two cars will bring them together at the very point designated by the occupants of the Stafford car as being the place where the cars actually collided. In this connection it may be said that under all the circumstances of the case as above outlined the happening of the accident as detailed by the appellant's witnesses is both reasonable and probable. Reed was attempting to pass the Stafford car at a time when the Kittle car was approaching from the opposite direction and at a time when the attempt was in direct violation of the statute. Under such circumstances it was natural and probable, if not inevitable, that he should attempt to cut in ahead of the Stafford car to avoid meeting the Reed car. Miller, Browne, and Olson had the opportunity to observe the contact of appellant's car with that of his codefendant Reed. The other witnesses in the Kittle car, in all probability, did not have such opportunity of observation, and in any event if they did, they did not avail themselves of seeing it. At the most, their testimony is of a negative character, and as against the positive, direct, and really uncontradicted testimony of Miller, Browne, and Olson, it is not evidence that Reed's car did not strike that of the appellant. In the case of Gage v. Billing, 12 Cal. App. 691, 108 P. 666, the District Court of Appeals said:

"Although Pohli was a witness and in court, and must have known whether or not defendant told the truth, he did not contradict or deny the defendant's testimony, and we find nothing in his testimony given in support of plaintiff's cause of action that necessarily or at all contradicts the testimony of the defendant as to the terms upon which he was employed or requested to find a purchaser for the property. We are not unmindful of the rule that it is not always necessary that a witness be expressly contradicted to raise a conflict. For testimony may be so improbable or contradictory in itself as to justify its disbelief. But no such case as that is presented here."

In the same case the court says:

"The two persons who knew the facts were both in court. One, the defendant, gave specific testimony, not improbable, but entirely reasonable and showing a contract in accordance with the usual custom in such cases. He was not impeached in any way, was not even cross-examined as to the evidence in question. The other person, Mr. Pohli, did not contradict such witness, and gave no testimony necessarily in conflict with this explicit testimony of the defendant. In such a case the testimony of the witness explicitly testifying to the particular facts should be taken as true. Newton v. Pope, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 109; Lacey v. Wilson, 24 Mich. 479; Matthews v. Lanier, 33 Ark. 91."

The case of Leal et ux. v. Martin, 59 Cal. App. 760, 211 P. 853, is directly applicable to the facts of this case:

"It is not argued that respondent was guilty of negligence per se or that he violated any statute relating to the manner of operation of the automobile upon the public highway other than the provisions of section 22, subd. A, of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, p. 220), which requires that one operating a motor vehicle on the public highway shall do so in a careful and prudent manner and at such a rate of speed as shall not endanger the life or limb of another."

In passing it may be well to state that the trial court instructed the jury in this case:

"If you find from the testimony that the defendant Stafford was driving or operating his automobile along the right-hand side of the highway at a legal rate of speed—and the court instructs you that he was going at a legal rate of speed; there is no evidence here sufficient to warrant you in finding that he was going at an excessive rate of speed—if you find from the testimony that the defendant, Stafford, was driving or operating his automobile along the right-hand side of the highway at a legal rate of speed, and that the driver of the passing car, A. H. Reed, suddenly and without warning, cut his car sharply to the right and collided with or forced the car of defendant Stafford to the right, and thus caused the injury, then your verdict would be in favor of the defendant Stafford."

The court concludes:

"When reliance is placed on this provision of the statute, it is necessary to prove that the vehicle was not operated in a careful or prudent manner or that it was operated at an unreasonable rate of speed."

[3] The appellant requested the court to give the following instruction to the jury, which was refused:

"You are instructed that the defendant Reed, under the Motor Vehicle Act, had no right to pass the car of the defendant Stafford, in the highway, unless the boulevard on his left as he proceeded forward was clear and unobstructed for a distance of not less than one hundred yards in advance of the car he was about to pass. Therefore, if you shall find that the defendant Reed, at the time he attempted to pass the car of his codefendant, Stafford, knew there was an automobile approaching the automobiles of the two defendants at a distance of less than 100 yards from them at the time the defendant Reed attempted to pass Stafford, then I instruct you that the defendant Reed was guilty of negligence; and if you shall find that such negligence directly or proximately contributed to the happening of the accident, then your verdict will be in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant Reed, but in favor of the defendant Stafford, unless you shall find that Stafford himself was guilty of negligence directly or proximately contributing to the happening of the accident."

The instruction should have been given. It is clearly the law, and was pertinent to the determination of the issue submitted to the jury for consideration.

Lastly, it is contended on the part of the appellant that opposing counsel were guilty of misconduct that tended to prejudice the jury against him, which alleged misconduct as disclosed by the transcript is as follows: The attorney for plaintiff, during the course of his argument to the jury, started to read to the jury the answer of the defendant A. H. Reed, and the following proceedings were had:

"The Court: Mr. Reed is not here, and you cannot read what he said in his answer against the other defendant.

"Mr. Gray: He is not here because somebody wants to get out of this.

"Mr. Gilbert: I object to any such statement as that.

"The Court: That is misconduct, and the court so adjudges. Now, proceed with the argument against the defendant. The jury must not pay any attention to that. Proceed."

The action of the court in promptly directing the jury to disregard the statement of counsel went as far as possible to eliminate any unfavorable impression from the minds of the jury, but in view of the fact that the record in this case discloses no substantial evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant Stafford, the failure to give the foregoing instruction and the implied impropriety of a collusive arrangement as between the codefendants are circumstances that may well have had potential influence in causing the jury to penalize the defendant Stafford as it did do through its adverse verdict.

We are entirely satisfied that, irrespective of any error of law or any misconduct on the part of counsel for the plaintiff, the verdict in this case as against the defendant Stafford is not supported by the evidence and that the judgment must be and is as to him reversed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

HARTFORD ACCIDENT & INDEMNITY
CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COM-MISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ.
5618.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 31, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court July 29, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⇨371—Compensation is recoverable only for injuries arising out of employment (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917).

Employee cannot recover damages or compensation for injuries sustained under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831), where accident causing injuries did not arise out of scope of employment.

2. Master and servant ⇨375(1)—Injuries to newspaper carrier delivering milk for milk wagon driver, with whom he rode in delivering papers, held not compensable (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, § 6).

Injuries to newspaper carrier sustained during deviation from paper route in delivering milk for milk wagon driver with whom he rode in delivering papers, without employer's knowledge, held not accident arising out of course of his employment by newspaper proprietor under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831), § 6, though carrier had one paper left to deliver at time of accident.

3. Master and servant ⇨371—Whether accident arises out of and in course of employment depends on facts of case (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, § 6).

Whether accident arises out of and in course of employment under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917
(St. 1917, p. 831), § 6, must be determined according to facts of particular case.

4. Master and servant ⇨371—Compensation is recoverable only where injury can be traced to nature of work or to risks reasonably incidental to employment (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917,
§ 6).

Before employee is entitled to compensation for injury, it must be possible to trace injury to nature of work of employee or to risks to which employment exposes him, and to show that risk of accident was reasonably incidental to employment under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917
(St. 1917, p. 831), § 6.

5. Master and servant ⇨375(1)—Employee, engaged at time of injury in service pertaining peculiarly to one employer, cannot claim compensation from others (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917,
§ 6).

If at time of injury employee is engaged in service which pertains peculiarly to one employer, he cannot claim compensation from others under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831), § 6.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 by George Abram by his guardian ad litem,
Henry D. Abram, opposed by the Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company, in which the State Compensation Insurance Fund was a party. Award of the Industrial Accident Commission in employee's favor, and the Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company brings certiorari. Award annulled so far as it affects the Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco (W. F.
Beem, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

HOUSER, J. In this proceeding the petitioner seeks to have reviewed an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission.

In substance, the facts are that a boy named Abram was employed to make daily deliveries of a newspaper over a given route; that the territory which was thus presumed to be served was included within a much larger area which was served by a corporation in the delivery of milk to its customers; that without the knowledge or acquiescence of the proprietor of the newspaper the boy made an arrangement with the man who delivered the milk by which it was understood that, where the milk route and the newspaper route covered practically identical territory, the boy should be given transportation on the milk wagon, for which privilege he would compensate by helping the milkman deliver milk within such territory; that on two days of each week, to wit, on Saturday and on Sunday, the boy would thus assist the driver of the milk wagon, not only for that part of the milk route which was practically identical with the newspaper route, but, in addition thereto, the remainder of the milk route, for which extra service the boy was to receive a money consideration; that on one of the Saturdays when the boy was thus engaged to perform the larger service, after all his newspapers, with the exception of one, had been delivered, he proceeded to and did in part carry out his agreement with reference to that part of the milk route which had not then been served; that, after leaving the neighborhood which was covered by the newspaper route, the milkwagon route traversed a very large area in delivering milk to consumers, and finally in the course thereof the driver and the boy were working to and fro on different streets, returning in a general direction toward the place where the one newspaper still remaining in the possession of the boy was to be delivered; that, while still engaged solely in the delivery of milk, and when located on a street paralleling that on which the house was situated at which the newspaper was to be delivered, and approximately two blocks therefrom, in reaching for a bottle of milk the boy slipped and fell under the milk wagon, which ran over him and caused him serious injuries; that thereafter an application for compensation for such injuries was duly presented to respondent Industrial Accident Commission, and an award was made by it as against both the newspaper proprietor and the corporation owner of the milk route. A petition by the petitioner herein, as insurer of the proprietor of the newspaper, for rehearing on the award having been denied by respondent, petitioner has come to this tribunal on a writ of review affecting the award as against the proprietor of the newspaper route only.

The sole question submitted to this court for determination is purely one of law, to wit, whether from the facts as hereinbefore set forth the respondent was justified in reaching the conclusion that at the time of the happening of the accident which resulted in the injury to the boy he was in the employ of the proprietor of the newspaper, and was acting within the course of his employment.

[1, 2] Generally speaking, it is a principle of law so well established as to require no citation of authority for its support that, in the absence of a particular statute to the contrary, an employee will not be permitted to recover damages or compensation for an injury sustained by him where the accident which was the cause thereof occurred through circumstances not arising out of the employment of the injured person.

[3] Section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (Stats. 1917, p. 831) provides for compensation to the employee for any injury sustained by him "arising out of and in the course of the employment." As is stated in the case of General Accident F. & L. A. Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 653, 200 P. 419, it would seem that no comprehensive definition can be formulated which will correctly and with absolute certainty determine what accidents will be embraced within the phrase "arising out of and in the course of the employment," and therefore each case must be decided conformably to the specific facts which are therein presented. Perhaps the leading authority in which an attempt has been made to generally outline the boundaries of the phrase is that entitled In re McNicol, 215 Mass. 497, 102 N. E. 697, L. R. A. 1916A, 306. It is there said: "

"It is sufficient to say that an injury is received 'in the course of' the employment when it comes while the workman is doing the duty which he is employed to perform. It arises 'out of' the employment, when there is apparent to the rational mind, upon consideration of all the circumstances, a causal connection between the conditions under which the work is required to be performed and the resulting injury. Under this test, if the injury can be seen to have followed as a natural incident of the work and to have been contemplated by a reasonable person familiar with the whole situation as a result of the exposure occasioned by the nature of the employment, then it arises 'out of' the employment. But it excludes an injury which cannot fairly be traced to the employment as a contributing proximate cause and which comes from a hazard to which the workmen would have been equally exposed apart from the employment. The causative danger must be peculiar to the work and not common to the neighborhood. It must be incidental to the character of the business and not independent of the relation of master and servant. It need not have been foreseen or expected, but after the event it must appear to have had its origin in a risk connected with the employment, and to have flowed from that source as a rational consequence."

In the case of Press Publishing Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 190 Cal. 114, 210 P. 820, it was held that compensation by an employee for an injury could be recovered from each of two concurrent employers of the injured person. The facts were that a man was employed to deliver newspapers both in bulk and to individual customers along a route covered by a state highway. By a second employer, who operated a dairy, the man was also engaged to carry cream from the end of the newspaper route back to the dairy which was located in the vicinity of the place where the newspaper route commenced. The man used a motorcycle with a side car attachment in performing his work. On the day on which the accident happened the man had procured the newspapers which were to be delivered, together with some ice for cooling the cream. He then went to his home for the purpose of getting some empty milk cans in which to carry the cream. Either of two roads was available to the man in departing for the vicinity where his work in delivering newspapers on the state highway would actually begin. One of such roads was in a better condition for travel from the newspaper office to the state highway than was the other road, which latter road was a little shorter and nearer to the man's home and the dairy than was the former road. The road nearer the man's home, however, intersected the road which was nearer the newspaper office before the state highway could be reached. After getting the empty milk cans, and while traveling on the road nearer to his home, before such road intersected the other and better road, he met with the accident and sustained the injury for which compensation was sought.

Based upon the fact that, after the employee had secured the newspapers, instead of going immediately on the better road which passed the newspaper office to the state highway, he went to his home to get the empty milk cans, and thereby apparently deviated from a direct course from the newspaper office to the state highway on which the deliveries of the newspapers were to be made, the question was raised as to the liability of the proprietor of the newspaper for the damages resulting from the injury to the employee. The court held in effect that, in view of the fact that it was not denied, the employer was aware of, and acquiesced in, the practice of the employee to take the road which he did; that, because there was no showing that the employee was not privileged to select the road which he would take in reaching the commencement of his newspaper route, and that any deviation which the employee had made had been completed, at the time of the accident he "was engaged in the performance of his duty carrying newspapers in bulk preparatory to their delivery to individual customers."

The facts of that case are distinguishable from those of the instant case in two important particulars, to wit: First, as to the knowledge and acquiescence of the employer in the practice followed by the employee; secondly, at the time the accident in the cited case occurred the employee had completed the deviation from his work of delivering the newspapers; while in the instant case at the time the accident occurred the employee was still engaged solely in delivering milk, and had not returned from his deviation from delivering newspapers.

So far as the proprietor of the newspaper was concerned, it is clear that the boy was engaged to perform a definite service, to wit, to deliver a newspaper at each of several designated places. After the delivery of all the newspapers, with the exception of the one which remained in the possession of the boy, and, upon his departure with the milkman from the neighborhood covered by the newspaper route, the boy occupied a position no different from that which he would have occupied had he left his occupation as a carrier of newspapers and gone away on any other business or pleasure. For example, had the boy taken the one newspaper with him and gone with another boy up in nearby hills on a rabbit hunting expedition, expecting to deliver the one newspaper on his return from the rabbit hunt, and had the boy been injured while thus engaged, could it be reasonably contended that, while the boy was rabbit hunting, he was acting within the scope of his employment as a deliverer of newspapers? Or, assuming that through the carelessness of the boy while he was either on the milk route, or on the rabbit hunt, he had caused a personal injury to result to some third person, would his employer, the proprietor of the newspaper, have been held liable for the damages thus caused? Or, assuming a third situation: Instead of the remainder of the milk route lying in a neighborhood adjoining that covered by the newspaper route, let it be assumed that such remainder of the milk route lay in a territory somewhat remote therefrom—say, a distance of ten miles—would it be reasonable to hold that, although the general trend of the milk route at the time the accident occurred was in the direction of the house at which the one remaining newspaper in the possession of the boy was to be delivered, the boy was acting in any capacity in connection with his occupation of delivering newspapers?

[4] If the definition as to what constitutes "arising out of and in the course of the employment," as contained in the McNicol Case, 215 Mass. 497, 102 N. E. 697, L. R. A. 1916A, 306, be accepted as a guide, it will become apparent that the injury sustained by the boy in the instant case is not compensable so far as the proprietor of the newspaper is concerned, for the reason that the accident did not occur "while the workman is (was) doing the duty which he is (was) employed to perform," and that there was no causal connection between the conditions under which the delivery of the newspaper was required to be performed and the resulting injury. Unless it could have been contemplated by the employer of the boy that he would make an arrangement with the milkman facilitating the delivery of the newspapers, and that the boy would leave his work and engage solely in the delivery of milk, it cannot be said that the injury to the boy "followed as a natural incident" of his work. While in the instant case the evidence shows that no restrictions were placed by the employer upon the boy with reference to the method, mode, or manner of making deliveries of the newspaper, the rule is that, before an employee will be entitled to be compensated for an injury, it must appear that the accident arose out of his employment, that it is possible to trace the injury to the nature of the work of the employee, or to the risks to which the work exposes him; and that the accident must have been one resulting from a risk reasonably incident to the employment. 27 Cal. Jur. p. 344, and cases there cited.

[5] Had the accident in question occurred at a time when the boy was concurrently engaged in his two separate occupations of delivering newspapers and assisting in the delivery of milk, in view of the decisions, and especially the case of Press Publishing Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 190 Cal. 114, 210 P. 820, it perhaps would follow that the proprietor of the newspaper would be liable for compensation to the boy as provided by the statute; but, as stated in 27 California Jurisprudence, at page 332: "If at the time of his injury he was engaged in service which pertained peculiarly to one employer, he may claim no compensation from the others." With the conditions present as hereinbefore set forth, that is to say, that at the time the accident occurred the boy had deviated from his employment as a newspaper carrier, and at that time was acting without the scope of such employment, it results that he should have received no award of compensation arising out of his employment as such carrier.

So far as the award by respondent affects petitioner, it should be annulled. It is so ordered.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 463

PEOPLE v. GARCIA. (Cr. 1365.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. May 31, 1927.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1165(1)—Defendant must have been substantially injured by error before conviction will be reversed.

Before a judgment of conviction will be reversed, it must appear that the defendant has been substantially injured by the error complained of.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 1169(1)—Where record showed no prejudicial effect from receiving improper evidence and having portions of it read to jury before it was finally stricken, conviction was not reversed.

On trial for assault, where certain evidence was improperly received, and portions of it were read over to the jury before it was finally stricken, but the record on appeal did not show that the verdict was the product of confusion caused by court's rulings, or that prejudicial effect remained from the original reception of the evidence, the conviction was not reversed.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 1169(5)—Trial court may correct error in admission of testimony.

The trial court is allowed to correct error which may have been committed in the admission of testimony.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1144(12)—Jury is presumed to have disregarded improper evidence withdrawn immediately, where court so instructed.

Where improper evidence is withdrawn without delay, and the jury instructed to disregard it, error in admitting it is cured, and jury will be presumed to have obeyed the instruction.

5. Criminal law $\S$ 1163(3)—In absence of affirmative showing that jury misunderstood ruling admitting evidence for limited purpose, rights of defendant are not presumed prejudiced.

In the absence of an affirmative showing that the jury misunderstood ruling admitting certain evidence for a limited purpose only, it will not be presumed that the rights of the defendant were prejudiced.

6. Homicide $\S$ 170—Evidence that complaining witness pointed out defendant to officer as one committing assault held admissible for identification only.

In prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, evidence that several days after the alleged crime the complaining witness pointed out defendant to an officer, and said, "This is the man," held admissible to identify defendant, but not for purpose of showing guilty intent.

7. Criminal law $\S$ 695½—Where admissible evidence was stricken from record, there was no error in later restoring it.

Where judge, in prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, struck certain admissible evidence from the record owing to a misunderstanding as to its purpose, held that it was not error to restore the same to the record later during the trial.

8. Homicide $\S$ 174(8)—Defendant's false statements as to presence at certain station and ownership of automobile he was driving, made eleven days after alleged assault, held admissible on question of guilt.

In prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, defendant's false statements to officers regarding his presence at a certain station and as to the ownership of the automobile he was then driving, made eleven days after the alleged assault, held admissible on question of guilt.

9. Criminal law $\S$ 829(1)—Refusing instructions covered by court's charge held proper.

Refusal to give instructions which were substantially covered in the court's charge held no error.

10. Criminal law $\S$ 1044—Defendant cannot complain of testimony admitted over objection where he neither made motion to strike nor claimed misconduct in asking question.

Where, after certain testimony was admitted over defendant's objection, defendant made no motion to strike out the question or the answer, nor asked that the question be assigned as misconduct, he cannot raise the point on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Henry Garcia was convicted of simple assault, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Myron Harris and Leo Sullivan, both of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Earle Warren, Dist. Atty., and Charles D. Wehr, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for the People.

KNIGHT, J. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder alleged to have been committed on February 15, 1926, and upon trial was convicted of simple assault. Upon this appeal he urges as grounds for reversal that the court erred in ruling upon matters of evidence and in refusing to give the jury two instructions proposed by him; also misconduct on the part of the district attorney.

Thomas M. Hyland, a detective police sergeant, testified as a witness for the prosecution with reference to a conversation held with the defendant shortly after his arrest and as to the latter being identified at that time by the complaining witness and others. Defendant objected to much of the testimony, and moved to strike out portions thereof; many of his objections and motions being sustained. At the conclusion of the direct examination the court stated:

"I am going to strike out some of this testimony that is not admissible. All of the testimony of the witness given here this afternoon, until they started in about the row of the men, the line-up, everything previous to that. So there will be no misunderstanding on the part of the jury, we had better have the portion read that remains in the testimony."

The reporter then proceeded to read the testimony to the jury, but, when he reached a particular answer therein, the court interrupted, stating:

"I cannot say as far as that is concerned the testimony is admissible."

The district attorney briefly commented on the answer regarding which the court was doubtful, and the court then said:

"I am afraid the jury will be confused about what is to remain in and remain out. We will take a recess at this time."

During recess the court designated the portions of the objectionable testimony it was going to exclude, which embraced more than had been stricken out at the time the testimony was read by the reporter before recess was declared. Upon reconvening, the court said:

"In order that there may be no misunderstanding about the testimony that Officer Hyland has given this afternoon, which is to be stricken out and disregarded by the jury—the court has ordered certain portions stricken out—the reporter is going to read all that remains in; that is, all that you are to consider. You are only to consider what the reporter is going to read to you," —and thereupon the reporter read only the portions of the testimony which the court allowed to stand.

Defendant contends that, on account of the manner in which the objectionable portions of the testimony were stricken out, "it is doubtful whether after final ruling of the court the jurors knew or appreciated how much of the testimony of the witnesses they were to consider and how much they were to disregard"; and that, since the jury heard the improper testimony once and part of it twice, "it is extremely unlikely that the prejudicial effect of the original reception of the testimony and the subsequent repetition of a part thereof were entirely obliterated from the minds of all jurors by the final ruling or any instructions of the court."

[1-4] Before a judgment of conviction will be reversed, however, it must affirmatively appear that the defendant has been substantially injured by the error complained of. People v. Lapara, 181 Cal. 66, 183 P. 545; People v. Mahach, 65 Cal. App. 359, 224 P. 130; People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 130 P. 1042; People v. Stephens, 29 Cal. App. 616, 157 P. 570, 572. We find nothing in the record before us upon which to base the inference that the verdict herein was the product of confusion caused by the court's rulings or that any prejudicial effect from the original reception of the objectionable evidence remained with the jury after the same had been stricken out. The trial court is allowed to correct error which may have been committed in the admission of testimony; and, where the improper evidence is withdrawn without delay, and the jury instructed to disregard the same, it will be presumed that the jury obeyed the instruction, and any error committed in admitting the same is cured. People v. Dominguez, 61 Cal. App. 182, 214 P. 448; People v. Prather, 134 Cal. 436, 66 P. 589, 863; People v. King, 56 Cal. App. 484, 205 P. 703; People v. Mayen, 188 Cal. 237, 205 P. 435, 24 A. L. R. 1383. In the instant case, therefore, nothing appearing to the contrary, we must presume that the jury acted in pursuance of the trial court's admonition regarding the excluded testimony; and consequently any error which may have been committed in its original reception is deemed to be cured.

Testimony was given by another police officer named J. A. Sevina as to having seen the defendant on February 26, 1926, several days subsequent to the date of the alleged crime, at High street station in the city of Alameda, sitting in an automobile, apparently waiting for the arrival of a train, at which time, the officer testified, he held a conversation with the defendant as to the ownership of said automobile, and regarding the latter's presence at said station at that particular time. He further testified that the complaining witness who had just arrived on the train was asked by the officer in the defendant's presence "if he knew any of these boys," and, upon answering in the affirmative, was asked "which one"; that thereupon "he pointed out the defendant, and said, 'This is the man.'" Counsel for defendant made frequent objections to the introduction of this testimony, and moved to strike out certain portions of it, and, when the direct examination had been concluded, stated: "We renew our motion," to which the court replied: "The motion is granted, and the jury is instructed to disregard it." However, at the next session, the court of its own motion ordered the testimony restored to the record, and allowed the prosecution to further examine the police officer upon some of the same matters. In making the order of restoration the court said:

"This morning I struck out testimony of the police officer as to the occurrence on the 26th day of February, where he said that the complaining witness said 'This is the man.' I thought the purpose of introducing that testimony was to show guilty intent on the part of the defendant. I struck it out for that reason. The thought occurred later that it should not have been stricken out; that the prosecution is entitled to have it in the record for the purpose of showing that the complaining witness identified the defendant at that time, on the 26th, eleven days after. I am going to restore that portion of the testimony, the testimony of Officer Sevina. You understand it is for no other purpose than showing that he identified the defendant on that day."

Defendant contends that "the rulings of the trial court produced confusion and uncertainty in the minds of the jurors as to what portions of the testimony of the witnesses were finally left in the evidence for their consideration."

[5-7] It is apparent, we think, that the order of restoration did not have the effect asserted by defendant, for the reason that it specifically referred to the "testimony of the police officer (Sevina) as to the occurrence on the 26th day of February where he said that the complaining witness said, 'That is the man,'" which testimony, the court stated, had been stricken out that morning. In any event, as held with reference to the preceding point, in the absence of an affirmative showing that the jury misunderstood the ruling, we cannot presume that the rights of the defendant were prejudiced thereby (People v. Lapara, supra; People v. Mahach, supra), and, the testimony being, in our opinion, admissible for the limited purpose stated by the court (People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497, 22 N. W. 15), no error was committed in restoring the same to the record.

[8] The question of the falseness of defendant's statements made to the two officers mentioned regarding his presence at the High street station on February 26, 1926, and as to the ownership of the automobile he was then occupying and driving, was a matter which the jury was entitled to consider as a circumstance in determining the question of defendant's guilt. People v. Cole, 141 Cal. 90, 74 P. 547; People v. Peete, 54 Cal. App. 333-352, 202 P. 51.

[9] The ground upon which the court refused to give the two instructions proposed by defendant was that the elements stated therein were substantially covered in the court's charge. There was no error in such refusal. The effect of the first of these instructions was that, if it were established beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was driving the automobile from which the shot was fired at the complaining witness, such fact was "not alone of itself sufficient to convict the defendant of the crime charged in the information." The instruction given by the court on that subject was as follows:

"The mere fact that a person is present at the scene of a crime and knows that a criminal offense is about to be perpetrated is not sufficient to convict a defendant in a criminal case. In addition thereto it must appear that the accused person, with knowledge of the criminal intent of the person who directly commits the offense, has done or is doing some act that assists or is assisting in the perpetration of the crime."

The other proposed instruction related to the presumption of innocence and the law of reasonable doubt. Both matters were fully and fairly covered in the court's charge.

[10] After examining the assignments of alleged misconduct on the part of the district attorney and those portions of the record to which they relate, we fail to find grounds for reversal. The first assignment is based upon a remark made by the district attorney in his opening statement to the jury, to which objection was made and sustained, and at defendant's request the jury was instructed to disregard it. At the conclusion of the opening statement the jury was further instructed at defendant's request that said opening statement was not evidence, and should not be considered as such. Any injurious effect the remark may have produced was doubtless removed by the court's instructions. "It must be a very exceptional case in which a reversal will be ordered by reason of the character of the opening statement of the prosecuting officer. * * * People v. Sing Yow, 145 Cal. 1, 78 P. 235. The next point refers to certain testimony to which objection was made by defendant and by the court overruled. No motion was made to strike out the question or the answer, nor was the asking of the question assigned as misconduct. Consequently defendant is not now in a position to raise the question. People v. Wong Toy, 189 Cal. 587, 209 P. 543; People v. Babcock, 160 Cal. 537, 117 P. 549; People v. Nakis, 184 Cal. 105, 193 P. 92. The third and fourth assignments relate to the cross-examination of the defendant upon matters which had been excluded by the court's order striking out part of the testimony. Despite the exclusion of said testimony, the defendant, while testifying, adverted to the same matter, and consequently there was more or less justification for the cross-examination complained of, which weighs strongly against the charge of misconduct. The force and effect of the question upon which the fifth assignment is based, assuming the question to have been improper, was clearly overcome by the timely objection of the defendant which was sustained, and the prompt instruction of the court to the jury that it should be disregarded. In People v. Garbutt, 197 Cal. 200, 239 P. 1080, it was said:

"Counsel's conduct must reach a course of proceedings militating against justice and the fair and orderly conduct which should charac-terize a judicial proceeding in criminal cases before error can be predicated on it."

In our opinion, the conduct complained of herein did not approach the limitation of the rule stated, nor can it be said to have interfered with the defendant's having had a fair and impartial trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

53 Cal. App. 399

KREISS v. SWINEHART et ux. (Civ. 5808.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. May 26, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 25, 1927.

1. Sales $\S$ 52(5)—Finding that instrument leasing rugs sought to be replevied was intended to be used as collateral held sustained by evidence.

In action by sellers to replevy oriental rugs, evidence held to sustain finding that an instrument leasing such from the sellers was executed merely to enable the sellers to use it as collateral.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 931(4)—Where trial court found generally for defendants in replevin action, appellate court was bound to assume that it found according to defendants' contention that lease was not intended as such.

Where trial court made finding in action in replevin merely that defendants were owners and entitled to possession of the rugs sought, appellate court was bound to assume that the trial court found in accordance with defendants' contention that they signed an instrument leasing the rugs from the sellers merely to enable the sellers to borrow money thereby.

3. Evidence $\S$ 462—Evidence that lease was executed for use as collateral held not to vary terms.

Evidence that lease was executed merely to enable the purported lessors to use it as collateral for the purpose of borrowing money held not to vary the terms of the lease, but to merely show that no lease was executed as between the parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Replevin by Herbert L. Kreiss and others, copartners doing business under the name and style of L. Kreiss & Sons, against D. G. Swinehart and wife. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. H. Cross and Cross & Brandt, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Annette Abbott Adams and B. D. Marx Greene, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiffs were furniture dealers. They brought this action in replevin against their customers, the defendants, for possession of four oriental rugs. Judgment was for the defendants. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The issues in the case relate to whether the defendants had purchased the rugs outright or whether they held the rugs under a lease contract. The defendants had been customers of plaintiffs for a number of years and had purchased large amounts of furniture. The plaintiffs had been in the habit of extending, or at least the defendants had been in the habit of enjoying, very liberal terms of credit on these purchases. However, no lease contracts were employed by the parties in their dealings with each other prior to the rug deal involved here. Commencing in May, 1921, various rugs were by plaintiffs put down in defendants' residence for trial, but it was not until about October 1, 1921, that defendants settled upon and selected the four certain rugs described in the complaint herein. At that time the defendants delivered to plaintiffs one oriental rug previously purchased and paid for by them, which was by the plaintiffs accepted as equivalent to the payment of $1,900. There was no express agreement about the terms of payment or credit. A few days later the manager of plaintiffs' rug department called at defendants' residence and procured defendant Mrs. Swinehart to sign a lease contract of the rugs. This is not the lease contract involved or relied on here. Two further payments of $500 each were made on the rugs, but one of these payments was applied by the plaintiffs to the defendants' general account.

On June 21, 1922, plaintiffs' manager called upon both defendants at their residence. At this time a further payment of $500 was made. At the request of plaintiffs' manager the defendants both signed at this time a form of lease which, after describing the four rugs, stated:

"This is to certify that (defendants) have this day leased of (plaintiffs) the goods described above, value $7,410, subject to the following terms."

The lease then recited $1,900 credit for the rug turned in, $500 credit for one of the $500 payments previously made, and a further credit of $500 for a payment on the then date. It provided that further payments should be made on October 1, 1922, January 1, 1923, and March 31, 1923. It provided that should plaintiffs fail to make any of the specified payments, then the defendants agreed to surrender and return the said goods to plaintiffs. The lease also contained other provisions, including a recapture clause for breach of covenants. This is the lease involved in this action.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Later, about November, 1922, according to the testimony, defendants returned two of the four rugs to be by plaintiffs stored or resold and the proceeds credited to defendants' account. At the time this action was commenced these two rugs were still in the possession of plaintiffs. The sale prices of these two rugs, which we will refer to as the returned rugs, were $540 and $4,500, respectively. The other two rugs, which we will refer to as the replevied rugs, were taken at the commencement of this action by plaintiffs under claim and delivery proceedings. They were priced at $850 and $1,520, respectively.

The complaint alleged that plaintiffs were the owners and entitled to the possession of the four rugs, and that all four were in possession of defendants, who refused to give possession on demand. Defendants' answer admitted plaintiffs were the owners and entitled to the possession and alleged that plaintiffs were in possession of the two returned rugs, but asserted ownership and right of possession in the two replevied rugs. The court's findings of fact were that plaintiffs were the owners and in possession of the returned rugs, but that defendants were the owners and entitled to the possession of the replevied rugs.

The allegations of the complaint and answer thus contained only general averments and the findings of fact following the pleadings do likewise, so that we must look to the evidence in the case for the exact theory of the decision. The evidence is undisputed that the defendants failed to make the payments called for by the terms of the lease. Respondents contend that the judgment is supported by the evidence in the record upon two theories: First, that there was a complete sale of the rugs prior to the lease signed on June 21, 1922, and therefore there was no consideration for the execution for the said alleged lease. Second, that the alleged lease was signed for the particular and limited purpose of permitting the plaintiffs to use the same as a means of borrowing money at the bank, and that it was not in the minds of the parties that the lease should represent the transaction as between the parties nor be binding upon them according to its terms.

Appellants contend that the evidence does not show that the sale was complete with title passed when the lease agreement was signed, so that there was a consideration for the lease; that even if title had passed, the lease by its terms extended the defendants' period of credit and that was a consideration; and that, in any event, the signing of the lease was a novation.

[1] Our view of the evidence is that the sale was complete and title passed when the final selection of rugs was made and the $1,900 rug was turned in on the purchase price. It is a disputed point in the briefs whether the lease gave more favorable terms of credit than the defendants had a right to expect from the statements made by the salesman. It would not help in solving this case to determine this question. The appellants' arguments are predicated upon the assumption that the lease exists as a fact between the parties. Assuming the existence of the lease, they argue its covenants are its consideration. If there is no lease between the parties, no question of consideration need be determined.

The testimony of both defendants was that the plaintiffs' manager represented that his firm wanted the lease signed so that it could raise money with it as collateral; that upon this representation they signed the lease for the sole purpose of allowing plaintiffs to use it as collateral to borrow money; that there was no intention of the parties that it would constitute the existing or any new agreement or understanding between the parties. Oral testimony offered by plaintiffs was to some extent in conflict with defendants on this point. The lease agreement was never used as collateral.

[2, 3] Upon this appeal, we are required to presume that the court decided the lease was signed for the purpose of a limited use. This evidence does not vary the terms of the lease, but shows that no lease as such was executed as between the parties. Nolan v. Nolan, 155 Cal. 477, 482, 101 P. 520, 132 Am. St. Rep. 99, 17 Ann. Cas. 1056; Peugh v. Davis, 96 U. S. 232, 336, 24 L. Ed. 775; Bridges & Co. v. Bank of Fergus County (Mont.) 251 P. 1057, 1060; McCaull-Dinsmore Co. v. Stevens, 59 Mont. 206, 194 P. 213, 214; 22 Corpus Juris, § 1617, p. 1214; 17 Cyc. 692, 694. It is like proving an absolute deed to be a mortgage, or an assignment to be for the purpose of collection only.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

porations exercising same powers, jurisdiction, and privileges, and, generally, when public corporation, holding limited powers, is annexed to a municipality possessing all of such powers, and wider powers in addition, the annexing municipality takes over the functions of the annexed corporation, and its powers and duties in such territory are thereupon extinguished.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 35—City's annexation of unincorporated territory of county involved in pending improvement proceeding did not deprive county of jurisdiction to proceed with improvement (Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925).

Where lands to be acquired for street improvement, under Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925 (St. 1925, p. 849), consisted in part of land in Culver City and in part of unincorporated territory of the county of Los Angeles, and where the unincorporated territory was annexed to and became part of the city of Los Angeles while the improvement proceeding was still pending, held county of Los Angeles having acquired jurisdiction did not lose jurisdiction by reason of such annexation and could properly proceed to issue bonds.

In Bank.

Original petition by the Allied Amusement Company of Los Angeles and others for writ of mandamus to be directed against H. L. Bryam, Treasurer of the County of Los Angeles, to compel him to issue certain street improvement bonds. Writ granted.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, and Tanner, Odell & Taft, all of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

E. W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and J. H. O'Connor, Asst. Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Petitioners have applied for a writ of mandate, to be directed to the respondent, Bryam, as treasurer of the county of Los Angeles, commanding him to execute and issue certain bonds in a street improvement proceeding in the county, instituted under the Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925, commonly called the "Mattoon Act." The constitutionality of the act (Stats. 1925, p. 849) was upheld in County of Los Angeles v. Hunt, 198 Cal. 753, 247 P. 897. In a proceeding known as "In the matter of Acquisition and Improvement District No. 24, of the County of Los Angeles," matters have progressed up to the time the issuance of the bonds authorized thereby is to be had through the action of the respondent, in his capacity as treasurer of Los Angeles county. He has refused to proceed until certain questions which may affect the legality of the bonds, if issued, have been settled by this court. The matter comes before us on a general demurrer to the petition.

The board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles, under the Acquisition and Im-

201 Cal. 316

ALLIED AMUSEMENT CO. OF LOS ANGELES et al. v. BRYAM, County Treasurer. (S. F. 12518.)

Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1927.

1. Eminent domain $\S$ 262(5)—Inadvertent use of word "northwesterly," instead of "northeasterly," in description of property to be taken for street improvement, held harmless error (Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925).

Inadvertent use of word "northwesterly," instead of "northeasterly," in a call in the description of property to be acquired for opening and widening of streets, under Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925 (St. 1925, p. 849), held harmless error.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 39—Two distinct municipal corporations exercising same powers, jurisdiction, and privileges cannot exist at same time in same territory.

There cannot be, at the same time, within the same territory, two distinct municipal corprovement Act, initiated a proceeding for the opening of Washington place, partly within and partly without Culver City. At the time of the initiation of the proceeding the district to be assessed for the costs and expenses of the improvement, known as Acquisition and Improvement District No. 24, and the lands to be acquired, consisted, in part, of a portion of Culver City, and the balance of the district, and the remainder of the lands, were unincorporated territory of the county of Los Angeles. Having obtained jurisdiction, and proceeded under the statute until such step was next in order, the board of supervisors caused condemnation proceedings to be commenced in the superior court of Los Angeles county, for the purpose of acquiring the lands needed for the opening and widening of the street. The action was duly prosecuted to judgment, and an interlocutory decree in condemnation entered. Thereupon the board adopted a resolution authorizing and directing the county treasurer to issue bonds of acquisition and improvement district No. 24 in the sum of $260,928.93. Pursuant to such direction, the treasurer published a notice offering the bonds for sale, and on May 6, 1927, the date specified in the notice, accepted the bid of Brown-Crummer Company, one of the petitioners, therefor. Prior to the acceptance of the bid all of the unincorporated territory included within acquisition and improvement district No. 24 was annexed to the city of Los Angeles. Because of the existing situation, the treasurer refused to go forward with the sale, or to execute or to deliver the bonds, upon the ground that the county of Los Angeles and its officers had lost jurisdiction of the proceedings, and were deprived of power to issue the bonds by reason of the fact that the district erected and to be assessed for their retirement is, at this time, entirely within the cities of Los Angeles and Culver City.

[1] But two questions are presented for our consideration. The first relates to an inadvertent error in the publication of the initial resolution of intention, ordering the acquisition of the property required for the improvement. As adopted by the board of supervisors, the last call in the description of "that portion of the 182.14-acre parcel of land allotted to Francisco and Dolores Machado in the partition of the Rancho La Ballona" read: "Thence northeasterly in a direct line to the point of beginning." In publishing the notice required by the act, the call read: "Thence northwesterly in a direct line to the point of beginning." (Italics added.) Otherwise the description was correctly published. The error was harmless. The "point of beginning," having been accurately and correctly established, both in the resolution and in the published notice, was, in effect, a monument, and the words in the last call, "Thence * * * in a direct line to the point of beginning," controlled the word of course or direction. The error in publication can therefore be safely disregarded, for it is inconceivable that it in any way misled the owners of the property sought to be acquired, or the public generally.

[2, 3] The other question submitted for decision is whether or not a county, or its officers, having acquired jurisdiction to proceed, under the Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925, for the opening or improvement of highways partly within a municipality and partly in unincorporated territory within the county, and having proceeded to the point of issuing the necessary bonds for the consummation of the project, lose jurisdiction when, by reason of subsequent annexation proceedings, all the territory in the district is included within two cities. Respondent's position rests upon the principle of law (so well established that we deem it unnecessary to cite the authorities) that there cannot be, at the same time, within the same territory, two distinct municipal corporations exercising the same powers, jurisdiction, and privileges, and that, ordinarily, and as a general rule, when a public corporation, holding limited powers, is annexed to a municipality which possesses all of the powers of the corporation which has been annexed, and wider powers in addition, the annexing city takes over the functions of the limited corporation, and its powers and duties in such territory are thereupon extinguished. He cites In re East Fruitvale Sanitary District, 158 Cal. 453, 111 P. 368, in support of his position, but is driven to admit, as was held in that case, that, in the absence of any constitutional restriction, the Legislature has the absolute power over the organization, the extent, and the powers and liabilities of municipal and other public corporations established as agencies of the state for purposes of local government. "What shall be the effect," says the author of the opinion (page 457 [111 P. 370]), "of the enlargement or diminution of the boundaries of such corporations or of the consolidation of two into one, or of the annexation of the territory of one into another, is a question to be answered by a determination of the legislative intent." While there is no direct provision in the Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925 expressing the intention of the Legislature as to what must follow when situations arise like that in the instant case, a study of the act as a whole, and of the scope of its provisions as to jurisdiction and procedure, leaves little doubt in our minds on that question.

In our former opinion (County of Los Angeles v. Hunt, supra), Mr. Justice Richards, speaking of the extent to which proceedings may be carried under the terms of the act, said:

"When a general law of the state provides, as the act in question does, for a scheme of public improvement, the scope of which both intrudes upon and transcends the boundary of one or several municipalities, such contemplated improvement ceases to be a municipal affair and comes within the proper domain and regulation of the general laws of the state."

The controlling purpose of those who framed the act, and of the Legislature in its adoption, was to provide a simplified plan, and, at the same time, a comprehensive procedure for the acquisition and improvement of public ways, parks, and pleasure grounds, whether lying entirely within unincorporated territory of a county or within territory of a municipality, or lying partly within such unincorporated territory and partly within one or more municipalities; or lying within two or more municipalities; or forming the exterior boundary of any municipality where the same joins unincorporated territory of a county or the territory of another municipality, whether partly within or without such boundary. County of Los Angeles v. Hunt, supra. The statute, supra (section 2), in terms declares that the true intent and meaning of its provisions for acquisition and improvement of property is that—

"The necessary jurisdiction and power for the consummation thereof shall be vested in, and proceedings therefor may be had and taken by, the legislative body, either of the county or of any municipality in which the public interest or convenience is affected thereby and that each of said legislative bodies shall have concurrent jurisdiction to initiate such proceedings; provided, that the legislative body initiating the proceeding and adopting the resolution of intention therefor, as [in the act] provided, shall thereafter have exclusive jurisdiction of the proceeding and of all acquisitions and improvements comprehended therein, for the purposes of consummating the same."

Language could not be plainer or more comprehensive in its scope in the matter of providing for a concurrent and a continuing jurisdiction, and for the "consummation" of the acquisition or improvement permitted under the act. If, then, the Legislature provided for county jurisdiction over a district lying partly within one or more municipalities, and partly within unincorporated territory, is it reasonable to suppose that it intended that a district, having acquired jurisdiction in a proceeding, would pass out of existence because a part only of its territory became merged in a city, the rest of the territory remaining, as before, within another and a separate municipality? To accept such a contention would be, in effect, to hold that the formation of a district embracing any territory within a city could not be accomplished as an initial proceeding. The respondent admits, as he must, that the improvement contemplated in district No. 24 was of more than local concern, and that the county of Los Angeles became the mandatory of the state to initiate and conduct the proceedings. Pasadena Park Imp. Co. v. Leland, 175 Cal. 511, 166 P. 341; Gadd v. McGuire, 69 Cal. App. 347, 231 P. 754.

We are not now called upon to determine what result would follow if all the territory of a district, created and existing under the Acquisition and Improvement Act, should be absorbed and become a part of a single municipality having superior powers. District No. 24 includes within its boundaries territory in two separate and distinct municipalities.

Let a writ of mandate issue as prayed for.

We concur: SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.

201 Cal. 322

DE HAVEN v. SMITH. (S. F. 11204.)

Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1927.

1. Trusts $\S$ 44(1)—Evidence in suit for accounting held to sustain finding that defendant received property as confidential agent in trust for plaintiff's benefit.

Evidence that defendant traveled about with plaintiff, inducing her to intrust him with her income, capital, automobile, and jewelry, attending to her business and traveling arrangements held to sustain the trial court's finding in plaintiff's action for accounting that defendant held the property in trust as a confidential agent.

2. Trusts $\S$ 325—Evidence of value of property in suit against confidential agent for accounting held to warrant judgment in alternative for property or value.

Evidence of value of property received by a confidential agent in trust for the use of the plaintiff held sufficient to warrant, in suit for an accounting, judgment in the alternative for the return of specific property or its value.

3. Evidence $\S$ 113(4)—Proof of par value is some evidence of value of bonds.

Evidence of the par value of bonds is some evidence of their value.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cananiss, Judge.

Action for an accounting by Louise De Haven against John A. Smith. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Harry H. Baier and Albert Jacoby, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Myrick & Deering and Scott, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. Plaintiff alleged that on or about December 1, 1920, at Reno, Nev., she and defendant entered into an agreement whereby defendant was to become the confidential agent of and trustee for plaintiff in all of plaintiff's financial affairs, and that thereafter certain money and property were delivered by plaintiff to defendant in his fiduciary capacity; that on December 13, 1920, plaintiff delivered to the defendant, as her agent and trustee, the sum of $13,951, with instructions to buy an automobile to cost not more than $5,000 and to use the balance for the use and benefit of plaintiff; that defendant purchased an automobile for $4,620 and held the balance in trust for plaintiff; that thereafter and from time to time during the years 1920 and 1921, plaintiff delivered to defendant, as her said agent, sums of money aggregating in excess of $10,000, and that defendant has refused to account for any of said sums, although a demand for such accounting has been made by plaintiff.

It is further alleged that in the year 1921 plaintiff delivered to defendant two pearl earrings of the market value of $2,000 for the purpose of having them examined and valued by a jeweler and for no other purpose and that defendant retained said jewelry and refuses to deliver it to plaintiff; that in the same year plaintiff delivered to defendant as her said agent and trustee 18 bonds of the par value of $1,000 each, upon his representation that he would invest the proceeds thereof so as to increase the capital 100 per cent. and that defendant still retains the said bonds or the proceeds thereof; that in February, 1921, plaintiff delivered to defendant as her said agent and trustee $4,000 with which to purchase a second automobile for plaintiff; that defendant purchased said automobile with said funds and now holds the same or the proceeds thereof as trustee for plaintiff. The prayer was for an accounting and judgment for money and property found due plaintiff by defendant.

Defendant answered denying the allegations of the complaint as to the confidential relationship of the parties and alleging that the property mentioned in the complaint was delivered to him from time to time as gifts from plaintiff to defendant.

The trial court found that the property was delivered to defendant, as the confidential agent and trustee of the plaintiff, and found the amounts and value thereof to be as alleged in the complaint, except that the pearl earrings are found to have been of the value of $200. The bonds are found to be of the value of $18,000 and the automobile to be of the value of $1,500, and judgment was given for the return of these three items of property or their value as found by the court. As to the money, aggregating over $20,000, intrusted to defendant by plaintiff, no judgment was given, because an accounting thereof was waived by plaintiff. The record discloses that these sums were used, in part at least, for the living expenses of plaintiff and defendant during the period of their association upon their travels over the country.

From this judgment defendant appeals, contending that the record fails to disclose a fiduciary relationship between the parties; that there is no evidence of the value of the property retained by defendant, and therefore a judgment in the alternative for its return or for its value is error; that the record discloses that part of the funds with which the second automobile was purchased belonged to defendant, having been received by him as insurance upon the first automobile purchased by him with the funds of plaintiff, which first automobile he contends was a gift to him from plaintiff.

Plaintiff and defendant met at Reno, Nev. Plaintiff was securing a divorce; defendant conducted a taxicab business. Plaintiff had two daughters in Germany. She secured a divorce from her husband and was in receipt of an income from him. She was also one of the heirs to considerable property in Chicago, from which she was receiving an income of over $1,000 a month. Plaintiff met defendant when she engaged his "cabs" for use during her stay in Reno. He asked her to "help him out" with money, and she gave him $500. She paid for the use of his "cabs" during the six months she was in Reno. When plaintiff was ready to leave there, she spoke of coming to California in an automobile, and defendant proposed that she should take one of his cars with a chauffeur for three months, for which she was to pay $1,000 a month. There was then discussed a scheme by which the defendant was to try to secure for himself an inheritance. It appears that plaintiff was one of the beneficiaries of a trust in an estate referred to in the record as the "Bigelow estate," and under the provisions of the trust her share was to vest in her surviving children, upon her death. Although defendant was about 30 years of age, the parties discussed a plan by which he would become the adopted son of plaintiff, provided the parties were advised by counsel that an adopted child would meet the requirements of the trust. With this idea in mind, the suggested arrangement about renting defendant's automobile with a chauffeur at $1,000 a month was "turned entirely aside," according to the testimony of plaintiff, and we may pause to remark that we are taking her testimony as true wherever a conflict is found in the record. Defendant was taken to California, "almost as an adopted son." Plaintiff gave defendant a draft for more than $13,000, and out of the proceeds thereof he was to buy an automobile for her and use the rest for their travels. After that plaintiff handed defendant her income checks as they were received and he placed them in the bank. At first the account was in the defendant's name and, later, it was placed in a joint account of plaintiff and defendant. In Los Angeles, Cal., the automobile was wrecked, and from the insurance money received for this loss by defendant and with additional money furnished by plaintiff, the automobile involved in the present action was purchased. While traveling about with plaintiff, defendant suggested that the bonds she had were not proper investments, that they had been sold to plaintiff because the seller wanted to get rid of them and that plaintiff should sell them or she would suffer a loss. The bonds were United States Liberty bonds, United States Steel Corporation bonds and railroad bonds. Plaintiff testified:

"He (defendant) told me Mr. Howe must have given me these old bonds—that he wanted to get rid of them, and that he told me he was going to double the bonds for me if I would give them to him. He told me that in Reno there was absolutely no garage—no heated garage—and he showed me black on white that if he only had 50 cars in there he would get me an income of one thousand to fifteen hundred dollars a month, and that he would put his brother in there to keep the books and he needed two men only, but that the $18,000 that I had bonds would not be enough, so he would be able to get the rest and the first thing he would be able to pay that off and we would go to Europe and not depend on the National Trust Company."

Plaintiff continued:

"He took me down to the bank—I don't know the name of the bank—and he asked he got me to sign these papers and to have the bonds come to Los Angeles. We were in Santa Barbara and were leaving for Los Angeles.

"Q. And where did the bonds come? A. The bonds came to Los Angeles, and when I had them in my hand, I said, 'I want the document, because the capital is mine,' and he answered me, 'Of course, you shall have the document,' and he turned around and said, 'Have you no confidence in me?' And I said, 'Yes, I have confidence, because, you know, I want to adopt you, and I believe that you would not hurt me.' I did not want to give him the bonds until I got the document.

"Q. Did you at any time give him the bonds? A. I gave him the bonds under the condition that he would give me once the document, and he said he would.

"Q. Did he ever do that? A. He has never given me a document and has just gone off with them."

Plaintiff testified that, later, when she asked for these bonds so that she could borrow money upon them to pay federal taxes, defendant claimed they belonged to him.

[1] It is unnecessary to go into further detail regarding the record. The defendant traveled about with the plaintiff, gathering unto himself as he went her income checks, her capital, her automobile and even her furs and jewelry. During all this time he was managing everything for her, attending to her business and her traveling arrangements, and planning for her future. The record abundantly supports the conclusion that he undertook to hold this property for her use and benefit and expend it according to her directions. He spent large sums of money on himself, and even when he was away from plaintiff demanded $400 a month for his personal living expenses. He succeeded in using up all plaintiff's income, for which no recovery is had in the judgment appealed from. He now seeks to retain her bonds, automobile and jewelry upon his testimony and that of members of his family that they were gifts to him.

[2, 3] As to the judgment in the alternative, awarding the value of the property to plaintiff in the event it could not be returned to her, the court gave judgment for the par value of the bonds, which was some evidence of their value, and defendant offered no testimony to show that the market value was less than the face value. As to the automobile, the defendant testified that it had cost $5,385. He told plaintiff that he could resell it for about $2,000, and the court has allowed plaintiff $1,500 as its value.

There is no prejudicial error in the record, and if plaintiff collects the amount of this judgment from the defendant partial justice only will have been done her. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.

201 Cal. 357

In re BALLELIO'S ESTATE.

BALLELIO v. PONTRELLI.

(L. A. 9223.)

Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1927.

1. Wills $\S$ 96—Instrument containing testamentary distribution without reference to son, and on reverse side beneficiary's promise to pay son money, held valid testamentary instrument (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1307).

Writing containing testamentary disposition of estate on one side without reference to child, and on the other side promise by sole beneficiary to pay testator's son \$1,000, held properly construed as testamentary instrument, in which testator intentionally omitted to provide for son because of beneficiary's promise, notwithstanding Civ. Code, $\S$ 1307.

2. Wills $\S$ 384—Where testimony is not brought up, reviewing court will assume it supported order admitting will to probate.

Where no testimony in will contest is brought to reviewing court in aid of appeal, it is justified in assuming that trial court heard such evidence as would furnish support for its order admitting will to probate.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Emma Ballesio, deceased. Proceeding by John Ballesio, Jr., by his guardian ad litem, contestant, against Ignazio Pontrelli, administrator with the will annexed, proponent. From an order admitting the will to probate and from an order refusing distribution to contestant, he appeals. Affirmed.

George D. Home, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Turnbull, Heffron & Kelly, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Ernest M. Torchia, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

WORKS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from an order admitting the will of Emma Ballesio to probate and from an order refusing to distribute her estate to John Ballesio, her son.

[1] The writing admitted to probate as a will was executed on both sides of a piece of paper. On one side was the following, preceded by a date line:

"I, Emma Ballesio, being of sound mind wish to dispose of my property consistin of one lot at Monterey Calif and one hous and lot located at 2627 Loosmore St Los Angeles Calif and all my othore property and personal and real to Ignazio Pontrelli, to him I give and bequeatch everything.

"[Signed] Emma Ballesio
"Bettie F. Turner
"John Visconti"

On the reverse side of the sheet was the following:

"I Pontrelli Ignazio
"I agree to deposit one thousand dollars $1,000.00/100 in the bank for John Ballesio son of Emma Ballesio same pay to him when he will be 21—twenty-one years of age

"Emma Ballesio
"Bettie F. Turner
"John Visconti"

The contest filed by appellant was based on grounds which were disposed of by findings of the trial court adverse to the allegations of the contest.

It is contended by appellant, as a question of law arising upon the face of the will, that the trial court "erred in its interpretation of the document admitted to probate as the will of Emma Ballesio in holding that the reverse side of said document with the writing thereon constituted a testamentary instrument." It is said in support of this contention:

"The language appearing on the face of the instrument is a clear and unqualified testamentary disposition of the entire estate of deceased to one Ignazio Pontrelli, while on the reverse side of the same instrument appears an unambiguous and unequivocal statement by Pontrelli Ignazio agreeing to do an act himself."

It will be observed, however, as the decedent left a son surviving her, that the "face" of the instrument was incomplete as a testamentary disposition of her estate, for the reason that the son is neither there provided for, nor is an intention there shown to omit to provide for him. The son is mentioned only on the reverse side of the paper. Section 1307 of the Civil Code reads, in part:

"When any testator omits to provide in his will for any of his children, * * * unless it appears that such omission was intentional, such child * * * has the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate."

It will be observed, also, that here the name of the testatrix and the names of the subscribing witnesses were subscribed to the matter appearing on each side of the paper. This is a material circumstance in determining whether both sides of the paper, taken together, were intended to constitute the will of the testatrix.

[2] Further, no record of testimony is brought to us in aid of the appeal, and we are therefore justified in assuming that the trial court heard such evidence as would furnish support for its order admitting the will to probate. Both sides of the questioned paper were offered for probate, and the trial court found "that said instrument and all thereof, offered as the will of Emma Ballesio, is the will * * * as one document." We may assume, in support of the finding, for instance, that there was evidence that the testatrix declared to the subscribing witnesses that both sides of the paper constituted her will.

The entire document bears the reasonable construction that the testatrix, because of the promise of Pontrelli to pay $1,000 to her son, intentionally omitted to provide for him in the will. Section 1307 of the Civil Code is thus satisfied.

Orders affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, O. J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

83 Cal. App. 415

RICHARDSON v. O'HANRAHAN et ux.
(Civ. 3272.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 26, 1927.

Rehearing Denied June 25, 1927. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 25, 1927.

1. Dedication ⇨19(1)—Plat need not be made by owner to constitute offer to dedicate street.

To constitute offer to dedicate land for street, it is not essential that plats should be made by owner.

2. Dedication ⇨19(5)—Making sales with reference to another's plat is sufficient dedication.

It is a sufficient offer to dedicate land for street that the owner of the land recognizes and approves plat made by another, making sales with reference thereto.

3. Evidence ⇨460(9)—"Official," in deeds referring to official town map, subsequently filed, may be treated as surplusage, and map identified by parol evidence.

Use of word "official," in deeds referring to official town map, filed after execution of deeds, may be treated as surplusage, and map referred to identified by parol evidence.

4. Dedication ⇨44—Identity of town map, referred to in deeds and former owner's recognition, approval, and dedication of streets delineated thereon, held sufficiently shown.

In action to enjoin obstruction of street and recover damages, evidence held to warrant inference that grantors of town lots referred to only map in their possession or shown to be in existence by use of term "official map" in deeds, and that corporation, through which defendant deraigned title to obstructed part of street, recognized, approved, and dedicated to public use streets delineated on such map.

5. Dedication ⇨35(1), 37—Direction to place town map in county road book, expenditures in improving part of streets delineated, and public user, held acceptance of dedication.

County supervisors' direction to place town map in county road book, designation of street delineated thereon as county roads, and expenditure of public funds in improving part thereof, together with their use by public, constituted sufficient acceptance of landowner's offer to dedicate streets to public use; improvement or use of whole area of street being unnecessary.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨671(7)—Lot owner, whose access to street was shut off by obstruction, sustained special damage, entitling her to sue for injunction.

Lot owner, whose access to street was shut off by obstruction therein, held entitled to sue for injunction; her damage differing in kind, as well as degree, from that sustained by public in general.

7. Municipal corporations ⇨671(5)—Lot owner could sue to enjoin obstruction of street to center thereof as presumptive owner (Civ. Code, §§ 831, 1112).

Lot owner held entitled to sue for injunction against, and damages by, obstruction extending from her property line to center of street; presumption being that she owned to center of street under Civ. Code, §§ 831, 1112.

8. Easements ⇨17(4)—Deed referring to map subsequently filed gave grantee private easement in adjoining streets delineated thereon.

Deed of lots by reference to map gave grantee private easement in adjoining streets delineated thereon, though it was not filed for record until after execution of deed.

9. Easements ⇨61(7)—Widow of grantee in deed referring to map could sue, as owner of private easement, to enjoin obstruction of adjoining street delineated thereon.

Widow of grantee of lots by deed referring to map held entitled to sue for injunction against, and recovery of damages by, obstruction of adjoining street delineated thereon, as owner of private easement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; George L. Jones, Judge.

Action by S. M. Richardson against T. O'Hanrahan and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Prewett & Chamberlain, of Auburn, C. F. McGlashan, of Truckee, and Theodore W. Chester, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Cooke & Stoddard, of Reno, Nev., and Nilon & Nilon, of Nevada City, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Judgment was entered herein enjoining the defendants from obstructing High street in front of the plaintiff's residence near the westerly end of block G in the town of Truckee, and for damages in the sum of $100. The defendants have appealed from the judgment.

As stated in appellants' opening brief, "there is little or no dispute as to the material facts." The defendants claim ownership of the part of High street in question under a quitclaim deed from Paul M. Doyle, whose claim of title was based on a quitclaim deed from the Pacific Improvement Company. Plaintiff's residence is upon lots 1, 2, and 3; being the first three lots at the westerly end of block G. These lots were conveyed to plaintiff's husband, now deceased, and to whose title the plaintiff has succeeded, by a deed executed by Charles Crocker April 6, 1883, in which deed the property is described as follows:

"All that real property situated in the town of Truckee * * * known and described on the official map of said town as lots numbers one, two and three in block G."

No map of the town of Truckee was filed in the office of the county recorder until July 15, 1890, and no other map thereof was filed thereafter until June 3, 1901. The court found that the map filed July 15, 1890, "is the official, and only official, map of said town of Truckee and of that section of the town of Truckee embracing the premises in controversy; that for many years prior and down to July 15, 1890," and since that time, "all, or practically all, of the deeds conveying lots in said section of the town of Truckee referred to said map, and described the lot or lots sold by and with reference to said map; * * * that the actual width of said High street at all times has been, and now is, the same as delineated and shown upon said official map filed July 15, 1890; * * * that * * * prior to July 15, 1890, a public street then designated and at all times since known as High street, was duly and regularly laid out, dedicated as a public street, and abandoned to the public as such, by the owner of the land affected thereby; * * * that about 20 years ago, the people of the town of Truckee, assisted by the board of supervisors of said county of Nevada, at substantial expense, caused to be set apart and constructed along the line of intersection of said High street with the easterly line of Spring street a side path about 5 feet wide; that on account of the steep grade of said side path, a series of ten granite steps were cut and laid in one of the steepest portions of said path for the permanent use of plaintiff and other residents of that section of the town of Truckee, and that about the same time plaintiff and her husband, now deceased, at their own expense, caused an iron railing to be affixed to said granite steps for the convenience and security of pedestrians using the same."

Relative to the acts of which the plaintiff complains, the court found:

"That on or about May, 1921, defendant T. O'Hanrahan wrongfully and unlawfully, and for the purpose of vexing, annoying, and preventing plaintiff from reaching her said premises on High street by her usual and accustomed pathway of travel, entered upon said High street and upon that portion thereof fronted by plaintiff's said dwelling house and in close contact with the front line of plaintiff's said premises, and upon and within the exterior boundaries of plaintiff's said lots from her said property line to the center of said High street, and did wrongfully and unlawfully make thereon an excavation about 5 feet deep on the northerly side of said street and in contact with plaintiff's said property line, and said excavation being about 50 feet long easterly and westerly, and about 20 feet wide, and on the southerly and lower side of said excavation did wrongfully throw up excavated material consisting of rocks, boulders, and earth, making a fill from 8 to 10 feet high, * * * and tore out and destroyed a portion of said side path and removed and carried away eight of said steps, so that plaintiff and other pedestrians have been compelled to abandon the use thereof; * * * that, by reason of the acts of said defendant, * * * plaintiff's view of a portion of the business section of the town of Truckee, which she had previously enjoyed, has been greatly obscured and cut off, the rental value of her said property has been largely diminished, she has lost tenants for said property, and she has suffered inconvenience in being deprived of the use of said side path and steps, all to her damage in the sum of $100; * * * that said High street between Spring and Bridge streets * * * was traveled and used by the public generally for a long time prior to July 15, 1890, as well as all the time since said date, with the knowledge of, and without objection of owners of the land affected thereby."

From the map referred to, which was introduced in evidence by the plaintiff, it appears that block G is 875 feet in length, and is bounded on the south by High street and on the east and west ends thereof by Bridge and Spring streets, respectively. That part of High street lying south of block G is about 160 feet wide at the east line of Spring street and 42 feet in width at the west line of Bridge street. A traveled roadway, referred to in the testimony of the county surveyor as being of "the width of * * * the wheel tracks," runs along the northerly side of High street, between Bridge and Spring streets, cutting into the southerly ends of some of the lots in block G and being entirely on plaintiff's lots, near the north line of High street, at the west end of the block. A roadway of similar character extends from the intersection of the east line of Spring street and the south line of High street to about the center of the south line of block G, there connecting with the roadway first mentioned. Both of these roadways have been used by the general public at all times since the year 1872. The triangle bounded by these two roads and the east line of Spring street is the land claimed by the defendants. It lies on a steep hillside over which vehicles are unable to travel in its present condition; the roadway in front of plaintiff's dwelling being about 80 feet higher in elevation than a point opposite thereof in the south line of High street.

April 18, 1870, a patent was issued by the United States to Central Pacific Railroad Company for the section of land in which the town of Truckee is located. June 9, 1870, that company conveyed the land to Charles Crocker. August 14, 1871, Crocker conveyed it to the Contract & Finance Company, which company reconveyed it to Crocker October 26, 1875. October 6, 1888, the land was conveyed to the Pacific Improvement Company by Leland Stanford, Collis P. Huntington, Mary F. S. Searles (formerly Mary F. S. Hopkins), the executors of the last will of Charles Crocker, deceased, and others. The deed recited that "title to the property * * * was vested in Charles Crocker, who held the same for the benefit of himself, Leland Stanford, Collis P. Huntington, and Mary F. S. Hopkins in equal shares of one fourth each, * * * for the sole purpose of facilitating conveyances and leases," that Stanford, Huntington, and Mary F. S. Searles each owned one-fourth of the capital stock of the Pacific Improvement Company, and that the surviving wife and children of Charles Crocker, deceased, owned the other one-fourth thereof. The map herein-before referred to is indorsed, "Filed at request of C. P. R. R. Co. July 15, 1890 at 10 min. past 11 o'clock a. m. A. B. Brady, Recorder." April 8, 1892, the supervisors of Nevada county adopted a resolution ordering that "the county surveyor place the map of the streets of Truckee now on file in the recorder's office in the road book of the county." The map was so placed, with the following indorsement: "Townsite of Truckee, surveyed by the C. P. R. R. Co. Filed by request of the Hon. Board of Supervisors on Friday April 8, 1892." The minutes of the board of supervisors of January 10, 1893, contain the following:

"On motion and by order of the board, the roads in the several townships of the county are hereby designated as follows: * * * Meadow Lake. Division No. 1. Streets in town of Truckee."

May 10, 1902, the Pacific Improvement Company executed and delivered a quitclaim deed to Paul M. Doyle, purporting to convey to him "all of the land bounded on the north by High street, on the east by Bridge street extended, on the south by lots on the north side of Main Street East, and on the west by Spring street." Main street is the next street south of and parallel with High street. March 30, 1920, Doyle executed a quitclaim deed to defendant Lillian E. O'Hanrahan, purporting to convey to her the triangular parcel of land in question here. The defendants contend that the roadway along the south side of block G and a strip of land alleged to be 42 feet wide through which such roadway runs constitute the whole of High street, while the plaintiff claims that High street includes all the territory shown on the map as such.

Appellants contend that they are entitled to a reversal of the judgment on four grounds as follows: (1) That the filing of the map on July 15, 1890, at the request of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, did not constitute an offer to dedicate the streets shown thereon to public use, because that company then had no interest in the property; (2) that "it was not permissible to show by parol that a certain map in San Francisco was the one referred to in the various deeds as the 'official map' of Truckee"; (3) that, "if any offer of dedication was ever made, it was not accepted"; (4) that the findings "show an obstruction in a public street which is a public and not a private nuisance and a private individual cannot abate it."

[1, 2] To constitute an offer to dedicate land for a street, "it is not essential that the plat should have been made by the owner of the land; it is sufficient that he recognizes and approves a plat made by another making sales with reference thereto." 18 C. J. 60; Logan v. Rose, 88 Cal. 263, 267, 26 P. 106; People v. Laugenour, 25 Cal. App. 44, 51, 142

P. 888. In Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 643, 648, it is said:

"In dedication no particular formality is necessary; * * * it may be made either with or without writing, by any act of the owner; * * * the dedication being proved in most, if not all, of the cases, by matter in pais, and not by deed. The vital principle of the dedication is the intention to dedicate. * * * If accepted and used by the public in the manner intended, the dedication is complete. * * * Dedication, therefore, is a conclusion of fact, to be drawn by the jury from the circumstances of each particular case."

"The offer of the owner to dedicate may be manifested in a hundred different ways; and the acceptance of the offer by the public may be manifested in a like number of ways." City of Los Angeles v. Kysor, 125 Cal. 463, 466, 58 P. 90, 91; Venice v. Short Line Beach Land Co., 180 Cal. 447, 450, 181 P. 658; County of Inyo v. Given, 183 Cal. 415, 418, 191 P. 688; People v. Laugenour, supra; Mulch v. Nagle, 51 Cal. App. 559, 566, 197 P. 421; Ferguson v. Oildale Mut. Water Co. (Cal. App.) 248 P. 256.

[3] Between 1868 and October 6, 1888, Crocker executed numerous conveyances of town lots in the town of Truckee. During the succeeding 12 years the Pacific Improvement Company made many conveyances of lots therein. These deeds refer to "the official map" of the town in describing the property conveyed thereby. Such use of the word "official" may be treated as surplusage in the deeds executed prior to the filing of the map, and the map referred to in the deeds may be identified by parol evidence. 9 Cal. Jur. 305; Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) §§ 1016-1018; Leonard v. Osburn, 169 Cal. 157, 146 P. 530, 532.

[4] Lewis Tasheira, a witness for the plaintiff, testified that he was employed by the Pacific Improvement Company from 1893 to 1915; that during that time he had access to the records of the company; that in the course of his employment he "had occasion to examine and refer to the maps and plats" in the possession of the company; that one of such maps was the same as the one here in question. On cross-examination, he testified as follows:

"Q. Do you know when that map came into the possession of the Pacific Improvement Company? A. No; I couldn't say. I think that was made during his (Crocker's) administration. Q. That is, the original map? A. Yes. * * * Q. You think this map, referring to Exhibit A in the deposition, correctly shows the courses and distances and the metes and bounds of what it purports to represent as they were set forth on the map which was on file in the office of the Pacific Improvement Company? A. I think so, without a doubt. Q. During the time of your employment in the office from 1893 until 1915, did you see any other map than the original of which this purports to be a copy? A. I never saw any other map."

There is no evidence tending to show that either Crocker or the Pacific Improvement

Company ever had possession of any map of the town of Truckee other than the map of which the one filed July 15, 1890, is a copy. It is not to be presumed that the term "official map," appearing for so many years in conveyances of town lots, was undesignedly used. While the evidence is not as satisfactory as might be desired, it is a fair inference therefrom, in the absence of contradictory evidence, that, by the use of the term "official map," the grantors referred to the only map in their possession or shown to be in existence. This inference is strengthened by the fact that, after the map was filed in the office of the county recorder, and after the supervisors had ordered it placed in the road book of the county and had designated the streets of the town as county roads, the Pacific Improvement Company, in its deeds, continued to refer to "the official map" of the town. These facts, together with the other facts enumerated, warrant the inference that the company recognized and approved the map and dedicated to public use the streets delineated thereon.

[5] The direction to place the map in the road book of the county, the designation of the streets as county roads and the expenditure of public funds in the improvement of a part thereof, together with the use thereof by the public, certainly constituted a sufficient acceptance of the offer of dedication. It was not necessary that the whole area of the street should have been improved or used to make the acceptance complete. Santa Ana v. Santa Ana Val. Irr. Co., 163 Cal. 211, 219, 124 P. 847.

[6, 7] The damage suffered by plaintiff from the obstruction in the street differed in kind as well as in degree from that sustained by others, particularly in that her access to the street was shut off. Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, 152 Cal. 118, 121, 92 P. 70, 125 Am. St. Rep. 47; Gardner v. Stroever, 89 Cal. 26, 29, 26 P. 618. See, also, Fisher v. Zumwalt, 128 Cal. 493, 61 P. 82; Johnson v. V. D. Reduction Co., 175 Cal. 63, 164 P. 1119, L. R. A. 1917E, 1007. Further, it is presumed that plaintiff owns to the center of the street. Civ. Code, §§ 831 and 1112. The court found that the obstruction of which complaint is made was "upon and within the exterior boundaries of plaintiff's said lots from her said property line to the center of said street." It appears, therefore, that the obstruction was upon land owned by the plaintiff, subject only to the use thereof as a public street.

[8, 9] Regardless of any question of dedication to public use, the sale of the lots to the plaintiff's husband, under the circumstances stated, gave the grantee a private easement in the adjoining streets delineated on the map referred to in the deed, notwithstanding the fact that the map was not filed for record until after the execution of the deed. Eltinge v. Santos, 171 Cal. 278, 283, 152 P. 915, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 1143. Plaintiff's action could have been maintained and judgment given in her favor on the basis of such easement.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; THOMPSON, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 455

PHENIX ASSUR. CO., Limited, OF LONDON
v. SALVATION ARMY. (Civ. 4347.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. May 28, 1927.

Charities §45(2)—Charitable corporation is liable as any other for servant's negligent operation of automobile for its purpose in city.

A charitable corporation is liable as any other corporation for injuries to third persons inflicted by its servant's negligent operation of an automobile in proceeding about the city for the purpose of engaging in the religious and charitable work which it is the corporation's object to perform.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by the Phoenix Assurance Company, Limited, of London, against the Salvation Army, for damages for personal injuries. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Floyd L. Anderson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Voltaire V. Perkins, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, P. J. This is an action to recover damages inflicted upon plaintiff's assignors by the negligent operation of an automobile by a servant of defendant. Judgment went for plaintiff and defendant appeals.

It was stipulated at the trial that appellant is a charitable institution, and the record shows that at the time of the occurrences out of which the action arose the driver of the automobile was proceeding from one city to another for the purpose of engaging in a part of the religious and charity work which it is the object of appellant to perform. Appellant contends for a reversal of the judgment on the ground that, because of the purposes for which it exists, and because of the trust character of the funds which are at its disposal, it is exempt from that liability which would attach to a business or profit-making corporation in the situation which appellant occupies under the facts of the present litigation. Upon the question thus suggested the cases in the other states of the Union are in hopeless irreconcilability, and the decisions of the jurisdictions which are ranged on the respective sides of the controversy exhibit a width of discussion which has practically exhausted the subject. The line of reasoning on one side is, we think, strained and unconvincing, although the cases which follow it reach back to a greater antiquity than do those which support the opposite view. The courts of this state have never espoused either side of the discussion, for the exact question has never arisen here. The present case is one of first impression in California.

The states which have aligned themselves with the view which supports the contention of appellant, or at least some of them, are indicated by the following list of cases, in which is contained the last pronouncement, as far as we can discover, of the courts of each jurisdiction: Parks v. Northwestern University, 218 Ill. 381, 75 N. E. 991, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 556, 4 Ann. Cas. 103; Loeffler v. Trustees of Sheppard Hospital, 130 Md. 265, 100 A. 301, L. R. A. 1917D, 967; Zoulalian v. New England Sanitorium, 230 Mass. 102, 119 N. E. 686, L. R. A. 1918F, 185; Whittaker v. St. Luke's Hospital, 137 Mo. App. 116, 117 S. W. 1189, but see reservation in the opinion upon the question whether a charitable institution would be liable for damages occasioned by an act of negligence committed in a public street; O'Neill v. Odd Fellows' Home, 89 Or. 382, 174 P. 148, but note that the decision there rendered was based upon statutory enactment; Vermillion v. Woman's College, 104 S. C. 197, 88 S. E. 649; Gamble v. Vanderbilt University, 138 Tenn. 616, 200 S. W. 510, L. R. A. 1918C, 875, but observe that the rule there stated as settled in the jurisdiction did not apply to the facts of the case decided; Bachman v. Young Women's Christian Association, 179 Wis. 178, 191 N. W. 751, 30 A. L. R. 448. An opinion touching similar questions and presenting a similar view is to be found in Woman's Christian Library Association v. Fordyce, 74 Ark. 621, 86 S. W. 417.¹ It has been decided in some cases that charitable institutions which are governmental agencies are not liable for damages caused by the torts of their servants. See Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 361, 122 N. W. 631, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 133 Am. St. Rep. 387; Fire Insurance Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. 624, 15 A. 553, 1 L. R. A. 417, 6 Am. St. Rep. 745; Wildoner v. Central Poor District, 267 Pa. 375, 110 A. 175. These last cases, we think, present a question different from that here under consideration.

One or two quotations will serve to show the reasoning of the decisions generally which support the contention made by appellant here.

"An institution of this character, doing charitable work of great benefit to the public without profit, and depending upon gifts, donations, legacies and bequests made by charitable persons for the successful accomplishment of its beneficial purposes, is not to be hampered in the acquisition of property and funds from those wishing to contribute and assist in the charitable work, by any doubt that might arise in the minds of such intending donors as to whether the funds supplied by them will be applied to the purposes for which they intended to devote them, or diverted to the entirely different purpose of satisfying judgments recovered against the donee because of the negligent acts of those employed to carry the beneficial purpose into execution." Parks v. Northwestern University, supra.

In one of the outstanding opinions on the subject the court said:

"The exemption of public charities from liability in actions for damages for tort rests * * * upon grounds of public policy, which forbid the crippling or destruction of charities which are established for the benefit of the whole public to compensate one or more individual members of the public for injuries inflicted by the negligence of the corporation itself, or of its superior officers or agents, or of its servants or employees. The principle is that, in organized society, the rights of the individual must, in some instances, be subordinated to the public good. It is better for the individual to suffer injury without compensation than for the public to be deprived of the benefit of the charity. The law has always favored and fostered public charities in ways too numerous to mention, because they are most valuable adjuncts of the state in the promotion of many of the purposes for which the state itself exists. That being so, what difference can it make whether the tort is that of the corporation itself or its superior officers and agents, or that of its servants? Liability for the one would as effectually embarrass or sweep away the charity as the other. It would, therefore, be illogical to admit liability for the one and deny it for the other. This rule does not put such charities above the law, for their conduct is subject to the supervision of the court of equity; nor does it deny an injured person a remedy for his wrong. It is merely an exception to the rule of respondeat superior, which is itself based on reasons of public policy. The injured person has his remedy against the actual wrongdoer. It is said, however, that he may be and often is financially irresponsible. But the answer is that the law does not undertake to provide a solvent defendant for every wrong done. There are many cases of wrongful injury not compensated, because the wrongdoer is insolvent. The head of a family is liable for the torts of his servants; but you cannot take his homestead and break up his family to satisfy a judgment against him, either for his own or for his servant's torts. Public policy says it is better for the individual to suffer the injury uncompensated than for the state to suffer the evil consequences of having the homes and families of its citizens destroyed. The state is likewise most deeply interested in the preservation of public charities. Questions of public policy must be determined upon consideration of what on the whole will best promote the general welfare." Vermillion v. Woman's College, supra.

¹ Reported in full in the Southwestern Reporter; not reported in full in Arkansas Reports.

Here are some of the adjudications which stand in opposition to the contention made by appellant: Bruce v. Central Church, 147 Mich. 230, 110 N. W. 951, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 74, 11 Ann. Cas. 150; McInerny v. St. Luke's Hospital, 122 Minn. 10, 141 N. W. 837, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 548, but note that the effect of this decision is somewhat impaired by the remarks at the close of the opinion: Hordern v. Salvation Army, 199 N. Y. 233, 92 N. E. 626, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 62, 139 Am. St. Rep. 889; Kellogg v. Church Charity Foundation, 203 N. Y. 191, 96 N. E. 406, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 481, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 883; Basabo v. Salvation Army, 35 R. I. 22, 85 A. 120, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1144; Armendarez v. Hotel Dieu (Tex. Civ. App.) 145 S. W. 1030; Hospital of St. Vincent v. Thompson, 116 Va. 101, 81 S. E. 13, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1025.

It is said in the opinion in one of the cases last cited:

"The doctrine that the will of an individual shall exempt either persons or property from the operation of general laws is inconsistent with the fundamental idea of government. It permits the will of the subject to nullify the will of the people. Nor can I conceive any ground upon which a court can hold that effect can be given to that will when it relates to property devised or conveyed for the purpose of a charitable trust. Such a holding must rest upon the argument that the advantages reaped by the public from such trusts justify the exemption; that is, as implied to this case, the advantages to the public justify defendant's exemption from liability for wrongs done to individuals. If this argument is sound—and its soundness may be questioned, for there are those who will deny that the advantages to the public justify the wrong to the individual—it should be addressed to the legislative, and not to the judicial, department of the government. It is our duty as judges to apply the law. We have no authority to create exemptions or to declare immunity." Bruce v. Central Church, supra.

In an opinion which contains an exhaustive review of the authorities the court concludes:

"In view of the principles above set forth, this court is of the opinion that both upon reason and upon authority, so far as the cases directly apply to the case at bar, the defendant corporation, although it is a charitable corporation, is liable, as any other corporation, for injuries to third persons caused by the negligence of its servants and agents in the care and management of its horses and teams while employed for its purposes. * * * We believe that public policy does not require any such exemption from liability as is claimed by the defendant in this case, but on the contrary that such exemption would be contrary to true public policy. * * * It would, in our opinion, be manifestly unjust and contrary to public policy to hold that a person run over and injured on a public highway by a horse and wagon belonging to the defendant and driven by the defendant's servant, through the negligent acts of such servant, would not be entitled to recover against the master, but could only recover against the negligent servant; while a person injured under similar circumstances by the servant of an expressman, or the driver of a cab belonging to a liveryman, would be allowed to recover against the master. There is no reason or logic in the attempted distinction between the servant of the defendant and the servant of any other person or corporation." Basabo v. Salvation Army, supra.

Another decision, contains the following:

"This defendant, it appears from the evidence, conducted its affairs for the combined purposes of revenue and charity; the former being, in the religious aims of the members, subordinated to the latter as the ultimate object. But independently of this, had this corporation derived no revenues from its operations, and the funds which enabled it to carry on its benefactions were derived, not from its beneficiaries, but from endowments or contributions, it would not in our opinion make a particle of difference in its attitude to the law with reference to its legal duties and liabilities to persons in its service as employes. It was an incorporated body, chartered by its own volition, endowed with power to employ servants, and with the capacity to sue and to be sued. It was not in any sense an agency of the state, nor has the legislature seen fit to extend to such corporations exemption from the well-known duties and liabilities imposed by the general law governing master and servant. This being so, defendant would be liable for injury sustained by its employee due to the negligence, if any, of itself, its managing officers, or agents or vice principals, which is the case presented here." Armendarez v. Hotel Dieu, supra.

In an excellent opinion, filed in one of the cases which adheres to the doctrine for which appellant contends, a dissenting justice said:

"The Young Women's Christian Association has been a powerful factor for good in every civilized community. To my mind it is repulsive to the very idea underlying the organization and its purpose to make claim to or grant immunity, especially where an injury is sustained through the negligence of a servant of the association by a stranger. What reason is there for immunizing an association of this kind on account of the negligence of its servants, and placing the entire consequences of an injury upon an innocent third person or upon the family of such injured person? The doctrine of responsibility for negligence is not solely based upon the doctrine of compensation, but has its primary source in a desire on the part of the public to secure careful and reasonable conduct. This latter doctrine is made applicable to nearly all the affairs of life, and it has resulted in raising the standard of human conduct. Any other doctrine leads to carelessness, neglect, and injury to mankind and property. For an association like the defendant to claim immunity from the negligence of its servants is like a minister of the gospel pleading the statutes of limitations to avoid the payment of a just obligation. I think it is wrong in principle, is not in accordance with the prevailing doctrine in this country, and is not conducive to human welfare, and should not receive the sanction of this court." Bachman v. Young Women's Christian Association, supra.

We thoroughly agree with the view taken by the courts which adhere to a doctrine contrary to that upon which appellant asks for a reversal of the judgment against it, and we can add but little to what they have said in their reasoning upon the question. The courts which have declared for the exemption of a charitable institution from liability for torts of which strangers to the charity are the victims, have shown an unnecessary solicitude for the welfare of such organizations and of their beneficiaries. They have assumed dangers to the administration of charities which do not exist, or which are so paltry as to furnish no adequate ground for the exemption from liability which they declare, with its attendant injury to those suffering damages from torts, or to their families. It is not at all likely that prospective donors to charities will withhold their benefactions merely because the institutions to which they contemplate donations may be compelled to render that justice which the law exacts from other corporations. Certainly, if any are thus held back they will be so few in number as not seriously to imperil the administration of charities generally. Then, too, the depletion of the funds which are actually subscribed to charities, through a refusal to allow the exemption, will be inconsiderable when the amounts necessary to pay judgments for damages are compared with the amount actually devoted to the purposes for which charitable organizations are formed—that is, if the activities of all such organizations be considered together.

We are much impressed with the reasoning in one of the above quotations which is based upon the evident purpose of the law of torts to secure careful conduct on the part of those handling instrumentalities which, because of a lack of such conduct, may become engines of destruction. We think this state should not be added to the list of those whose courts have encouraged—as in some degree they surely have—the agents of charitable institutions to render less than due care for the security of life, limb and property, the very things which it is the sole purpose of such institutions to preserve and protect.

Counsel expend much time in their briefs in considering the effect upon the present litigation of the opinions in Thomas v. German Benevolent Society, 168 Cal. 183, 141 P. 1186, and Stewart v. California Medical Association, 178 Cal. 418, 176 P. 46. Whatever the effect of those opinions may be in proper cases—for they are opposed to each other—they have no bearing here. The expressions in them to which counsel refer are concerned with the question of the liability of charitable institutions for damages inflicted upon those who voluntarily become beneficiaries of the charities administered by such institutions—those, for instance, who become free patients in charity hospitals—and suffer injury through the negligence of the servants of the institutions. It is well settled, with practically no dissent, that in such cases the institutions are not liable, if, at least, they have been careful in the selection of the servants. Under practically all the authorities such a question is very different from the one here presented.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; JOHNSON, Justice pro tem.

83 Cal. App. 470

SCHNIER v. PERCIVAL et al. (Civ. 4636.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. May 31, 1927.

1. Brokers ⇨96—Authority to negotiate sale of real property does not authorize collection of purchase price.

Authority to negotiate sale of real property does not carry with it any express or implied authority to collect, as agent for owner, money on account of purchase price named in negotiations.

2. Brokers ⇨99—Liability, if any, of owner of property to one purchasing from agent, believing agent was owner, is that of undisclosed principal.

Where purchaser of real estate from agent of owner did not know true owner, but supposed that agent owned property, recovery of purchase price from true owner after agent disappeared with payment on purchase price must be as from undisclosed principal; there being no question of ostensible agency.

3. Brokers ⇨106—In purchaser's action against landowner for payments to agent whom plaintiff thought was owner, evidence held to support finding of agreement authorizing agent to receive payments.

In action by purchaser against owner of land for payments made to owner's agent whom purchaser believed to be true owner, evidence held to support finding that there was oral agreement between owner and agent authorizing agent to receive payments.

4. Brokers ⇨103—Landowner's knowledge that agent was collecting payments from purchasers and demanding accounting ratified collection.

Knowledge by landowner that agent was collecting payments from purchasers, and demand of accounting therefor, ratified acts of agent in collecting such payment, and made owner liable as undisclosed principal.

5. Principal and agent ⇨117(1)—Agent's authority to collect money need not be in writing.

Authority given to agent, selling real estate for principal, to collect money, is not required by law to be in writing.

6. Principal and agent §171(7)—Agency to sell real estate may be created by "subsequent ratification" by retaining benefits (Civ. Code, §§ 2307, 2310).

Agency to sell real estate may be created by precedent authorization or by "subsequent ratification," but subsequent ratification can be made only in manner necessary to confer original authority, or, where oral authorization would suffice, by accepting or retaining benefits in view of Civ. Code, §§ 2307, 2310.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Subsequent Ratification.]

7. Brokers §8(2)—Broker's acts, justifying inference that principal knew of them and would not have permitted them if unauthorized, are competent evidence of agency.

In determining whether broker, authorized to sell real property, had authority to accept payments, his acts, which were of such nature and so continuous as to justify reasonable inference that principal knew of them and would not have permitted them if unauthorized, are competent evidence of agency.

8. Principal and agent §145(2)—Contract of agent, not disclosing principal's name, is contract of principal.

Contract of agent, who deals in his own name without disclosing that of his principal, is contract of principal.

9. Brokers §106—Purchaser, suing vendors for payments to absconding agent, need not show vendor's specific knowledge of particular payments.

In purchaser's action against vendors to recover payments made to agent, who subsequently disappeared with part of purchase price, plaintiff was not required to prove specific knowledge of defendants as to particular payments, in view of proof of defendants' general consent and approval of agent's receipt of payments from purchasers.

10. Brokers §88(14)—Finding that money was paid to agent as agent of vendors, with their consent and approval, held finding that agent was authorized to collect money for vendors.

In purchasers' action against vendors for payment to absconding agent, finding that money was paid to him "as the agent of the said defendants as aforesaid, with the consent and approval of said defendants," held sufficient, when considered with findings as whole, to constitute finding that agent was authorized to collect money in capacity of agent for defendants.

11. Evidence §249(1)—In action against vendors for payment to absconding agent, owners held bound by statements and conduct of joint owner who conducted negotiations.

In action against vendors to recover payments made to absconding agent, defendants held bound by statements and conduct of joint owner, who actively conducted business between defendants and agent, notwithstanding that title to property stood in name of another as trustee and contract binding agent as selling agent was signed by trustees.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Schnier against J. Phil Percival and others, associated together and doing business under the style and firm name of the Percival-Fallis Syndicate; J. Phil Percival and Eugene P. Fallis, trustees. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Stephens & Stephens, Chandler P. Ward, and Carroll Searls, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. I. Gilbert, Milton Bryan, and Burton Briggs Crane, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff brought suit to recover the purchase price paid by plaintiff to H. B. Eshleman, doing business under the style and firm name of H. B. Eshleman Realty Company, for certain real property which was owned by defendants and which was being sold by Eshleman as the agent of defendants. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and defendants appeal therefrom.

Appellants were joint owners of certain real estate; the title being in the name of appellants J. Phil Percival and Eugene P. Fallis as trustees for all of the owners. According to the testimony of respondent's witness Raven, appellant Roberts, as part owner and agent of the other owners, approached the Eshleman Realty Company on the subject of taking over as agents and selling various lots in the tract of real estate. Subsequently J. Phil Percival and Eugene P. Fallis, as trustees, entered into a contract with H. B. Eshleman Realty Company for the sale of the lots described therein; the contract being as follows:

"Mr. J. Phil Percival and E. P. Fallis, trustees of that certain real property hereinafter described, and having full and due authority, do hereby make, constitute, appoint and employ the H. B. Eshleman Realty Company of 345 South Hill street in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, for a period of six months from the date hereof, as sole and exclusive agents for the sale of the unsold lots situate, lying and being in that certain tract of land lying and being in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, designated and known as tract No. six hundred thirty-five (635), sheet No. two (2), according to the official map and plat of said tract of record in the office of the county recorder of said county of Los Angeles.

"The schedule of prices for which said lots shall be sold are as follows, to wit: (Here follow lot numbers and prices.)

"The terms of the sale of said lots shall be as follows, to wit: 25% of the total sales price to be in cash. The balance of the purchase price of each of said lot or lots to be evidenced by a promissory note payable in six equal semi-annual payments, with interest upon all unpaid balances at the rate of seven per cent. (7%) per annum payable quarterly. Such promissory note to be secured by a trust deed upon the lot or lots so sold.

"As commission and as compensation for services to be performed by the said H. B. Eshleman Realty Company in effecting the sale of said lots, they shall be allowed a commission of 25% of the total sale price of each lot, to be paid in the manner following:

"Seventy per cent. (70%) of each payment made on account of the purchase price of said lots as the same is made in cash until the full amount of said commission shall have been paid.

"Purchasers of any of said lots shall be allowed a five per cent. (5%) discount from the total sales price if paid in cash, the H. B. Eshleman Realty Company thereupon to be entitled to their full commission.

"Percival-Fallis Syndicate,

"By J. Phil Percival, Trustee.

"By Eugene P. Fallis, Trustee.

"H. B. Eshleman Realty Company,

"By H. B. Eshleman, Pres."

Thereupon Eshleman entered into the performance of the contract. A sales campaign was put on. Respondent, with others, was conveyed to the tract in a bus of the Eshleman Company. Respondent agreed to purchase one of these lots, and as first payment delivered to J. J. Wright, Eshleman's employee, a check for $362.50, payable to H. B. Eshleman Realty Company, and received therefor a receipt signed, "H. B. Eshleman Realty Co., by J. J. Wright." Respondent was assured by Wright that she would be given a cash discount of 5 per cent. for cash payment on the lot, and thereafter issued her checks for the balance due on the purchase price, payable to H. B. Eshleman Realty Company, and was given a receipt therefor as follows:

"No. ——. Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 9/21.

"Received of Elizabeth Schnier checks for one thousand and fifteen and no/100 dollars, Bal. in full on lot 16, block P, tract 635, checks for $700—Fifty-Third Natl. Bank of Cincinnati. 315.00 Secy. Tr. and Savings Bank, L. A. $1,015. H. B. Eshleman Realty Co.,

"By F. J. Raven."

Eshleman disappeared, and none of the money was received by appellants. Plaintiff thought that Eshleman owned the property, and did not know defendants in any connection until after Eshleman had disappeared.

Appellants' first point is that the contract in legal effect, gave Eshleman only the power to negotiate a sale and no power to enter into a contract of sale binding on the defendants. As that is not the question at issue, appellants' authorities in support of this contention are beside the point. The issue in this case is whether Eshleman had authority to accept payments of money on the contract so as to permit recovery of such payments from the defendants, although Eshleman did not turn the money over to the defendants.

[1] Appellants' second point is that—

"An owner of real property, who has employed a broker to negotiate a sale, is not answerable as principal to a third party, who has deposited with the broker a part, or the whole, of the purchase price. In other words, authority to negotiate a sale does not carry with it any express or implied authority to collect as agent for the owner money on account of the purchase price named in the negotiations."

[2] The rule of law as thus stated is conceded by respondent to be correct, and is well settled. Hicks v. Wilson, 197 Cal. 269, 240 P. 289; Gold v. Phelan, 58 Cal. App. 472, 208 P. 1001. It is held in these cases that the authority of a real estate broker is only to produce a purchaser who is willing to contract with the seller upon terms described, that such a broker has no authority to accept money from the purchaser and to conclude the sale, and that, when the purchaser pays money into the hands of a broker, in such a case the broker holds it as the agent of the purchaser and not of the seller, and any misappropriation thereof is the loss of the former and not of the latter. This rule, however, was not applied in the case of Hicks v. Wilson, supra, for the reason that under the facts of the case there was held to be an ostensible agency. Each of the foregoing cases was a separate transaction, in which the buyer knew he was dealing with the agent for the sale of the owner's property, and therefore the buyers were put upon inquiry to ascertain the selling agent's power to receive payments of money. In the case at bar, the plaintiff did not know the owner of the property and supposed the Eshleman Company to be the owner; there being nothing in the language of the receipts issued by the Eshleman Company to indicate they were acting as agents for others. In the case at bar, there were many transactions, and it is not to be presumed that no similar payments were made in plaintiff's presence. As will appear from the evidence, these payments were received by the Eshleman Company with the knowledge and consent of the owner, and further knowledge that the receipts therefor were being issued in the name of the Eshleman Company. The question of ostensible agency does not enter into the decision of the instant case, for the reason that the plaintiff had no communication with the defendants and did not know of their existence during the entire transaction. Neither did plaintiff deal with Eshleman as an ordinary agent, but rather as a principal; she having paid the purchase money to Eshleman as the owner of the land and believing him to be such owner.

If there is any liability on the part of appellants for payments made by respondent to the agents, it is that of an undisclosed principal. As we have observed, no such liability could arise on a written contract authorizing the agent to sell the real estate. Respondent urges that his liability arises out of a separate oral contract, as pleaded and proved by the plaintiff. The complaint alleges:

"That subsequent to the execution of the said agreement on the part of the said defendants and the said H. B. Eshleman Realty Company, as aforesaid, and in negotiating the sale of said real property described in said agreement, the said H. B. Eshleman Realty Company and the said H. B. Eshleman, and each of them, received of and from the prospective purchasers of said real property, partial and full payments of the purchase prices of the respective lots sold to the respective purchasers thereof, and thereupon issued to said prospective purchasers, for the said payments upon the purchase price of said lots, receipts for the payment of said moneys. Plaintiff further alleges that the moneys paid to and received by said H. B. Eshleman Company and H. B. Eshleman by the respective purchasers of the lots described in said agreement were paid to and received by H. B. Eshleman Company to and for the use and benefit of said defendants and each and all of them; * * * that it was thereafter agreed and understood by and between said defendants and the said H. B. Eshleman Company that the said H. B. Eshleman Company and said H. B. Eshleman should have the right to receive and collect and issue receipts for any and all moneys paid by prospective purchasers as partial or whole payments upon the purchase price of said property described in said agreement; and that, in accordance with that understanding, the said H. B. Eshleman Company and H. B. Eshleman did receive and take and issue receipts for partial and whole payments of purchase prices paid by various purchasers for said lots described in said agreement."

Respondent urges that the testimony of appellant Roberts is sufficient to support the findings of the court in accordance with the above allegations. Roberts, when questioned by the court, testified as follows:

"Q. You expected them to receive money if they made a sale? A. Why, they were naturally acting as the agent to dispose of the property. Q. And as such were entitled to receive the first payment? A. Naturally. * * * Q. But they were authorized to receive the full amount from the purchaser and from that take their 25 per cent.? A. Yes; they would have been entitled to do it."

Roberts further testified that he knew Eshleman was receiving payments on the lots, and that, when the Eshleman Company received the 25 per cent. payment, they were supposed to place it in escrow in their department, and then call upon the owners for a contract or a deed in case the money was all paid. Dr. F. J. Raven, sales manager of the Eshleman Company, as a witness for plaintiff, testified that Roberts came into his office frequently during the sales campaign, that he advised Roberts that lots were being sold and that the Eshleman Company was taking in money on the sales, and that from and after the execution of the written contract it was the custom of the Eshleman Company to receive the money. J. J. Wright, sales manager of the Eshleman Company, testified that appellants Roberts and Fallis were at the office of the Eshleman Company while he was engaged in selling appellants' land; that Roberts was at the tract nearly every day, and that the witness had a conversation with Roberts at the office respecting the sale of the property nearly every day; that Roberts would ask how many sales were made that day and "approximately how much cash"; and that he would tell Roberts that on the ground where the property was being sold. The witness further testified:

"Mr. Roberts had a conversation with me on one occasion either in the latter part of January or the beginning of February, 1921, and the question came up as to the statement that Mr. Roberts had been trying to get from the Eshleman Company all moneys that had been received on properties sold. He said something to me about it, and I said: 'Well, why don't you demand it?' 'Well,' he said, 'I have been after him for a week or two to give me a statement, and I have not been able to get it out of him.' And he says: 'How much money have you received?' I says: 'I don't know, but you see I am getting it every day, and you know that we are selling lots, and it is up to you to demand it and get your statement.' I know that Mr. Roberts saw a form of the receipt issued by H. B. Eshleman Company, and in the same form as Exhibit No. 1. We had half a dozen receipt books on the tract at all times, and I showed him receipts two or three times. At the time I had this conversation with Mr. Roberts in respect to the manner in which I was selling lots and accepting money, Mr. Roberts never made any objection to me about accepting money. He knew it was a general rule to do it."

The witness also testified that Roberts was present in the office on the tract when some of the receipts were issued, but made no objection. Appellants Roberts, Percival, and Fallis testified that there was no contract between the owners and the Eshleman Company besides the written contract herein mentioned.

[3-8] It thus appears that the evidence offered by plaintiff tends directly to the conclusion that a separate oral agreement existed whereby the Eshleman Company was authorized to receive payments. Where other payments were received with the knowledge and consent and without the objection of the defendants, defendants cannot be permitted to deny that the payment in the case at bar was made with their consent and to deny the existence of a separate oral agreement. Where an undisclosed principal permits his agent to hold himself out as the real principal and thereby defraud others by the collection of money, the undisclosed principal will not be permitted to deny the existence of an agreement authorizing such collections in his behalf as against innocent third persons. Defendants, knowing that Eshleman was collecting payments and demanding an accounting therefor, ratified the acts of Eshleman in collecting such payments, and were liable as undisclosed principals. Authority to collect money is not required by law to be in writing. An agency may be created by a precedent authorization or by a subsequent ratification. Section 2307, Civ. Code. Subsequent ratification can be made only in the manner that would be necessary to confer original authority, or where an oral authorization would suffice, by accepting or retaining the benefit of the act with notice thereof. Section 2310, Civ. Code. In the case at bar, the evidence tends to show that defendants accepted and retained the benefit of Eshleman's act in collecting the money by demanding an accounting for all moneys so collected. It appears from the evidence in the case that defendants knew the general custom of Eshleman to collect payments and issue receipts in his own name, and, by failure to object, acquiesced in this conduct. Where the acts are of such a nature and so continuous as to justify a reasonable inference that the principal knew of them and would not have permitted them if unauthorized, the acts are competent evidence of agency to be submitted to the court or jury. Reynolds v. Collins, 78 Ala. 94. The fact that the principal with knowledge recognizes and acquiesces in the performance of the authority in a certain manner or to a certain extent, is ordinarily competent evidence that execution in that manner or to that extent was authorized. Usually, of course, no inference of recognition or acquiescence can be drawn unless it appears that the alleged principal had knowledge of what had thus been assumed in his name or on his account; but this knowledge need not be expressly shown. The act done may have been so public or notorious, or so closely related to the alleged principal, that he could not be heard to say that he was ignorant of it. Mechem on Agency, §§ 265, 266. The facts, moreover, may be so patent that for the principal to profess ignorance would be merely to stultify himself. They may be so obvious that the principal as a reasonable man cannot be heard to say that he was ignorant of them. Mechem on Agency, § 405; Ballard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 588, 72 P. 156. The rule is well established that the contract of an agent who deals in his own name, without disclosing that of his principal is the contract of the principal. 1 Cal. Jur. p. 856, § 133; Geary St., etc., R. R. Co. v. Rolph, 189 Cal. 59, 64, 207 P. 539, and cases cited; Central Savings Bank v. Coulter, 72 Cal. App. 78, 87, 236 P. 956. We conclude that under the circumstances in this case the evidence is sufficient to require us not to disturb on appeal the finding of the trial court that, at the time the moneys were paid by plaintiff to the Eshleman Company, it was agreed and understood by and between defendants and the Eshleman Company that Eshleman Company did have the right to receive and collect and issue receipts for moneys paid by prospective purchasers as partial or whole payments upon the purchase price of property, and that said moneys were paid to the Eshleman Company for the use and benefit of defendants.

[9] Appellants' third and fourth points have been already disposed of in our decision that there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of the trial court that there was an actual contract authorizing the Eshleman Company to collect money, and the defendants were liable as undisclosed principals, although the plaintiff dealt with Eshleman in his own name and did not know the defendants were the owners. The agency was actual and not ostensible, and the evidence was sufficient to support the finding that Eshleman Realty Company accepted all payments, including that of the plaintiff, with the consent and approval of the defendants. Where there was proof of such general consent and approval, plaintiff was not required to prove specific knowledge of defendants as to the particular payments made to Eshleman by plaintiff.

[10] By point 5, appellants contend that there was no finding or allegation that Eshleman was authorized to collect the money in the capacity of agent for the defendants. Finding X states that the money was paid to Eshleman "as the agent of the said defendants as aforesaid, with the consent and approval of said defendants." We think this finding, taken together with the findings as a whole, is sufficient to meet the objection of the appellants, and that the finding is supported by the allegations of the complaint.

Finally, appellants urge that the court erred in various rulings in the admission of evidence; such evidence being the checks made payable to Eshleman and the receipts signed by Eshleman. As these objections are based upon the contention that the relation of principal and agent between Eshleman and defendants has not been established, we will not engage in further discussion of the point raised on the objections.

[11] Appellants' contention that the other defendants should not be bound by the statements and conduct of Roberts is not well founded. Roberts was a joint owner with the other defendants and actively conducted the business between defendants and Eshleman, although the title to the property stood in the name of Percival as trustee, and the contract binding Eshleman as selling agent was signed by them as trustees.

For the reasons stated, it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

83 Cal. App. 555

COHN v. LEFFINGWELL et al.
(Civ. 4474.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. June 3, 1927.

1. Evidence ⇨383(9)—Map filed by grantors 20 years after deed held of no evidential value.

Map filed in recorder's office by grantors some 20 years after execution of deed held of no evidential value in suit to quiet title.

2. Dedication ⇨20(2)—Land used as highway for 40 years, with owner's acquiescence, and improved as such, held "dedicated to public use."

Land used as highway by public generally for 40 years, with knowledge and acquiescence of patentee's grantee, who was paid for performing work thereon, and improved by county as road, and by town after its incorporation as street, held "dedicated to public use."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Dedication.]

3. Quieting title ⇨44(3)—Evidence of dedication of street and plaintiff's possession and ownership of abutting lot held to show non-existence of adjacent lot.

Evidence, in action to quiet title, that land was dedicated to public use as street, and that plaintiff and her predecessors were in possession and ownership of land immediately abutting on south for over 40 years before commencement of action, held to show that there was no land north of her lot from which lot claimed by defendant could be carved.

4. Evidence ⇨383(7)—Deed of lot, running north from another lot, and then west, parallel with street, held to show nonexistence of lot north thereof.

Deed describing lot conveyed as running 100 feet north from line of another lot, parallel with certain street, and 100 feet west, parallel with another street, held to show that there was no land north of grantee's lot from which grantors could carve lot described in subsequent deed to another, especially in view of their prior deed of lot described as 100 feet south of northern line of lot conveyed by second deed.

5. Adverse possession ⇨106(4)—Lot owner had title to adjacent sidewalk area in his and predecessors' continuous possession for over 40 years, subject to town's easement.

Title in fee to sidewalk area, of which owner of adjacent lot and his predecessors were continuously in possession for over 40 years, would be in him, subject to easement vested in town for street purposes.

6. Quieting title ⇨44(2)—Assessment lists, referring to map filed by grantors 20 years after executing deed, held inadmissible in action to quiet title.

In action to quiet title, assessment lists, referring to map filed by plaintiff's predecessors in title some 20 years after they conveyed land, held properly excluded from evidence as incompetent and immaterial; being purely negative evidence, and not connected with any map recognized by law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by Esther Cohn against W. H. Leffingwell and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arnold Praeger and William A. Sumner, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. H. Swallow, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant Leffingwell from a judgment adverse to him and quieting plaintiff's title to the real property in controversy.

In 1868 the government of the United States patented to William Hyer the fractional northwest quarter of section 7, township 7 south, range 33 east, in the district of lands subject to sale at Stockton, Cal. In 1869 Hyer conveyed the same land to John B. Clarke, the predecessor in interest of both plaintiff and defendants. In 1880 Clarke and wife conveyed a portion of this land to Briggs, who, in turn, in 1888, conveyed the same parcel of land to Cohn, the husband of the plaintiff in this action. The description common to both of the deeds immediately hereinbefore mentioned is as follows:

"Commencing at the north line of the saloon lot known as J. M. Horton's saloon and running thence north and parallel with the main street in the town of Bishop Creek, one hundred (100) feet; thence west and parallel with the schoolhouse street one hundred (100) feet to the line of said saloon lot formerly owned by J. M. Horton; thence east and along the line of said saloon lot one hundred (100) feet to the place of beginning."

The present action is one by the plaintiff, the widow of Cohn, the grantee named in the last foregoing deed, to quiet her title to the lot of land described as follows:

"Commencing at the southwest corner of the intersection of West Line street, formerly known as Schoolhouse street, with Main street in said town of Bishop, and running thence north eighty-nine degrees (89°) and thirty minutes (30') west one hundred and two/one-hundredths feet (100.02 ft.) along said West Line street; thence south one hundred nine and six-tenths feet (109.6 ft.); thence north eighty-nine degrees (89°) and twenty-six minutes (26') east one hundred feet (100 ft.) to said Main street; thence north along Main street one hundred seven and seventy-five one-hundredths (100.75) feet to the place of beginning."

[1-3] The defendant, Mary A. Clarke, surviving wife of John B. Clarke, hereinbefore mentioned, has been served with summons, and, having failed to appear and answer, her default was duly entered. Some 20 years after the deed by Clarke and wife to Briggs, a map was filed by the Clarkes in the office of the county recorder of Inyo county in which they certify: "I hereby certify that the above is a true map of what the title of said map claims it to be." This so-called map in law has no evidentiary value, and is only referred to because of the fact that there is delineated on said map a lot, 23 and a fraction feet in width, upon which appears the name of John Clarke, which said lot is placed north of the lot owned by the plaintiff and between that lot and School or West Line street. It is this lot that is claimed in this action by the defendant Leffingwell as the grantee of the Clarke interest. When Briggs purchased from Clarke he erected a store building on the northerly side of the lot. When Cohn came into possession of the lot as grantee of Briggs he built a sidewalk on the north side of the building as well as on the Main street side. The evidence is overwhelming that at all times subsequent to the erection of the Briggs store and down to the present time all the land north of that building and between it and a lot known as the Black lot on the opposite side of School or West Line street was used as a road, street, and highway by the public generally, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the Clarkes. The road and street was improved by the county as a road and by the town of Bishop after its incorporation as a street, and Clarke, the grantee of plaintiff's predecessor, was employed to perform labor, and did perform labor, and was paid for performing work and labor thereon. The testimony relied upon by appellant as negating this state of facts is so meager and inconsequential that it does not raise a doubt in the mind of an impartial investigator as to the utter lack of merit in the appellant's contention in this respect. Under this state of facts and the law applicable thereto there can be no doubt that this land was dedicated to a public use during all these years. The evidence is equally conclusive that the plaintiff and her predecessors have been in the possession and ownership of the land immediately abutting on this street for a period of more than 40 years next preceding the commencement of this action. From this the conclusion is inevitable that there could be and was no land north of plaintiff's lot out of which could be carved the Leffingwell lot. We believe that the foregoing discussion is determinative of this case.

[4] However, we feel that the same result obtains from a fair consideration and construction of the Clarke deed to Briggs. It will be observed that in this deed the first course runs 100 feet north from the line of the Horton saloon lot, and, as he states, parallel with Main street and 100 feet west, and, as he states, parallel with School street, which street was subsequently known as West Line street. No one questions the fact that the word "parallel" as used with reference to the course on Main street meant, and the parties intended it to mean, 100 feet along the property line of that street. Why should any different meaning be given to the word in distinguishing the course along School street? Clarke named this street in his deed, and designated the course the same as he had done on Main street. In this connection it may also be mentioned that as early as 1872 Clarke initiated proceedings before the supervisors of Inyo county to dedicate a street 60 feet wide which ran along the north side of the quarter section hereinbefore described. Whether this dedication was ever consummated in accordance with the requirements of law is not disclosed by the record. The record does not disclose by legal or satisfactory evidence the exact location of the line of the Horton lot from which the first call in the deed to Briggs was started. Neither is there anything in the record to indicate the exact location of the northern quarter section line or the corner of the northwest quarter of said section 7. The record does show, however, that in the deed from Clarke to Hoover, who was the predecessor of Horton, the Horton lot is described as follows:

" * * * All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land, situate, lying and being in the town of Bishop Creek, county of Inyo, state of California and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit: Fifty (50) feet fronting on the west side of the Main street and one hundred (100) feet in depth, said lot being about one hundred (100) feet south of the northeast corner of the fence on the northwest quarter of section number seven (7) township number seven (7) south, range number thirty-three (33) east."

[5] This is extremely significant in view of the language in the deed from Clarke to Briggs on a course along Main street 100 feet from the Horton line. The Horton lot is described as being 100 feet south of the quarter section line, clearly indicating that it was the intention of the parties and their understanding that there was no more than 100 feet intervening between the Horton line and the quarter section line. There can be no doubt that the extreme northerly limit of Clarke's land was the northerly line of this northwest quarter, and that he owned no land north of or beyond that line. The deed to Briggs conveyed a lot 100 feet square situated on the northeast corner of that particular quarter section. His deed to Hoover conveyed a lot 100 feet south of the northern line of that section. These are Clarke's declarations in his deeds, and there is no evidence in the record definitely or at all impeaching this status as made by him. It definitely shows what the parties intended to accomplish and what they actually did effectuate. It seems to us that this amounts to a practical demonstration that the Clarkes owned no land north of the Cohn lot from which to carve the land described in the Leffingwell deed. There appears to be a few feet more than the 100 feet called for by the original deed in the engineer's draft of a description as contained in the amended complaint. This, no doubt, arises from the fact that the description was probably taken to include the sidewalk area on the north of the Cohn store, the title to which, of course, in fee would be in the plaintiff, subject, however, to the easement vested in the town of Bishop for street purposes. The plaintiff and his predecessors have been continuously in possession of this sidewalk area, subject to the undoubted rights of the inhabitants of the town of Bishop to use the same for street purposes.

[6] Complaint is made by appellant that the court excluded assessment lists of the Cohn property over a period of years, which referred to the so-called Clarke map. The offered evidence was purely negative in character, not connected with any map recognized by law, and was properly excluded; it was incompetent and immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

83 Cal. App. 485

SARGENT et al. v. JAEGLING et al. ★
(Civ. 5801.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. June 1, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 28, 1927.

1. Adjoining landowners ⇨—Landowner has no interest in title to adjoining lot, because of right of lateral support (Civ. Code §§ 801, 802, 832).

Plaintiffs, because of their right as owners of land adjoining defendants' land of lateral support of land in its natural state, have no interest in the title to defendants' lot, such right being a natural right, and not an easement, and not resting in grant, express or implied, but being one of the owner's enjoyments of property incident to his ownership, and so far as it may be said to be a right in land being a right in the supported land, and not in the supporting land, and the common-law rule not being changed or enlarged by Civ. Code § 832, and the right not being one of the easements or servitudes permitted by sections 801, 802, but section 801, subd. 13, by including in the enumeration of easements the right of receiving more than natural support from adjacent land, emphasizing the exclusion therefrom of the ordinary right of support.

2. Quieting title ⇨10(1)—Landowner, because of right to lateral support of land in natural state, cannot maintain action to quiet title to interest in adjoining land.

Landowner, merely because of right to lateral support of his land in its natural state, cannot maintain action to quiet title to interest in adjoining land, having no interest in the title.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by George Clark Sargent and another against Julius P. Jaegeling and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

George Clark Sargent, of San Francisco, for appellants.

August L. Fournier, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment following an order sustaining defendants' demurrer to their amended complaint without leave to amend. The complaint purports to state a cause of action to quiet title, and deals with the rights of adjoining landowners.

The allegations in the complaint are as follows: Plaintiffs are the owners of a 25-foot sand lot on Lake street designated as lot A. Defendants own the 25-foot sand lot called lot B, immediately east and adjoining lot A. No buildings have ever been erected on either lot. Plaintiffs, as owners of lot A, have "an interest" in lot B to the extent of a right defined by specifications of plaintiffs' rights as abutting landowners to defendants. In stating defendants' alleged adverse claim, the complaint alleges that defendants "claim that these plaintiffs have no right of any kind in said parcel B, and that they, said defendants, own said parcel B free and clear of all interest of the plaintiffs therein to said lateral and subjacent support and abutment right."

The prayer is that it be decreed that plaintiffs or their successors have a perpetual right in parcel B to the extent of lateral and subjacent support of the soil of A by the soil of B and a right therein as an abutment for parcel A; that, in case defendants remove any portion of B furnishing support to A, said defendants or their successors in interest will be under the duty of simultaneously and permanently supporting the soil of lot A in its present and natural state, etc., and for such other relief as may be just and in accordance with law.

The complaint also alleges that within two years last past the defendants have permitted excavations to be made, not on B, but on the lot east of B, whereby the surface of B has caved off in such a manner that in one place the easterly line of natural level of A has receded one foot six inches, depth not stated; that, by reason of the passage of persons over said parcels A and B, and by reason of the action of the elements, the easterly line of the natural surface level of A will continue to be broken down, etc. Appellant disclaims any desire to sue for damages for tort, and so we need not point out the insufficiency of the complaint in that respect. But it should be noticed in passing that defendants are not charged with having excavated their own lot, but with permitting the landowner on their east side to excavate that lot.

Respondents state that a lis pendens was filed against lot B by appellants. The record does not show it, but the complaint is of a nature to indicate that such might be done. It is apparent that plaintiffs claim an interest in lot B. They do not seek to quiet title to their own lot, but to their neighbors' lot.

[1] Conceding them all the rights due them as landowners adjoining defendants' land B, nevertheless they have no interest in the title to lot B. The right of lateral support of land in its natural state is a natural one, and is not an easement. It does not rest in grant express or implied, but is one of the owner's enjoyments of property incident to his ownership. Humphries v. Brogden, 12 Adolph. & Ellis (N. S.) 739, 64 Eng. Law Rep. 738; Solomon v. The Vintners' Company, 4 H. & N. 585, 157 Eng. Reprints, 970; Gale on Easements, c. 6; Tiffany on Real Property (2d Ed.) §§ 335, 345, 346. So far as it may be said to be a right in land, it is a right in the supported land, not in the supporting land. 4 Harvard Law Review, 15; 13 Harvard Law Review, 664, 665, 667.

The common-law rule was not changed or enlarged by the adoption of Civil Code section 832. Sullivan v. Zeiner, 98 Cal. 346, 33 P. 209, 20 L. R. A. 730. This right is not one of the easements or servitudes permitted or enumerated by Civil Code, §§ 801 and 802. These sections, however, do include in the enumeration of easements the right of receiving more than natural support from adjacent land. Civ. Code, § 801, subd. 13. This emphasizes the exclusion of the ordinary right to support. It is in accord with the common law that the right to the support of a building could be acquired by grant or prescription, but not the right to the support of land in its natural state.

Appellant cites two California cases which refer to this right as an incident to the land or to the plaintiffs' ownership: Green v. Berge, 105 Cal. 52, 57, 38 P. 539, 45 Am. St. Rep. 25; Aston v. Nolan, 63 Cal. 269, 272. The expression has even been used that a landowner has an interest in the adjoining land for lateral support of his soil. This expression is not to be understood as a declaration that he has an interest in the title to his neighbor's land. While the right is an incident to the ownership of land, it is an incident to one's own land, not his neighbor's. It is his right to enjoy his own land free from trespass and injury.

[2] We conclude that the demurrer was properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

257 PACIFIC REPORTER

201 Cal. 327

TAYLOR et al. v. COLE et al. (S. F. 12485.)

Supreme Court of California. June 8, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨46—Concurrent resolution of Legislature ratifying charter amendments held conclusive as to contents of charter and performance of acts adopting resolution (Const. art. 11, § 8).

Legislature's adoption of concurrent resolution ratifying amendments to city charter pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 8, was conclusive to extent of placing beyond courts any further inquiry as to contents of charter and performance by Legislature of acts necessary to adoption of concurrent resolution thereon.

2. Statutes ⇨286—Legislative act, properly authenticated, conclusively establishes due performance of steps requisite to its passage.

An act of the Legislature properly enrolled and authenticated conclusively establishes, not only the contents of the law, but due performance of all steps requisite to its passage by the Legislature.

3. Evidence ⇨31—Municipal charter amendment, ratified by concurrent resolution of Legislature, constitutes "legislative enactment," of which courts take judicial notice (Const. art. 11, § 8).

Amendment to municipal charter pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 8, ratified and approved by concurrent resolution of the Legislature, constitutes legislative enactment, in that it has effect of repealing general laws of state inconsistent therewith, and courts are required to take judicial notice of its provisions.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨46—Conclusion of Legislature, by resolution approving charter amendment, that election was regular, may not be questioned in court, in absence of fraud (Const. art. 11, § 8).

Conclusion of Legislature, as expressed by concurrent resolution approving and ratifying amendment to city charter pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 8, that election had thereon was regular, is not open to question in court proceedings, in absence of fraud; Legislature having duty of seeing that proceedings were regular in all respects, and to withhold ratification if jurisdictional defects existed.

5. Municipal corporations ⚡46—Citizens or officials may not question validity of charter amendment ratified by Legislature pursuant to certification of adoption (Const. art. 11, § 8).

Existence and validity of amendment to city charter under Const. art. 11, § 8, are not open to question by individual citizens or officials of such city after approval and ratification by concurrent resolution of the Legislature pursuant to proper certification showing adoption of amendment by regular proceedings.

In Bank.

Original application for writ of mandate by Clayton R. Taylor and others, prayed to be directed to Franklin B. Cole and others, members of the Board of Directors of the City of Pasadena, and another, to compel canvassing of election returns. Writ granted.

John Perry Wood, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Milton H. Silverberg, of Los Angeles, M. C. Sloss and Sloss & Ackerman, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Petitioners, each a resident and elector of the city of Pasadena, had their names, by regular proceedings to that end had, placed on the ballot as candidates for the office of director under the charter of said city at the general election held therein on April 7, 1927.

They allege that at said election each received the requisite number of votes for election to their respective offices; that defendants are incumbent members of the board of directors of said city who have neglected and refused to comply with the requirements of said charter which direct the canvassing of the returns of said election and declaring the result thereof; and that by their failure so to act petitioners are kept from their respective offices, and defendants are unlawfully holding over as incumbents of same. In fairness it should be stated that the acts of defendants as a board are controlled by four incumbents who are directly affected by the election, and some of the others at least are not participating in the action being taken by the majority. Petitioners, with a strong showing that public welfare of the city and its people is involved, have asked for a writ of mandate to compel said incumbent directors as said board to canvass the returns of said election and declare the result thereof.

The sole legal question involved is in reality the degree of strength and the radius of influence which attaches to a concurrent resolution of the two houses of the Legislature approving and ratifying charters and amendments to charters of cities which have availed themselves of the benefits of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution, which section in such behalf reads as follows:

“* * * If a majority of the qualified voters voting thereon at such general or special election shall vote in favor of such proposed charter, it shall be deemed to be ratified, and shall be submitted to the Legislature, if then in session, or at the next regular or special session of the Legislature. The Legislature shall by concurrent resolution approve or reject such charter as a whole, without power of alteration or amendment; and if approved by a majority of the members elected to each house it shall become the organic law of such city or city and county, and supersede any existing charter and all laws inconsistent therewith. One copy of the charter so ratified and approved shall be filed with the secretary of state, one with the recorder of the county in which such city is located, and one in the archives of the city; and thereafter the courts shall take judicial notice of the provisions of such charter.”

Amendments to existing charters are in all substantial respects in the same situation, and subject to the same procedure, as the original charters themselves.

Defendants assert that the general election of April 7, 1927, in said city was grounded solely upon some five certain alleged radical amendments to the charter of said city approved at an alleged special election held therein on November 2, 1926, and later certified to the Legislature, and in January, 1927, regularly ratified by appropriate concurrent resolutions of that body. But it is asserted that said underlying special election of November 2, 1926, was null and void by reason of the express failure of defendants themselves, as the board of directors of said city, to comply with a provision of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution requiring advertisement of a notice in a newspaper of general circulation, until the date fixed for the election, that copies of said amendments to said charter might be had upon application. It is not contended that any of the various other requirements were omitted. It is also necessary to state that defendants themselves, as the board of directors of said city, were charged with the duty of causing said special election of November 2, 1926, to be held, and with the further duty of seeing that all legal requirements with respect thereto were carried out and performed. If any requirement was omitted, the responsibility for such omission lies with them. There is, of course, no issue of fraud in any way involved in any of the election proceedings here to be considered.

As such board they duly canvassed the returns of said special election, and declared the said amendments adopted. Later, as required by law, the chairman of the said board and the city clerk duly and promptly certified to the state Legislature as follows:

"That in accordance with the provisions of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution of the state of California, on its own motion, the board of directors of the city of Pasadena, being the legislative body thereof, duly submitted to the qualified electors of the said city of Pasadena certain proposals for the amendment of the charter of said city to be voted upon by said qualified electors at the special municipal election held in said city on the 2d day of November, 1926, which said proposals were and each of them was in the words and figures as follows, to wit."

The certificate further recites that the amendments were "published and advertised in accordance with the provisions of section 8, article 11, of the Constitution"; that copies of the proposed amendments were printed in convenient pamphlet form; and that notice that they might be had was published "until the date fixed for the election," "and as required by law"; that the election was duly held, the result canvassed, and that a majority of the electors voted in favor of ratification. Thereafter the Legislature embodied said certificate, which contained copies of said amendments, in a concurrent resolution, and duly adopted the said resolution, which had for its preamble the following:

"Whereas, proceedings have been taken and had for the proposal, adoption, and ratification of five amendments hereinafter set forth to the charter of the city of Pasadena, a municipal corporation in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, as set out in the certificate of the chairman of the board of directors and city clerk of the said city of Pasadena, as follows, to wit."

An authenticated copy of said amendments to said charter was duly filed in the office of the secretary of state, in the office of the county recorder of the county of Los Angeles, and in the archives of said city of Pasadena. After ratification and approval of said amendments, the defendants, as the board of directors of said city, proceeded to act thereunder and duly called and caused to be held the general city election of Pasadena, which occurred on April 7, 1927. Indeed, four of the defendants were candidates to succeed themselves at said election. Since said date the said board has continuously failed, refused, and neglected, and now fails, refuses, and neglects, to canvass the returns of said election or to declare the result thereof. This action, as pointed out above, is based solely upon their own alleged failure to properly advertise, in the proceedings resulting in said special election, a notice in the newspaper for the period prescribed by law designating the place where printed copies of said amendments might be obtained.

No showing is made that these defendants did not know of this omission, if there was such, before certifying the result of said election to the Legislature, and no excuse is offered for not raising the question prior to the general election in the city had on April 7, 1927. That publication of such notice was deemed a necessary step is certain because it was duly certified that such publication had in fact been made for the period and in the manner that it is now alleged said act was not done.

[1, 2] Defendants freely admit that the adoption by the Legislature of the concurrent resolution ratifying said amendments was efficacious and conclusive to the extent of placing beyond the courts any further inquiry as to the contents of the charter and as to the performance by the Legislature of the acts necessary to the adoption of a concurrent resolution thereon. It is also conceded that an act of the Legislature, i. e. a statute, properly enrolled and authenticated, conclusively establishes, not only the contents of the law, but the due performance of all steps requisite to its passage by the Legislature. This is the general law, and has long been the rule of decision in this state. Sherman v. Story, 30 Cal. 253, 89 Am. Dec. 93, and County of Yolo v. Colgan, 132 Cal. 265, 64 P. 403, 84 Am. St. Rep. 41.

But defendants deny that in a proceeding for the ratification of a charter by the Legislature any statute or law is in fact enacted in the primary sense of that word. They also assert that, even if the resolution be in fact an enactment of a statute, it is not sufficient to foreclose legal judicial inquiry into the question as to whether or not mandatory jurisdictional steps were followed in the election which indorsed and proposed said charter amendments.

Petitioners, on the contrary, contend that the ratification by the Legislature, the deposit of an enrolled copy with the secretary of state, and the filing of a copy with the county recorder of the proper county, together with deposit of a copy in the archives of the city, clothed the charter amendments with all the dignity of an ordinary statutory enactment, and entitled them to all the verity and presumptions which attend and protect such statutes. Further, that, if this premise be conceded, it is without the power of the court by judicial inquiry to impeach the regularity of any of the special proceedings in said election, and the adoption by the Legislature of the certificate respecting the regularity of said special election foreclosed any further inquiry as to the validity of the steps taken therein.

Petitioners further contend that, confirming the amendments by resolution, after a consideration thereof, conclusively presupposes that the validity of said election proceedings was examined, proof taken thereon, and findings made that said election was in all respects regular; that in any event it is, not for defendants to complain of failure to observe all the requirements respecting said special election. As said amendments on ratification and filing become effective as such, quo warranto proceedings only would reach defects therein, and defendants are therefore without the right to invoke this extraordinary remedy which lies only in the name of the people of the state.

A careful consideration of the law applicable brings us to the firm conclusion that petitioners are correct in their contentions above noted, and that defendants are without any legal justification for the position they have taken.

[3] As noted above, section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution provides that such ratified charter "shall become the organic law of such city or city and county, and supersede any existing charter and all laws inconsistent therewith"; also that "thereafter the courts shall take judicial notice of the provisions of such charter." What element of the dignity of a statute is wanting? It has the effect of even repealing general laws of the state which may be inconsistent with it. The courts take judicial notice of its provisions, and it supersedes any other charter that the city may have had. With these distinct attributes, how can it be denied the verity of an ordinary legislative enactment? Failure in some instances to accord such verity to the charters adopted in this manner has been the seat of some of the confusion found in previous decisions of this court. If any authority other than the plain words of the Constitution is needed to give such a charter the rating of an act of the Legislature, it may be found in the following cases: Frick v. Los Angeles, 115 Cal. 512, 515, 47 P. 250; Clark v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 30, 45, 116 P. 722; Teachout v. Bogy, 175 Cal. 481, 485, 166 P. 319; and Spaulding v. Desmond, 188 Cal. 784, 790, 207 P. 896.

We then conclude without further comment that the ratification and promulgation of said charter amendments had all the essence of a plain legislative enactment. These views, of course, are admittedly in conflict with the pronouncement of this court in the early case of People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 238, 248, 24 P. 718, 720, where it was said:

"In this case the Legislature was not the lawmaker; it did not frame or pass the law. It simply passed a resolution approving it. It was not charged with any duty, and to it was not delegated any power, either in framing or adopting the law. Its act was not the enactment of a statute."

The doctrine of People v. Gunn, supra, however, on the point above noted and also upon the question as to the effect of the adoption of a concurrent resolution of the Legislature, has been considered in several other cases. In Ex parte Sparks, 120 Cal. 395, 398, 399, 52 P. 715, 716, it is said:

"This charter prescribes a rule of evidence for all the courts of the state, and extends its process throughout the state. It seems necessary that this should be so. In many respects its charter and its ordinances have force outside of the limits of the municipality. Yet it has been said that, in respect to the charter, 'the legislature is not the lawmaker; it did not frame or pass the law. It was not charged with any duty, and to it was not delegated any power, either in framing or adopting the law.' People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 238 [24 P. 718]. See, also, People v. Toal, 85 Cal. 333 [24 P. 603]. To this conclusion may be traced most of the complications and difficulties in regard to freeholders' charters, and it constitutes the embarrassment in this case.

"These cases were decided under the provisions of the Constitution as they then stood. The conclusions were reached after mature deliberation, and for the embarrassments which necessarily resulted ill-advised legislation was solely responsible.

"But the later amendments to the Constitution seem to have been adopted with a view to relieve from the embarrassment, so that I think that in the present condition of our state organic law the question should be deemed at least an open one. It is now expressly provided that the charter may be approved by concurrent resolution, and that then such charter 'shall become the organic law thereof'—that is, it is a special mode for the enactment of a law by the Legislature. It is clear that it is made a law by the Legislature, and becomes a law by this expression of the sovereign will of the state. It prevails and has force as a law of the state, and is not made a law by the people of the municipality by virtue of authority delegated to them. It is proposed by the municipality, and is accepted and passed into a law by the Legislature or rejected, as it shall see fit."

In Fragley v. Phelan, 126 Cal. 383, 403, 58 P. 923, 931, in a concurring opinion by Mr. Justice Temple, it is said:

"But I think we are neither authorized nor required to determine whether the municipal elections were duly and regularly conducted. That was settled by the Legislature when it enacted the charter into a law. This position is admitted in People v. Gunn, 85 Cal. 238 [24 P. 718] if the Legislature, as to the charter, is the lawmaking power. It is there said, however, that as to the charter the Legislature is not the lawmaking power. This question was again reviewed in Ex parte Sparks, 120 Cal. 395 [52 P. 715]; some of the justices, though not constituting a majority of the court, held that since an amendment was made to the Constitution, providing that the charter may be approved by joint resolution, such charter becomes the law of the state through the action of the Legislature. It was said: 'It prevails and has force as a law of this state, and is not made a law by the people of the municipality or by virtue of authority delegated to them. It is proposed by the municipality, and accepted and passed into law by the Legislature, or rejected as it shall see fit.' Many reasons additional to these stated in Ex parte Sparks, supra, might be given, but it is unnecessary, for all the attorneys in this case admit that such is the law—that the doctrine laid down in Ex parte Sparks, supra, is the true doctrine."

Ex parte Fedderwitz, 6 Cal. Unrep. 562, 565, 62 P. 935, 936, announces the same conclusion, where it was said:

"At the date of that resolution it was necessary that a city should have a population of at least 3,500 before it could frame a freeholders' charter (Const. art. 11, § 8, as amended in 1892), and it was the undoubted right and duty of the Legislature to ascertain the population of Berkeley before acting upon the proposed charter. This the Legislature did, and in the preamble to the resolution ratifying the charter it recited and proclaimed the fact that the town of Berkeley contained a population of more than 10,000 inhabitants. This resolution with the charter which it establishes is a law of the state, and is conclusive as to the fact so recited in the preamble."

The value of these cases is somewhat impaired by the fact that in neither of the three cases did four justices concur in both the opinion and judgment pronounced. It is also true that in Spaulding v. Desmond, 188 Cal. 783, 795, 207 P. 896, the court weakened the cases to some extent by failure to declare the case of People v. Gunn, supra, overruled on the point here discussed. But we are entirely satisfied with the reasoning in said above-mentioned cases, and hold that as to the point above discussed said case of People v. Gunn, supra, need no longer be followed. We do this with the more security because we feel that it necessarily follows from the doctrine early announced in this state that, where the existence of a fact is necessary to support the validity of a legislative enactment, it will be conclusively presumed in support of such enactment that evidence was heard and facts ascertained which authorized the Legislature to proceed. In other words, questions of law, only unmixed with questions of fact, will be considered in determining the validity of a legislative enactment.

In the case of Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 649, 652-653, 27 P. 1089, 1090 (14 L. R. A. 459, 25 Am. St. Rep. 230) this question was given careful consideration, and it was there said:

"We therefore hold, that in passing upon the constitutionality of a statute, the court must confine itself to a consideration of those matters which appear upon the face of the law, and those facts of which it can take judicial notice. If the law, when thus considered, does not appear to be unconstitutional, the court will not go behind it, and, by a resort to evidence, undertake to ascertain whether the Legislature, in its enactment, observed the restrictions which the Constitution imposed upon it as a duty to do, and to the performance of which its members were bound by their oaths of office."

Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, p. 187, states the rule as follows:

"If evidence was required, it must be supposed that it was before the Legislature when the act was passed, and if any special finding was required to warrant the passage of the particular act, it would seem that the passage of the act itself might be equivalent to such finding."

The rule above announced has been continuously applied in this state for many years, and this, too, where provisions of the Constitution were involved. For example, in People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 386, 103 P. 207, 214, the court said:

"Where the Legislature has itself spoken in the creation of a district such as this, and where the legislative determination may be deemed to depend upon a question of fact, it is conclusively presumed that the Legislature took evidence in its determination, and the decision which it has reached will not be subject to review by the courts. The latter will confine themselves exclusively to questions appearing upon the face of the statute itself. Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 649, 27 P. 1089 [14 L. R. A. 459], 25 Am. St. Rep. 230; Lewis v. Colgan, 115 Cal. 529, 47 P. 357; Smith v. Mathews, post [155 Cal.] p. 752, 103 P. 199. Says Judge Cooley (Constitutional Limitations, p. 220); 'If evidence was required, it must be supposed that it was before the Legislature when the act was passed, and if any special finding was required to warrant the passage of the particular act, it would seem that the passage of the act itself might be held equivalent to such finding.' This court has said, commenting upon this language: 'This view seems to be sustained by the decisions of the highest courts of other states and is in harmony with the central idea of the Constitution in prescribing the independence and equality of the three great departments of the state.' Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 649, 27 P. 1089 [14 L. R. A. 459] 25 Am. St. Rep. 230."

[4] In the case before us, the Constitution placed upon the Legislature the plain duty of seeing that the proceedings by which the charter amendments were proposed were regular in all respects. If jurisdictional defects existed, it was the duty of the Legislature to reject the documents tendered as a whole and withhold ratification. The Legislature saw fit to accept the certificate of the defendant board and such other evidence as it may have taken and its conclusion that the election was regular is not open to question in court proceedings, at least in the absence of fraud.

[5] We also hold that in any event the existence and validity of the said amendments are not open to question by defendants either individually or as the board of directors of said city. The admitted facts are that a proper certification showing adoption of said amendments by regular proceedings was made and forwarded to the Legislature. It is also without question that that Legislature adopted said amendments by proper concurrent resolution, and, as above stated, said resolution was duly enrolled and filed as prescribed by law. Thereafter any proceedings taken under said amendments were valid. This fact under all the authorities makes the integrity of said city election and the results thereof with absence of fraud free from any attack by individual citizens, property owners, or officials of said city. If this were not true, the sovereignty of any city operating under this provision of the Constitution could be questioned at any time or place when performing any corporate act. Indeed, the very existence of the city government could be questioned as in this case by those who have accepted the duty of directing its official course.

In Gray v. Cardiff Irr. Dist., 51 Cal. App. 304, 305, 306, 197 P. 389, it was said:

"This action was brought by plaintiff to have it determined that proceedings for the enlargement of defendant irrigation district were void, and that an assessment levied by the defendant district upon plaintiff's property, in consequence, was invalid. * * * The grounds alleged, generally stated, were that fraud had been committed by the promoters of the plan by which the boundaries of the original Cardiff irrigation district had been extended to include the land of the plaintiff and of others. * * * A demurrer was interposed to the complaint, and the point was urged, among others, that plaintiff had not the capacity to sue for the relief demanded, for the reason that an action such as this could only be maintained at the suit of the people of the state. The court sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal which followed."

In rendering judgment sustaining the demurrer, the court held:

"The district had at least a de facto existence, and that was enough to make it immune from an attack by an individual property owner or any number of such owners. * * * It calls into question the existence of the district itself and denies the right of the district to exercise its corporate authority over the annexed territory. Such a cause of action may only be maintained at the instance of the people of the state. Quint v. Hoffman, 103 Cal. 506 [37 P. 514, 777]; Reclamation Dist. v. Turner, 104 Cal. 334 [37 P. 1038]; Hamilton v. County of San Diego, 108 Cal. 273 [41 P. 305]; Keech v. Joplin, 157 Cal. 1 [106 P. 222]. In another case (People v. Cardiff Irr. Dist., post [51 Cal. App.] p. 307, 197 P. 384), which was properly brought as a quo warranto proceeding, we have considered the main questions affecting the same district, which is attempted to be raised on this appeal. As to this action, however, it is plain that the plaintiff has not the capacity to sue for the relief demanded." See, also, Coe v. City of Los Angeles, 42 Cal. App. 479, 183 P. 822.

In Quint v. Hoffman, 103 Cal. 506, 507, 37 P. 514, 515, it was said:

"Corporations organized under the act of the Legislature, popularly known as the Wright Act, being public corporations, it is immaterial whether they be corporations de jure or de facto. That is a matter which cannot be inquired into upon a collateral attack; and in a case like the present, where the validity of an assessment levied by such a corporation is the subject of litigation, the validity of such assessment does in no way rest upon the fact of the de jure character of the corporation. This principle must be considered settled law in this state. Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 411; Reclamation District v. Gray, 95 Cal. 601 [30 P. 779]; Swamp Land District No. 150 v. Silver, 98 Cal. 53 [32 P. 866]."

In Keech v. Joplin, 157 Cal. 1, 14, 106 P. 222, 228, the court said:

"The evidence abundantly shows that the district has been organized and that it has been acting as a district. In other words, that it is a de facto district. It is a public corporation of a similar character to irrigation districts and reclamation districts. The law is well settled that the validity of the organization of such a district cannot be questioned by private individuals, but only in a proceeding in quo warranto at the suit of the state. Quint v. Hoffman, 103 Cal. 506 [37 P. 514, 777]; Reclamation District v. Turner, 104 Cal. 335 [37 P. 1038]."

In Marin Municipal Water Dist. v. Dolge, 172 Cal. 724, 726, 158 P. 187, 188, the court said:

"The auditor, holding office as he does under authority of the district, cannot in his official capacity dispute its existence or the validity of its organization. Ayers v. Newark, 49 N. J. [Law] L. 174, 6 A. 659. Its validity cannot be questioned except in an action in quo warranto by or on behalf of the state. Keech v. Joplin, 157 Cal. 1, 14 [106 P. 222]; Quint v. Hoffman, 103 Cal. 506 [37 P. 514, 777]. The auditor, like the city clerk in the Los Angeles case, is a purely ministerial officer of the district, and he must obey the orders of the board of directors, regardless of his views on the above-mentioned questions."

Petitioners have made several other points which they contend are sufficient to sustain the validity of said municipal election against the attacks made thereon by the defendants, but, in view of our conclusion as above announced, it is unnecessary to consider any of the further propositions urged upon us.

Let the writ of mandate issue as prayed for.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.

I concur in the judgment: LANGDON, J.

201 Cal. 290

PEOPLE v. VUKICH. (Cr. 2928.)

Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1927.

1. Witnesses —268(3)—Cross-examination in murder case may develop conversation alluded to in direct examination.

Cross-examination of witness for defendant in murder case for purpose of developing a conversation alluded to in direct examination is proper.

2. Witnesses —268(3)—Cross-examination of defendant's witness concerning conduct of accused at conversation alluded to in direct examination held proper under insanity defense.

Cross-examination of witness for defendant in murder case for purpose of developing conversation alluded to on direct examination, and showing that at such conversation the defendant became abusive, is proper where defense was insanity.

3. Homicide —179—District attorney's question to defendant concerning trouble with employer other than one killed held proper on issue of insanity.

District attorney's question to defendant, accused of killing former employer, whether he had trouble with another employer held proper on issue of insanity.

4. Criminal law —1170½(2)—District attorney's question to defendant concerning trouble with employer other than one killed held harmless where answered in negative.

District attorney's question to defendant, accused of killing former employer, whether he had trouble with another employer held harmless, if not proper on issue of insanity, where defendant answered question in negative.

5. Witnesses —268(3)—Entire conversations alluded to in direct examination and defendant's conduct at time are proper subjects of cross-examination where defense is insanity.

Entire conversations referred to in direct examination of defendant's witness and defendant's actions, conduct, appearance, and degree of understanding at the time are proper subjects of cross-examination, in murder case defended on ground of insanity.

6. Criminal law —398(1)—Excluding letter concerning accused held proper where writer testified to same things he had written.

Excluding witness' letter respecting conversation with accused and expressing conclusions concerning his mental condition held proper where witness testified to same things he had written, in prosecution for murder defended on ground of insanity.

7. Criminal law —656(3)—Court's statement of valid reason for excluding letter was not error where jury were not informed of contents.

Court's statement of valid reason for excluding letter written by witness, who testified to same things he had written, was not error where jury was not informed of letter's contents.

8. Criminal law —656(3)—Court's statement of valid reason for excluding letter was not error where jury were instructed to disregard argument.

Court's statement of valid reason for excluding letter written by witness, who testified to same things he had written, was not error where court instructed jury to disregard argument over its admissibility.

9. Homicide —311—Instructions that social interest requires punishment for taking of life in vengeance for failure to pay obligations held proper.

Instructions that employee's grievances because of employer's failure to pay wages and futility of efforts to enforce payment by lawful means would not justify taking of life, but that social interest requires punishment for taking life in vengeance for private grievances, held proper.

10. Homicide —253(3)—Evidence of lying in wait and shooting from wall held to sustain conviction of murder in first degree (Pen. Code, § 189).

Evidence that former employee, after prolonged and futile effort to collect wages, secreted himself on premises and killed former employer by shooting from behind wall held to sustain conviction, under Pen. Code, § 189, making homicide by lying in wait murder in first degree.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Millan Vukich was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. E. Foote, of Sacramento, and W. J. Burns, of Auburn, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHENK, J. The defendant was charged with the murder of one Richard T. Stone, on September 27, 1925, in Placer county. He was convicted and sentenced to suffer the extreme penalty. He has appealed from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial. The facts leading up to and attendant upon the killing are briefly as follows: The deceased had charge, management, and control of the Alta Lumber Company's sawmill located on the Baker ranch, on the Foresthill divide, in said county. The defendant, a Montenegrin, about 36 years of age at the time of the trial, was sent to the Baker ranch, for employment as a mill hand from an employment office in Sacramento, in June, 1923. He worked at miscellaneous jobs on the ranch and about the mill until September, 1923, when, following a controversy and a personal encounter with Stone, he was discharged and ordered off the premises. The defendant thereupon demanded the wages due him and was given a time check for $161, which he claimed was 65 cents short. The time check was directed to a bank at Roseville. He immediately went to the district attorney at Auburn and complained about an alleged attack on him by Stone, and also about not receiving cash for his wages. He was informed by the district attorney that nothing would then be done with reference to the matter of the fight, but that if he were not paid his wages by September 6th proceedings would be commenced against Stone. The defendant went to the bank at Roseville, where payment on his time check was refused on the ground that there were no funds in the bank to pay the same. He again consulted the district attorney, proceedings were taken against Stone in the justice's court, and he was fined $100, but the defendant did not collect his wages. He then consulted attorneys with a view to obtaining a money judgment, but without avail. He sought relief through the office of the labor commissioner at Sacramento and the district attorney of the city and county of San Francisco. He sought the aid of the Attorney General of the state and endeavored to enlist the assistance of the Governor in the redress of what he conceived to be a great wrong done him by Stone. He worked intermittently and traveled about during 1924 and 1925, at times resuming his efforts to collect his wages from Stone. He finally decided to take the law into his own hands, as he expressed it. He went to Reno, purchased a rifle, a pistol, a dirk, and ammunition, at a cost of about $50, and made his way to the Baker ranch, arriving there about 2 o'clock of the morning of September 27, 1925. He first went into the bunkhouse and then into the boiler room of the mill, where he remained until between 6 and 7 o'clock, at which time he heard voices emanating from the Stone residence and concluded that Stone was in the house. He then went into the bathhouse, which adjoined the sawmill, and was about 100 yards distant from the residence. He cut gaps in the cracks in the bathhouse in such manner that he could see through the same without being seen. Stone was living with his wife in the residence and a Mrs. Horten from San Francisco was visiting them. At about 10 o'clock the three came out of the house for the general purpose of looking over the mill and lumber yard, and for the more particular purpose of having Stone point out to Mrs. Stone certain lumber which was to be sold during a contemplated absence of Stone. The three walked across the lower part of the yard, conversing as they went. As they approached the mill Stone stepped up to and upon a sill and turned and reached out his hand to assist Mrs. Stone. As he turned he was facing the bathhouse, where the defendant was in hiding. At that moment the defendant fired. The bullet passed through Stone's heart, and he died almost immediately. The defendant fired another shot and emerged from the bathhouse, carrying his rifle before him, where he was in plain view of Mrs. Horten.

The defendant left the scene of the shooting, went into the mountains, traveled about for some time in such manner as to indicate beyond question that he was endeavoring to avoid apprehension, and finally found his way into Mexico. In returning to the United States he was arrested at the border and brought back to Auburn for trial. At Yuma, on October 23, 1925, the defendant made a lengthy statement, which was taken down in shorthand, transcribed, and signed by him on the next day, in which the killing of Stone under the circumstances above related was admitted. A second and similar statement, reported in shorthand and transcribed, was made by the defendant after his arrival at Auburn on October 26, 1925. These statements were received in evidence.

The defense was insanity. The jury found the plea unsustainable. An examination of the evidence discloses that there was abundant evidence to sustain the verdict. In fact, the defendant does not claim that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict rejecting his plea of insanity and finding him guilty of murder in the first degree.

A reversal of the judgment is sought upon three grounds: (1) Alleged prejudicial misconduct on the part of the district attorney which prevented the defendant from having a fair trial; (2) prejudicial misdirection of the jury by the court in matters of law in its instructions and (3) certain alleged prejudicial errors by the court in its rulings upon the admission and rejection of evidence and in alleged comments on certain evidence.

In support of the first contention, it is urged that the district attorney violated the substantial rights of the defendant in the cross-examination of the defendant's witness Arthur L. Johnson. In the direct examination of this witness the defense had elicited the substance of certain conversations between the witness, who was a deputy state labor commissioner, and the defendant during the time that the defendant was endeavoring to enforce collection of his wages.

[1, 2] On cross-examination, the district attorney endeavored to draw from the witness more of the conversation by asking him if the defendant had ever discussed with him any claim of the defendant against a Dr. Galen. The court overruled the defendant's objection to the question on the ground that the conversation alluded to in the direct examination could be fully developed on cross-examination. The witness answered that the defendant had made complaint of his inability to collect $52 from Dr. Galen as wages; that the doctor owed him that amount, but was willing to pay him only $48.50, or $3.50 less than his claim. When the witness stated to the defendant that the small difference did not seem to be of sufficient consequence to justify the office of the labor commissioner in intervening under the circumstances shown, the defendant became abusive and criticized the office of the labor commissioner for not taking action to collect the full claim. We find no error in this cross-examination for two reasons. The first was correctly stated by the court when it overruled the objection; and, secondly, this cross-examination might properly be deemed relevant to the issue of insanity interposed by the defendant.

[3, 4] It is further urged that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in the cross-examination of the defendant wherein it was sought to discover whether the defendant had had any trouble with employers other than Stone. The question was asked, "Did you have a fight with the boss at Los Angeles and have to go to court about it?" Before an objection was interposed the defendant answered, "No, sir; not that I remember." Defendant's counsel then objected to the question, and the court dismissed the objection by stating, "It has been answered in the negative." We think the cross-examination was proper on the issue of insanity, but in any event, the question was answered in the negative, and we discover no injury to the defendant resulting therefrom.

Further misconduct is charged against the district attorney in his closing argument. We have examined with care those portions of the argument especially objected to and find therein nothing prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant.

It is next insisted that the court incorporated in its instruction No. 1, relating to the duties of the jurors, the following language: "And unless you do your duty, laws may as well be stricken from the statute books," and that in doing so reversible error was committed. It is clear that counsel for defendant has proceeded on the mistaken assumption that such language was included in the instruction. We have examined fully the said instruction as it appears in the clerk's transcript, and such language does not appear therein, either in substance or effect, nor in any instruction given by the court. The instruction as included in the record is a correct exposition of the law.

Exception is also taken to that part of instruction No. 10 on reasonable doubt and the degree of proof required in criminal actions. Without quoting the same, it may be said that said instruction was in conformity with approved instructions on the subjects referred to. Numerous other instructions given or proposed by the prosecution, and given as modified are set forth in the defendant's brief. These instructions have been carefully examined and we find no valid objection to any of them. Nor do we find error in the refusal of the court to give certain designated instructions proposed by the defendant. The charge was full and fair and no legitimate criticism may be directed to any portion thereof.

[5] It is next contended that the court committed prejudicial error in rulings on the admissibility of evidence during the cross-examination of the defendant's witness Lionel B. Browne wherein it was sought by the prosecution to develop the entire conversations referred to in the direct examination and to disclose the actions, conduct, appearance, and degree of understanding of the defendant at the time. These were proper matters of cross-examination. Objection is also made to the rulings of the court in sustaining objections to certain questions propounded by counsel for the defendant on the direct examination of witnesses Pope, Burner, Loc Yen, and Jenkins, wherein the character, reputation, and disposition of the deceased for peace and quietude was attempted to be put in issue. No question of self-defense was involved in the case, but assuming that the character of the deceased in the respects referred to could nevertheless be made an issue under the facts disclosed by the record, still it appears that the objections to the questions were properly sustained for the reason that the necessary foundations for the questions had not been laid.

[6, 7] Finally, it is contended that the court overstepped legal bounds in enlarging on the reasons for refusing to admit in evidence a certain letter dated September 29, 1925, addressed to the district attorney of Placer county, and signed by Walter G. Mathewson, state labor commissioner, by his attorney and deputy, Arthur L. Johnson. This letter contained a list of the names of the men who had filed labor claims against the deceased. It also gave a general history of the activities of the defendant so far as known to the state labor commissioner and expressed certain conclusions concerning the mental status of the defendant, which his counsel undoubtedly believed were favorable to the defendant on the issue of insanity. The witness Johnson, the writer of the letter, was examined in chief on behalf of the defendant and testified to much that was set forth in the letter, and to nothing at substantial variance with anything stated therein. Counsel for defendant demanded the production of this letter, whereupon the district attorney stated to the court that the letter was in his possession and would be produced upon the suggestion of the court that it was competent evidence. Undoubtedly the court then read the letter, as the remarks of the court in ruling upon the admissibility of the same plainly indicate. The ruling was adverse to the defendant, and, later, in reviewing the reasons for the ruling, the court stated, in part:

"* * * As I understand the matter, a certain witness testified on the stand as to what he observed in relation to the defendant, and as to what the defendant said to him in a certain conversation he had with the defendant; that from that he formed and expressed an opinion here as a witness for the defense; that it also appeared that he had written the same thing to some other person, * * * written the same thing he had testified to. Now, of course, we can see, if that is permitted, the witness could bolster up his testimony by writing to a number of persons and calling them in and asking if they received such a letter from him, and that is, I understand, only corroboration, and, in the second place, not competent because, in fact, self-serving or bolstering up his testimony given by the witness on the stand. If he had made some other statement on the stand other than what he wrote, on cross-examination it would be proper to confront him with the letter to contradict him."

Objection is made to that portion of the court's statement to the effect that, if a witness could write a letter to a third party concerning the facts in the case and could later use the letter as evidence, the same would be no more than an attempt to bolster up his own testimony given on the stand, and would be self-serving and incompetent. It is insisted that the remarks of the court in sustaining the objections to the introduction of this letter in evidence were improper comments of the court on the evidence in the case. There is no merit in the objection, for the reason that the letter was not received in evidence and the jury was not apprised of its contents except as it might draw the conclusion that it contained statements in substance the same as the testimony of the witness on the stand.

[8] The ruling of the court was correct in point of law, and the fact that valid reasons for the ruling were given in the presence of the jury clearly could not have been prejudicial to the defendant. Furthermore, the court was at pains to instruct the jury to disregard the arguments on the point, and not to treat the same in any wise as evidence.

[9] Without question, the defendant was incensed and exasperated to a high degree because of his failure, after persistent efforts, to obtain payment of his wages from Stone, but the court correctly instructed the jury that such grievances would not justify the aggrieved party in taking the law into his own hands and destroying human life; that the laws of the land are conclusively presumed to afford protection against such grievances; that persons may not administer relief to themselves by killing those believed to have violated their rights; that civilized society could not exist for a great length of time if human life was subjected to the jeopardy which would necessarily follow if it were once understood that men might execute their own vengeance by killing their fellow men for private grievances, either real or imaginary; that the laws of the land as well as the peace and good order of society demand that, when human life is taken for the gratification of private malice or vengeance, the punishment prescribed by law for the commission of intentional homicide shall be administered to the guilty parties.

[10] The evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in finding under the instructions of the court that the homicide committed by the defendant was "by lying in wait," and as such was by statute made murder of the first degree (section 189, Pen. Code), and the matter of fixing the penalty was, of course, exclusively the function of the jury.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

201 Cal. 243

MAHONEY v. CITY and COUNTY of SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 11177.)

Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 889—Putting San Francisco's revenue and income into separate funds is mandatory (Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 2).

Under Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 2, apportionment and setting apart of city's revenue and income into separate funds is mandatory, and transfer of moneys from one fund to another or use thereof for any purpose other than that for which they are raised, except as specifically provided, is forbidden.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 864(1)—City's contract attacked as violation of debt limitation held one of lease, and not for purchase of land.

In taxpayer's suit to cancel, as violative of constitutional and charter limitations, instruments executed by city, one contract in question relating to city's acquiring use of land for golf links held lease, and not contract for purchase of land.

3. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 3(2)—Agreement of parties that instrument should be called lease cannot change its character, which is determined by its terms.

Agreement of parties to instrument that it should be characterized as lease cannot change its true character, which is controlled by evident intent and purpose of makers as disclosed by terms of instrument.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 864(1)—Contract by city relating to renting land held one to purchase land as affecting debt limitation.

Contract with city relating to renting land containing provision that city could purchase property for stated sum, to be reduced by crediting payment on rents at exercise of option to purchase, held contract to purchase as respects determination of question of expenditures within debt limitation.

5. Pleading $\Rightarrow$ 207—Failure of complaint to cancel contracts by city to show what portion of alleged expenditures for improvements would be expended under first contract, and what under second, should have been raised by special demurrer (Charter of the City and County of San Francisco, art. 3, c. 2, § 13; art. 16, § 29; Const. art. 11, § 18).

In view of Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 16, § 29, and article 3, c. 2, and especially section 13 thereof, governing administration of city's finances, in suit to cancel contracts by city relating to use of land on ground that they would require expenditure exceeding yearly income without two-thirds vote of qualified electors at special election, contrary to Const. art. 11, § 18, failure of complaint to show what portion of alleged expenditures required on land by contracts would be required under first contract, and what portion required under second, should have been raised by special demurrer.

6. Municipal corporations $\Rightarrow$ 1000(5)—Complaint to cancel instrument by which city gained use of land, on theory of excessive expenditures, held good on demurrer (Const. art. 11, § 18; Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 16, § 29).

In taxpayer's suit to cancel instrument whereby city obtained use of certain land, complaint showing that, if city failed to make expenditures in accordance with certain plans and specifications, owner might enter and make improvements charging expense to city and county, plus 10 per cent., in view of other allegations that obligation so incurred exceeded annual income and revenue of city and county, contrary to Const. art. 11, § 18, and Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 16, § 29, was sufficient on demurrer thereto, which should have been overruled.

7. Municipal corporations $\Rightarrow$ 864(1)—Contracts with city for use of land held sufficiently certain and definite to be enforceable as affecting debt limitations.

As respecting question of expenditures in excess of limitations, contracts by city and county of San Francisco for use of land for golf links and other purposes held sufficiently definite and certain as to mutual obligations and duties assumed by parties thereto to be enforceable.

8. Municipal corporations $\Rightarrow$ 864(1)—Manner in which indebtedness beyond lawful limits is created is immaterial, in taxpayer's suit to cancel contracts (Const. art. 11, § 18; Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 16, § 29).

In taxpayer's suit to cancel instrument executed by city of San Francisco on theory of its calling for expenditure of more than city's yearly revenue without special election, as required by Const. art. 11, § 18, and Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 16, § 29, manner in which indebtedness is created is immaterial if result is to subject city to present liability, direct or indirect, which taxpayer will eventually be called upon to meet.

9. Municipal corporations $\Rightarrow$ 864(1)—City and county of San Francisco held not authorized to contract for purchase of land calling for expenditure of more than yearly revenue without special election (Const. art. 11, § 18; Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 16, § 29).

Under Const. art. 11, § 18, and Charter of City and County of San Francisco art. 16, § 29, city of San Francisco had no power, as matter of law, to enter contract designated as one for lease of land, but containing provision that city and county must make extensive improvements, expense of which was probably in excess of annual income, and which provided that on failure to make expenditures lessor might enter and make improvements called for, charging expense to city and county, plus 10 per cent. interest.

10. Municipal corporations $\Rightarrow$ 1000(5)—Taxpayer's complaint to cancel lease of land to city held good on demurrer (Const. art. 11, § 18; Charter of City and County of San Francisco, art. 16, § 29).

Complaint to cancel lease of land to city and county of San Francisco, alleging liabilities thereby assumed caused incurring indebtedness in excess of annual income without special election, contrary to Const. art. 11, § 18, and Charter of City and County of San Francisco art. 16, § 29, held good on demurrer.

11. Pleading $\Rightarrow$ 129(1)—After overruling demurrer to complaint, in absence of answer denying allegations of complaint, they must stand admitted.

After overruling demurrer to complaint, in absence of answer denying allegations of complaint to cancel instrument, they must stand admitted.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Margaret Mahoney against the City and County of San Francisco and others to cancel instruments and for other relief. From a judgment sustaining demurrers to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

C. K. Bonestell, H. W. Hutton, J. C. Flannery, and William P. Hubbard, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

McCutchen, Olney, Mannon & Greene, of San Francisco, for respondent Spring Valley Water Co.

John T. Pigott, John J. O'Toole, present City Atty., Dion R. Holm, Asst. City Atty., George Lull, former City Atty., and John J. Dailey, Asst. City Atty., all of San Francisco, for other respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This action was inaugurated in the court below by plaintiff, Margaret Mahoney, a resident taxpayer of the city and county of San Francisco. The prayer of the amended complaint was for a decree of the court directing the delivery into court for cancellation of two certain instruments of even date purporting to be leases entered into by the Spring Valley Water Company, a corporation, and the city and county of San Francisco, upon the ground and for the reason that said instruments were in violation of article 11, § 18, state Constitution, and article 16, § 29, Charter of the City and County of San Francisco, which provide generally and specifically, respectively, that said city and county shall not incur any indebtedness or liability for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof voting at an election held for that purpose, and are, therefore, null and void and wholly without legal effect; also, that said Spring Valley Water Company, designated in said instruments as lessor, and said city and county of San Francisco, designated therein as lessee, be perpetually enjoined from taking any further action or proceedings or exercising any right or privilege claimed to have been granted or conferred under or by virtue of said instruments or agreements, and that the city and county of San Francisco and certain of its officers be restrained and enjoined from auditing or approving any claim or demand or expending or paying out of the public funds of said city and county any sum or sums of money whatsoever claimed to be due or owing on account or by virtue of the terms or covenants contained in said instruments; and that the auditor and treasurer of said city and county be required to repay into the city treasury the sum of $24,000, with interest thereon, paid by said city and county to said Spring Valley Water Company as the first installment of rent as by the terms of one of said instruments provided, and to repay any and all other sums that may thereafter be paid, audited, approved, or allowed by the agents of said city and county under said instruments. The complaint closes with a prayer for general relief and costs. The defendants Spring Valley Water Company and the city and county of San Francisco appeared separately and demurred to the amended complaint upon general grounds. The demurrer as to each defendant was sustained with leave to amend, and, the plaintiff refusing to further amend, judgment was entered against her. The appeal is taken from the judgment thus entered.

The major question presented by the appeal is whether the terms and provisions of the instruments before us—be they agreements of purchase or leases of real property—are violative of either the organic law of the state as expressed by article 11, § 18, state Constitution, or of article 16, § 29, Charter of the City and County of San Francisco, or of the letter or spirit of the law as expressed in other provisions of said charter.

Article 11, § 18, state Constitution, provides:

"No county, city, town, township, board of education, or school district, shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose, nor unless before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also provision to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof on or before maturity, which shall not exceed forty years from the time of contracting the same. * * *

Article 16, § 29, Charter of the City and County of San Francisco, provides:

"When the supervisors shall determine that the public interest requires the acquisition of any land or lands or the construction or acquisition of any permanent building or buildings, improvement or improvements, the cost of which, in addition to other expenses of the city and county, will exceed the income and revenue provided for the city and county for any one year, they must, by ordinance, submit a proposition or propositions to incur a bonded indebtedness for such purpose or purposes to the electors of the city and county at a special election to be held for that purpose only. * * *

[1] The apportionment and setting apart of the city's revenue and income into separate funds is mandatory, and the transfer of moneys from one fund to another or the use thereof for any purpose other than that for which the same were raised, except as specifically provided, is forbidden. Article 3, c. 2, Charter. Each demand must show the fiscal year within which the indebtedness was incurred and the name of the specific fund out of which it is payable, and have written or printed upon it a statement that the same can only be paid out of the income and revenue provided, collected, and paid into the proper specific fund in the treasury for the fiscal year within which the indebtedness was incurred. Article 3, c. 2, § 13. Again, the incurring of liabilities against the treasury which cannot be paid out of the income provided, collected, and paid into the proper fund as its proportion of the same for the fiscal year, or permitting liabilities or indebtedness incurred in any one fiscal year to be a charge upon or paid out of the income or revenue of any other fiscal year, is prohibited by article 3, c. 2, § 13, of said Charter.

With the provisions of the organic law before us, it becomes necessary, for a determination of the question as to whether or not the terms, conditions, and covenants of said instruments or agreements, or either or any of them, are violative of the state Constitution and said charter, to consider in connection therewith the substance of said instruments, which are annexed to and made a part of the complaint and marked Exhibits A and B, respectively. In both instruments the Spring Valley Water Company is denominated the lessor, and the city and county the lessee. For the sake of convenience we adopt the same identification references. By Exhibit A the lessor demises and lets unto the lessee all that certain real property situate, lying, and being in the city and county of San Francisco, and described as a tract of land containing 170 acres, more or less, being a portion of that certain tract of land containing 811.13 acres of the so-called Lake Merced ranch of the Spring Valley Water Company, adjacent to the municipal golf course as now located. The lease term is 15 years, beginning on July 1, 1922, and terminating on June 30, 1937. The rentals for the term total $102,000 and are apportioned with reference to an ascending scale. The first installment of $2,000 became payable on July 1, 1925, and the remaining installments thereafter in gradually increasing amounts are payable on July 1 of each succeeding year, the last installment, amounting to $15,000, falling due July 1, 1936. In addition to said installments aggregating $102,000, the lessee agrees to pay annual installments equal in amount to the installments of all taxes, assessments, and other municipal or governmental charges levied upon said real property or any part thereof before the same shall become due. The leased property shall be used for a public golf links and playground only and shall be maintained for such purposes. The golf course is to be constructed according to a plan annexed to the lease and may be altered with the written approval of the lessor, except in the particular as to fairways. The construction shall include seeding to grass of all greens and fairways. The lease contemplates the construction by the lessee upon the premises of children's play-grounds and pedestrian and equestrian paths and trails. The lessee agrees at all times to keep and maintain said golf course, playgrounds, paths, and trails in good condition and repair, and to cultivate the grass on all greens and fairways until a suitable grass sod has been developed and thereafter to maintain the same in a condition suitable for a golf course. The location and character of any clubhouse which the lessee may erect upon the demised premises shall be subject to the approval of the chief engineer of the lessor and the work of erecting the same shall not be commenced until such written approval has been obtained. Said lessee agrees to plant suitable shrubs and trees upon said premises according to a planting plan or schedule through a series of years and to care for the same.

An adequate sewerage system of a sanitary type shall be constructed by the lessee in such locations as may be approved by the city board of health and by the chief engineer of the lessor. The lessee shall not, without the consent of the lessor, place upon said premises any building, fences, structures, or improvements except as expressly provided in the lease or as designated upon a plan of construction marked Exhibit A, which is not before us for inspection. No disturbance or change of the surface of the ground is permissible, except as expressly permitted or contemplated by the plans as shown by said Exhibit A, or without the written approval of the lessor's chief engineer. All work to be done or improvements to be made as provided by the lease, or otherwise permitted, shall be done at the sole expense of the lessee, and it is liable for all claims on account of materials and labor used or furnished in connection with the plan or scheme of improvement. The lessee agrees to police the premises at its own expense, protect the water and watersheds of the lessor from pollution, and also to protect the pipes, ditches, flumes, and other property of the lessor now used or hereafter to be constructed by it upon said premises, and to comply with all public health laws and requirements which the lessor may prescribe with respect to the use and occupation of said premises. Reservations of rights of way for pipes, ditches, flumes, conduits, structures, etc., on, upon, and through the premises, and the right to enter and do any and all things necessary to manage, control, and protect the premises as a part of its water system and to develop the water supply upon or in the same, are expressly made by the lessor. The lessee agrees to provide printed rules and regulations, which are to govern the conduct of all persons using said premises. The lessee also agrees to pay to the occupants of the premises, who will be required to vacate the same by reason of the entry of said lessee, actual damages sustained by said tenants, which are to be fixed by the agreement of the lessor and said tenants. Said lease provides that all repairs are to be made at the expense of the lessee, and the lessor has the right of entry for inspection purposes at all times. The lessor covenants that, during the term, "the lessee may peaceably have and hold the demised premises subject to the agreements, covenants, and conditions therein contained without hindrance by the lessor." In the event that the lessee fails or neglects to do or perform any act or thing on its part to be done or performed, the lessor may, after notice, do or perform said act or thing at the expense of said lessee. Forfeiture of the lease by the lessee is provided in case of noncompliance with the terms and conditions of the lease, with right of re-entry by the lessor without prejudice to any other remedy which it might have for arrears of rent or for damages for breach of covenant or condition broken. Neglect of the lessor to take advantage of any act, omission, or breach which would constitute grounds for the termination of the lease shall not be deemed to be a waiver of any subsequent cause or breach that might arise. In the event that the lessee shall purchase a larger tract of land of which the demised premises form a part, the lease shall terminate. The lease contains the usual nonassignable clause without the written consent of the lessor, and a further provision that should the Railroad Commission refuse to authorize the lessor to enter into said lease it shall be deemed void and of no effect.

By Exhibit B the lessor demises and lets to the lessee a tract of land consisting of about 60 acres, situate in the city and county of San Francisco, and more particularly described in an exhibit referred to but not before us. The lease term is 10 years, beginning on July 1, 1922, and ending on June 30, 1932. The covenants for the payment of rent are: $24,000 upon the date of the agreement, the receipt of which is acknowledged; $36,960 on July 1, 1923. The balance of the annual installments are made payable on the first day of July of each successive year, apportioned on a slightly descending scale through the life of the lease, aggregating $304,000 for the 10 years' term. The lessee agrees to pay as additional annual rental installments an amount equal to the installments of all taxes, assessments, and other municipal or governmental charges that may be levied upon or assessed against said real property. It is agreed by the parties that said real property shall be used for public park purposes only, and that the lessee shall, before October 1, 1922, commence the construction of a park and playground, including a wading and swimming pool, and diligently prosecute the same to completion, and, on or before July 1, 1924, complete the same. The construction of the park and playground and swimming pool shall conform to a plan which is not before us for examination, but which, it is alleged, will call for large annual outlays of the city's income, which are not provided for in any manner. In those features not herein specially noted, except as to the provisions granting the option to purchase, which will presently receive attention, said two leases in form and substance are quite similar. The material departure is found in that portion of the lease which grants the option to purchase. It is thereby provided that the lessee may at any time during the lease term, provided the lessee is not in default in payment of rent or in the performance of any of its covenants, purchase said real property for the sum of $240,000, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from and after the 1st day of July, 1922, by the payment of said purchase price at once or at any time thereafter. Said purchase price shall be reduced by crediting such payments as have been made on account of rents as therein provided. If the lessee elects to exercise said option, it is required to notify the lessor in writing to that effect, and within 60 days after such notice said lessee shall pay to the lessor the purchase price, and the latter shall then concurrently with said payment deliver to the lessee a deed of grant conveying to the lessee "the title which the lessor has to said real property, free and clear of liens and incumbrances hereafter created by the lessor, except the lien of taxes not then delinquent." (Italics supplied.) In the event that the option is exercised, each annual installment of rent shall be credited and applied, first, to the account of interest accrued at the date of the payment of such installment of rent, and the balance shall be applied to the principal of said purchase price as of the date upon which such installments were severally paid. Installments of rent in the amount of taxes, assessments, and governmental charges shall not be credited on said purchase price.

[2] It will be seen upon an inspection of the instrument that Exhibit A is in all essential features, upon its face, a hiring of real property and an agreement between the parties limiting its use to certain purposes and reserving to the lessor certain proprietary rights as to its control and maintenance in connection with its use as a part of a public utility engaged in furnishing and supplying said city and county with water for domestic, manufacturing, and general commercial and useful purposes. There is nothing appearing upon the face of the lease and agreement that would justify us in holding, as a matter of law, that Exhibit A is an agreement or contract for the sale and purchase of said described 170 acres. Reference is made, however, to paragraph 26 of said lease, which provides that in the event the lessee shall purchase certain tracts of real property, of which said 170 acres is a part, the lease and agreement shall terminate therewith. The total amount of rentals to be paid to the lessor, to wit, $102,000, equals $40 per acre, per year, during the full term. The additional sums agreed to be paid by the lessee on account of taxes, assessments, and municipal and governmental charges to which the property may be subject or liable, and costs and expenses by reason of enforced compliance with the comprehensive program of construction, planting of trees and shrubs, laying out playgrounds, construction of a sanitation and sewerage system, and other obligations assumed by the lessee, are not capable of exact calculation. The allegations of the complaint are that said rentals, costs, and expenses will run into very large amounts and exceed the revenue that was or could have been provided to meet the accruing indebtedness for the fiscal year 1922-23. No data by which the cost of the improvements, such as a clubhouse and other necessary buildings, which the city is given the permissive right to erect and which in the contemplation of the parties will be erected by the lessee, appears anywhere in the record before us. Conceding that Exhibit A may fairly be classed as a lease, the remaining question left for determination is whether the future income and revenues of the city may be burdened by obligations such as are imposed upon the municipality by the lease. In short, do the obligations therein provided come within the meaning of the term "indebtedness or liability," which is expressly forbidden to be incurred by the organic law of both state and city, except in those cases where the procedure of said organic law in such cases provided has been observed? If this question may be answered in the negative, the further question arises as to whether the fixed installments of interest and other costs and expenses provided for by the lease and agreement may be said to be in excess of the reasonable ability of the municipality acting within its charter limitations as to taxation and considered with relation to the necessary costs and expenses of the administration of the city government in the performance of strictly municipal affairs, thereby contravening the provisions of the city's charter and the state Constitution. The undisputed allegations of the complaint are that such a result will ensue.

[3] Exhibit B is in form a lease, but not quite as distinctly such in phraseology as Exhibit A. The agreement of the parties to the instrument that it should be characterized as a lease cannot change its true character. The evident intent and purpose of the makers as disclosed by the terms of the instrument must in such cases control. In re City and County of San Francisco, 195 Cal. 426, 233 P. 965.

[4] That it is, in effect, an agreement of purchase is impelled by the language of the instrument and the logic of the situation. This conclusion is strengthened by the plan and scheme of the projectors to acquire additional outdoor areas for recreation and amusement to those which the city now possesses. There is sufficient in each exhibit or lease to indicate that the municipality is contemplating the carrying forward of a very comprehensive plan, which, from necessity, would require ultimately the ownership of practically all of the lands described in the complaint, and possibly of other lands therein referred to. The plans as disclosed by the contracts irresistibly suggest interrelation and joint operation of one area with the other in the accomplishing of a common plan and purpose. This suggestion, however, is rebuttable and may be overcome by evidence that either one of said tracts of land is desirable for the purposes set forth in said respective instruments, notwithstanding a failure in an attempt to acquire both. We are of the opinion that the District Court of Appeal, First district, Division 2 (Nourse, J.), adequately and correctly analyzed the effect of Exhibit B in a decision handed down by said court upon transfer made by this court of said cause for decision. We therefore adopt as a part of this opinion the reasoning and conclusion reached in fixing the legal status of Exhibit B:

"Turning to the second contract [B], we find that though this is denominated a lease and the contracting parties are referred to throughout the agreement as 'lessor' and 'lessee,' it is in its very nature and purpose, nothing more than a contract of purchase and sale whereby the city and county, by payments which are denominated in the agreement as 'annual installments of rentals,' actually has contracted to purchase the property through the payment of installments running over a period of 10 years. By the terms of this contract the sum of $24,000 was required to be paid at the time of the execution of the agreement on July 1, 1922. The full purchase price, for which the option to purchase was granted, was the sum of $240,000, plus interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the execution of the agreement. The annual payments which were specified in the contract covered a period of 10 years, which, upon examination, appear to be made up in the following manner: The sum of $240,000 was divided into 10 equal parts of $24,000 each. This was the payment required to be made upon the execution of the contract. On the 1st of July, 1923, the sum of $36,960 was to be paid, and this sum consists of the sum of $24,000, plus $12,960, which is interest at 6 per cent. on the balance remaining due on the purchase price after the first payment had been made. On the 1st day of July, 1924, the sum of $35,520 was specified to be paid, and this appears to be made up as follows: $24,000 on the principal and $11,520, being the interest on $192,000, the balance of the principal then remaining due. This method of computation and specification of the annual payments which are required to be made has been carried all through the 10-year period until the total sum of $304,800 is required to be paid, which, again, is found to be $240,000, plus 6 per cent. per annum from July 1, 1922, on the remaining principal decreasing at the rate of $24,000 a year.

"In considering a similar contract which was also denominated a lease, and which called upon the city and county to make annual payments termed rentals, and which obligated the city and county to make vast expenditures of money for improvements, the Supreme Court in the so-called Marina Case, 195 Cal. 426,¹ held that the option to purchase the real property on the condition that all the covenants of the so-called lease had been met became 'in effect an increasing compulsion upon it to consummate such purchase, since not to do so would result in the irrevocable loss to the municipality not only of the primary and succeeding annual payments, which it is bound to make under this agreement, but also of the entire usufruct of the property

¹ 233 P. 965.

during the period of its occupation, and also of the property itself.' In that case the Supreme Court carefully analyzed the provisions of the agreement under consideration which were in all material respects similar to the terms of the agreement found in Exhibit B and held that it must be construed to be an agreement for purchase, and not merely a lease as denominated by the parties. Having thus construed the agreement and having found that the obligations incurred thereby exceeded the income and revenue of the city and county for the year in which the obligation was incurred, and that no provisions had been made for meeting such indebtedness as required by section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution, the Supreme Court held that the agreement was void as in contravention of the express limitations of that section. In so holding the court relied upon Higgins v. City of San Diego, 131 Cal. 294, 298, 63 P. 470, and Chester v. Carmichael, 187 Cal. 287, 201 P. 925.

"The Marina Case arose on a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the auditor of the city and county to audit and approve a warrant for one of the payments called for by the contract. In the course of the opinion the Supreme Court took occasion to refer to the fact that the petition for the writ was silent as to whether the creation of the liability under the agreement exceeded the income and revenue provided for that year, but the court held that, inasmuch as it appeared that this was one of the grounds stated by the auditor for his refusal to audit and approve the warrant, it was incumbent upon the petitioners to show affirmatively that the objection was not founded in fact. In the amended complaint before us it is alleged affirmatively that the expenditures required by the two agreements in suit exceeded the income and revenue provided by the city for the year 1922, and that no provision was made for the payment thereof through the proceeds of bonds issued for that purpose, and that the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors of the county had not been procured before said indebtedness was incurred. It is also alleged that, in addition to the specified sums required to be paid annually under the two contracts, the city and county obligated itself to make certain improvements upon the two tracts of land, aggregating between two and three million dollars."

[5] "Though it does not appear from the complaint what portion of this sum of two or three million dollars is required to be expended under the first contract and what portion is covered by the second, that is a question which should have been raised by special demurrer. Thus it may be that the first contract is nothing more than a lease calling for annual payments of rentals in addition to the cost of improvements upon the property, and that this cost is not in excess of the constitutional limits. But if this is so the complaint states a better cause of action for equitable relief in relation to the second contract, as the expenditures required to be made under that contract would be the greater in excess of the constitutional limits. Thus we have the question squarely presented in the complaint that by the terms of the two agreements the city has become obligated in a sum in excess of its annual income and revenue without having provided any method of meeting payment thereof, as required by section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution, and such allegation must be met by answer

* * * in order to take the contracts out of the inhibitions of that section of the Constitution.

"The defendants rest their case upon McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 P. 358, 31 L. R. A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191, Smilie v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 311, 44 P. 556, Doland v. Clark, 143 Cal. 176, 76 P. 958, and cases from other jurisdictions which need not be referred to. The distinction between the McBean Case and others just cited is pointed out in Chester v. Carmichael, 187 Cal. 287, 201 P. 925, approved in the Marina Case, 195 Cal. 426, 441,² where it is said that the earlier case involved contracts for the furnishing to the city in the future of service, materials, etc., and that no indebtedness or liability, within the meaning of the constitutional provisions, was incurred until this service had been made."

[6] "In the Marina Case, as well as in the second contract here under consideration, the liability of the city and county is not one arising each year during the life of the contract to pay the stipulated sums due that year, but the city and county has at the outset obligated itself to make extensive improvements upon the land, which the complaint alleges are far in excess of the annual income and revenue of the city and county. In the particular contract under consideration it will be noted that if the city fails to make these expenditures in accordance with the plans and specifications agreed on, then the 'lessor' may enter into the premises and make all the improvements called for, charging the 'expense' thereof to the city and county, plus 10 per cent. interest. This feature of the contract, taken in view of the allegations of the complaint that the obligation thus incurred is in excess of the annual income and revenue of the city and county, is sufficient to take the contract out of the rule of McBean v. Fresno and following cases, and for that reason the demurrer to the complaint should have been overruled."

[7] The reasoning of counsel in an attempt to convert the contract herein into the "contingency" class, such as is discussed in Doland v. Clark, 143 Cal. 176, 76 P. 958, McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 P. 358, 31 L. R. A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191, Smilie v. Fresno County, 112 Cal. 311, 44 P. 556, State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429, and others treating of similar situations, is fundamentally unsound. If the contracts in the instant case are not certain, definite, and fixed as to the mutual duties and obligations assumed by the parties thereto, it would be difficult, if indeed not impossible, to state a transaction that would be vulnerable to the remote, unusual, and unlikely contingencies suggested by appellants. Only such contingencies as might reasonably be expected to occur in the usual and ordinary course of business transactions or human relations or reasonably within the purview of the contracting parties were considered in the case last above cited and relied upon by appellants and not those which are remote or not within the contemplation of the contracting parties or beyond the foresight of ordinary prudent persons in dealing with the subject of the particular transactions. To hold, as an illustration, that the possibility of failure of title in the lessor of the demised lands is sufficient to create a contingency which would absolve the lessee from all liability to perform its covenants, and thereby afford the means to avoid the constitutional and charter inhibitions by bringing the instant case within the rule announced in the decisions last above cited, would require the further anomalous holding that the contracts are valid for the purpose of creating a contingency, but invalid for any other purpose.

We do not understand that the force and effect of the constitutional restrictions may be avoided—however beneficial such an avoidance may appear to be to the municipality by permitting it to carry forward its plans—that expenditures may be incurred for improvements and for other public uses for which the municipality is liable, and which, though not definitely fixed or even estimated, will inevitably exceed the income and revenue provided for the fiscal year in which the contract is entered into, or any future year, because, perchance, the question of the ability of the municipality to meet its obligations is left in a state of doubt or uncertainty occasioned by the phraseology of the contract, or upon the theory that the possible occurrence of an event which in all probability will not happen may happen, or the possible failure of a condition which must from the logic of the situation be performed will not be performed. If this be the rule of construction, the restriction provisions of the Constitution and charter would become practically nullities, and there would be no opportunity for the taxpayers to be heard as to the incurring of indebtedness or liability that would become a charge upon the future income or revenue of municipal and public corporations. It would practically put an end to bond issues as provided by the Constitution with respect to the incurring of future indebtedness or liability. If a vast indebtedness or liability may be incurred by contract whereby the payment is postponed to a future year, and which would, beyond question, exceed the income that could or would reasonably be expected to be provided for, a condition would be brought about similar to that stated in Arthur v. City of Petaluma, 175 Cal. 216, 165 P. 698, which affords a striking example of the hardship that follows a failure to observe the organic law, and which should be avoided in the interests of a sound public policy. The reason for the constitutional restriction is fully set forth in the case last cited, and its purpose and wholesomeness have been too frequently elaborated by this court to require further comment. It is true that some color of justification for the incurrence of the liability herein attempted is to be gleaned from McBean v. Fresno, Doland v. Clark, Smilie v. Fresno County, and State v. McCauley. The first of these cases was a case of an emergency nature, and involved the exercise of the police power in its highest sense, to wit, the preservation of the public health. In re City and County of San Francisco, 191 Cal. 172, 215 P. 549, was likewise a health case, involving the care of persons afflicted with tuberculosis. The McBean Case was, no doubt, written under the urge of the necessities of the situation, and this court has since been careful not to extend the rule beyond the facts therein stated, and has, as a matter of fact, distinguished that case from subsequent cases, thereby giving effect to the constitutional provisions. The Smilie Case, reported in the same volume as the McBean Case, was rested absolutely on the authority of the latter case. The McBean Case also dominated the decision in the Doland Case. The McBean Case was definitely distinguished from Chester v. Carmichael, a case similar to the instant case. The outstanding facts of that case and legal principles announced therein cannot be distinguished from this case, nor do the minor differences of detail minimize its force as an authority here. We do not deem it necessary to state the facts in detail. Two parties executed a conveyance of a tract of land to the city of Sacramento to be used as a park and playground. The conveyance was subject to nine conditions subsequent, which were, generally, for the laying out and improvement of the grounds suitable to the purposes for which they were conveyed; an agreement for the payment by the city of any assessments that might be levied against it and the payment of the taxes for the year 1919; the expenditure by the city of a minimum sum of $5,000 for improvements during the year 1920, and a like expenditure each year thereafter until the entire property had been improved as a park; a forfeiture clause in the event the city failed to comply with the conditions therein and a reversion of the property to the grantors. The cost of the construction work exceeded the sum of $50,000 and the cost of maintenance $5,000 per annum. The conveyance, which was accepted by the city, was dated December 1, 1919, and all of the funds for the year 1919 were exhausted before December 31, 1919. There had been no assent on the part of the qualified electors to the carrying out of the proposed plan. This court held that the doing of the work with a prescribed minimum expenditure for each year was the purchase price for the land, payable in yearly installments, the grantors having fully performed their part by conveying and delivering the land. Notwithstanding the absence of any liability for damages for failure to perform and the fact that the obligation could not be specifically enforced, there was an obligation in favor of the grantors involving the expenditure in a certain way and for certain purposes of the revenues of the city, accompanied by what was in substance a pledge of the property conveyed as security for its performance. That the matter was cast in the form of conditions subsequent was deemed unimportant. In substance and effect, the transaction was as above stated. The transaction was held to fall within the inhibition of section 18, art. 11, of the Constitution, which precludes any city from incurring "any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose" exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof.

[8] The city, as it was there said and as is true in the instant case, "must either expend all the money necessary to complete the work from its future revenues or lose the property with all it may have paid to the time of loss in improving the same. * * * The manner in which the indebtedness is created is immaterial if the result is to subject the city to a present liability, direct or indirect, which the taxpayer eventually will be called upon to meet. It seems to us that such will be the result of the ingenious scheme that has been devised in the present case. We think the statute cannot be evaded in the manner proposed." The distinction between that case and the McBean, Smilie, and Doland Cases, supra, is pointed out. The latter cases cited involved contracts for the furnishing to a city in the future of service, materials, etc., and it is held that no indebtedness or liability within the constitutional provision is incurred until the furnishing of the service, materials, etc., the consideration for the payment to be made, while in the former the full liability was created upon the acceptance of the deed. Here the consideration was the execution and acceptance of the contract of purchase and the putting of the city and county of San Francisco into possession of the property.

[9] The last expression of this court upon a situation similar to the one at hand is the so-called Marina Case, decided subsequent to the decision made by the trial court in the instant case. The principles of law therein announced are applicable to the facts as alleged by the amended complaint in the present case so far as Exhibit B is involved on the hearing of the demurrer and compel the same conclusion as was reached in that case. In other words, the city in the instant case did not have the power, as a matter of law, to enter into the contract designated as Exhibit B.

[10, 11] The allegations of the complaint tender issues of fact which ought to be considered in determining the validity of Exhibit A. It is alleged that the liabilities thereby assumed by the city do by both direct and indirect methods incur an indebtedness in excess of the income or revenue provided by said city and are, therefore, void as being in violation of the state Constitution and city charter. In the absence of an answer denying said allegations they must stand admitted. We do not deem it necessary to pass upon said issues at the present time as they may be more properly and orderly disposed of after the proofs have been made in accordance with the issues tendered.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; TYLER, Justice pro tem.; RICHARDS, J.; PRESTON, J.

201 Cal. 376

DUDLEY et al. v. LOWELL, Dist. Atty., et al.
(Sac. 3790.)

Supreme Court of California. June 11, 1927.

1. Aliens $\S$ 6(1)—Proposed contract with Japanese person held "cropping contract," specifically forbidden by Alien Land Law (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020).

Proposed contract between owner of land and Japanese person for cultivation, harvesting, and delivering of crops to be grown on the land held a cropping contract, specifically forbidden by Alien Land Law (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020).

2. Constitutional law $\S$ 209—States have wide discretion in matter of classifying for legislative purposes.

In the matter of classification for legislative purposes, states have a wide discretion.

3. Aliens $\S$ 10—Alien Land Law is not arbitrary because eligible aliens who have failed to declare their intention to become citizens are not included in prohibited class (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020).

Alien Land Law (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1020), held not arbitrary or unreasonable because it does not extend the prohibited class so as to include therein eligible aliens who have failed to declare their intention to become citizens of the United States.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. B. Landis, Judge.

Suit by J. F. Dudley and another against Orrin J. Lowell, District Attorney in and for the County of Placer, and another, to enjoin interference with the consummation of a cropping contract. From a judgment dismissing the suit after sustaining of demurrer without leave to amend, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Dozier, Kimball & Dozier, of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Frank English, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Orrin J. Lowell, Dist. Atty., of Auburn, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal after general demurrer sustained to the complaint without leave to amend.

Plaintiff J. F. Dudley, alleges himself to be the owner of a tract of land and desires to enter into what he calls a contract of employment with one Y. Hayakawa, a Japanese subject and resident of this state, for the cultivation, harvesting, and delivering of the crops to be grown on said property for the year beginning October 1, 1924, and ending September 30, 1925. The usual allegations appear which show that defendants, the Attorney General of the state, and county of Placer, are threatening to cause the property to be taken without due process of law, and to escheat it to the state, if said contract be entered into, and also to prosecute parties plaintiff criminally for violation of a statute of November 2, 1920 (Stats. 1921, p. lxxxiii), as amended, known as the California Alien Land Law.

[1] A proceeding of this character has been sanctioned by our court on several occasions, and no citation of authorities need be made in this connection. The contract the subject of the action is made an exhibit to the complaint, and plaintiffs assert that it is not a cropping contract within the meaning of our holdings under several well-considered cases and particularly not violative of said statute above referred to as amended in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 1020).

The contract in short provides that the landowner furnish certain elements of the cropping process such as water for irrigation, spraying solution, young trees for replanting, horses and their feed, and tools for carrying on the work, including boxes, nails, and packing material. The alien is then "to do and perform, or cause to be done and performed, at his own cost all labor of every kind, nature and description which is herein specifically set forth and which may be necessary in the planting, cultivation and irrigation of said land and in the harvesting, picking, packing and delivering of the crops and products to be grown thereon as aforesaid."

The contract then has the following further significant features:

(1) It neither specifies the hours, days or season of employment, nor is occupancy of the land at all times by the alien and his employees forbidden, but is on the contrary impliedly essential.

(2) Neither the number or class of employees nor their wages are specified in the contract.

(3) In case any of the work horses furnished are permanently disabled or killed, the alien must pay the value thereof to the owner.

(4) The same covenants exist respecting the loss or theft of farming implements.

(5) The alien is to be personally responsible for any industrial accidents occurring during the term of occupancy.

(6) The alien must at his own expense keep all help employed by him covered with accident and employers' liability insurance.

(7) Lastly, the alien gets one-half the net proceeds resulting from a sale of the products of the land, and net profits are defined by specifying the nature of the items of deduction, which include horses lost or permanently disabled and loss of implements misplaced or stolen and various other items such as packing material, horsefeed, water charges, repairs, blacksmithing, freight refrigeration and commission charges.

In short, the contract lets the alien into possession of the land, with complete control of the cultivating, harvesting, handling and delivery of the crop grown thereon, as an independent contractor or operator, with unlimited discretion as to hours and seasons of labor, the number, class, residence, and wages of his employees, with independent liability for injury and damage to equipment and independent responsibility for industrial accidents, and insurance of all appropriate types is demanded of him. It is clear, therefore, that these covenants make an out and out cropping contract and one specifically forbidden by the 1923 amendment to the said Alien Land Act.

In Terrace v. Thompson, 263 U. S. 197, 221, 44 S. Ct. 15, 20 (68 L. Ed. 255), in construing a law of the state of Washington, similar to our statute, the court said:

"In the case before us, the thing forbidden is very different. It is not an opportunity to earn a living in common occupations of the community, but it is the privilege of owning or controlling agricultural land within the state. The quality and allegiance of those who own, occupy and use the farm lands within its borders are matters of highest importance and affect the safety and power of the state itself."

[2, 3] Note that the concern of the state does not stop with ownership or control of agricultural lands, but extends to occupancy thereof as well. In the same cause the contention that the statute is in conflict with the treaty between the United States and Japan is effectively disposed of by the holding that the treaty does not purport to give nationals of Japan any rights whatsoever respecting agricultural lands, and this is broad enough to include occupancy of this class of land. On the authority of that case, the case of Porterfield v. Webb, 262 U. S. 225, 232, 44 S. Ct. 21, 68 L. Ed. 278, was decided. It involved the very act controlling us in the case at bar, and there it was said:

"The treaty between the United States and Japan (37 Stat. 1504, 1509), does not confer upon Japanese subjects the privilege of acquiring or leasing land for agricultural purposes."

Concluding, the court further said:

"This case is similar to Terrace v. Thompson, supra. In that case the grounds upon which the Washington Alien Land Law was attacked included those on which the California act is assailed in this case. There the prohibited class was made up of aliens who had not in good faith declared intention to become citizens. The class necessarily includes all ineligible aliens and in addition thereto all eligible aliens who have failed so to declare. In the case now before us the prohibited class includes ineligible aliens only. In the matter of classification the states have wide discretion. Each has its own problems, depending on circumstances existing there. It is not always practical or desirable that legislation shall be the same in different states. We cannot say that the failure of the California Legislature to extend the prohibited class so as to include eligible aliens who have failed to declare their intention to become citizens of the United States was arbitrary or unreasonable. See Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 373, 383, 384 [35 S. Ct. 342, 59 L. Ed. 628, L. R. A. 1915F, 829], and cases cited."

Later, in Webb v. O'Brien, 263 U. S. 313, 323, 324, 44 S. Ct. 112, 68 L. Ed. 318, the court had before it a California cropping contract, being for all practicable purposes the same kind of a contract as is here involved. The court again said:

"As applied to this case the act may be read thus: 'Ineligible aliens may own or lease houses, manufactories, warehouses and shops, and may lease land for residential and commercial purposes. These things, but no possession or enjoyment of land otherwise, are permitted.'

"The term of the proposed contract, the measure of control and dominion over the land which is necessarily involved in the performance of such a contract, the cropper's right to have housing for himself and to have his employees live on the land, and his obligation to accept one-half the crops as his only return for tilling the land clearly distinguish the arrangement from one of mere employment. * * * The practical result of such contract is that the cropper has use, control and benefit of land for agricultural purposes substantially similar to that granted to a lessee. Conceivably, by the use of such contracts, the population living on and cultivating the farm lands might come to be made up largely of ineligible aliens. The allegiance of the farmers to the state directly affects its strength and safety. Terrace v. Thompson, supra. We think it within the power of the state to deny to ineligible aliens the privilege so to use agricultural lands within its borders."

In Porterfield v. Webb, 195 Cal. 71, 82, 231 P. 554, 558, this court with all the foregoing cases before it gave the question here involved thorough consideration, and among other things, it clearly distinguished the case of In re Okahara, 191 Cal. 353, 216 P. 614, and cited with approval the above quotations from Webb v. O'Brien, supra, saying:

"It is apparent that the decision rests largely upon broad principles of national safety and public welfare. Unquestionably the farming of lands by ineligible aliens would give them a use, occupancy, and benefit of agricultural lands which in effect would amount to a deprivation of its use, enjoyment, and occupancy by the citizen. Any other theory would be incompatible with the occupation of husbandry. To all practical purposes this would, pro tanto, constitute a withdrawal of agricultural lands from the use, occupancy, and benefit of the citizen."

In Carter v. Utley, 195 Cal. 84, 231 P. 559, this holding was reaffirmed. The same question, with slight variation, was again before the court in Jones v. Webb, 195 Cal. 88, where the same conclusions were vigorously reasserted.

Still again in Re Nose, 195 Cal. 91, 231 P. 561, which involved a so-called employment contract with an ineligible alien, which actually fixed the days and hours of labor and a monthly wage, and, as "an additional wage," agreed to give for industry and efficiency a certain percentage of the net profits of the crop to be grown and harvested by the alien, the doctrine was reasserted and the law applied to vitiate such contract.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

201 Cal. 299

SLAVICH et al. v. HAMILTON, Acting Chairman of Board of Supervisors.
(S. F. 12432.)

Supreme Court of California. June 2, 1927.

1. Mandamus ⚡83—Mandamus will lie to compel chairman of supervisors to execute properly authorized contract for veterans' memorial.

Mandamus is proper remedy to compel acting chairman of board of supervisors to execute contract for erection of veterans' memorial hall and building and to enter lease for property to be used as site therefor, since such facts present case of public officer refusing to perform ministerial duty involving no discretion.

2. Dedication ⚡64—Land dedicated as public park cannot be used for other purposes.

General rule is that land which has been dedicated as public park must be used in conformity with terms of dedication, and it is without power of municipality to divert or withdraw land from use for park purposes.

3. Evidence ⚡5(2)—It is public knowledge that hotels, museums, art galleries, zoological and botanical gardens, conservatories, and like are commonly erected in public parks.

It is matter of public knowledge that erection of hotels, restaurants, museums, art galleries, zoological and botanical gardens, conservatories, and the like in public parks is common.

4. Dedication ⚡57—Dedication of land for park purposes by individual will be more strictly construed than dedication by municipality.

Individual's dedication of land for purposes of public park will be construed strictly according to terms of grant, while dedication by municipality after purchase or condemnation of land will be less strictly construed.

5. Dedication ⚡57—Deed of two pieces of property to city held to show donors' intention to dedicate property for park purposes.

Deed of two tracts of land to city held to show express intention by donors to dedicate property for park purposes only, though such requirement appeared in deed between descriptions of the two parcels of land.

6. Deeds ⚡93—Intention of grantors is to be gathered from consideration of entire deed, though immediate object of inquiry is meaning of isolated clause.

In construing deed, intention of grantors is to be gathered from consideration of entire instrument of conveyance, although immediate object of inquiry is meaning of isolated clause.

7. Dedication ⚡57—Where deed is but one of circumstances surrounding implied dedication of land for park purposes, all other circumstances may also be considered.

Facts and circumstances surrounding transaction may be looked to for solution of question of intention of grantors, and, when deed is but one of circumstances surrounding implied dedication of property for park purposes, all other circumstances may be considered together with deed, and implication, if any, is implication of fact.

8. Dedication ⚡57—Land held completely dedicated to public use for park purposes, in view of conveyance to city and subsequent resolution of city council.

Land conveyed to city held completely dedicated to public use for park purposes, in view of deed indicating such intent by grantors and subsequent resolution of city council designating land as park.

9. Deeds ⚡101—Indefinite deed may be made certain by practical construction of parties.

Deed or contract indefinite in terms may be made definite and certain by practical construction of parties to it.

10. Dedication ⚡58—Owner of land having dedicated it for park purposes cannot authorize any other use.

Where dedication of property for park purposes is complete, it becomes public property, and owner, having lost all control over it, cannot authorize any other use.

11. Dedication ⚡64—Land dedicated to city park purposes may properly be leased to county as site for veterans' memorial hall and building (St. 1909, p. 1322; St. 1925, p. 1416).

Land given to city of Oakland for park purposes and dedicated to and used for such purposes may properly be leased to county as site for veterans' memorial hall and building, especially in view of St. 1909, p. 1322 and St. 1925, p. 1416.

12. Dedication ⚡64—Erection of veterans' memorial hall and building is for "public purposes."

Erection by county of veterans' memorial hall and building is for "public purposes."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Public Purpose.]

In Bank.

Application by John F. Slavich, in behalf of the associations and individual members of the Grand Army of the Republic, Veterans of Foreign Wars, United Veterans of the Republic, Disabled Veterans of the World War, and the American Legion, and others, for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to William J. Hamilton, Acting Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Alameda, to compel him to execute a contract for the erection of a veterans' memorial hall and building and to enter into a lease with the city of Oakland for the property to be used as a site therefor. Writ granted.

Markell C. Baer and Breed, Burpee & Robinson, all of Oakland, for petitioners.

Earle Warren, Dist. Atty., Ralph E. Hoyt, Chief Asst. Dist. Atty., and Frank M. Ogden, Deputy Dist. Atty., all of Oakland, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Application has been made on behalf of the members of the Grand Army of the Republic, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion and other patriotic organizations of the city of Oakland, and the city itself, for the issuance of a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, as chairman of the board of supervisors of Alameda county, to formally execute a contract, duly awarded by the board under public bid, for the erection of a veterans' memorial hall and building, and to enter into a lease with the city of the property to be used as a site for the proposed structure.

[1] The facts present a case of a public officer refusing to perform a ministerial duty involving no discretion, and mandamus is the proper remedy. Williams v. City of Stockton, 195 Cal. 743, 235 P. 989. The necessary parties are before the court, and they have agreed to submit as the sole question presented by the application, and as one of law to be determined on the demurrer to the petition, whether or not land given to the city for and dedicated to and used for park purposes may properly be appropriated as a site for a memorial building.

The proposed veterans' memorial building is one of a number of like buildings and halls which the county of Alameda has undertaken to erect at various places in the county for the purpose of stimulating and promoting patriotism, and to provide meeting places and memorial halls for patriotic associations and their members throughout the county, and particularly in cities wherein they may be located. There is, in the city of Oakland, separated from Lakeside Park and Lake Merritt by Grand avenue, a parcel of land which was deeded to the city by Edson F. Adams, John Charles Adams, and Julia P. A. Prather, and which was converted by the grantors into a park. The city, by resolution of the council, accepted the gift, designated the property as "Adams Park," and has since maintained it as part of the general park system of the city.

[2, 3] Adams Park was selected as a suitable location for the Oakland memorial building. The board of supervisors of Alameda county, the council of the city of Oakland, the Oakland planning commission, and the board of park directors of the city approved the location and the erection of the building on the site chosen. Pursuant to the provisions of the Oakland city charter, the council invited proposals for the leasing of as much of the park property as is required for the site of the building, for a period of 25 years. The county of Alameda made the highest bid, and the council thereupon, by ordinance, authorized a lease of the property, which was executed by the city through its board of park directors, and accepted by the county. In the meantime, the board of supervisors of the county took legal steps for the erection of a suitable memorial building on the site, at a cost of approximately $250,000, and authorized the execution of the necessary building contract. The chairman of the board refused to authenticate and execute the lease, or to enter into the contract. He wholeheartedly concedes that a veterans' memorial hall, such as is here contemplated, would serve a noble, patriotic cause, and admits, as held by this court in Allied Architects' Association v. Payne, 192 Cal. 431, 435, 221 P. 209, 30 A. L. R. 1029, that the erection of such a building, to the extent that it would serve as a stimulus to patriotism, would be for a public purpose, but, in justification, of his position, relies upon the well-settled principle of law that land which has been dedicated as a public park must be used in conformity with the terms of the dedication, and it is without the power of a municipality to divert or withdraw the land from use for park purposes. Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 51, 28 P. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145; Mulvey v. Wangenheim, 23 Cal. App. 268, 137 P. 1106.

There can be no dispute as to the general rule relied upon by the respondent, but the real question seems to be whether the use in a particular case, and for a designated purpose, is consistent or inconsistent with park purposes. It is a matter of public knowledge that the erection of hotels, restaurants, museums, art galleries, zoological and botanical gardens, conservatories, and the like in public parks is common. Spires v. City of Los Angeles, 150 Cal. 64, 66, 87 P. 1026, 11 Ann. Cas. 465. The court was not, at the time that case was before it, nor has it since been, "pointed to any authority where it has been regarded as a diversion of the legitimate uses of the park to establish them, but, on the contrary, their establishment has been generally recognized as ancillary to the complete enjoyment by the public of the property set apart for their benefit."

[4] The uses to which park property may be devoted depend, to some extent, upon the manner of its acquisition, that is, whether dedicated by the donor, or purchased or condemned by the municipality. A different construction is placed upon dedications made by individuals from those made by the public. The former are construed strictly according to the terms of the grant, while in the latter cases a less strict construction is adopted. Harter v. San Jose, 141 Cal. 659, 75 P. 344; Spires v. City of Los Angeles, supra. In the Harter Case it was held that the use of a small portion of a park of several hundred acres, for hotel purposes, in such a way as not to in any manner restrict or interfere with the free use of the park by the public, the lease being for the evident benefit of the public, was not a use of the property inconsistent with its public character. In the Spires Case, supra, it was held that the erection of a building for a public library in a public park was a legitimate use of a portion of the property, but that the use of the building for other municipal purposes would amount to a diversion from the use to which the property was dedicated. In neither of these cases was dedication made by a private individual for a specific purpose.

[5] The property here in question was conveyed to the city of Oakland by a deed of the donors made in the year 1899. The instrument purports to remise, release, and forever quitclaim to the city of Oakland two pieces of property, which may be referred to as "parcel 1" and "parcel 2." Parcel 1 lies south of Grand avenue and borders on Lake Merritt, part of it apparently being salt marsh at the time it was given to the city. The description in the deed of parcel 1 is followed by the declaration that:

"Conveyance is made only upon the express condition that said property shall be used forever for the purpose of a public water park, and said property shall be entirely dredged up to the line of the property of the parties of the first part on the southeast, so that the same shall abut upon said water park."

Then followed the description of parcel 2, which is the present Adams Park property, and which includes the proposed site of the memorial building. After acceptance of the property, the city dredged parcel 1 to conform to the requirements of the deed of gift.

[6, 7] We must agree with the respondent that the clause in the deed to the effect that the conveyance is made upon the express condition that the property shall be used forever as a public water park, although inserted immediately following the description of parcel 1, and immediately preceding the description of the parcel including the land here in question, does not in any way indicate, except possibly by virtue of its position in the deed, that the restriction as to the use of the property "for the purpose of a public water park" was limited to the first parcel of land. The deed, by its recitals, purports to convey to the city "all those certain lots, pieces or parcels of land * * * bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit," and the habendum clause provides that the premises, which refer, of course, to both parcels, are to be held "upon the conditions hereinbefore [in the deed] set forth." Parcel 2 is directly opposite the northerly shore of and faces Lake Merritt. But for the location of Grand avenue, it would abut on the lake and on parcel 1. The intention of the grantors is to be gathered from a consideration of the entire instrument of conveyance, although the immediate object of inquiry is the meaning of an isolated clause. Coon v. Sonoma Magnesite Co., 182 Cal. 597, 600, 189 P. 271; 9 Cal. Jur. 255. The facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction may be looked to for a solution of the question, and, when a deed is but one of the circumstances surrounding an implied dedication, all the other circumstances may be considered together with the deed, and the implication, if any, is an implication of fact. Dougan v. Greenwich, 77 Conn. 444, 59 A. 505; Mayor of Baltimore v. Northern, etc., Ry. Co., 88 Md. 427, 41 A. 911.

[8] The facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction involving the deed here appear to show very clearly an express intention on the part of the donors to dedicate the property to the city of Oakland for park purposes. Some four and a half years after the acceptance of the deed to the property and its recordation by the city of Oakland, the city council, referring to parcel 2, adopted a resolution which seems so pertinent here that we recite it in full, to wit:

"Whereas, a parcel of land located at Grand avenue and Montecito avenue was dedicated to the city by Edson F. Adams, John Chas. Adams, and Julia P. A. Prather on January 12, 1899; and

"Whereas, the grantors of said land have converted the grounds into a beautiful park, adorned with a conservatory, containing potted plants, tropical trees, etc.; and

"Whereas, Edson F. Adams, John Chas. Adams, and Julia P. A. Prather on July 13, 1903, donated to the city said conservatory with plants, tools, and implements:

"Resolved, that the thanks of this council, on behalf of the city of Oakland, be extended to the generous donors for their gift; and be it further

"Resolved, that said park be and it is hereby designated and shall be known as Adams Park."

[9] It is, of course, well settled that a deed or contract indefinite in terms may be made definite and certain by the practical construction of the parties to it. Grant v. Bannister, 160 Cal. 774, 780, 118 P. 253. We are satisfied that the acts of the parties, in full accord with their intention, amounted to a complete dedication of the land, referred to as parcel 2, to public use for park purposes.

[10] Petitioners claim that, even though it may have been the intention of the grantors of the Adams Park property to dedicate it to the city for park purposes, the restrictions imposed by the original conveyance have been released by reason of the fact that, as a precautionary measure, and for the apparent purpose of forestalling any question as to what was intended by the original deed, the successors in interest of the original grantors have executed an instrument, in writing, by which they purport to "give, grant, alien, and confirm unto the [city of Oakland] and to its assigns and successors forever, the right and privilege to erect or cause to be erected for the county of Alameda, upon said public park, such memorial hall as the council of the city of Oakland may deem fitting." But, if the dedication of the property for park purposes was complete in the first instance, the property thereby became public property, and the owners lost all control over it. If the dedication was complete by their acts, whether express or implied, it was thereafter irrevocable by them, and the effect of such dedication cannot be qualified by any act or declaration thereafter made on their part. The property dedicated has become public property, impressed with the use for which it was dedicated. Archer v. Salinas City, supra. Then, again, the city of Oakland had the power to irrevocably dedicate the Adams Park property for park purposes, and we are satisfied that it has done so. Harter v. San Jose, supra.

[11, 12] The immediate question, therefore, to be determined is whether the purpose for which it is now desired to lease a part of the property to the county of Alameda for 25 years is consistent with such dedication. The building proposed to be erected, according to the petitioners, will "be used primarily as a meeting place and memorial hall for organizations whose membership is composed of soldiers, sailors, and marines who have served the United States of America honorably in any of its wars." While it is well settled that the erection of such a building is for public purposes (Allied Architects' Ass'n v. Payne, supra; Barrow v. Bradley, 190 Ky. 480, 227 S. W. 1016; Kingman v. Brockton, 153 Mass. 255, 26 N. E. 998, 11 L. R. A. 123; Hill v. Roberts, 142 Tenn. 215, 217 S. W. 826), it does not necessarily follow that the use of the land on which it is to be located is consistent with the purposes for which the park was dedicated. A use for a public purpose may be utterly inconsistent with a use for park purposes. Under the well-settled principle of law generally applicable, if the city were undertaking to establish in Adams Park a city hall, fire engine station, hospital, or jail, endeavoring to devote the property to the erection of municipal buildings or offices for use in the transaction of public business, we would have little hesitancy in saying that such purposes would be entirely inconsistent with the use of the property for park purposes. Spires v. City of Los Angeles, supra, page 67 (87 P. 1027). In this connection, petitioners contend that the city of Oakland is not subject to the general rule. Section 65 of the charter of the city (Stats. 1909, p. 1322; Stats. 1925, p. 1416) provides that the board of park directors of the city shall have the complete and exclusive control, management, and direction of parks, squares, and grounds within the city, and shall have the exclusive right to erect and superintend the erection of buildings and structures thereon pertaining to park purposes, subject to the provision that the city council "may erect or cause to be erected any municipal building or buildings thereon." Under this provision, it would seem that the city of Oakland has the undoubted right to construct any kind of a municipal building on park property. Whether such a building as is here contemplated is, or is not, a municipal building does not need to be decided, for we have reached the conclusion that the use of a part of the Adams Park property for a veterans' memorial hall, under the restrictions placed by the city upon its construction and use, is not a use inconsistent with park purposes.

By the express terms of the lease, the "premises shall be used exclusively for the erection and maintenance" of the veterans' memorial hall. When the hall is completed, the lease of the site, according to its terms, will cover only the land actually occupied by the building—a minor part of Adams Park. The remainder of the so-called "site," in common with the rest of the park property, will be devoted to lawns, flowers, and shrubs, and otherwise conducted in the manner usual to the maintaining of the park. The proposed veterans' memorial hall, "of a beautiful ornamental and architectural design," will face Grand avenue, the water park maintained by the city, known as Lake Merritt, and the public park surrounding it, known as Lakeside Park, which consists of more than 230 acres of land. It will be visible from a large part of the shore lines of the lake and the public streets, avenues, and parks surrounding it, "thereby," according to the petition, "adding greatly to the beauty and attractiveness of the city of Oakland and forming a conspicuous and magnificent monument to the cause of patriotism and sacrifices of those who have fought and died in the wars of the United States." In casting about for a suitable location whereon to erect the memorial hall, the Oakland city planning commission, the city council, and the board of park directors acted jointly and in harmony. The planning commission, "being fully advised in the premises," approved and ratified the "selection of the said Adams Park for the proposed memorial hall, as being fully in accord with the future development and beautification of the city of Oakland in respect to Lake Merritt and its environs and in keeping with the public purpose of the Lake Merritt system of parks." The city council, in the resolution approving the selection of the site, recited that "a veterans' memorial hall erected upon the said Adams Park would most fittingly serve the municipal and public purposes manifested in its construction, would be centrally located and conveniently accessible to the greater number of veterans, and, as a monument symbolic of the soldiers' spirit of sacrifice, would greatly add to and enhance the beauty and attractiveness of the shores of Lake Merritt as a public park." The resolution of the city council awarding the lease to the county of Alameda, and directing its execution, provides that the building shall be so constructed, according to plans and specifications approved by the city council and the park commission, as to conform to the general objects and purposes for which the land is held. The board of park directors of the city shall have the right to enter at all times upon the premises so leased, and the building shall be used for park pleasure purposes only. While any effort on the part of those interested to escape from the imposition of restrictions and limitations placed upon the property dedicated to the city for park purposes only would be futile, if an intended use would, in effect, be a diversion from the uses and purposes for which the property was dedicated, it definitely appears, in the instant case, that the intention has been to keep the use of the property within due bounds with regard to its use for park purposes. The erection of monuments and memorials in public parks has long been recognized as a use consistent with park purposes. Brahan v. Meridian, 111 Miss. 30, 71 So. 170; Parsons v. Van Wyck, 56 App. Div. 329, 67 N. Y. S. 1054. While no case involving the question of the use of a public park as a site for a memorial building has come to our notice, we are of the view that the erection of the veterans' memorial hall, as here proposed, will not interfere with the enjoyment by the community in general of Adams Park, and will not be such a diversion of the property from its use for park purposes as to amount to an invasion of the settled principles of law relied on by the respondent. He should therefore execute and authenticate the lease with the city of Oakland. No legal objection being made to appear why the lease should not be entered into, and no contention being made that the contract for the erection of the memorial building authorized by the board of supervisors was in any way illegal, its due execution should also be attested by the respondent.

Let a writ of mandate issue as prayed for.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

201 Cal. 341

PEOPLE v. SIEBER. (Cr. 2929.)★

Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1927.

Rehearing Denied July 7, 1927.

1. Homicide ⚡250—Evidence held to sustain conviction for murder.

Evidence in prosecution for murder held sufficient to sustain conviction.

2. Criminal law ⚡160—Jury's finding approved by trial court on motion for new trial will be disturbed only when not supported by evidence as matter of law.

Supreme Court may disturb a finding by jury in a criminal case approved by trial court on motion for new trial only when it can be said as a matter of law that there was no evidence to support verdict.

3. Homicide ⚡170—Admitting testimony as to identification of defendant when seen near decedent's home on day of homicide held not error.

In prosecution for murder, admitting testimony of witness concerning identity of the defendant when seen near home of decedent on day of homicide and as to his having been able to subsequently identify a coat said to have been worn by defendant on that occasion held not erroneous.

4. Witnesses ⚡274(2) — Cross-examining defense character witness as to knowledge of reports of acts inconsistent with character attempted to be proved held not erroneous.

In prosecution for murder, cross-examining character witness for defense relative to witness' knowledge of reports of particular and specific charges and acts inconsistent with character which witness was called on to prove held not erroneous.

5. Criminal law ⚡1170½(2)—Cross-examining character witness held not prejudicial, in view of negative answer and that fact sought to be proven was properly shown by other evidence.

In murder prosecution, cross-examining character witness for defense relative to witness' knowledge of reports of particular and specific charges and acts inconsistent with character which witness was called on to prove held not prejudicial, where question was answered in the negative and same fact was properly shown by other evidence, including that given by defendant himself.

6. Criminal law ⚡1036(2)—Cross-examining defense character witness as to knowledge of decedent's fear that defendant would kill her held not reversible error without objection or request for instruction.

In prosecution for murder, cross-examining character witness for defense relative to knowledge as to deceased's fear that defendant would kill her held not reversible error, in absence of objection, until after answer thereto in the negative and failure to request instruction to disregard question.

7. Criminal law ⚡1163(3)—Erroneous admission of testimony as to defendant's mother destroying sweater while defendant was in jail did not require reversal without showing prejudice.

In prosecution for murder, erroneous admission of testimony that while defendant was in jail awaiting trial his mother burned a certain sweater belonging to him held not to require reversal, in absence of showing by defendant that he was in any way prejudiced thereby.

8. Witnesses ⚡271(1)—Refusal to permit defendant's counsel to use on cross-examination statement shown to witness for prosecution while testifying held erroneous (Code Civ. Proc. § 2047).

In prosecution for murder, refusal to compel prosecution to allow counsel for defense to use on cross-examination statement shown to witness while on the stand testifying for prosecution held erroneous, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2047.

9. Criminal law ⚡1170½(5)—Refusal to allow defendant's counsel to use on cross-examination statement shown to witness for prosecution held not prejudicial error.

In prosecution for murder, erroneous refusal by trial court to compel prosecution to allow defendant's counsel to use on cross-examination statement shown to witness for prosecution while testifying held not to have resulted in miscarriage of justice, in view of thorough cross-examination to which witness was subjected, showing that counsel must have been well informed as to contents of statement which they examined when it was first shown to witness.

10. Criminal law ⚡1043(2)—Objection to testimony will not be considered, where defendant did not point out reason for being inadmissible or how it prejudiced him.

Objection to testimony by prisoner who was placed in same cell as defendant while awaiting trial cannot be considered by Supreme Court on appeal, where defendant did not point out in what manner evidence was inadmissible or in what manner its admission tended to prejudice him.

11. Criminal law ⚡741(1), 742(1)—Credibility of witness testifying to conversations between himself and defendant and weight to be attached to his testimony held for jury.

Credibility of witness, placed in same cell as defendant while awaiting trial, and testifying to certain conversations between himself and defendant, and weight to be attached to such testimony, were matters addressed to consideration of jury.

12. Criminal law ⚡1170(4)—Refusal to permit cross-examination was not prejudicial, where questions were subsequently fully answered.

Refusal to permit counsel for defendant to ask certain questions of witness on cross-examination to show interest and bias held not prejudicial, where questions were subsequently asked and were fully answered.

13. Criminal law ⚡363—Certain blueprint found near deceased's body held admissible as res gestæ in murder prosecution.

In prosecution for murder, certain pieces of blueprint found near body of deceased held admissible as part of res gestæ, particularly in view of evidence tending to connect defendant with them.

14. Criminal law ⚡691—Objection that answer is not responsive can be made only by party asking question.

Objection that answer is not responsive can be made only by party who asks the question if answer is otherwise admissible.

15. Criminal law ⚡1168(4)—Improperly striking testimony as unresponsive answers held not prejudicial error, where relating only to collateral matter.

In prosecution for murder, improperly striking out testimony on motion of prosecution, on ground that answers were not responsive, held not prejudicial error, where answers related only to collateral matter of no particular import to defendant's case.

16. Homicide ⚡166(1)—Defendant, in prosecution for murder of wife, was properly cross-examined as to supporting her during certain period.

In prosecution for murder of wife, defendant was properly cross-examined relative to whether he had supported his wife during a certain period.

17. Criminal law ⚡1170½(1)—Erroneous refusal to permit impeachment of witness on material matter held not prejudicial, in view of other evidence.

In prosecution for murder, erroneous refusal to permit impeachment of witness for prosecution on a material matter did not require reversal, where prejudice did not result therefrom in view of other testimony, including that of defendant, relative to matter as to which witness was claimed to have made contradictory statement.

18. Criminal law ⚡720(6)—Counsel in discussing merits of case may state fully his views as to what evidence shows and conclusions to be drawn therefrom.

Counsel in discussing merits of case both as to law and facts has right to state fully his views as to what evidence shows and as to conclusions to be fairly drawn therefrom.

19. Criminal law ⚡1037(2)—Ordinarily counsel must call attention to misconduct of district attorney to complain thereof on appeal.

Ordinarily, when district attorney is guilty of misconduct in trial of criminal case, counsel for defense must call attention of court thereto and assign it as misconduct, or request court to instruct jury to disregard it in order to complain thereof on appeal.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Charles Sieber was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Cooper & Collings, John S. Cooper, T. P. Toomey, Hugh L. Dickson, and Herman Greenschlag, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

WASTE, C. J. Charles Sieber was indicted by the grand jury of Los Angeles county for the murder of his wife, Minnie Sieber. The trial jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree, without recommendation. After motion for a new trial made and denied, judgment of death was pronounced, and an appeal was taken to this court. Appellant's first contention is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, for the reason that there is no evidence showing a motive, or tending to connect the defendant with the crime with which he was charged.

The appellant and his wife were married in 1912, and, within the ensuing year, a daughter was born to them. Shortly thereafter the parents separated, but resumed marital relations in 1914. In 1916 they again separated and never afterward lived together. Sieber enlisted in the United States Army during the World War, and soon after its close went to live in Los Angeles, where he entered the service of the city as a bricklayer. Mrs. Sieber had also gone to Los Angeles to reside, and in 1924, apparently under some compulsion, appellant began to pay $25 per month toward the support of his daughter. In November, 1925, Sieber instituted a divorce action against his wife. Mrs. Sieber filed an answer, and on January 7, 1926, early in the morning, Sieber was served with an order to show cause why he should not pay alimony and attorney's fees in the action. The evidence establishes the fact that Mrs. Sieber was murdered within 5 minutes after 9 o'clock on that day. The deceased lived at 512 Avenue 28, Los Angeles, with her daughter, who attended school, leaving home shortly before 9 o'clock in the morning. Mrs. Sieber worked as a janitress in an office building from 4 to 8 o'clock in the morning, and in the afternoon. Appellant had learned from the daughter, a few days before the murder was committed, of the time his wife returned home from work, and at what time the daughter went to school. On the morning in question, the girl left for school about 25 minutes to 9 o'clock, leaving her mother alive and alone in the house. Shortly after 3 o'clock in the afternoon she returned with two girl companions and found her mother dead. She had been beaten to death in a most fiendish manner with some "powerful instrument," wielded with terrific force. A dent made by some blunt instrument, and in which was a strand of hair, was found on the door of the room. It was not there when the daughter left for school in the morning. In the room in which the body was discovered there were found several scraps of blueprint, which were identified by witnesses as being parts of a blueprint for a certain sewer manhole, which had been constructed by the appellant.

While there were no eyewitnesses to the homicide, it is the theory of the prosecution that Sieber became angered on being served with the order to show cause in the divorce action and went immediately to the home of his wife and killed her in a most brutal fashion. The prosecution relies upon several series of circumstances established by the evidence, from any one of which, it argues, the jury was warranted in inferring that the appellant committed the crime with which he was charged. When the several series of circumstances are considered together, the prosecution contends, the inference of appellant's guilt becomes well-nigh irresistible.

[1] The claim that the evidence is legally insufficient to support the verdict is without foundation. The record discloses that, in the discharge of his duties, the appellant worked at and supervised the work of installing sewer manholes, which were constructed according to blueprint specifications furnished to him. His working crew consisted of three men. On the morning of January 7th, the day on which the decedent was killed, Sieber left his home, riding in his own Chevrolet automobile, and reported at the municipal yard shortly after 8 o'clock. Immediately on entering the yard he was handed the order to show cause procured by his wife in the divorce action. According to the testimony of the process-server, Sieber showed no anger when served with the order, but made a disparaging remark about his wife, and said he would "go to jail" before he paid her any alimony. A fellow workman testified, however, that about that time Sieber, carrying a roll of blueprints in his hand and looking at the ground, seemed excited and angry.

Sieber was last seen at the yard between 8:10 and 8:30 o'clock. About half past 8 o'clock, his crew, having loaded a truck with brick, sand, and cement, left the corporation yard and went to the vicinity of Twenty-First and Toberman streets, where they arrived about half an hour after leaving the yard. Sieber was not there, but, according to the testimony of the workmen, arrived at the manhole about 25 minutes after 9 o'clock. Shortly before 9 o'clock, according to the testimony of a witness, Reendres, Sieber was seen walking on Avenue 28, near the residence of the decedent, about $2\frac{1}{10}$ miles from the municipal yard. A small automobile was parked in front of the adjoining lot. At 9 o'clock, Mrs. Chambers, a neighbor, left her home three doors away, and started for the car line. As she passed the house of the decedent she heard "four terrible screams," which appeared to be the screams of a woman, and "three or four terrible knocks," which the witness said sounded like some one kicking or hammering on the front door. Another witness testified to seeing Sieber and his mother, some time after 9 o'clock, in the backyard of Sieber's home, about a mile and a half from the scene of the homicide, with a long-handled shovel between them.

According to the testimony of the men comprising appellant's working crew, there was nothing unusual in his demeanor and appearance when he appeared at the manhole on Twenty-First street, about five miles from the scene of the killing, some time after 9 o'clock. Sieber testified he was sure he arrived earlier than at the time fixed by the men. After working in silence for a while, according to the testimony of the workmen, Sieber, without any apparent reason, looked up from the manhole and said: "If anything would happen to my wife they would sure get me." The divorce action brought by Sieber against his wife was the subject of conversation during the day, as it had been at other times. On previous occasions, Sieber had said, so the same witnesses testified, that he desired to get rid of his wife; that he hated her "bad enough [he] would kill her"; that he had been trying to get a divorce long enough and "now he was going to have it"; that he was going to marry a young girl 16 or 17 years old. At noon on the day of the homicide, Sieber consulted his attorney concerning the divorce action, after which he told one of the workmen that he would "rot in jail" before he would pay alimony to his wife. The appellant was arrested at his home about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. When accosted by the arresting officers, who were not in uniform, he started to run. When caught and asked why he ran, he said: "I figured if you were policemen you would shoot me." The arresting officers did not tell him he was under arrest, nor why they wanted him, but, when a neighbor asked him if he could do anything for him or "bail him out," he replied that he did not think it was a case in which he could be bailed out, and that the officers would probably not let him talk to any one. He was taken at once to the scene of the crime and into the room where the body of his wife lay on the floor. At first he said he did not recognize the deceased, but, when asked if it was not the body of his wife, he said it was. According to the testimony of one of the police officers, who was then present, the appellant was asked "if he had come down that morning and killed her and he said 'No.' * * * At first his knees trembled—his body lowered a little. Then he wavered; then he stood straight up again."

We deem it unnecessary to say much more about the evidence. In addition to that which we have summarized, and evidence of purported statements made by the defendant while in jail awaiting trial, many facts and circumstances, which it is not necessary here to detail, were brought out, all tending to support the theory of the prosecution. The appellant testified in his own behalf. He specifically denied having any connection with the homicide, and gave what appears from the record to be a clear account of his entire movements during the day in question. He denied making a number of the incriminating statements attributed to him, and explained others. There was evidence concerning the clothing worn by him on the day of the homicide, and the absence of blood on the clothes. Witnesses testified to the distance necessary to be traveled in going from point to point, material to the theory of both the prosecution and the defense.

[2] Appellant characterizes the theory of the prosecution as a "weird story," entitled to a place in fiction, and contends that it was humanly impossible for him to have traveled the necessary distances and to have done the things charged by the prosecution within the time specified. All questions arising from the situation pictured by the appellant were addressed to the consideration of the jury. We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which it could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and, among them, that it was possible for the defendant to commit the crime in the manner charged. The finding of the jury was approved by the trial court on motion for a new trial. The findings of court and jury are conclusive upon the subject and upon this court, as we may disturb a finding only when we can say, as a matter of law, that there was no evidence to support it. People v. Erno, 195 Cal. 272, 232 P. 710. This is not such a case. There was testimony that the general reputation of the appellant for peace and quiet was good, and other testimony, in rebuttal, that it was bad. Enough has been set forth to demonstrate that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict, if it was believed by the jury to be true. In some respects the facts in this case are like those in People v. Larson, 167 Cal. 751, 141 P. 374, in which the court said:

"While it is true that no living person saw the actual killing of deceased other than the perpetrator of the homicide, and that the evidence was entirely circumstantial, it is idle to assert that there was not enough in the evidence to warrant the conclusion beyond all reasonable doubt on the part of the jurors that the defendant was guilty as charged."

[3] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in admitting testimony of the witness, Reendres, concerning the identity of the appellant when seen near the home of the decedent on the day of the homicide, and as to his having been able to subsequently identify a coat said to have been worn by the appellant on that occasion. He contends that the prosecution was permitted to "bolster up" the testimony of the witness by showing that, on a prior occasion and at the police station, he had done the same thing. The record does not bear the construction placed upon it by appellant, and we find nothing objectionable in the evidence admitted.

[4-6] It is next contended by appellant that the court erred in permitting the district attorney to ask, and that the district attorney was guilty of serious misconduct in asking certain questions in cross-examining Miles Gregory, one of the character witnesses for the defense. He had testified that the defendant had "a good reputation as a peaceful law-abiding citizen," and on cross-examination was asked if he knew that Sieber had lived with a woman who was not his wife, and had held her out to be his wife, if he knew Mrs. Sieber, during the last two years of her lifetime, feared Sieber would kill her, and that she communicated her fear to her neighbors. Appellant contends that the purpose of asking the questions was an attempt to degrade the defendant by incompetent evidence and in an indirect manner. The first question asked was admissible under the rule that a character witness may be cross-examined as to his knowledge of reports of particular and specific charges of the commission of acts inconsistent with the trait or character (in this case that the appellant was a law-abiding citizen) which the witness was called upon to prove. People v. Hightower, 65 Cal. App. 331, 340, 224 P. 110. Furthermore, no prejudice resulted to the defendant, because the question was answered in the negative, and the same fact was properly shown by other evidence, including that given by the defendant himself. No objection was made to the question concerning the fear of the decedent, which was admittedly improper cross-examination, until it was answered, also in the negative. The objection was not made on that ground, no motion was made to strike out the answer, and counsel did not request the court to instruct the jury to disregard the question, but cited the action of the district attorney as misconduct. The third question, which was likewise improper as asked by the district attorney, was objected to, and the objection was properly sustained. The court, of its own motion, instructed the jury, in effect, to disregard the question, and that it was not to assume anything as a fact because it might be implied in the questions which were asked but not answered.

[7] Another contention of the appellant is that the trial court erred in permitting the prosecution to show that, after the defendant was arrested and while he was in jail awaiting trial, Mrs. Sieber, his mother, burned and destroyed a brown sweater appellant was said to have worn. We are unable to perceive, from the record, on what theory the prosecution was allowed to introduce the evidence. It is not shown that the defendant, if the sweater were his, wore it on the day of the homicide, and no attempt was made to connect it in any way with the commission of the offense. The testimony should not have been offered or admitted, but, beyond saying that the admission of the evidence was erroneous and contrary to law, appellant has not shown that he was in any way prejudiced by the testimony.

[8] Appellant's next contention is that the trial court erred in refusing to compel the prosecution to allow counsel for the defense to use, on cross-examination, a statement shown to a witness while on the stand and testifying for the prosecution. During the examination of William Cobleigh, a witness for the prosecution, the deputy district attorney, for the purpose of refreshing the witness' recollection, produced and showed to him a phonographic report of a statement made by him at the office of the district attorney about ten days after the death of Mrs. Sieber. Counsel for the defense expressed a desire to examine the document, and the record indicates that he was given full opportunity to do so. The defense did not at that time exercise its right to examine the witness as to the circumstances and conditions under which the statement was made, or what it contained, but allowed the examination to proceed. When the attorney for the defense took the witness on cross-examination he requested that the deputy district attorney hand him the statement with which Cobleigh had refreshed his recollection, in order that he might "properly cross-examine the witness." Before the deputy district attorney could comply, and without any objection being made by the prosecution, the court, of its own motion, ruled that the defense was not entitled to the statement, for the reason that it was not in evidence, that it was a private affair, and it had been permitted to be used by the witness to enable him to refresh his memory. On counsel attempting to state the purpose for which he desired the statement, the court declined to hear him, and directed him to proceed with the examination. Later, and upon several occasions during the cross-examination of Cobleigh, the defense made further demands on the prosecution for the production of the statement. Each was met by the arbitrary refusal of the trial court to accede to the request. We are of the view that, as conceded by the Attorney General, the court committed error. Section 2047 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a witness is allowed to refresh his memory respecting a fact by anything written under his direction, at the time when the fact occurred, or immediately thereafter, or at any other time when the fact was fresh in his memory, and he knew the same was correctly stated in writing. "But in such case," the section provides, "the writing must be produced, and may be seen by the adverse party, who may, if he choose, cross-examine the witness upon it, and may read it to the jury." We are unable to agree with the argument of the district attorney of Los Angeles county, based upon a considerable quotation from the record, that, because the witness on direct examination must have read only a small portion of the statement for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, the defense was not entitled to use the whole of it. He appears to take the position that, because counsel for the defendant had full opportunity to see the statement, and presumably became acquainted with its contents, the provisions of section 2047, supra, had been fully complied with. The district attorney is contending for an undue limitation of the procedure permitted by the Code section. It therefore remains to determine whether or not the error of the trial court caused any such prejudice to the cause of the appellant as to warrant a reversal of the judgment.

[9] We do not think the ruling of the court, though erroneous, resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Cobleigh had testified on direct examination that he had last seen Sieber at the yard between 8:20 and 8:30 o'clock, that it took approximately half an hour to drive to Twenty-First and Toberman streets, and that Sieber arrived at about 25 minutes past 9. He stated that he testified as to time without having seen a watch or clock, and could not compute time if he had nothing to go by, and that, in his testimony, he had not stated any exact time. It would seem, from the record, that the main purpose of the defense in demanding the right to use the statement made by Cobleigh at the district attorney's office was to enable it to cross-examine the witness on the matter of time. We have read with care the record of the cross-examination, and are of the view that little more, if anything, could have been accomplished by the use of the statement, or any number of statements, than was accomplished in the minute and particular cross-examination to which the witness was subjected. The record indicates that the defendant's counsel must have been well informed as to what was in the statement, and no doubt they were, from the examination made when it was first shown to the witness. Cobleigh's recollection of every point of time material to the movements of the appellant and his ability to state the time were thoroughly gone into, and we are satisfied, from the entire record relating to the incident, that no prejudicial error resulted from the refusal of the court to direct the production and delivery of the statement to the counsel for the defense.

[10-12] While the appellant was incarcerated in the county jail awaiting trial, another prisoner by the name of Mortimer was placed in the same cell. He was permitted, over objection, to testify to certain conversations between himself and the appellant. Beyond contending that the testimony was incompetent, and not within the exception to rule as being a declaration or admission against the defendant, the appellant has not pointed out how, or in what manner, the evidence was inadmissible, or in what manner its admission tended to prejudice him. We are therefore unable to consider the objection. The credibility of the witness and the weight to be attached to his testimony were matters addressed to the consideration of the jury. The contention that the court erred in permitting the prosecution to introduce certain portions of the testimony of the witnesses Ingmire, Glenn, and Herrera is without foundation. It is next contended that the court erred in restricting the cross-examination, by counsel for the appellant, of certain witnesses for the prosecution, for the purpose of testing the witnesses' power of observation with relation to certain matters testified to. We have carefully examined the record as to each of these specifications of error, and are satisfied that the court did not abuse its discretion in limiting the cross-examination as it did. The appellant had ample opportunity in this respect to fully develop his theories and to get from the witnesses under cross-examination everything to which he was properly entitled. The contention that the trial court erred in refusing to permit counsel for the defense to ask the witness Mortimer certain questions on cross-examination, tending to show interest and bias, is without merit. The record discloses that the questions were subsequently permitted to be, and were, fully answered.

[13] Another assignment of error is predicated upon the action of the trial court in allowing the prosecution to introduce in evidence the pieces of blueprint found near the body of the deceased. The pieces of blueprint were part of the res gestæ, having been found on the floor of the room in close proximity to the dead body and, as such, were admissible. There was also evidence which tended to connect the appellant with them. Less than an hour before the killing appellant was seen with a roll of blueprints in his hand, and it was shown by testimony of the witness, Ingmire, that at a considerable time before the homicide he had given Sieber a blueprint in connection with their common employment which had never been returned to him. The witness recognized the tracing on at least one of the pieces of blueprint found near the body of the deceased, and testified that it looked something like the map he had given to the appellant on that occasion.

[14-16] During the course of the trial counsel for the defense asked certain questions of witnesses, which were answered in a manner not responsive to the questions. In two instances here complained of, and on motions of the prosecution, the court improperly struck out the testimony on the ground that the answers were not responsive. An objection that an answer is not responsive is one that can be made only by the party who asks the question, if the answer is otherwise admissible (Hirshfeld v. Dana, 193 Cal. 142, 148, 223 P. 451); but appellant was not prejudiced by the action of the trial court. The answer of the defendant that the witness Mortimer "said he was in [jail] for throwing pepper in the cop's eyes," while indirectly responsive to a question, related to a collateral matter of no particular import to the case of the appellant. The other answer, concerning a package of meat which the appellant took home on the day of the homicide, was but a repetition, in substance, of an answer that had been previously given, and which was permitted to remain in the record. The objection of the appellant to the question asked him on cross-examination, if he had supported his wife during a certain period, was properly overruled, although the criticism to the form of the question is not entirely without merit.

[17] The witness Cobleigh, one of the crew working under appellant and a witness for the prosecution, testified that he and the other two men comprising the crew loaded the truck at the city yard on the morning of the homicide. Counsel for appellant sought to impeach Cobleigh's testimony by saying that he had made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his testimony given at the trial. The witness had been interviewed by Mr. Toomey, an attorney for the appellant, and on cross-examination, testifying as to what occurred on that occasion, said he did not tell the attorney that he saw Sieber help load the truck. On further cross-examination, after laying the foundation for impeachment, counsel asked the witness " * * * whether or not at the same time and place [he] did not tell [Toomey] that Charles Sieber helped [him] load the truck." The witness answered, "No; I did not tell him." The answer was allowed to remain in the record, but, after argument, the court sustained an objection of the prosecution that the defense was attempting to impeach on a collateral matter. We are not in accord with the ruling of the trial court. The actions and movements of the appellant, during the time he claimed to be at the city yard on the morning of the homicide, constituted a most material element in the case. If the witness, Cobleigh, had made contradictory statements concerning the presence of the appellant during that period, the appellant had the right to show the fact, as affecting the weight and credibility to be attached to the witness' testimony. There is much in the record, however, from which it appears to be satisfactorily established that the appellant did not assist his men in loading the truck. He, himself, testified that he only told the men "what to load * * * and was standing there by the truck until" called to assist a friend (Soroker) make some repairs to an automobile. When he returned "they [his crew] were just about through loading the truck." We cannot therefore say that the cause of the defendant was in any way materially injured by the action of the trial court.

Appellant contends that, throughout the trial, "the trial judge was hasty, unreasonable, and humiliating to the defendant and his counsel," and that "the conduct of the court [was] of such nature and under such circumstances and conditions" as to prevent the defendant from having a fair trial. It is unnecessary for us to comment upon the tension under which able counsel labor in the conduct of a long and tedious trial in the defense of one charged with the most serious of all crimes. The trial judge, in such cases, is subjected to an equally severe burden. We have carefully read the specifications of instances in which it is contended the trial court overstepped the bounds of judicial fairness and decorum, and, while the record indicates that at times friction was engendered between the court and counsel for the defense, we find nothing in the attitude or action of the court to warrant the feeling that the defendant was thereby prejudiced or prevented from having a fair and impartial trial.

[18, 19] Appellant complains of what he terms the "shocking conduct and shameful tactics" of the deputy district attorney who conducted the case for the people in the trial court. The prosecuting officer may have been overzealous at times, but we are not persuaded that he was so unmindful of the duty he owed both to the state and to the defendant as to use his office "as an engine of persecution," as charged by the appellant. We are unable to say that questions charged to have been asked by the deputy district attorney in bad faith were, in fact, improperly propounded. Neither are we convinced that during his argument to the jury that officer purposely referred to matters not in the record, or intentionally made misstatements of law, for the purpose of misleading the jury. The right of counsel to discuss the merits of a case, both as to the law and facts, is very wide, and he has the right to state fully his views as to what the evidence shows, and as to the conclusions to be fairly drawn therefrom. The adverse party cannot complain if the reasoning be faulty and the deductions illogical, as such matters are ultimately for the consideration of the jury. 8 Cal. Jur. p. 263. From the record of the portions of the argument of the deputy district attorney to the jury, to which objections are now made, it appears that there were mutual recriminations between counsel for the state and for the defendant respecting their official and professional methods. These occurrences were, as is always the case, unfortunate and ill-timed, but we cannot agree with the appellant that the actions and attitude of the deputy district attorney prejudiced his cause. The record discloses that, while in some instances counsel for the defense assigned the conduct of the deputy district attorney as error and misconduct, in many other instances they merely noted an exception to what the attorney did. The rule is that when a district attorney is guilty of misconduct in the trial of a criminal case, it is ordinarily the duty of counsel for the defense promptly to call the attention of the court thereto and assign it as misconduct, or request the court to instruct the jury to disregard it. Such assignments and requests are necessary as a foundation for a complaint to this court. People v. Routh, 182 Cal. 561, 567, 189 P. 436; People v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 551, 140 P. 256; People v. Bishop, 134 Cal. 682, 685, 66 P. 976. There may be cases in which the act done or remark made is of such a character that a harmful result cannot be obviated by any retraction or request. For the same reason, the want of an assignment of misconduct cannot affect appellant's rights, where such assignment could not have led to the curing of the harm done. People v. MacDonald, supra. A careful reading of the record, however, satisfies us that the present case is not within these exceptions to the general rule.

The order denying the motion for a new trial and the judgment appealed from are and each is affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.

201 Cal. 309

PEOPLE v. SCHWARZ et al. (Cr. 2978.)

Supreme Court of California. June 3, 1927.

1. Criminal law § 1069(6)—Appeal from judgment, not having been taken orally at time of entry thereof or within 2 days thereafter, must be disregarded (Pen. Code, § 1239).

Appeal from judgment on plea of guilty of improper attempt to influence a juror, not having been taken orally at time of entry thereof or within 2 days thereafter, was abortive, in view of Pen. Code, § 1239, and must be disregarded.

2. Criminal law § 1032(1), 1044—Timely appeal from judgment because indictment was insufficient cannot be considered, where sufficiency of indictment was not tested by demurrer on motion.

Timely appeal from order refusing to vacate judgment of conviction on ground that indictment failed to state public offense cannot avail defendant, where she failed to test sufficiency of indictment by demurrer or by motion in arrest of judgment.

3. Criminal law § 1023(12)—Order refusing to vacate judgment, and denying right to withdraw plea of guilty and re-enter plea, held appealable.

Order refusing to vacate judgment of conviction and right to withdraw defendant's plea of guilty and re-enter plea of not guilty, being timely, was appealable.

4. Criminal law § 998—Supreme Court may reverse order denying motion to vacate judgment and change plea induced by fruitless promise of immunity.

Where defendant, charged with improper attempt to influence a juror, on promise of immunity withdrew plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty and was sentenced and probation denied, the Supreme Court may reverse an order made after judgment, which denied motion to vacate judgment and grant permission to defendant to withdraw plea, where defendant's substantial rights were taken from her without an opportunity for hearing on the merits.

5. Criminal law § 274—Defendant, deprived of right of trial on merits because of duress, fraud, or overreaching of his free will, may withdraw plea of guilty.

Where on account of duress, fraud, or fact overreaching defendant's free will and judgment he is deprived of right of trial on merits, court may, after judgment and time for appeal has passed, grant privilege of withdrawal of plea of guilty and of reassuming situation occupied before plea was entered.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Bernard Schwarz and F. Amy Wallington were convicted of improper attempt to influence a juror, and defendant F. Amy Wallington appeals from the judgment and from an order refusing to vacate the judgment for insufficiency of the indictment and from an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment and to permit her plea of guilty to be withdrawn. Order denying motion to vacate judgment and to permit plea to be withdrawn reversed. Order refusing to vacate judgment for insufficiency of the indictment affirmed. Appeal from judgment dismissed.

Max Schleimer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

PRESTON, J. Appellant and one Bernard Schwarz were, on April 7, 1925, jointly indicted under the provisions of section 95 of the Penal Code, the indictment alleging that they did " * * * willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and corruptly attempt to influence the said juror (naming him), in respect to his verdict, opinion, and decision as such juror therein, by an oral communication then and there made to him. * * *

On June 22, 1925, the defendant Schwarz pleaded guilty to count 1 of said indictment and received in punishment a fine to the extent of $250, the second count being accordingly dismissed. Appellant was arrested on December 7, 1925. On December 10, 1925, she regularly entered her plea of not guilty to the indictment. On February 3, 1926, she changed her plea from not guilty to guilty, and applied for probation, which application was denied on March 25, 1926, and judgment of conviction was entered against her on said date. On March 29, 1926, four days afterward, she gave notice of appeal from said judgment. On April 1, 1926, she presented a motion to the superior court to set aside the judgment and sentence on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction to impose the judgment, asserting that the indictment did not state a public offense. This motion the court denied on April 5, 1926. Thereupon, in open court on said day, appellant gave notice of appeal from said order denying said motion. On April 9, 1926, basing her application upon a proper affidavit, appellant made application to the court for an order setting aside the judgment and granting her permission to withdraw her plea of guilty and to plead not guilty to the indictment upon the ground that she had been induced to change her plea from not guilty to guilty under duress and fraud.

The court denied this motion out of hand and, evidently thinking it was a repetition of the proceeding which ended in the order of April 5, 1926, ruled as follows:

"This application was heretofore made to department 21 and after argument denied on April 5, 1926. Its attempted presentment to the presiding judge, is a violation of rule 35 and contemptuous. It is refused. Burnell, Judge."

[1] The appeal from the judgment not having been taken orally at the time of the entry thereof, or within two days thereafter, was abortive and must be disregarded. Penal Code, § 1239.

[2] The appeal from the order refusing to vacate and set aside the judgment upon the ground that the indictment failed to state a public offense was taken in time, but, under the state of the record, this contention will not avail the appellant, as she failed to test the sufficiency of the indictment by demurrer or by motion in arrest of judgment. People v. Welton, 190 Cal. 236, 238, 211 P. 802. "The case is one of an imperfect allegation of a material fact rather than of a total failure to set forth an essential element." People v. Fuski, 49 Cal. App. 7, 192 P. 552; People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 P. 521; People v. Votaw, 38 Cal. App. 714, 718, 177 P. 485; People v. Hinshaw, 194 Cal. 1, 23, 227 P. 156.

[3] The appeal, however, from the order refusing to vacate the judgment and refusing to defendant the right to withdraw her plea of guilty and re-enter her plea of not guilty was taken in time and said order was appealable. 8 Cal. Jur. 494, § 509; People v. Perez, 9 Cal. App. 265, 98 P. 870.

[4] The record shows the grounds upon which said motion was based to be substantially as follows:

That appellant was a stenographer in the employ of her codefendant, Bernard Schwarz; that at the time mentioned in the indictment and at the instigation of said Schwarz and one Miller, she was induced to approach a juror during the progress of a criminal trial, in which Schwarz and others were defendants, and to say to said juror in effect that all the defendants were human; that the judge was showing prejudice against them by his rulings, and she wanted them to have a square deal. By the second count of the indictment she was accused of making similar statements to a second juror in the same cause. The juror or jurors reported the matter to the trial court, and the subject was taken up by the office of the district attorney with the grand jury. It appears that neither the deputy district attorney in charge of the matter nor the grand jury intended that the defendant be prosecuted, but planned that her indictment along with that of her codefendant would be the means of inducing her to tell what she knew about the first case, the criminal case against Schwarz, Doan, et al., and she could also be used as a witness for the prosecution against Schwarz in the second case, in return for which she would be granted immunity. With this purpose in mind, the indictment was obtained. Appellant was evading arrest for some time thereafter. Meanwhile, the defendant Schwarz was permitted to plead guilty and received as a punishment only a fine of $250.

Finally, however, Mr. A. M. Williams, chairman of the criminal complaints committee of the grand jury, with the full knowledge and consent of the deputy district attorney in charge of said matter, induced appellant, through her attorney, to surrender to the law, with the idea of using her testimony as above set forth, and with the assurance that she would receive in return either out and out immunity or, at most, no greater punishment than had been received by Schwarz in the same cause. Appellant did return and surrender herself and at first entered a plea of not guilty. Later, while these promises were still held out to her, she was taken before the district attorney, to whom she made a complete statement. It was shown from her testimony that she did not really know anything about the first case, and had merely acted through a false sense of loyalty to her employer, who had worked upon her sympathies to further his own ends. No complaint is made that she did not fully disclose all facts within her knowledge. Neither was anything said at any time indicating a change of policy upon the part of the prosecution officers.

Following this interview, appellant withdrew her plea of not guilty and entered a plea of guilty, making application for probation. Probation was denied her by the court, who had before him all of the foregoing facts. He not only imposed a penitentiary sentence for the time prescribed by law, but also recommended that parole be withheld for the period of three years, and this in the face of the fact that appellant's codefendant and employer, who without doubt was the guiding spirit in the matter, had been allowed to go with a mere fine of $250.

The question here presented is, May we interfere to reverse an order made after judgment, which denied a motion to vacate the judgment and to grant permission to defendant to withdraw her plea of guilty, with the right to take such action as she might be advised without hindrance by said former plea? The facts as alleged fully warrant the conclusion that substantial rights of the defendant have been taken away from her without an opportunity for a hearing on the merits, and this by those persons charged with the enforcement of the law. While no personal blame may attach to any one connected with the matter, yet, if said allegations be true, the failure of the court to adopt the covenants made by the district attorney and grand jury with defendant amounted in legal effect to the absorption of her legal rights by at least legal fraud. Certainly, in such case it can be truthfully said that on account of the conduct of those in charge of her prosecution she surrendered valuable legal rights under a misapprehension of the situation.

Too much may not be done to purify and keep pure the administration of justice. If a defendant may not rely upon a covenant made with her by the head of the committee of the grand jury and the office of the district attorney, then, indeed, would our whole system of legal procedure be brought under the cloud of suspicion. It is far better that one woman go unpunished than that it be said that the officers of the law in charge of the prosecution of crimes may play fast and loose with their promises to defendants under indictment. Precedent for procedure for relief under these circumstances, where the facts warrant it, is found in the following cases: People v. Perez, 9 Cal. App. 265, 98 P. 870; People v. Mooney, 178 Cal. 525, 529, 174 P. 325; People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 232 P. 457, 36 A. L. R. 1435.

[5] It may be stated from the above authorities that it is now well settled in this state that where on account of duress, fraud, or other fact overreaching the free will and judgment of a defendant he is deprived of the right of a trial on the merits, the court in which he was sentenced may after judgment and after the time for appeal has passed, if a properly supported motion is seasonably made, grant him the privilege of withdrawing his plea of guilty and of reassuming the situation occupied by him before a plea of any kind was entered. It should be noted, however, that where statutory remedies are provided this method of relief may not be resorted to, and that this exceptional remedy applies only where no trial has been had on the merits and only upon a strong and convincing showing of the deprivation of legal rights by extrinsic causes.

The case of People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 16, 45 P. 986, 987, it is said, supports the action of the trial court, but it is not in the same category with the case before us as to the facts thereof. There the defendant was led by the advice of his counsel to believe that he would get less punishment if he changed his plea to guilty than he would receive if he stood trial and was convicted. In this hope, however, he was disappointed. The court rightly held that with full knowledge of the consequences which might follow he should not be permitted to speculate upon the action of the court. But even in that case the court said:

"The law seeks no unfair advantage over a defendant, but is watchful to see that the proceedings under which his life or liberty is at stake shall be fairly and impartially conducted. It holds in contemplation his natural distress, and is considerate in viewing the motives which may influence him to take one or another course. Therefore, it will permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn if it fairly appears that defendant was in ignorance of his rights and of the consequences of his act, or was unduly and improperly influenced either by hope or fear in the making of it."

Neither is People v. Lennox, 67 Cal. 113, 7 P. 260, a parallel case, for there the defendant relied upon the mere expressed opinion of the deputy sheriff and his attorney as to the prospects for leniency. But neither of these persons were identified in any way with the policy that obtains in the prosecution of criminal cases.

Had the district attorney in either of the above cited cases, in consideration of the promise of immunity, received a full statement or confession from the defendant, and the defendant, relying upon such promise, entered a plea of guilty, which the court refused to permit him to change, this court doubtless would have given defendant speedy relief in both cases.

The purported appeal from the judgment is dismissed. The order of April 5th is affirmed. The order of April 9, 1926, denying the motion to vacate the judgment and grant permission to withdraw plea is reversed and the cause is remanded to the court below, with directions to entertain said motion, and if the material allegations made in support thereof are sustained, that said defendant be accorded the right to withdraw said plea of guilty, and for such further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion as may seem meet and proper.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SIENK, J.

201 Cal. 392

MARINI v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(S. F. 11524.)

Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ¶989—In reviewing nonsuit for contributory negligence in railroad crossing collision, question is whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

In action against railroad for collision at crossing, in which negligence of guard was admitted, where at conclusion of plaintiff's evidence defendants' motion for nonsuit because of plaintiff's contributory negligence was granted, sole question on appeal is whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

2. Railroads ¶350(16)—Evidence of automobilist's contributory negligence at railroad crossing held not to warrant nonsuit.

In action by automobilist for damages in railroad crossing collision, plaintiff's uncontradicted testimony that he stopped to shift into intermediate gear and was proceeding cautiously over tracks at time of accident held to show that he was not guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, and to render nonsuit at close of plaintiff's evidence for contributory negligence error.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Action by M. Marini against the Southern Pacific Company and others for damages from personal injuries. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order of nonsuit reversed.

J. E. Hood and H. S. Craig, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff below from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by him as the result of a collision between his automobile and a Southern Pacific electric train at the Fruitvale avenue crossing near East Fourteenth street in Oakland, Alameda county, Cal.

It appears that for many years the railroad company had maintained at the crossing a signal tower, gates, and signal bells, but on the particular occasion of this accident the tower man was telephoning and forgot to lower the gates and sound the bells upon approach of the train. His negligence is admitted. It further appears that for 9 or 10 years past appellant had driven over this crossing many times daily and had learned to depend upon the signals and gates. The railroad right of way was 70 feet in width, and the territory level. The accident occurred on a dry, clear day. Appellant contends that his view of the approaching train was obstructed by something, although he does not know what it was. Before crossing the tracks, he stopped the automobile to shift into intermediate gear, and states that he did not proceed until he had both looked and listened for danger. The fact that he drove a closed car may have had something to do with the situation. There were various trees, buildings, fences, pillars, and other objects in the vicinity, but, according to the testimony of several witnesses for respondent, they were in such a position that they could not have interfered with appellant's view of the tracks.

[1] Upon the ground of plaintiff's contributory negligence, at the conclusion of his evidentiary showing, motion by defendant for nonsuit was granted, and judgment duly entered. Hence the sole question to be considered on this appeal is whether or not plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

The first case coming under the rule governing guarded crossings is Koch v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 143 Cal. 677, 84 P. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 521, 113 Am. St. Rep. 332, 7 Ann. Cas. 795. There verdict for defendant was upheld, because it was shown that plaintiff failed to exercise any care whatsoever for his safety, but relied wholly upon the invitation of the open gates in crossing the track. The court said:

"The case thus presented is not one as to the degree or amount of care which should be exercised by one about to cross a railroad under the invitation to proceed given by the open gates, but whether under such circumstances a man may fail or decline to exercise any care whatsoever, treating the open gates as a positive assurance of safety. Of course, in any case such as this, where it is shown that a plaintiff has exercised some care, the question whether or not the care actually exercised was due and sufficient will always be a matter for determination by the jury. But where, as here, the unconflicting evidence shows that he exercised no care whatsoever, it becomes a question of law to say whether or not such a plaintiff's case shall be submitted to the jury. * * * Nor is it the law that when a railroad company adopts safety gates or any other appliance for the protection of the public the public is thereby absolved from all duty of taking care of itself. A person is still required to exercise due and ordinary care, and while the quantum of care which will be reasonable may be less where the gates are provided and are relied upon by the traveler, still the gates themselves are not an assurance and a warranty such as to justify a traveler in going blindly ahead in total disregard of all ordinary precautions, as did the plaintiff in this instance. * * *

[2] In the instant case the fact that appellant did not drive blindly and heedlessly into danger, without any care whatsoever for his safety, is made plain by his uncontradicted testimony that he stopped to shift into intermediate gear and was proceeding cautiously over the tracks when the accident occurred. In such case, as above stated, the question of whether or not the care actually exercised was due and sufficient will always be a matter for determination by the jury.

In the case of Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 240, 116 P. 513, 514, the court said:

"Whether or not a plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence is similar to the question whether or not the evidence in a criminal case, is sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty. It is usually a question of fact. It is a question of law only when the evidence is of such a character that it will support no other legitimate inference than that in the one case the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, in the other that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict. But even in such cases, while the question is said, and properly said, to be one of law, it is never a question of pure law. The real decision of the question by the court is a decision of fact. When the evidence is such that the court is impelled to say that it is not in conflict on the facts, and that from those facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his own injury, then, and only then, does the law step in and forbid plaintiff a recovery. * * * 'It is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence, that the court can say, as a matter of law, that contributory negligence is established. Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury.' Johnson v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 154 Cal. 285, 97 P. 520; Seller v. Market St. Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 P. 1006; Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 P. 651."

The case of Gregg v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 193 Cal. 212, 223 P. 553, falls within the rule controlling guarded crossings and is squarely in point. It reviews at length the authorities governing us in our decision of the case at bar and distinguishes Koch v. Southern Pac. Co., supra; Jones v. Southern Pac. Co., 34 Cal. App. 629, 188 P. 586, relied upon by respondents here, and Wyseur v. Davis, 58 Cal. App. 598, 209 P. 213. There the judgment and order of nonsuit were reversed, and, among other things, the court said:

"Every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence adduced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the plaintiff. Where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if one of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the plaintiff. If contradictory evidence has been given, it must be discarded. Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 253.' * * * 'It is true, as has often been stated, that a railroad crossing is itself a place of danger and is an effectual warning of danger which must always be heeded and the exercise of ordinary care in traveling over such place is not excused by the negligent omission of the railroad company itself to exercise reasonable care. But it is also true that a railway company will not be permitted to encourage the public to relax its vigil as to the dangers that lurk in railroad crossings by assurances that the danger has been removed or minimized by the adoption of safety devices and measures and at the same time hold a person to the same quantum of care as if no such safety measures had been provided. * * * 'It has often been said by this court that it is very rare that a set of circumstances is presented which enables a court to say, as a matter of law, that negligence has been shown. As a general rule, it is a question of fact for the jury, an inference to be deduced from the circumstances of each particular case, and it is only where the deduction to be drawn is inevitably that of negligence that the court is authorized to withdraw the question from the jury.' Hoff v. Los Angeles Pacific Co. [158 Cal. 596, 112 P. 53], supra, quoting from Seller v. Market St. Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 P. 1006."

This case, we believe, should have been submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions by the court, and judgment and order of nonsuit are therefore reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

201 Cal. 405

Ex parte LUNA. (Cr. 2999.)

Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1927.

1. Constitutional law ☞56—Legislature has authority to confer jurisdiction on municipal court over all misdemeanors arising anywhere in county (Pen. Code, § 1462; St. 1925, p. 648; Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 5, 13, and § 11, as amended in 1923).

Pen. Code, § 1462, St. 1925, p. 648, giving municipal court exclusive jurisdiction over all misdemeanors arising anywhere in county in which court is located, held proper exercise of legislative power, under Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 5, and 13, relating to jurisdiction of courts, which power is not forbidden or restricted by Const. art. 6, § 11, as amended in 1923 (see St. 1923, p. 1679), giving municipal courts original jurisdiction in criminal cases amounting to misdemeanors without express limitation as to territory.

2. Constitutional law ☞56—Legislature has power to confer jurisdiction on inferior courts in all cases where jurisdiction is not vested in some other court by Constitution (Const. art. 6, § 13).

Under Const. art. 6, § 13, providing Legislature shall fix jurisdiction of inferior courts, Legislature has power to confer upon such courts jurisdiction in all cases not vested in some other court by Constitution.

3. Criminal law ☞27—No constitutional distinction exists between high and low grade misdemeanors (Pen. Code, §§ 16, 17).

Crimes are divided into felonies and misdemeanors, and high and low grade misdemeanors are not divided as such, there being no constitutional distinction between classes of misdemeanors, in view of Pen. Code, §§ 16, 17.

4. Criminal law ☞88—Superior courts in counties having one or more municipal courts have no jurisdiction over misdemeanors committed within county (Pen. Code, § 1462; St. 1925, p. 658, § 28; Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 5, 13, and § 11, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1679).

Superior courts in counties having one or more municipal courts have no jurisdiction over misdemeanors, high or low, committed in county, under Pen. Code, § 1462, St. 1925, p. 658, § 28, Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 5, 13, and § 11, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1679, as jurisdiction given municipal courts over all grades of misdemeanors is exclusive.

5. Statutes ☞181(2)—That failure to give particular construction to statute may thwart its purpose should be considered in determining legislative intent.

Fact that failure to give legislation particular construction will result in thwarting purpose of legislators is fact to be considered in determining intent of legislators.

In Bank.

Application by Felipe Luna for writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the sheriff of Los Angeles county to secure the petitioner's release after conviction of a high grade misdemeanor (violation of the Wright Act). Writ granted, and petitioner discharged.

A. Folsom and Richard L. North, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent Traeger.

PRESTON, J. Petitioner was convicted in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles for a violation of the statute known as the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79) (a high misdemeanor). He seeks his discharge through habeas corpus upon the ground that jurisdiction of said offense has been divested out of the superior court and invested exclusively in the municipal courts of said county.

Upon this identical conviction petitioner sought his discharge from the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2. Said matter was heard by that court in conjunction with a similar case and opinion therein delivered sustaining the jurisdiction of the superior court (253 P. 151). While we are unable to concur in the conclusion of said court, we are satisfied with a portion of the decision and adopt the same as a part hereof as follows:

"There are in the county of Los Angeles two municipal courts. Appellant was convicted of what is termed a high grade misdemeanor. The alleged offense was committed in territory of the county which lies outside the territory of the cities within which, respectively, the municipal courts hold their sessions. The ultimate question presented for decision is whether the superior court had jurisdiction of the offense. It is conceded by the parties—and correctly so—that a justice's court has no jurisdiction of such misdemeanors as that with which appellant was charged.

"Section 28 of the act of the Legislature concerning municipal courts (Stats. 1925, p. 648) provides: 'Each municipal court shall have original jurisdiction in all criminal cases amounting to misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment in the city or county and county jail, or punishable by fine or such imprisonment where the offense charged was committed within the county in which the municipal court is established.' Section 1462 of the Penal Code * * * reads in part: 'Whenever a municipal court shall have been established, * * * such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine or by imprisonment, or by both such fine and imprisonment, committed in the city * * * where such municipal court is held. * * * In each city wherein a municipal court shall have been established, such courts shall also have jurisdiction over any misdemeanor committed in the county in which such city is located.'

"These enactments of the Legislature, if they do not infringe the provisions of the Constitution, confer upon the municipal courts a jurisdiction over such offenses as that with which appellant was charged, laying aside for the moment the question whether the jurisdiction so attempted to be conferred is exclusive, or whether it is concurrent with a jurisdiction resting in the superior court. The jurisdiction over such charges was without doubt vested in the latter courts before the passage by the Legislature of the enactments mentioned.

"Sections 1, 5 and 11 of article 6 of the Constitution are material to a discussion of the questions which arise upon the appeal.

"Section 1 reads: 'The judicial power of the state shall be vested in the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a Supreme Court, District Courts of Appeal, superior courts, such municipal courts as may be established in any city or city and county, and such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county or city and county.' Stats. 1923, p. 1678.

"Section 5 provides, in part: 'The superior courts shall have original jurisdiction * * * in all criminal cases amounting to a felony, and in all cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for. * * *' Stats. 1923, p. 1678.

"Portions of section 11 follow: 'In any * * * city which is governed under a charter * * * containing a population of more than forty thousand inhabitants, * * * a municipal court may be established as in this article provided, anything in this constitution to the contrary notwithstanding. * * * Municipal courts shall have original jurisdiction, * * * in all cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to one thousand dollars or less, and of actions of forcible or unlawful entry or detainer where the rental value is one hundred dollars or less per month, and where the whole amount of damages claimed is one thousand dollars or less, and in cases to enforce and foreclose liens on personal property where the amount of such liens or the value of the property is one thousand dollars or less, and in all criminal cases amounting to a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment in the city * * * or county jail, or punishable by fine or such imprisonment (which offenses include what are known as high grade misdemeanors). * * * The Legislature shall provide by general law for the constitution, regulation, government and procedure of municipal courts, and for the jurisdiction thereof except in the particulars otherwise specified in this section, and for the establishment of municipal courts in cities (of the size and character above specified). * * * Upon the taking effect of such general law, a municipal court may be established in such cities (upon the completion of certain preliminary steps).' Stats. 1923, p. 1679.

"If it be conceded for the moment that the above-quoted provisions of section 28 of the Act of 1925 and of section 1462 of the Penal Code are not in excess of the terms of the Constitution upon grounds later to be discussed, it seems plain that the jurisdiction attempted to be conferred upon the municipal courts by them is exclusive and that the sections have ousted the former jurisdiction of the superior courts over the same matters. So much is apparent from Green v. Superior Court, 78 Cal. 556, 21 P. 307, 541. In that case it appeared that jurisdiction over certain offenses had been vested by the Constitution (article 6, § 5) in the superior court when 'not otherwise provided for.' Jurisdiction over the same offenses was later conferred by statute upon the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, which court was created by the Legislature under appropriate provisions of the Constitution. Green was indicted in the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco for the commission of one of those offenses. He asked the Supreme Court for the writ of prohibition to halt proceedings under the indictment, and contended that the statute conferring jurisdiction on the police court vested an exclusive jurisdiction in that tribunal. The Supreme Court upheld the contention in the following language: 'The evident purpose of the constitutional provision, as evinced by its language, is that the jurisdiction of the superior court shall be conditioned upon the establishment of other courts upon which the same jurisdiction shall be conferred, and when that condition happens, and the jurisdiction is by the Legislature conferred upon such inferior courts, from that time the Constitution itself transfers such jurisdiction from the superior court and vests it in the inferior courts. From that time the jurisdiction is "otherwise provided for," and the jurisdiction of the superior court at once ceases.' That part of section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution which is above quoted is substantially the same as the language of the same section as it stood when it was construed in Green v. Superior Court. We are therefore of the opinion that whatever jurisdiction was vested in the municipal courts by section 28 of the Act of 1925, and by section 1462 of the Penal Code is exclusive of a like jurisdiction in the superior court."

[1] Under sections 1, 5, and 13 of article 6 of the Constitution as they read prior to 1923, it was within the power of the Legislature to confer jurisdiction on an inferior court such as a police or justice's court of all misdemeanors, high and low, and such jurisdiction, when so conferred, thereby divested the superior court of all jurisdiction in the premises. Green v. Superior Court, supra; In the Matter of the Application of Westenberg, 167 Cal. 309, 317, 139 P. 674.

It necessarily follows, therefore, that jurisdiction over all misdemeanors may be conferred by the Legislature upon a municipal or any other lawfully established court and the fact that such court is a court of record and of some greater dignity than an inferior court only makes the more certain the conclusion we have drawn.

It is also incontestably true that if jurisdiction over some misdemeanors may exist in an inferior court as to cases arising outside its territorial limits, but within the county of its location, such jurisdiction may be given over all misdemeanor cases so arising anywhere in the said county. And if it be competent, for example, to confer jurisdiction upon a justice's court or police court of Los Angeles county of any misdemeanor committed anywhere therein, it must be true that jurisdiction over every misdemeanor committed therein may be vested in such inferior courts. And if such jurisdiction may be given to inferior courts by the Legislature, verily it may be given to municipal courts established under the amendments of 1923 which, although inferior to superior courts, are nevertheless superior to inferior courts.

But it has been expressly held that it is within the legislative power to confer such jurisdiction on justices' courts as to all so-called low misdemeanors arising anywhere in the county wherein the township for such court is located. Graham v. Mayor, etc., of Fresno, 151 Cal. 465, 91 P. 147, and in In re Kaster, 52 Cal. App. 454, 198 P. 1029, affirmed 185 Cal. 647, 198 P. 1031.

The conclusion irresistibly follows, then, from the foregoing premises, that jurisdiction may be given to a municipal court of all misdemeanors, high and low, arising anywhere in the county where such court is established unless the provisions of section 11 of article 6 of the Constitution, as amended in 1923, expressly forbid this being done. An examination of this amendment not only fails to disclose any such inhibition, but, on the contrary, clearly shows that said section was framed in the light of the conclusion we have above announced. The pertinent language of the amendment is as follows:

"Municipal courts shall have original jurisdiction, except as hereinafter provided * * * in all criminal cases amounting to misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment in the city or city and county or county jail, or punishable by fine or such imprisonment."

